The show-girl was fiercely addressing the black-maned lion. "Now! Now! To the table! To the table!"

Samson did not budge. Facing the woman of the mask, he opened his mouth, revealing the red cave of his throat—past the ivory sentinels that not only stood guard, but threatened, one could look down and down. This was no yawn of weariness, but a sign of rebellion—a sort of noiseless roar.

The trainer retreated to the farther side of the cage, then made a forward rush, waving her whip, and shouting clangorously, "Up, Samson, up Samson, up!" She did not pause in her course till close to his face.

Again he opened his mouth, baring every tooth, voiceless, but unconquered.

Hercules, finding that affairs had come to a halt, slowly descended from his box, keeping his half-opened eyes upon the woman. Restlessly he began to pace before the outer door.

The slight figure withdrew several steps, then smote the rebellious lion a sharp blow across the mouth. He snapped at the lash. It slipped away from between his teeth. Having rescued her whip, she shouted to the other lion: "Back to your place, Hercules. Hercules—back to your place!"

She stood pointing sternly toward the box, but Hercules stretched himself across the place of exit and lay watching her covertly.

The faces of the band boys had become of a yellowish paleness.

From behind the mask came the voice so loud that it sounded as a scream—"Up, Samson, up, Samson—up!"

Then it was that Samson found his voice. A mighty roar shook the loosely-set bars of the central cage—they vibrated visibly. The roar did not come as one short sharp note of defiance; it rose and fell, then rose anew, varying in the inflections of the voice of a slave who dares to threaten, fears even while he threatens, and gathers passion from his fear.

At that fearful reverberation, the audience started up, panic-stricken. Hitherto, the last act had been regarded as a badly-played comedy; now tragedy was in the air.

Gregory and Grace Noir at that instant, became alive to their surroundings. Hitherto, despising the show, rebellious at the destiny which had forced them to attend it, they had been wholly absorbed in their efforts to escape observation. The roaring of the lion startled them to a perception of the general alarm.

Grace clung to Gregory. "Oh, save me!" she panted hysterically.

The voice of the woman behind the bars rang throughout the tent—"Sit down!" The voice was not loud, now, but singularly penetrating. "Sit down, all of you, and remain absolutely motionless, or I am lost."

Grace Noir, her eyes closed, her cheeks pallid, leaned her head upon Gregory's shoulder, quivering convulsively.

"There, there," Gregory whispered in her ear, soothingly, "everything will be all right."

The masked woman for the second time addressed the terrified audience, still not venturing to turn her head in their direction: "Whoever moves, or speaks, or cries aloud, will be my murderer. I have only one hope left, and I'm going to try it now. I ask you people out there to give me just this one chance for my life. Keep absolutely still."

Again Samson uttered his terrible roar. It alone was audible. Tier above tier, faces rose to the tent-roof, white and set. The audience was like one huge block of stone in which only faces have been carved.

The penetrating voice addressed the band boys: "Don't play. He can tell you're frightened."

The agitated music ceased.

Then the woman walked to the fartherest side of the inclosure. In doing so she was obliged to pass the crouching form of Hercules, but she pretended not to know he was there; she moved slowly backward, always facing Samson.

At last the vertical bars prevented farther retreat. Then she lifted her hand slowly, steadily, and drew off her crimson mask. It dropped at her feet. Despite the muffled street-noises that never ceased to rumble from afar, the whispering sound of the silken mask, as it struck the plank floor of the cage, was distinctly audible.

"Grace!" Gregory whispered in horror—"it's Fran!"

Grace started from his embrace at the name and glared down upon the stage. She sat erect, unsupported, petrified.

Gregory's brow was moistened with a chilled dew. "It's Fran," he mumbled, "it's Fran! Grace—pray for her!"

Fran looked Samson steadily in the eyes, and Samson glared back fixedly. For a few moments, this quiver between life and death remained at the breaking point. Had a stranger at that moment looked under the tent-entrance, he might have thought every body asleep. There was neither sound nor movement.

Grace whispered—"It is the hand of God!"

Her tone was almost inaudible, but Gregory shrank as from a mortal blow; its sinister meaning was unmistakable. Swiftly he turned to stare at her.

In Grace's eyes was a wild and ominous glare akin to that of the threatening lion. It was a savage conviction that Fran was at last confronted by the justice of heaven.

Suddenly Fran crouched forward till her head was almost on a level with her waist, in so much that it was a physical exertion to hold her face uplifted. In this sinuous position she was the embodiment of power. If she felt misgivings concerning this last resource, there was no look to betray it. Straight toward Samson she rushed, her body lithe and serpentine, her direction unerring.

To the beast, Fran had become one of those mysterious flying serpents which bite from afar. He felt the sting of her terrible eyes and his gaze grew shifty. It wandered away, and on returning, found her teeth bared, as if feeling for his heart.

Rushing up to his very face—"Samson!" she cried, impellingly.

Again he seemed to feel the lash upon his tawny skin.

"Samson. Up, Samson, up, Samson—up!

Suddenly Samson wheeled about, and leaped upon the table.

Fran stamped her foot at the other lion. "Go to your place, Hercules!" she cried, with something like contempt.

Hercules slowly rose, stretched himself, then marched to his box. He looked from Fran to the immovable Samson waiting upon the table, then mounted to his place, and seemed to fall asleep.

And now, at last, Fran looked at the spectators. Stepping lightly to the bars, she threw kisses this way and that, smiling radiantly. "Oh!" she cried, with vibrating earnestness, "you people out there—you can't think how I love you! You've saved my life. You are perfect heroes. Now make all the noise you please."

"May we move?" called a cautious voice from a few feet away. It was Abbott Ashton, with eyes like stars.

Fran looked at him, wondering at his thoughts. She answered by an upward movement of her hand.

As though by a carefully rehearsed arrangement, the audience rose to its feet, band boys and all. Such a shout! Such waving of hats and handkerchiefs! Such unabashed sobs! Such inarticulateness—such graspings of neighboring hands! The spectators had gone mad with joyful relief.

Fran leaped upon the table, and mounted Samson.

"Now, I'm a rough rider!" she shouted, burying her hands in the mane, and lying along the lion's back in true cowboy fashion. She plunged, she shouted loudly, but Samson only closed his eyes and seemed to sleep.

After that, making the lions return to their cramped side cages was a mere detail. The show was ended.

Fran, remaining in the empty cage, stood at the front, projecting her hand through the bars to receive the greetings of the crowd. Almost every one wanted to shake hands with her.

"Look, look!" Simon Jefferson suddenly grasped Robert Clinton's hand, and pointed toward the tent-roof. "There they are!"

Something very strange had happened up there, but it was lost to Clinton's keen jealous gaze—one of those happenings in the soul, which, however momentous, passes unobserved in the midst of the throng.

"Not so fast!" Grace cautioned Gregory. "We must wait up here till the very last—don't you see Mr. Clinton? And Simon Jefferson is now pointing us out. We can't go down that way—"

"We!" Gregory harshly echoed. "We! I have nothing to do with you, Grace Noir. Go to him, if you will."

Grace turned ashen pale. "What do you mean?" she stammered. "You tell me to go to Mr. Clinton?"

"I tell you to go where you please. That girl yonder is my daughter, do you understand? Don't hold me back! I shall go to her and proclaim her as my child to the world. Do you hear me? That's my Fran!"

Grace shrank back in the suspicion that Hamilton Gregory had gone mad like the rest of the crowd. "Do you mean that you never want to see me again? Do you mean that you want me to marry Mr. Clinton?"

"I do not care what you do," he said, still more roughly.

"You do not care?" she stammered, bewildered. "What has happened? You do not care—for me?"

She looked deep into his eyes, but found no incense burning there. The shrine was cold.

"Mr. Gregory! And after all that has passed between us? After I have given you my—myself—"

Gregory seized her arm, as if to hold her off. His eyes were burning dangerously: "I saw murder in your heart while you were watching Fran," he whispered fiercely. "That's my daughter, do you understand? I know you now, I know you now. . . ."

Grace stared after him with bloodless cheeks and smoldering eyes. Clearly, she decided, the sight of Fran's fearful danger had unbalanced his mind. But how could he care so much about that Fran? And how could he leave her, knowing that Robert Clinton was beginning to climb upward with eyes fastened upon her face?

But it was not the sight of Fran's danger that had for ever alienated Gregory from Grace Noir. In an instant, she had stood revealed to him as an unlovely monster. His sensitive nature, always abnormally alive to outward impressions, had thrilled responsively to the exultation of the audience. He had endured the agony of suspense, he had shared the universal enthusiasm. If, in a sense, he was a series of moods, each the result of blind impulse, it so happened that Grace's hiss—"It's the hand of God," turned his love to aversion; she was appealing as a justification of personal hatred, to the God they were both betraying.

Grace began to tremble as she watched Robert Clinton coming up, and Hamilton Gregory descending. She had trusted foolishly to a broken reed, but it was not too late to preserve the good name she had been about to besmirch. The furnace-heat in which rash resolves are forged, was cooled. Gregory had deserted Fran's mother; he was false to Mrs. Gregory; he would perhaps have betrayed Grace in the end; but Clinton was at hand, and his adoration would endure.

In the meantime, the voice of Fran was to be heard above that of the happy crowd: "I love you all. You helped me do it. I should certainly have been mangled but for you perfect heroes. Yes, thank you. . . . Yes, I feel fine. . . . And, oh, men and women, I could just feel your spirits holding mine up till I was so high—I was in the clouds. That's what subdued Samson. He knew I wasn't afraid. He knew it! And I wanted to win out for your sakes as well as my own—yes I did! Thank you men. . . . Thank you, women. . . . Well, if here aren't the children, too—bless your brave hearts! . . . And is that your baby? My goodness, and what a baby it is! . . . No, I'm not a bit tired—"

She stopped suddenly, on feeling a crushing grip. She looked down, a frown forming on her brow, but the sun shone clear when she saw Abbott Ashton. She gave him a swift look, as if to penerate his inmost thoughts.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

IRVING WAS NOT ALL MIND

English Actor One of the Most Lovable of Men, According to Lifelong Associate.

It has been said of Irving that he lacked feeling, that he was all mind and no heart. Speaking to me, Miss Ellen Terry said: "He is gentle, not tender." The late Henry Labouchere wrote of him that "he was always acting." Greater errors could not have been made. Irving knew enough of human nature to know that it is frequently selfish and in many ways infirm, and he realized that "there is no art to find the mind's construction in the face," but, essentially, he was one of the most loving and lovable of men—when and where he fully trusted. He was singularly sensitive to kindness, and any little token of remembrance that reached him from a friendly hand, if it were only a trifle—as inconsiderable as a cravat or a cigar case—was treasured by him with a gratitude almost pathetic. But he did not "wear his heart upon his sleeve," and he did not trust many persons. He had suffered much, and he was lonely to the last. He was one of the most intellectual persons that ever trod the stage, but those who knew him best could testify that his sympathy was as wide as the widest experience of mankind and as deep as the deepest feelings of compassion and tenderness that ever possessed the human heart.—William Winter, in Collier's Weekly.

The Gallant.

Judge—The lady from whom you stole a kiss declares herself ready to waive her demand for punishment if you will ask her pardon and express your regret for what has happened.

Gentlemen (to the offended lady)—Yes, I am willing to beg your pardon. But to regret that I gave you the kiss, dear madam, that I cannot!

Not Her Fault.

Mr. Robinson—What a singular girl you are, Miss Jones!

Miss Jones (coyly)—Well, that can be altered, you know.—Stray Stories.

LOSES HEAVILY IN BATTLE

British Camel Corps Has Many Killed and Wounded Fighting Savage Dervishes.

London.—Mr. Richard Conyngham Corfield recently fell a victim in an attack of the Dervishes in Somaliland. It was against these barbarous men that he had organized the Camel corps. Although only about thirty years old he had performed valuable service for his country in some of its most dangerous outposts, not the least being that of the formation of the Camel Constabulary corps of 150 men under three British officers. From 1901 to 1909 he served in South Africa and in Somaliland until 1910, when he went to Northern Nigeria, from which he returned to Somaliland last year to organize the Camel corps. The Dervishes feared it mightily and made their fierce attack with the idea of utterly destroying it. The engagement was so sudden and the fighting so savage that fifty members of the corps, including Mr. Corfield, were killed or wounded. The Camel corps is one of the most picturesque branches of the British service.

Richard Conyngham Corfield.

MAN MADE A DARING LEAP

Pittsburgh Iron Worker Has a Close Call From Death When He Jumps From Bridge.

Altoona, Pa.—Believing that the Twelfth street bridge crossing the Pennsylvania tracks was on fire and that he was going to be burned up unless he escaped, W. J. Beale, an iron worker of Pittsburgh, plunged from the bridge to the tracks below and directly in front of an express train that was pulling out of the Pennsylvania station. The man's escape from death was miraculous.

He sustained only a sprained ankle, as the engineer of the train shut off the power as soon as he saw the man leaping through the air, and the engine pushed the man off the tracks on account of the slow speed at which it was going. Beale was arrested for trespassing on the railroad property, but was later released and sent home.

TURKEY TROT FOE TO BEAUTY

Russian Princess Warns American Girls Against the Wild New Dance.

New York.—Princess Lowenstein, the wife of a Russian nobleman and soldier who fell in the Philippines at the time Aguinaldo was captured, warns the American girls against turkey trotting as a foe to beauty.

"These wild new dances," the princess said, "which your girls are doing day in and day out are showing their effects. The dancers get to look like old, haggard women. The American girl is noted for her looks, and justly, too; but she certainly will lose all her freshness and sweetness if she persists in keeping up this everlasting bacchanalian dancing."

ANNUAL COST OF ILLNESS

Physician Asserts That Is Is $750,000,000 a Year in the United States.

New York.—Some surprising statements were made at the meeting of the American Public Health association, held at Colorado Spring, by Dr. J. B. Andrews, of this city. Doctor Andrews, who is secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, said that the annual loss in business through illness amounted to $750,000,000, and that fully one-fourth of this loss could be prevented.

STICKS HEAD IN FLY WHEEL

Broken in Health, Hat Factory Employe Kills Himself in Most Peculiar Way.

New York.—Broken in health and tired of life at the age of sixty-three years, Wallace D. Richardson, stock man in a Bleecker street hat factory, stuck his head into a five-foot fly wheel making 200 revolutions a minute. His body, with the head badly crushed, was found near the fly wheel shortly afterward. Letters on his person told that he intended to seek death to end his troubles.

Says Husband Was Cruel

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Mrs. Minnie Happy of Washington, Pa., declaring herself unhappy with Edgar C. Happy, has started an action for divorce. Mrs. Happy charges that Happy threw knives at her and also tossed her through a plate glass window.

Will Stop Flirtations.

Southnyack, N. Y.—Trustees here have had the village green brightly illumunated to prevent nocturnal flirtations.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

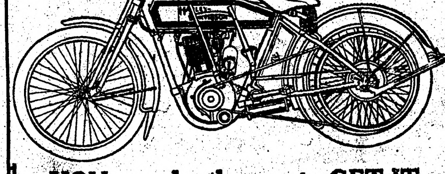
Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

Dressed and Undressed

Lumber can be had here according to your needs. It makes no difference what you require in the lumber line, it is here to be promptly delivered on your order. It makes no difference either what quantity you want. We will sell you a small lot just as cheerfully as if it be a bigger one. What are your needs?

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA
(North of the Minnesota River)
Is Going To Be Given This
HARLEY-DAVIDSON
MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money



YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.
A good hustler can make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.
Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.
It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.
Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name...
Post Office...
Rural Route................... State...................

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

Mrs. C. Anderion went to Thief River Falls Monday on a business mission.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt October 24-5. See his "ad."

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Ernest Paulick left on Monday for Saskatchewan where he expects to spend the winter on his homestead.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginu Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Mr. and Mrs Wilfred Sullivan returned to Grand Forks yesterday after an extended visit with relatives here.

Cabbage For Sale—Several hundred fine heads for sauer kraut or winter keep. Marshall Gehrke.

Swan Carlson was in from his Mud Lake homestead Monday and made a business trip to Middle River.

Rev. Martin T. Strom will conduct services and Sunday School in the Hoit school house on next Sunday at 2 o'clock p. m. All welcome

Mrs. Helen Torkelson came up from Climax on Monday and intends to spend the winter with her daughter Mrs. George Anderson, in East Valley township.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the church here Sunday Nov, 9th at 10:45 a. m., and at Ringbo at 3:30 in the afternoon of the same day. Everybody welcome.

Preparations are being made for a Cobweb Social to be held in the Woodman hall here on November 1st. The proceeds will be used for the benefit of the school. Get the date fixed in your mind and get ready to have a good time that evening.

On Sunday November 2nd there will be dedication services at a new Synod church in Silverton township, east of Thief River Falls. Following the dedication there will be a circuit meeting for two days. Quite a number from this vicinity are planning to attend.

Otto Clausen, the great tenor singer who is over from Norway making a tour of this country, will give a vocal concert in the Synod church here next Thursday evening the 23rd inst. The people here rarely get any opportunity to hear a singer like Mr. Clausen who is highly spoken of wherever he appears. The prices of admission will be 25 and 15 cents. The program will begin at about 8 o'clock, and those who wish to secure good seats should come early.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that John H. Smith, of Holt, Minn., who, on February 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07250, for SW¼ Section 11, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: James Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, Charles J. Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Charles J. Smith of Holt, Minn., who, on Feb. 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07251, for SW¼ Section 12, Township 155 N., Range 42 w, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H. Smith Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, James Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Martin Nygaard, of Holt, Minn., who, on September 26th, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06640 for S½ SE¼ Sec. 5, W½ NE¼ section 8, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 4th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Lars A. Sagstuen, Knute Nelson, Christ Norbeck, all of Flakne, Flakne, Minn. Carl L. Anderson, of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
September 6, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Frank Sherack, Jr., of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on March 30th. 1910, made Homestead Entry, No. 323763, for NE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Three Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 30th day of October, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Frank Conklin, Andy Oreik, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made under act of June 6, 1912.

Notice of Contest

Department of the Interior, United States Land Office, Crookston, Minnesota, October 15, 1913.

To Adolph Schirbel of Gatzke, Minn., Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Christian E. Evens, who gives Duluth, Minn. as his residence and Thief River Falls, Minn., in care of O. A. Naplin, as his postoffice address, did on September 16, 1913, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead Entry Serial No. 08470, made Sept. 16, 1912, for SE¼ NE¼, N½ SE¼ and the SW¼ SE¼ Section 20, Township 157, Range 39, 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Adolph Schirbel has wholly abandoned said land since making entry thereon; that he has not resided thereon within the last six months preceding the institution of this contest: that he has not made the improvement required by the homestead law, and the contestant herein is now the owner and holder of the Assignment Certificates issued by the Auditor of Marshall County for delinquent drainage taxes on said land.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be canceled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the said contestant's written acknowledgment of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the post office to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the postoffice to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Date of first publication, Oct. 17, 1913.
" second " Oct. 24, 1913.
" third " Oct. 31, 1913.
" fourth " Nov. 7, 1913.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
October 10, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olina Knuts Bolingberg, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on November 29, 1910, made Homestead entry, No. 05763, for NW¼, Section 33, Township 156, Range 41, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Register and Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn, on the 18th day of November 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: George E. Olson, Engebret Moe, Peter Rosand, Alfred Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof mode according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Edvard Svensgad, of Flakne, Minn., who, on Sept. 7th 1911, made Homestead Entry, No. 06541, amended to read as follows: for Lot 4 SW¼ NW¼ Sec. 4, SE¼ NE¼, NE¼ SE¼ Section 5, Township 156 N. Range 41 W., 5th meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 11th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses; Lars A. Sagstuen, E. A. Wright, C. Norbeck, Martin Nygaard, all of Flakne, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

A Trapper
A Sailor
A Cowboy
A Ranger

with the heart of a child, a poet's love of the open, a humorous philosophy, and experiences that grip you with sympathy. That is the hero and title of the new serial story we are about to print. It is a most dramatic plot of domestic tragedy and deception, the prelude to an exquisite love tale which has for its setting the wild life of a Western cattle ranch, where men are more to be feared than the wild animals.

A Man in the Open

A Story of Dynamic Force and Contrasts That You Will Thoroughly Enjoy!

A Bank Book Will Lighten

The burden of caring for your money. Deposit your cash in the Holt State bank and you will not have to sit and worry about its safety. Thieves don't steal bank books; and if fire destroys one you don't lose anything, as you would if it was the cash itself. Open an account today and you'll sleep easier tonight and every night.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

DR. J. T. TURLEY,
DENTIST,
Will be in Holt Friday and Saturday, October 24 & 25
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS $1.00 | GOLD CROWN $5 & $6
TREATMENTS 1.50 | PORCELAIN CROWN 5.00
PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1913 NO. 13

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.22
Wheat	.75
Barley	.43
Oats	.27
Rye	.48
Flour, Best Patent	2.45

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt October 24-5. See his "ad."

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Guv Anderson returned yesterday from a business trip to St. Paul havin been absent since Saturday.

Dont forget the Auction Sale in Section 8, of Agdar township next Tuesday afternoon. See announcement elsewhere in this paper.

S. S. Kolden and B. E. Backe went over to Warren on Sunday with the Misses Ella and Mary Olbarg who will attend school there

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 1st

AUCTION SALE

At The Northern Light office on
Saturday, November 1st
I will offer for sale my Team of light Horses, fine double Buggy, Harness and many other articles.

Any person wishing to dispose of Live Stock or other property at this Sale can do so, but must list the property before noon of Wednesday, October 29th, so proper Sale Bills can be issued.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Auctioneer

Death Claims Two Babes

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Grover are called upon to mourn the loss of their little son, Sherman, one of their twin boys born last April. The little one has been ailing somewhat during all his little life and on Thursday last his illness took a serious turn and on Monday morning he passed away. The funeral was held yesterday, Rev. M. B. Ordahl efficiating, and the remains were laid to rest in the Holt cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Nelson, who reside three miles west of town, also mourn the loss of their tiny infant daughter, Clara, who died Monday, being one of twins born October 1st. This funeral also occurred yesterday afternoon and the remains were laid away in the local cemetery.

Both of these children were twins. They died the same day, and were buried at the same time and place. The same minister conducted services for both and the funerals coming in different directions met on the way to the final resting place.

T. G. Dahl came in from Golden Valley Monday and made a business trip to Thief River Falls.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkboel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

We had intended to give a write-up of the industrial contest at Middle River in this issue, but other work prevents. It will appear next week.

Andrew Stenseth was up from [illegible] the first part of the week looking after matters pertaining to his real estate interests in this vicinity.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the church here Sunday Nov, 9th at 10:45 a. m., and at Ringbo at 3:30 in the afternoon of the same day. Everybody welcome.

The Red River Valley Dairymen's Convention will be held at Crookston on November 3rd and 4th. Every progressive farmer interested in dairying should make it a point to attend this convention if possible.

Mrs. B. L. Backe and Mrs. E. M. Silbaugh will entertain the Ladies Aid at the Backe home on Sunday November 2nd, beginning at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

One of the biggest and best mule teams in the country will be sold at the S. Johnson auction next Tuesday. In fact everything to be sold is first-class. You should attend if possible. Section 8 of Agdar township is where the aution will be held.

Mr. and Mrs. John Chapman left yesterday for their home in New York State. Mr. Chapman is foreman of the big Stevens dredge which has shut down for this season to undergo some needed repairs before finishing up the work on State Ditch 83. The crew disbanded several days ago. Mr. Chapman will probably return shortly to look after the repair work on the dredge.

BALKAN PERFUMERY.

One of the incidental consequences of the conflict in the Balkans is the rise in the price of perfumery. Of attar of roses Bulgaria is said to have practically the monopoly Various attempts have been made to create a rival product both in the chemical laboratory and in other soil than that of central Europe; but Australia is the only country that offers any promise, while the material which the Bulgarians extract from the roses remains superior to all others. Balkan mountain roses grow in great abundance, and when cultivated yield marvelous amounts of the extract.

Cobweb Basket Social

The Cobweb Basket Social to be held at the Woodman hall here on Saturday evening, Nov. 1st, is going to be one of the really enjoyable events of the year and those in charge of the arrangements are confident of having a record breaking attendance. There's going to be a lot of fun and some surprises during the evening and every body is inved to come as early as possible. The baskets should all be in by eight o'clock so that there will be no delay in getting the fun started. Remember the proceeds will be for the benefit of the school and everybody is requested to come and help.

Holt School Notes

There are now 25 pupils enrolled in the upper grades and 30 in the Primary Dep't making a total of 55 pupils.

Emma Jacobson and Frank and Harry Heinze entered school this week.

Hilma Nyberg has been absent from school on account of illness and we are glad to see her back again.

Ask Mabel if she has seen any walrus coming to town.

The pupils that attended school every day last month were:

Mildred Anderson, Gladys Hagen, Rasie Heinze and Olive Mickelson.

The attendance must be more regular if pupils expect to keep up to grade.

Primary Department

"One little kitten lost its mitten!"

Those having perfect spelling since starting school: Ruth Tobiason, Lawerence Tobiason, Vernon Huseth.

Those having perfect attendance for the last month were:

Bennie Heinze, Arnold Huseth, Vernon Huseth, Everett Latta, Geraldine Nelson, Martin Olson.

The children are taught that Minnesota is called the "bread and butter state." The same day they are taught the memory gem: "The world is so full of a number of things, I'm sure we should all be as happy as Kings" The next day the children are asked to complete this: "The world is so full of ——"; whereupon one bright little tot says, 'bread and butter."

NOT SO FAR WRONG.

"This booby has been telling me about an aviary meeting he attended lately."

"Well, it was a meeting of birdmen, wasn't it?"

NO CASH NEEDED.

"You can have that property for a song."

"You don't mean that literally."

"Yes, I do. I'll take your notes."

POOR KIND OF SPORT.

"Rogers is a bit of a sportsman, isn't he?"

"If going off on wild goose chases makes a fellow one, he is."

SWEET.

Mollie—How many lumps of sugar shall I put in your coffee?

Chollie—Oh, have your own sweet way, as usual, dear.

WHY SHE ENJOYS GOLF.

"Do you enjoy golf?"

"Very much. It keeps my husband out of my way most of the time."

PAW KNOWS EVERYTHING.

Willie—Paw, what is war indemnity?

Paw—Alimony, my son.

A Bank Book Will Lighten

The burden of caring for your money. Deposit your cash in the Holt State bank and you will not have to sit and worry about its safety. Thieves don't steal bank books; and if fire destroys one you don't lose anything, as you would if it was the cash itself. Open an account today and you'll sleep easier tonight and every night.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, Model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; its solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

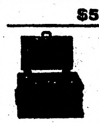
It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now.

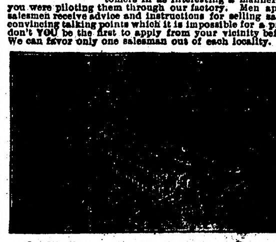
The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day



Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 16 T.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

EMPIRE CREAM Separators
REMARKABLE FOR SMOOTH, QUIET EASY RUNNING

Used by Three Generations

THE HANDSOME EMPIRE

It pays to be particular when buying a cream separator. The whole value of the machine depends on quality.

Buyers are looking for quality, too. But they don't look for it by squinting through a magnifying glass, or by feeling the parts to see if they are smooth. They try the crank to see how the machine "feels" and "sounds" when it runs. They want to know how long the machine has been on the market.

Many young farmers are buying EMPIRES today, both because they like EMPIRES and because their fathers and grandfathers used EMPIRES before them.

Come in and see the EMPIRE, or ask to have it sent out to your place.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

SULZER CALLS HIS TRIAL A B G FARCE

ASSERTS MURPHY FORCED HIS CONVICTION — ISSUING A SIGNED STATEMENT.

TAKES DISMISSAL LIGHTLY

Declares Horse Thief in the West Has Him Beaten for Justice—Former New York Executive Smiles at Court Order.

FOUND GUILTY

Article 1—That Governor Sulzer filed with the secretary of state a false statement of his receipts and other monetary transactions involved in his gubernatorial campaign.

Article 2—That he committed perjury in his statement to the secretary of state relative to receipts and expenditures.

Article 4—That he suppressed evidence by means of threat to keep witnesses from testifying before the legislative investigating committee.

New York, Oct. 20.—In retiring from the governorship of New York, after he had been notified of his conviction by the impeachment court, 43 to 12, the governor showed that he was still fighting, whatever else had happened. He declared that Murphy controlled the court and really forced him from office.

In a lengthy statement the governor denounced the court of impeachment and the "bosses," declaring that the trial was simply a farce from beginning to end.

First Time in History.

Martin H. Glynn, lieutenant governor, was sworn in as his successor, the first in the history of the state to step into its high office in this manner.

The verdict of the court was that Sulzer was guilty of falsification, perjury and an attempt to suppress evidence against him. Of all other charges he was acquitted, the court unanimously voting him not guilty of the four remaining articles of impeachment.

By a virtually unanimous vote also the impeachment tribunal decided that Sulzer should not be punished by disqualification to hold office of honor and trust in this state in the future. This would have been the extreme penalty under the law.

Served With Verdict.

Probably the most dramatic feature of the day was the serving of the copy of the court's order of removal on the ousted executive.

The whole transaction was over in less than two minutes. In the meantime a score of newspapermen who had been summoned to the executive mansion to meet the governor waited on the veranda outside. Nolan passed out and the newspapermen were admitted. In a hall outside Mrs. Sulzer played with "Patsy," an Irish terrier. The animal growled and barked and snapped at a shawl she held in her hands, while she scolded him gently. A moment later Platt appeared with the copies of the governor's statement.

Sulzer Makes a Statement.

The Sulzer statement in part follows:

"In reponse to requests from friends throughout the state for some expression from me, I can only say at this time that I am glad that my trial is over.

"By virtue of a power beyond the present control of our electorate I now hand back to the people the commission they gave me, and I hand it back to them untarnished and unsullied.

"My lips have been sealed for weeks during which time I have patiently submitted in silence to abuse and vilification.

"'I deny that I used campaign contributions for personal use.

"'I deny that I speculated in Wall Street, or used money contributed for campaign purposes to buy stocks either in my own name or otherwise.

"Let me say here that I wanted to take the witness stand in my own behalf—especially to tell the story of my troubles with the 'bosses' and to deny the Peck fabrication, the absurd story of Allan Ryan and to explain the Morganthau testimony. But I was finally persuaded not to do so by those who have in view the real welfare of the state, and because under the rulings of the court, refusing to accept the testimony of Mr. Hennessy and other witnesses in my behalf, it was apparent that my story of the reasons Murphy 'ordered' my impeachment would also be ruled out as incompetent and inadmissable."

Slayer of Duluth Man Hysterical.

San Francisco, Oct. 20.—Miss Leah Alexander, who shot J. D. Van Baalen, an advertising solicitor, Saturday, inflicting wounds from which he died, chatted and laughed with a young woman friend at the city prison. "By the way, how's Van?" she asked. The visitor lowered her gaze and the prisoner guessed the truth. "It's not true, it's not true," she cried, and became hysterical. The police say she will be charged with murder. Van Baalen's body will be sent to his parents in Duluth, Minn.

V. HUERTA MAY NOW RESIGN

JOHN LIND REPORTS PROVISIONAL PRESIDENT SHOWS SIGNS.

United States May Soon Face the Question of Recognizing His Successor.

Washington, Oct. 20.—John Lind, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico, has reported from Vera Cruz indications of General Huerta's intention to resign the provisional presidency.

Mr. Lind has advised the president that if the information that has come to him is reliable, the United States may be called upon indirectly to indicate whether it will recognize, or open negotiations with Huerta's successor. Apparently various names are being suggested and acceptability to the American government, it s thought, might influence the final choice.

From Mr. Lind's report there arose rumors of fresh negotiatons with the Huerta government by the United States, but at the White House and state department it was declared communication had not been resumed.

Speeches in congress and other suggestions for an armed protectorate over Mexico in conjunction with other nations were met by high administration officials with the declarations that such an act would impair the sovereignty of Mexico.

It was declared by those who know President Wilson's attitude on these questions that no matter what emergency may arise, even though drastic measures are eventually required to compose the situation in Mexico, under no circumstances will the present administration at Washington interfere in any way with the sovereign or territorial rights of Mexico.

Diplomats Urge Intervention.

Mexico City.—"The United States must act to put an end to the impossible conditions constituting a daily menace to the lives of the nationalities." This was the opinion expressed by several of the diplomatic representatives who assembled for an informal conference in the German legation here. Among those who attended were the ministers of Great Britain, France, Germany, Spain, Austria and Norway.

TO GIVE FROST WARNINGS

Boston, Oct. 20.—The scientific protection of the New England farming districts from frost is soon to be attempted, when experiments being made by Prof. Alexander McAdie of Harvard are finished.

Already he has saved millions of dollars' worth of crops from destruction. Recently, in California, he protected, scientifically, millions of investments in fruit.

Briefly, this is what Professor McAdie hopes to do in his campaign against frost:

The farmer may go to bed with the assurance that in the morning his crops will not be withered.

He will be told in advance when to expect frost and will act in accordance with that information.

Frosts will be trailed; word will be wired ahead by telegraph and when that chilly member of the element family arrives it will find crops fully protected.

SHUNNED; MAY BE SUICIDE

Friends Ostracise Leper Nurse and It Is Feared She Has Ended Her Life as Consequence.

Chicago, Oct. 20.—The ostracism of Marie Collier by her former friends who feared her because she had lived as a nurse in a leper colony in Tracadie, N. B., is feared by friends to have caused Miss Collier to end her life. The police began search for the former nurse who disappeared Friday after leaving two notes, one to the woman with whom she made her home and one to a former acquaintance.

Miss Collier returned here a month ago when her health failed. She was shunned by her former friends and had difficulty in finding a room where she would be permitted to stay when her history as a leper nurse was learned. She then demanded that examination be given her by the Chicago Board of Health and specialists who said they could find no trace of leprosy.

Auto Accidents on Increase.

Chicago, Oct. 18.—Deaths in this city from automobile accidents increased 553 per cent from 1907 to 1912, according to statistics supplied to the Chicago safety commission, which was organized recently to combat such accidents. In 1907 there were 15 deaths from motor car accidents; last year there were 92, the increase being the largest in the country. In other large cities the increases for this period were: New York, 310 per cent; Philadelphia, 390; Boston, 277; Cleveland, 540; Baltimore, 200; Pittsburg, 180; Detroit, 325.

Business Better Than Ever.

New York, Oct. 20.—Bradstreet's says: "Trade reports manifest more or less irregularity, though they quite generally agree that business is in excess of last year, when activity was well nigh superabundant. Belated buying for fall and winter is clearly evidenced in exigent calls for prompt shipment of textiles. It is upon current requirements that most attention is focused, for future trade is held in check by changed tariff conditions or by higher rates for money."

WHEN IRELAND GETS HOME RULE

When home rule is established in Ireland it is likely that the building now occupied by the Bank of Ireland, in College Green, Dublin, will again become the Irish parliament house, as it was long ago. Below the picture of the bank are Jim Larkin (left) and Joseph Devlin (right), who will be rivals for the leadership of the Labor party in the Irish parliament.

DISASTROUS FIRE IN EAST ST. LOUIS

RAILROAD TERMINALS, BIGGEST IN THE UNITED STATES, ALMOST DESTROYED.

LOSS WILL TOTAL MILLION

Great Elevators Near River Reduced to Ashes in Short Time—Blaze Threatens the Entire City—Railroads Heavy Losers.

St. Louis, Oct. 21.—Fire, starting at midnight, came near destroying the East St. Louis terminals, said to be the greatest in the United States, and the loss is upwards of a million dollars.

The Greatest Losses.

The greatest losses were the Advance Elevator company, $650,000; and the Chicago & Alton Railway company, $100,000. The fire originated in the elevator which stands on the bank of the Mississippi river and soon spread north, east and south to the Chicago & Alton freight house, the Baltimore & Ohio warehouse, the Clover Lead warehouse and the railroad yards proper.

At no time was the fire under control of the East St. Louis fire department. Even when the St. Louis department sent several companies across the bridge the firemen gave all their energies to saving adjoining property.

Illinois Farmers Lose.

The elevator contained about 500,000 bushels of grain belonging to Illinois farmers. The fire originated on the side facing the river and on that account was inaccessible.

Shortly after midnight the bulk of the elevator crashed to the ground and part of the burning ruins slid into the river. The huge heap of grain continued to burn.

Having consumed everything else within its path, the fire was confined to 25 filled freight cars.

All the available engines in the city were pressed into service to draw the remaining cars out of reach of the flames.

Wind Carries Embers.

Burning embers were carried far by the wind, starting scores of small fires about the railroad yards and in the business section of East St. Louis.

The fire attracted a crowd of 15,000 spectators, who lined both the Missouri and Illinois side of the Mississippi river.

An incessant drizzling rain which had been in progress all afternoon aided the firemen in their work of soaking all property threatened by the fire.

Winter Pays Large Area a Call.

Minneapolis.—King Winter dropped down from the north Sunday and paid Minnesota and the surrounding states an informal call. He even went down as far as southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma. A chill wind and a light fall of snow came with him. The mercury in Minneapolis took a sudden drop as a result of the visit of the North King. At midnight the thermometer registered 31 degrees, one degree below the freezing point. There was a cold, stiff wind blowing.

German Army Men Killed.

Berlin, Oct. 18.—Not only the German navy, but the army as well, suffered from aviation accident yesterday. Three army officers, belonging to the flying corps were killed in aeroplane accidents. Captain Haeseler, Lieutenant Koch and Sergeant Mante, all of the German army aviation corps, were the victims of fatal aeroplane accidents. Lieutenant Koch and Sergeant Mante fell with their areoplane near Wuerzburg. Captain Haeseler was killed near Baesleau

VOLTURNO CREW DEFENDED

CAPTAIN DENIES THAT HIS MEN SHOWED COWARDICE.

Reaches New York on Kroonland and Tells Sory of Sea Tragedy—Other Things Refuted.

New York, Oct. 18.—Francis Inch, the boyish-looking Briton who commanded the burned steamer Volturno, came to port, bringing with him 87 survivors, passengers and crew of his ill-starred ship. His story of the disaster in which 136 lives were lost, had preceded him by wireless, but in a cabin on Kroonland, which brought him here, Inch told his tale in simply phrased and modestly spoken detail that described more vividly than the wireless could picture the panorama of the Volturnos loss and the rescue of more than 500 of those she had on board.

Cowardice, there was none on the Volturno, either among officers or crew, Inch said. There was no rush of seamen which made it necessary for him to warn them back with his revolver. His revolver was in a drawer in his cabin and it burned with the ship, and no one on board drew a revolver. These statements he intended should refute the stories told by steerage passengers who arrived yesterday on the Grosser Kurfuerst.

The Volturnos master, besides defending his own officers and men said he had no criticism to make of the tactics of any of the boats that stood by.

Inch denied reports of rotting tackle and fire hose and of unsafe lifeboats, all of which were in good condition, he said. He counted only three explosions, the last one wreckng wheel and compass so that a hand-gear had to be rigged up.

Inch denied stories of steerage passengers that women were swept overboard and babies were trampled upon while being rescued by the Grosser Kurfuerst's first boat that came in response to Lloyd's errand. Officers urged men and women to jump overboard, for the lifeboat could not get near enough for them to be lowered into it. None dared to jump.

Inch's three "kids" and their mother are in London. One of his first acts upon arriving here was to send them a cablegram. Their father went 36 hours without eating or drinking, refusing to leave the work of firefighting. "I smoked, smoked about all the time, cigars, pipes, cigarets, anything I could get," Inch said. A blast of heat blinded his eyes with pain and the skin peeled from his face when he received his first medical attention after being rescued. They had to drop cocaine into his eyes before he could see.

POPE PIUS MUCH IMPROVED

Pontiff Now Feels Strong Enough to Receive Audiences—Large Reception Thursday.

Rome, Oct. 21.—During the past fortnight the condition of the pope has improved greatly. He has resumed his audiences and Sunday received the Right Reverend Francis Mostyn, bishop of Menevit, Wales, who found the pontiff looking better than ever before. The pope informed the bishop that he anticipated the pleasure of receiving on Thursday 200 pilgrims, who come to Rome under the charge of Bishop Mostyn.

Missouri Pioneer's Unique Record.

Gentry, Mo., Oct. 20.—J. W. Lawrance, one of the pioneers of this county, has returned here after a two years' visit to various other states. Larrance is 82 years old and is a teetotaler, having never tasted intoxicating liquors and never used tobacco in any form. Furthermore, he never was at a show, and although he has spent months at a time in some of the larger cities he never has been inside any place of amusement. He never attended a church entertainment.

MRS. PANKHURST IS ADMITTED TO U. S.

ORDER TO DEPORT MILITANT LEADER IS REVERSED AT WASHINGTON.

NOT FORCED TO GIVE BOND

Suffragette Released on Own Recognizance—Doubt Exists Regarding "Moral Turpitude" of Englishwoman.

Washington, Oct. 21.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant British suffragist, is free to enter the United States. The Ellis island board's order of deportation was reversed after President Wilson had conferred on the case with Secretary Wilson and a hearing had been concluded before Immigration Commissioner Caminetti.

Admitted on Own Recognizance.

Secretary Wilson announced at the conclusion of his conference with the president that Mrs. Pankhurst would be admitted upon her own recognizance, with the understanding that she would depart at the end of her lecture engagements. No bond was exacted.

Secretary Wilson declared that he and the president had discussed the question briefly.

"We agreed," he said, "that Mrs. Pankhurst should be admitted on her own recognizance. My own reason is, and the president feels likewise, that there is naturally an element of doubt as to whether her acts constitute moral turpitude or were political in character.

"Being admitted on her own recognizance, of course, if she violates any of our laws, we have two remedies. Our courts may pass on her acts or we may deport her. There being the element of doubt as to whether moral turpitude or political offense was involved, we decided that we have sufficient safeguards and that there can be no harm in admitting her."

Formal Order of Release.

The decision by the president and Secretary Wilson was communicated to Commissioner General Caminetti, who issued the formal order of release. President Wilson felt that the law had a flexible interpretation, so that it was largely a question of policy.

Commissioner Caminetti's decision was in strict accordance with the views of President Wilson and the secretary of labor. Mr. Caminetti filed a brief memorandum, recommending Mrs. Pankhurst's admission on her own recognizance and announced that he would later file his reasons in writing.

There was no demonstration at the immigration bureau when the decision was announced. The audience of women which had sat through the hearing had departed. Mrs. Pankhurst's lawyers received the verdict with broad smiles and announced they would leave at once for New York.

At headquarters of the National Woman Suffrage association the news was received joyously but all of the officers said they expected nothing else. Supporters of the suffrage movement in congress received the announcement without making formal statements.

Taken to Home of Mrs. Belmont.

New York.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst left Ellis island and came to New York. A motor car of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, suffrage leader, met her at the pier and she was driven to Mrs. Belmont's home. The management of Madison Square Garden announced that, in deference to Mrs. Pankhurst's desire to get a good rest, the mass meeting she was to have addressed had been postponed to Wednesday night.

WILD BEASTS CAUSE RIOT

Tiger and Eight Lions Create Panic in Streets of Leipzig, Germany.

Leipzig, Oct. 21.—When a streetcar collided with a circus wagon it liberated one tiger and eight lions and Leipzig was in an uproar.

The female trainer of the animals succeeded in recapturing the tiger, but the lions had a merry time until the police killed six and roped two. One lion leaped to the driver's seat of an autobus and dispossessed the chauffeur to the discomforture of the passengers. A policeman shot the beast from his perch.

Five other lions were shot down in the streets. Two more leaped through the plate glass front of a hotel and held high carnival in the corridors. The hotel was crowded with guests who had attended the military centennial celebration in their rooms and distracted the clerk with calls for help.

Sulzer Accuses Tammany.

New York, Oct. 21.—In an exclusive statement to The Evening Mail former Governor Sulzer made the charge that Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, offered to pay his debts last December and give him enough money to meet his expenses while governor. He also told of the tremendous inuence wielded by Murphy in state appointments and gave what he alleges is the inner history of the campaign and his brief career as govern

TWENTY SOLDIERS KILLED IN WRECK

SPECIAL TROOP TRAIN PLUNGES THROUGH TRESTLE IN MISSISSIPPI.

ON MOBILE AND OHIO ROAD

Coast Artillery From Fort Morgan Victims in Fearful Disaster—Tender and Four Coaches Quit Track Burying Inmates.

Meridian, Miss., Oct. 21. — Twenty soldiers of Companies 39 and 170, coast artillery, were killed and about 100 others injured when a special troop train on the Mobile and Ohio railroad crashed through a trestle near State Line, Miss. Division Superintendent Pigford of the Mobile and Ohio, in a report sent to headquarters of the road at Mobile, gives this list of the casualities.

Cause of Wreck.

The wreck was caused by the engine tender jumping the track when about 200 hundred feet from a trestle. The engine was not derailed and passed over the trestle. The tender broke loose from the engine, however, and with the baggage car and three coaches plunged 25 feet to the ground.

Sixteen bodies were taken from the wreckage and Superintendent Pigford said he was sure four more bodies were in the debris.

Partial List of Victims.

According to an official report received here the dead are: Joseph Teben, Ernest Parquette, Clyde Teel, H. B. Bishop, G. C. Burleson, Joseph Provence, W. H. Prim, Goodes, Remsen, Gruckle, Acres, Captain Johnson, of the Eighth regiment band, Corporal Kohler, Corporal Chlewski, Van Stebbins, private, one unidentified body with initials "H. T." on cap.

Troops On Way to Fair.

One hundred and seventy-nine soldiers were on the special train. They were from Fort Morgan and Fort Barancas and were on their way to Meridian to participate in the Mississippi-Alabama fair.

As meager news of the wreck reached Meridian a special relief train bearing physicians and nurses left for the scene. Other trains left from Mobile and Whistler, Ala.

The coaches were well filled and when the three cars plunged through the trestle the men had little chance to escape. The dead and injured were entangled in a twisted mass of wreckage, making it difficult to remove bodies or rescue injured.

Because of the confusion, due largely to poor communication it was impossible to ascertain how many of the injured may die or their names.

SHUNNED; MAY BE SUICIDE

Friends Ostracise Leper Nurse and It Is Feared She Has Ended Her Life as Consequence.

Chicago, Oct. 21.—The ostracism of Marie Collier by her former friends who feared her because she had lived as a nurse in a leper colony in Tracadie, N. B., is feared by friends to have caused Miss Collier to end her life. The police began search for the former nurse who disappeared Friday after leaving two notes, one to the woman with whom she made her home and one to a former acquaintance.

Miss Collier returned here a month ago when her health failed. She was shunned by her former friends and had difficulty in finding a room where she would be permitted to stay when her history as a leper nurse was learned. She then demanded that examination be given her by the Chicago Board of Health and specialists who said they could find no trace of leprosy.

Big Four Over Embankment.

Tiffin, Ohio, Oct. 21.—Three persons were probably fatally injured, four were seriously hurt and scores were cut and bruised when a southbound Big Four passenger train was wrecked three miles south of this city. The engine, baggage car and two coaches left the track and rolled down the embankment. Spreading rails is said to have been the cause of the wreck.

Mrs. Rockefeller's Health Poor.

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 21.—Although he expected to be in New York in time to vote at the mayoralty election on Nov. 4, John D. Rockefeller said that his stay here would be prolonged indefinitely. The uncertain condition of Mrs. Rockefeller's health has caused another postponement of their departure from their summer home.

Slayer of Duluth Man Hysterical.

San Francisco, Oct. 21.—Miss Leah Alexander, who shot J. D. Van Baalen, an advertising solicitor, Saturday, inflicting wounds from which he died, chatted and laughed with a young woman friend at the city prison. "By the way, how's Van?" she asked. The visitor lowered her gaze and the prisoner guessed the truth. "It's not true, it's not true," she cried, and became hysterical. The police say she will be charged with murder. Van Baalen's body will be sent to his parents in Duluth, Minn.

TORTURING TWINGES

Much so-called rheumatism is caused by weakened kidneys. When the kidneys fail to clear the blood of uric acid, the acid forms into crystals like bits of broken glass in the muscles, joints and on the nerve casings. Torturing pains dart through the affected part whenever it is moved. By curing the kidneys, Doan's Kidney Pills have eased thousands of rheumatic cases, lumbago, sciatica, gravel, neuralgia and urinary disorders.

A COLORADO CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

T. Scantling, Anson St., Trinidad, Colo., says: "I was helpless in bed for three months with rheumatism. When I did get up, I had to use crutches. Besides backache and rheumatic pains, I had trouble with my kidneys. After doctoring unsuccessfully, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured the terrible pains and I have been able to work every day since. I feel like a different man."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

We Will Pay You $120.00 to distribute religious literature in your community. 60 days' work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 1014 Arch St., Philadelphia.

Fargo Directory

Shotwell Floral Co.

Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 43-1913.

Occasionally a widower's heart is warmed over by an old flame.

Bronchial troubles weaken the system. Pneumonia sometimes follows. Dean's Menthelated Cough Drops prevent trouble.

Ohio broke a record last year by mining more than 34,500,000 short tons of coal.

Economy.

"I don't tell all I know," she said. "I believe in economizing time."

"But why begrudge a minute or two?" he asked.

Still Something Lacking.

"Dobbs says he is a man of action."

"And so he is. Dobbs can use more gestures and less common sense in an argument than any other man I ever saw."

Vindicated.

"I always knew John would grow up to be a great help to us," said the fond mother.

"I haven't seen him do any regular work yet," replied Farmer Corntossel.

"Well, if you'll take notice, he's the only person around the place who knows how to teach the summer boarders to do the tango and the turkey trot."

Earthquakes in Scotland.

Earthquake shocks have recently been experienced in the central part of Scotland. A tremor was distinctly felt in all parts of Bridge of Allan the other morning, but no damage was done. Two earthquake shocks were experienced in Dunblane district early the previous morning. Generally sound sleepers were awakened by the rattling of windows and doors, and more than one housewife had to gather up the fragments of broken china in the morning caused by the shock. It is also reported that the pheasants from the hills had been scared by the unusual occurrence, as those about at that time observed them as if in a panic. The shock lasted nearly half a minute.

Breakfast Sunshine

Post Toasties and Cream

There's a delicious smack in these crisp, appetizing bits of toasted corn that brings brightness and good cheer to many and many a breakfast table.

Toasties are untouched by hand in making; and come in tightly sealed packages—clean and sweet—ready to eat with cream and sugar.

Wholesome Nourishing Easy to Serve

Sold by grocers everywhere.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

EACH SCHOOL CHILD COSTS $7 A YEAR

STATE AID FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS MORE THAN $3,000,000—FUNDS INCREASING.

LEGISLATURE RAISED FUND

Manner of Distribution Explained and Sources of This Vast Revenue Is Shown in the Ensuing Article of Interest to Taxpayers.

St. Paul.—It costs the State of Minnesota approximately $7 annually for each child attending the public schools of the state.

Recently the October distribution of the current school fund amounting to $1,450,794.30 was made by Charles G. Schulz, superintendent of education. This is payable October 27.

Additional Appropriation.

In addition, the last Legislature appropriated $763,972.68 as state aid for high schools, graded and industrial schools. Soon there will be another distribution of something more than $800,000 to rural and consolidated schools. When this is completed the total will exceed the $3,000,000 mark sufficiently to make approximately $7 paid out for each of the 432,000 school children in the state.

The current school fund is derived from the permanent school fund interest-bearing securities and is distributed on a per capita basis, $3.60 for each pupil. Last year it amounted to $1,331,520.30 and next year it is expected that $1,600,000 will be available. Because of the rapid growth of the permanent school fund, derived from iron mine royalties and the sale of state land, the interest will reach the $8,000,000 mark by 1950.

Special Aids Voted.

The Legislature also each year makes appropriations for special state aid derived from direct taxation. The sum of $763,972.68 available this year is apportioned as follows:

For departments in agriculture, economics and manual training	$2,500
For departments in agriculture and either home economics or manual training	1,300
For training department for rural teachers, applicable only to high schools	1,000

The last Legislature also increased the annual aid to high schools from $1,750 to $2,200 and for graded schools from $600 to $750. This increase, however, does not apply to the present school year, but will be included in the distribution for aid in 1914. Graded schools maintaining two years' high school work receive $1,100; consolidated schools $1,500 for a four-department school, $1,000 for a three-department school, $750 for a school of two departments. A consolidated school also receives aid towards a new building and equipment of $1,500. Semi-graded schools receive $300 annual aid, rural schools, Class A $150, Class B $100, and Class C $75.

How It Is Apportioned.

Of the special aid to high, industrial and graded schools, St. Louis and Wright counties receive the most, $24,600 each. Despite the fact that 35 per cent of the taxes for this aid are raised in Ramsey and Hennepin counties the former gets but $12,000 and the latter $19,350. This is because these counties have but few of the type of schools entitled to the aid. Little Itasca county gets as much as Ramsey.

IMPROVISED SPEEDERS CRASH

Run by Gasoline Engines on Green Bay Road—Pleasure Party on One.

Winona. — David Davis, thirty-eight years old, is dead, and several other persons were slightly injured as a result of a head-on collision between two improvised gasoline speeders on the Green Bay railroad tracks between Dodge and Arcadia, Wis., across the river from Winona.

Reconstructed handcars on which were mounted gasoline engines, were demolished in the collision. On one of the cars were 8 persons, including Davis, one woman and nine-year-old girl. They were on a pleasure ride and had left Arcadia early in the evening. Davis was riding on the front of the machine, with his feet hanging over.

Saved by Boy's Confession.

Bemidji.—Edmund P. Gould, former clerk in the Bemidji postoffice, who was arrested last July on a charge of rifling registered letters, and with strong circumstantial evidence against him probably would have gone to a federal prison but for the confession of Clayton Collard, a 16-year-old boy who carried the mail. He has just received an order from Washington reinstating him and formally exonerating him from the charges which were preferred against him.

SAMUEL G. IVERSON.

The first man to announce himself as a candidate for the republican nomination for Governor of Minnesota, is Samuel G. Iverson. He will be opposed by Governor A. O. Eberhart, the present incumbent. Mr. Iverson is at present the state auditor of the North Star State. He comes out on a platform of "law enforcement."

WONDERFUL GROWTH SHOWN

Albert Lea Boasts Population of 11,487 from 6,192 in 1910.

Albert Lea.—The manager of the new directory for Albert Lea announces that the population at the present time is 11,487. This is the actual count by trained canvassers and is not an estimate based upon the usual manipulation of figures found by using a multiple of 2½. The canvassers made a house to house canvass and took the names of every resident. This gave Albert Lea proper, 10,918; North Albert Lea, 569; total 11,487.

The federal census in 1910 gave the poulation as 6,192.

The growth of Albert Lea the past three years has been nothing short of phenomenal. Scores upon scores of modern dwelling houses have been built until they extend past the city limits into the suburbs.

This year's building operations have broken all former records for a year's growth, and the indications are for a still better year in 1914.

Had not the scarcity of houses kept many families from moving to Albert Lea, the population would have reached the 15,000 mark.

NEIGHBORHOODS LIKE PLAN

School Rallies a Success at Bemidji and Beltrami County Will Follow Suit.

Bemidji.—So successful have been the neighborhood gatherings among farmers when assisted by faculty members of the Bemidji high school, that W. P. Dyer, superintendent of the city schools, has received fifteen requests from various communities in the southern half of Beltrami county for similar meetings.

Ten of these have been granted definite dates. Tonight has been engaged by the Bauers school and Saturday the Bass Lake school will be the scene of entertainment.

Buena Vista, Wilton, the Hattie F. Smith school and the Swanson Lake school are scheduled for Oct. 21, 23, 28 and 30, respectively. Helga township, south of Nary, Long Lake, the Opsata and the Giant Valley schools will be visited Nov. 4, 6, 11 and 13. Other dates will be arrange later

CLAIMS HE MURDERED GIRL.

Youth Arrested in Chicago Confesses Having Killed Minneapolis Girl.

Minneapolis. — A startling confession to the murder of Alice Matthews on March 23, 1912, followed the capture in Oak Park, Ill., of Alfred Driscoll, formerly of Minneapolis, who declared he had strangled the girl near her home, and had eluded the police in their search later.

While Driscoll is held for the Minneapolis force, Detective Louis Hansen, formerly captain of detectives, declared he believed the story was a fabrication for he once obtained a confession from Driscoll while he was in the state training school at Red Wing and had proven that Driscoll could not have committed the crime.

Driscoll, who says he was raised at Columbia Heights, was captured in a grocery in Oak Park, after citizens called the police.

Government to Educate Indians.

White Earth.—The secretary of the interior has approved the selection of Indian pupils, in accordance with an act of congress providing an appropriation of $4,000 for the higher education of ten Chippewa Indian boys. Vernon Davis, Macalester college, St. Paul; Arthur Foster, medical department, University of Chicago; Francis D. Beaulieu, Minnesota college of law; William MacArthur, Clifford C. Price, Charles J. Leith and James B. Warren, Pillsbury academy, Owatonna, have been selected.

YIELD OFF PEAT LAND GOOD

Farmers Demonstrate This Year That This Soil Can Be Profitably Tilled.

Middle River.—Regardless of the fact that much skepticism has been shown among actual settlers and investors as to the producing qualities of the peat soil, and also regardless of the fact that farmers' institute speakers, sent out by the state, have time and again tried to demonstrate the lack of the necessary maturing material of the peat, this year's crop off peat land in this vicinity has been very satisfactory and above the black loam soil crops.

Andrew P. Nelson, a farmer in the town of Moose River, east of this village, this year harvested and threshed 358 bushels of No. 1 flax from 31 acres of solid peat, or more than 11½ bushels an acre. The depth of the peat is from 8 inches to 2 feet and does not contain any black dirt whatever. The crop was put in about May 20 and harvested, perfectly matured, Sept. 6.

A larger area of peat land than ever before has this year been under cultivation, and the success of farming the same in eastern Marshall and Beltrami counties is watched with great interest by land men and prospective buyers, all over the state. Other reports on peat soil crops, practically all flax, report yields of from 6 to 10 bushels an acre.

DOG IMITATES SUFFRAGETTES

Goes on Hunger Strike Like British Militants When Man He Adopts Is Locked Up.

Minneapolis.—This is a story of a dog that went on a hunger strike. It is also a story of a man the dog adopted showing his faithfulness and setting the whole police department on the hunt of the dog.

Hector is the dog and Frank Trezwick of St. Cloud, Minn., is the man. The man took a drop too much and was snagged into the East Side police station. The dog accompanied him and when his friend disappeared cellward, Hector set up a howl that kept the policemen awake. Frank was fed in his cell and food was offered Hector in Lieutenant J. Quealey's office, but Hector would not eat. He would only howl.

When Frank was fined and it looked as if he would have to spend a few days in the workhouse, arrangements were made to have Hector cared for at the pound, but Frank paid his fine and asked for Hector.

The dog's howling had ceased, but the policemen were surprised when they discovered that Hector was not in the room where he had been locked. He had wriggled between narrow bars and had gone to look for Frank.

Now the police have been instructed to find Hector and restore Frank to him.

CROOKSTON GETS NEW PARK

Capt. M. R. Brown Gives Forty-Acre Tract Which May Be Added to City's System.

Crookston. — Crookston will soon have a substantial addition to its park system through the donation of a 40-acre tract in Jerome's addition, lying along the river bank. The new addition will come through the initiative of Captain M. R. Brown of Minneapolis, who was a pioneer resident of the city and expects to return here shortly.

The tract has been used for pasturage. Captain Brown is the owner of an undivided one-half interest, Mrs. J. B. streeter a one-fourth interest, and P. J. McGuire and the Mat Cornelius estate each an undivided one-eigth interest, acquired through tax title.

Captain Brown made his tender only on the condition that the others would also donate their share, or that the city would acquire it, and that the entire tract would be used for park purposes.

Brainerd Phone War Hot.

Brainerd.—Officials of Brainerd, from mayor to city clerk and all the aldermen, have been served with notices to appear in the district court on Nov. 4 and answer to the alternative writ of mandamus sued out by the Minnesota Telephone company, such order having been granted by Judge W. S. McClenahan. This adds another phase to the telephone war being waged by the Northwestern Telephone Exchange company and the Minnesota Telephone company, the latter having the backing of the Tri-State. The Minnesota company desires the city to approve its plans for the construction of its telephone exchange or to show cause why this has not been done.

Farm School Is Gaining.

Crookston.—Illustrating the growth of the field of the Crookston School of Agriculture, students are now registered from fifty-six different towns scattered in twenty different counties in northern Minnesota. Another encouraging fact about the attendance is the increasing ratio of the girls to the boys. At the beginning there were but a sprinkling of girls, about one to six. Now there is one girl to every two boys, and the ratio of students to enter this year is nearly equal.

Foozled and Fumed.

"Ever played golf?"

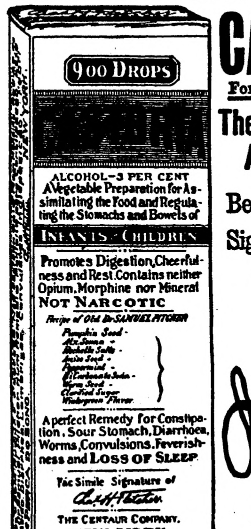
"Only in a cursory way."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Nature Study.

"Pop, tell me one thing."

"What is it, my boy?"

"Is a spider web-footed?"



900 DROPS
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral
NOT NARCOTIC
Recipe of Old Dr SAMUEL PITCHER
Pumpkin Seed
Alx. Senna
Rochelle Salts
Anise Seed
Peppermint
Bi Carbonate Soda
Worm Seed
Clarified Sugar
Wintergreen Flavor
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP
Fac Simile Signature of
THE CENTAUR COMPANY.
NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES 35 CENTS
Guaranteed under the Food and

Exact Copy of Wrapper

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

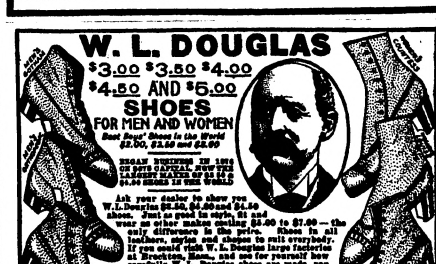
WINCHESTER

Rifles Shoot Well, Work Well and Wear Well

The rough, hard usage that hunting rifles often receive requires them to be constructed on sound mechanical principles and of the best materials. All Winchester rifles are so made. Nothing is left undone that will make them shoot well, work well, look well and wear well.

Winchester Guns and Ammunition—The Red W Brand—are made for all kinds of Hunting

WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN.



W. L. DOUGLAS

$3.00 $3.50 $4.00 $4.50 AND $5.00 SHOES FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Best Boys' Shoes in the World $2.00, $2.50 and $3.00

BEGAN BUSINESS IN 1876 ON $875 CAPITAL. NOW THE LARGEST MAKER OF $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES IN THE WORLD

Ask your dealer to show you W.L.Douglas $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 shoes. Just as good in style, fit and wear as other makes costing $5.00 to $7.00 — the only difference is the price. Shoes in all leathers, styles and shapes to suit everybody. If you could visit W. L. Douglas large factories at Brockton, Mass., and see for yourself how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then understand why they are warranted to fit better, look better, hold their shape and wear longer than any other make for the price.

If W. L. Douglas shoes are not for sale in your vicinity, order direct from the factory. Shoes for every member of the family, at all prices, by Parcel Post, postage free. Write for Illustrated Catalog. It will show you how to order by mail, and why you can save money on your footwear.

CAUTION! See that W.L. Douglas name is stamped on the bottom. W. L. Douglas, [illegible] Spark Street, Brockton, Mass.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE

The Glow of Warmth in Winter Homes!

Don't shiver, this year!

Don't put up with cold rooms to go to bed in, and draughty rooms to sit in. Enjoy true winter comfort, instead.

With the dandy Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater in your home, you can have heat where you want it.

Lights on the instant. Can be carried from room to room.

Gives forth no smoke or odor.

Warms things up for ten hours on one single gallon of oil.

Dandy in appearance.

Handy to have about in case of sickness.

Indispensable where there's a baby in the home.

Will save its cost during the first cold snap of winter.

King of Oil Heaters—because the most practical, the most economical to operate and most satisfactory in general results.

See the different models at your dealer's. Descriptive booklet mailed free upon request.

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

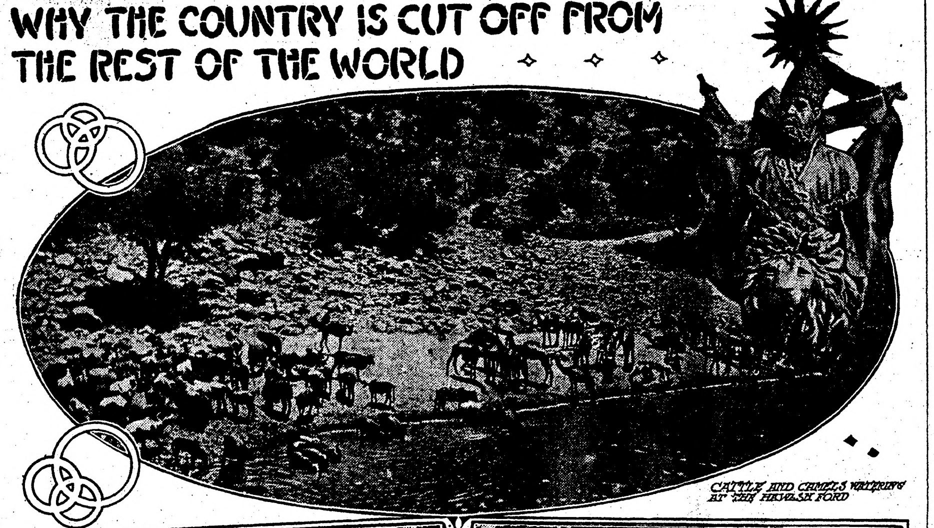
(AN INDIANA CORPORATION)

CHICAGO ILLINOIS

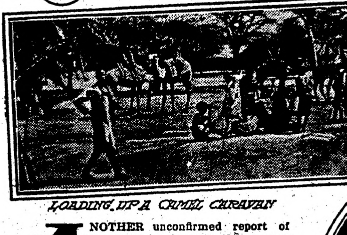
For best results use Perfection Oil

SECLUDED ABYSSINIA

WHY THE COUNTRY IS CUT OFF FROM THE REST OF THE WORLD



CATTLE AND CAMELS WAITING AT THE HAWASH FORD



LOADING UP A CAMEL CARAVAN

ROUGH ROAD ON THE CHER-CHER ROUTE

REFRESHING UNDER THE TREES AT GILLADOUX WELLS

ANOTHER unconfirmed report of the death of Menelik II., emperor of Abyssinia, has drawn attention to that monarch's isolated and little-known kingdom, which since the monarch's illness has been governed by a council of ministers. The present ruler's reign began in 1889, when, taking advantage of the disordered state of northern Abyssinia, Menelik proclaimed himself king of kings of Ethiopia on March 12, 1889, and was crowned at Entollo on November 3 of the same year. Ras Mangascia, a natural son of Theodore, made several attempts to regain power, but Menelik defeated all efforts to overthrow him. He conducted his government with firmness and sagacity and steadily consolidated his power.

In the first year of his reign he made a treaty with the Italians, practically placing Abyssinia under their protectorate, they on their part agreeing to lend him 4,000,000 francs. In consequence of disputes with the Italians and their encroachment on his territory and also of differences relative to the Uccials treaty Menelik raised a large army and inflicted a serious reverse on the Italian advance guard at Umbalago in December, 1895. The Negus then made propositions of peace, but they were unacceptable to the Italians as they included a demand for retirement and also for a modification of the Ucciali treaty.

On February 24, 1896, the Abyssinians concentrated at Adowa and were pursued there by the Italian forces under General Baratieri. The Italian troops advanced against the Abyssinians in three columns, but the configuration of the country permitted Menelik to concentrate his men in an attack on the left column, and the other two columns being prevented—partly by the configuration of the ground and partly it is said by bad dispositions consequent on a want of unanimity amongst the generals—from arriving in time to assist the Italians suffered an overwhelming defeat with a loss of 7,000 men killed and wounded. This caused the fall of Signor Crispi's government, and General Valles was sent with full power to treat, and an agreement fully recognizing the independence of Abyssinia was signed.

Menelik had three concubines, by whom he had one son, who died at the age of thirteen, and two daughters. One of them, Zeodita (Judith), married a Dijasmach who was governor of the Wonomigra Gallas, and the other, Schoagasch, married Ras Michael, governor of the Wollo Galla country.

Menelik married in 1883 Taitou, the present empress. She was a daughter of Batul, a former Ras of Gondar, where the women are famous for their white skins. She herself was a great beauty and very fair. She first married Waldo Gabriel, one of King Theodore's generals, but he was killed by Theodore shortly after their marriage. Soon after King Theodore's death she took for her second husband Dedjaz Tekla Georgis, whom she divorced. She was then married for the third time to the governor of one of the provinces, who was subsequently imprisoned by King John of Abyssinia. She then returned to a convent for a time but left there to marry the Kanjazmach Likargacho. Then Menelik fell in love with her, and in 1883, all obstacles having been removed, she made him her fifth husband.

Queen Taitou has borne Menelik no children. She has the reputation of being a woman of unusual strength of character and is said to have had great influence with her husband. She does not, however, share his views with regard to the encouragement of foreigners and foreign ways, but is much more inclined to discourage foreign intercourse and foreign civilization and to keep Abyssinia and its inhabitants to the customs and cruder methods of the old regime. According to report it was she who stiffened the backbone of Menelik during the varying fortunes of the battle of Adowa, and it was her advice that induced him to hold on until the ammunition of the Italian column was exhausted and so enabled him to surround and decimate the force opposing him. A clever retort is ascribed to Queen Taitou when a foreign representative was impressing upon her the advantages of foreign and more civilized countries, instancing telephones, railways, etc., and the various luxuries of civilized life. "If," she said, "things are so much better and pleasanter over there, why do your people come here?"

The defeat of the Italians greatly increased the prestige of Menelik. He presented President Carnot with the Order of the Holy Ghost and also sent him two tame lions. Afterwards he renewed negotiations with France, which had lapsed in 1891. He also sent a mission to the czar, and in February, 1897, he concluded a commercial treaty with the French, who in March of the same year dispatched an embassy under M. Lagarde to his court.

In 1898 a British mission under Sir Rennell Rodd was received by Menelik in great state, 20,000 troops being present, and in spite of the efforts of Colonel Leontieff at the head of the Russian mission and Prince Henri d'Orleans, who were endeavoring to induce him to thwart British efforts in Soudan, a treaty was concluded between the British government and Menelik. A curious circumstance connected with the British embassy was that the average height of the officials of the mission was over six feet, which fact appears to have greatly impressed the Abyssinians. The chief points of the treaty, which was ratified by Queen Victoria in July, were a settlement of the British Somali Protectorate frontier, the keeping open of the trade route from Zeylah to Harrar, and the prevention of transit through Abyssinia of arms for the Mahdists. In a letter to Queen Victoria Menelik said, "A treaty of peace now exists between our governments, and we hope it will increase in firmness and last forever."

In April, 1898, Lieutenant Harrington of the Bombay staff corps—now Sir John Lane Harrington, K. C. M. G.—who had been acting as British vice-consul on the Somali coast, was sent as British agent to Menelik's court, where he remained up to 1909. His firmness and the able management of such questions as arose from time to time between the British and Abyssinian governments gained him the confidence of Menelik and gave him considerable influence in the country.

In October, 1898, Ras Mangascia, governor of Tigre, rebelled and a large force was sent against him, but eventually negotiations were opened up and they settled matters amicably. Since that period Menelik continued consolidating his power, and his great force of character made itself felt to such an extent that peace has reigned throughout all his dominions from one end of the country to the other; the mandates of Menelik have been received with profound respect and implicitly obeyed. One nation after another has dispatched a representative to Abyssinia, and Menelik was until his recent illness in touch with the whole civilized world.

In November, 1909, Menelik was struck with cerebral paralysis and was stated to be at the point of death. A proclamation in his name was read to the chiefs preaching peace and unity and obedience to the successor he had selected, Lij Yasu. Ras Tesamma was to continue to be the guardian of his heir, and his majesty called down the curse of the Almighty on anyone who might attempt to oppose his successor. After this he recovered his bodily health, but was too feeble mentally to attend to his work. He suffered another relapse in the summer of 1909, but made a satisfactory recovery. In November, 1909, he had a paralytic stroke which, depriving him of all speech and almost of motion, entirely incapacitated him from all work. Since then, notably in 1910, he has on more than one occasion been reported dead, and although these rumors have been at once denied the fact remains that for the last two or three years he has been a mere figurehead, the government of the country having been carried out by a council of ministers under the presidency of Lij Yasu, the heir-apparent, and during this period it is doubtful whether he has been seen by any one but a few select court officials.

Lij Yasu, the heir-apparent, is the son of Menelik's daughter, Schoagasch, and Ras Michael, and was born in 1897.

Voyagers whose ways take them "somewheres east of Suez" may know something of Djibouti, but to the average person Djibouti is practically unknown. Suffice it to say that, although situated in the French Somaliland protectorate, it is practically the only port that serves the country of Abyssinia.

From Djibouti a single track (metregauge) railway runs to Dire-Dawa, some 185 miles inland. The trains run twice a week and the journey frequently takes 11 hours to accomplish, passing through some of the most desolate desert country imaginable.

Dire-Dawa has grown up around the railway terminus, and as it is some 3,000 feet above the sea level is much cooler than Djibouti. The place is not very large, but the wide streets and whitewashed buildings give the place an air of space and cleanliness. There is a large Arab and Somali settlement adjoining. Here one comes under Abyssinian officialdom and one's baggage has to pass the Abyssinian customs, usually not a very trying ordeal.

At Dire-Dawa travelers to Adis Ababa have to arrange their own caravans for the journey. Both mules and camels are available, but usually mules are taken, as they cover the journey in much quicker time than camels, which are usually only employed for heavy baggage and merchandise. One has choice of three routes from Dire-Dawa to the capital—the Cher-cher route, by which one travels along the Cher-cher, mountain range through fine forest and amongst beautiful pine-topped hills. This route is rather longer than the others, but is by far the most comfortable, as it is cooler, and one may purchase fresh provisions—milk, eggs, and sheep—from the small Abyssinian villages that one passes en route. Camels are unable to take this track, owing to the many steep ascents and descents, which can only be managed by mule or donkey.

The second trail is via the Asabot, passing along the foot of the Cher-cher range and joining the former route near the Hawash river. This route passes through the flat Danakil country, through great forests of mimosa trees and occasional open plains, where one meets from time to time enormous herds of cattle and camels guarded by fierce-looking Danakil shepherds armed with spears and curved knives. No provisions can be purchased on this route, but it is fairly good going except during the very dry season before the rains begin, when water is apt to be scarce.

The third route, the Bilan, runs farther north in the Danakil country, and though flat is very trying on account of the great heat and long marches that have to be made from watering place to watering place.

From Tchoba it is two days' journey to Gondabourka at the foot of the Balchi pass. Here the track rises nearly 900 feet, a sheer ascent, and the steepest climb on the journey. The path is simply cut along the mountain side, and at times one is about six inches from a drop of 200 feet. From Balchi the road is very uninteresting, passing through long rolling plains of cultivated land, and about two days brings one in sight of the capital.

The view of the city as one approaches is very fine. A large circle of hills surrounds it, and on a small elevation running out into the center of the circle is built the "guebi," or emperor's palace. There are hardly any buildings of importance, and the guebi itself is but a miscellaneous collection of semi-European and native buildings.

ERADICATION OF INJURIOUS SHEEP TICK

Dipping Sheep on Western Ranch.

(By LEROY D. SWINGLE.)

The sheep tick is one of the worst enemies that the sheep raiser has to meet. The damage that it does is accomplished slowly, silently and continuously. For this reason the damage may not be noticed or thought to be of much consequence. Nevertheless, in the course of a year, constantly pestering its host by its blood-sucking habit, the sheep tick can effect a large amount of damage, which, however, is hard to estimate. If it should require but ten cents worth of grain more to raise and fatten a ticky lamb than one without ticks, the damage done in a flock of 10,000 is $1,000. This is worth considering. The fact is that the damage is more than ten cents per sheep when the effect on the wool is added. Therefore, laying aside our moral duty to allay the suffering of the suffering brute, there is potent financial reason for destroying the sheep tick. For determining intelligent methods of destroying the tick it was necessary to discover the details of its life history.

The life history is divided into four stages: the egg, the larva, the pupa, and the imago, or fully developed tick. This is the stage that is common to everyone. The egg is not laid as in the case with most flies. After fertilization it remains in the uterus of the mother and develops into a larva, which is laid in the wool of the sheep. This larva changes into the pupa stage in about 12 hours after it is laid. When first laid it is covered with a white chitinous membrane which soon becomes brown and hard. For convenience, I shall include in the pupa stage that portion of the larva stage which is passed outside of the tick and shall speak of the tick as laying a pupa. Most people call the pupa an egg.

From the standpoint of the eradication of the tick the incubation period of the pupa, i. e., the time elapsing between the laying and the hatching, is the most important. None of the sheep dips will kill all the pupae, hence more than one dipping is necessary. The last dipping must occur after all of the pupae have hatched.

It was found that pupae would hatch in from 19 to 23 days in warm weather. In cold weather the incubation period might be much longer, sometimes 36 days being required. Thus the last dipping in summer must be at least 23 days after the first in order to kill all the ticks after they have hatched. In autumn or spring the last dipping should not occur sooner than 25 to 28 days after the first.

The question of next importance is how old must a tick be before it lays its first pupa? Experiments indicate that ticks may lay their first pupa within two weeks after hatching. This means that a young tick hatching soon after the first dipping may reach sexual maturity and lay its first pupa before the last of the other pupae on the sheep have hatched. Theoretically, it would be necessary, in order to prevent this, to make another dipping about two weeks after the first. Three dippings placed two weeks apart are certain to eradicate the tick, if the proper dip is used. There are, however, certain other factors that make it unnecessary to use three dippings, two being sufficient. These should be placed about 25 to 28 days apart in such weather as occurs in September.

It is difficult to determine which is the best dip to use, some being better in certain respects and poorer in others. The effect upon the wool and the cost must also be taken into consideration. The first essential is that the dip will kill the ticks and not injure the sheep. Among the coal tar dips there are several that may be mentioned as effective.

It should be remarked that sheep and lambs with short wool should be left in the dip longer than those with long wool, on account of their drying more quickly.

The best time to dip is probably in the autumn. The chief reason for advising dipping in the fall is that the wool on the lambs and sheep will be grown out so as to retain more dip. This makes the killing of the ticks more certain. If they are carefully dipped then the flock will be rid of the ticks and no dipping will be needed thereafter. The result will be that the next crop of lambs will be free from ticks from the first.

The sheep tick once eradicated will not return to the flock unless they associate with other ticky sheep. The sheep tick will not live but a few days, generally not over three or four, off the sheep. In this respect it differs from the true tick, which may be picked up by the host in the brush. The sheep tick's whole life is spent on the sheep. The pupae will, however, hatch even if they are kept off the sheep during the whole incubation period. It is therefore important to keep the sheep after dipping away from the shorn wool for at least a month. Young ticks will be hatching out in the shorn wool for three or four weeks after shearing.

It is hardly necessary to mention the fact that the attendants should not come in contact with the undipped sheep and then associate with the dipped flock.

GOOD DEMAND FOR HIGH-CLASS HORSES

Insistent Call for Draft Animals Cannot Be Supplied—Mare Is Profitable.

(By H. G. GARDNER.)

There is an insistent market demand for high-class horses, especially for draft horses, that cannot be supplied. On the other hand, the country is flooded with common ordinary "plug" horses. They do not fill any particular requirement or demand, hence the very low and profit-killing prices for which they must sell. This insistent demand for high-class draft horses does not come from the market alone. There also comes a demand from the farm, for this is a day of heavy machinery, demanding and increased amount of motive power. Experience has proven that the most satisfactory and economical form of motive power on the average farm is the heavy, sound draft mare. Besides doing most of the farm work she will raise a valuable colt each year, if properly handled. Thus she is constantly producing a profit other than by means of the work she does. The gelding or mule will not do this and in these days of high-priced lands, feeds, and labor this proposition is worthy of careful consideration.

Profit in Goats.

Goats may be raised profitably on land which is unsuited for any kind of cultivation

LESS DOGS MEANS MANY MORE SHEEP

One Big Detriment to Animal Industry Is Large Increase in Worthless Curs.

I cannot concede, all things considered, says Secretary Coburn of Kansas in a recent address, that the Architect of the Universe made on this round world of ours an equal area better adapted than Kansas to profitable sheep industry. The one detriment is worthless dogs, and this is the way we rise to the opportunity with a kind Providence confronts us: In 1882 we had 806,000 sheep; in 1910 we had 175,000, a decrease of more than 78 per cent.; in 1882 we had 29,000 dogs; in 1910 we had 199,000, an increase of about 54 per cent.

These figures line with the experience of all the ages, which points out that no people whose land owners neglect animal husbandry, who sidestep the manure spreader, expectorate upon a sheep and defy the dog, can have any considerable well grounded, permanent prosperity.

Keep Stock Growing.

Do not let the stock stop growing or producing milk during the fall, for lack of feed or from exposure. Any loss sustained will be regained at great expense of feed, or not at all. Keep the stock comfortable by supplying them with shelter from bad weather and see that they have plenty to eat.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Moroccan Treaty

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

PAUL LANE had spent two weeks in Paris, in daily communication with Jean Rosny, secretary to the League of Lost Causes. But though he had learned many things he had not yet learned the identity of the mysterious woman at whose bidding he had gone to Europe to sacrifice his millions for an impracticable ideal.

Of the gigantic scope of the new secret movement he had, however, formed a tolerably clear idea. Working in different countries and under various guises, it aimed always at the various end: the revival of the monarchical idea in Europe, and, in particular, the restoration of the ancient lines of kings. In England its object was to discredit the monarchy by stirring up social disquietude, with the ultimate end of replacing the Hanoverian dynasty by a representative of the Stuarts. In France, ignoring the Bonapartes, it aimed to revive the glories of the Orleans family. In Sweden it supported the heirs of the Vasa dynasty against the plebeian descendants of Napoleon's marshal, Bernadotte, of peasant birth, who occupied the throne. It was for Manoel in Portugal, for the Sobieski dynasty in Poland, for the heirs to the old Tuscan and Sicilian kingdoms in Italy. And everywhere it was supported by men of the highest rank and position, who had turned against democracy and looked back with loving reverence upon the traditions of the past.

At the head of this formidable confederacy was believed to be Alfonso of Spain, that irresponsible, boyish ruler whose adventurous, chafing spirit typified the revolt of the old against the new. Himself a Bourbon and a close friend of the deposed Manoel of Portugal, he led the lesser potentates who were allied with him. Against this league of the "Reds," as they were contemptuously termed by their opponents, the kings and statesmen of the more powerful countries had allied themselves in a union which, supposed to have its headquarters in Paris, was called the "Black" cabinet. The struggle was none the less profound because knowledge of it was confined almost entirely to the chancelleries of Europe.

On the fifteenth morning after his arrival in Paris Jean Rosny called upon Paul Lane at his hotel. After an informal chat the Frenchman suddenly became very serious.

"You were saying to me only yesterday, my friend, that you feared we cared more for your millions than for yourself," he said. "You have begged that you be permitted to display your worth in our movement, to make yourself invaluable to our cause. The league is in urgent need of one who shall go on a delicate mission. You speak Spanish as well as you do French, I believe?"

"Yes," answered Paul. "I spent two years in Buenos Aires as representative of my father's firm."

"Excellent, my dear Paul. Then let me describe the situation to you. You are aware that events of moment are impending in Morocco? You have read of them in the newspapers, of course, and have made no sense out of them, as with us all. England, France, Spain, and Germany seem to be striving each to obtain possession of that unhappy country. The real situation is this:

"England and France are united in their opposition to Germany. Each side is desperately endeavoring to checkmate the other there. Meanwhile Spain—our poor Spain, who alone of all nations is entitled to the reversion of the Moorish empire—is powerless in the face of her mighty antagonists. Her claims are put forward by Alfonso for a purpose as yet unsuspected: to set Europe by the ears. In others words, if Spain can induce the Sultan to assign to her the protectorate of the country, England and France will be at the throat of Germany, whose puppet they believe Spain to be. And so it is necessary to induce the Sultan to sign a protectorate over his country to Spain. You understand, Paul?"

"A difficult problem," answered Paul thoughtfully. "Even the Moorish Sultan is not going to barter away his empire."

"On the contrary," answered Rosny, "the Sultan dreads and fears France, whose envoys are even now approaching Fez, the capital, with a treaty in their hands. The Sultan and the Moors still hold a more exaggerated idea of the power of Spain than she is entitled, I fear, to expect. If you can forestall the Frenchmen, you will accomplish all that the league asks of you. Of course Spain will gain nothing by it, but at least there will be the chance of a European war and the consequent weakening of the power of England and Germany, our strongest enemies, not to speak of the possibility of a restoration of the Orleans house in France."

Paul Lane was astounded at the scheme. Kingdoms and empires seemed but as checker pieces to the daring minds behind the conspiracy. He faltered as he asked:

"One moment, Rosny. Is—does Mademoiselle know of my projected mission?"

"It is at her own suggestion," Rosny answered. "And by your successful accomplishment of it, my friend, you will undoubtedly win favor with her and hasten the day when her identity will be revealed to you and you will acquire high rank in our councils."

Jean Rosny had shrewdly guessed Paul Lane's secret. The American blushed like a schoolboy; then, rising, he answered:

"I shall be ready to start when you instruct me."

"Good," answered the other. "Now, Paul, you will have cause to exercise diplomacy, for the Frenchmen are utilizing the services of a very notorious character—none less than Mademoiselle Guepin."

"Of the Moulin Rouge?" cried Paul in surprise.

"Precisely. It will not be the first time that France will have made use of her women for the accomplishment of her purposes. The Sultan is notoriously susceptible to the charms of the other sex, and it is said that Mademoiselle Guepin has already reached Fez, installed herself in the household of the Shereefa, the Sultan's principal wife, and begun to acquire an unbounded influence over her and him. So you see, Paul, that you have a hard problem to solve. Waste no time, then, but take the next steamship from Marseilles to Tangiers, and then—good luck to you!"

Two days later Paul Lane sailed for Morocco. In his pocket he carried bills and gold coin to the value of $20,000. It was a case in which, as it seemed to him, the possession of money would play a considerable part. He longed to acquit himself well of his mission. All the way across the Mediterranean he dreamed of the beautiful unknown Austrian whom he had met only to lose so swiftly upon the shores of Long Island. That was two months ago. Then he had been nothing but a glorified clerk in the huge industrial mill of New York—now he was playing a man's part in the world, as he had always longed to do.

At Tangiers he spent several days, familiarizing himself with the conditions of the country. Then, purchasing camels and the necessary outfit, he joined a caravan which was proceeding into the interior under the protection of a bodyguard of French troops.

He was amazed to find that the presence of the Guepin woman was already known to the men, and even the purpose of her mission. Her life had been an adventurous one. Born on the road, into a company of strolling players, she had acquired a reputation second to none among the adventuresses of olden times. Ministers of state, publicists, leaders of France had fallen victims to her before it occurred to some high dignitary of France to utilize her for the conquest of the Moorish Sultan. She had arrived in Tangiers a month or two before, and had gone into the interior with a circus company, then parading throughout Morocco with its trained lions and performing elephants, to the intense delight of the natives. After a week in the capital the circus manager had withdrawn toward the coast, loaded with honors—but Guepin had remained, the protegee of the Sultan's principal lady in her magnificent house in Fez.

So much Lane learned; further details came to him unexpectedly on the tenth morning, when there came straggling along the road the remnants of the very circus which had taken Guepin to Fez.

"Never again do I enter Africa, monsieur," said the proprietor to Paul as they sat that night over the campfire. "Had I not gone to Fez I should now be in possession of my animals—the finest lot that ever left France, and all imported by me from Monsieur Hagenbeck's menagerie at Hamburg and of my own training. Now—see what is left! Assuredly France must recompense me for my losses."

"But his majesty's presents—" interrupted Paul.

"Gone, all gone, monsieur," cried the owner, wringing his hands. "Stolen by the accursed Moors. And the star of my collection, the beautiful and unrivalled Mademoiselle Guepin—even she is lost to me. Ah, monsieur, I worshipped that woman with blind devotion. And she left me for what? For a Moor, monsieur, a negro—for what else are these Arabs but negroes masquerading as a branch of the white race? For a black man and a handful of jewels! It is a treasure house, that palace in Fez, such as might turn the head of any woman. The marvels, monsieur! There are moving picture displays, the crowns of gold, rubies and sapphires and pearls as large as eggs; mechanical toys and guns of gold and silver—it is the wonder of the world! O, for an hour inside and a stout wagon in which to pack my choice of plunder, drawn by Mahmud, my old elephant."

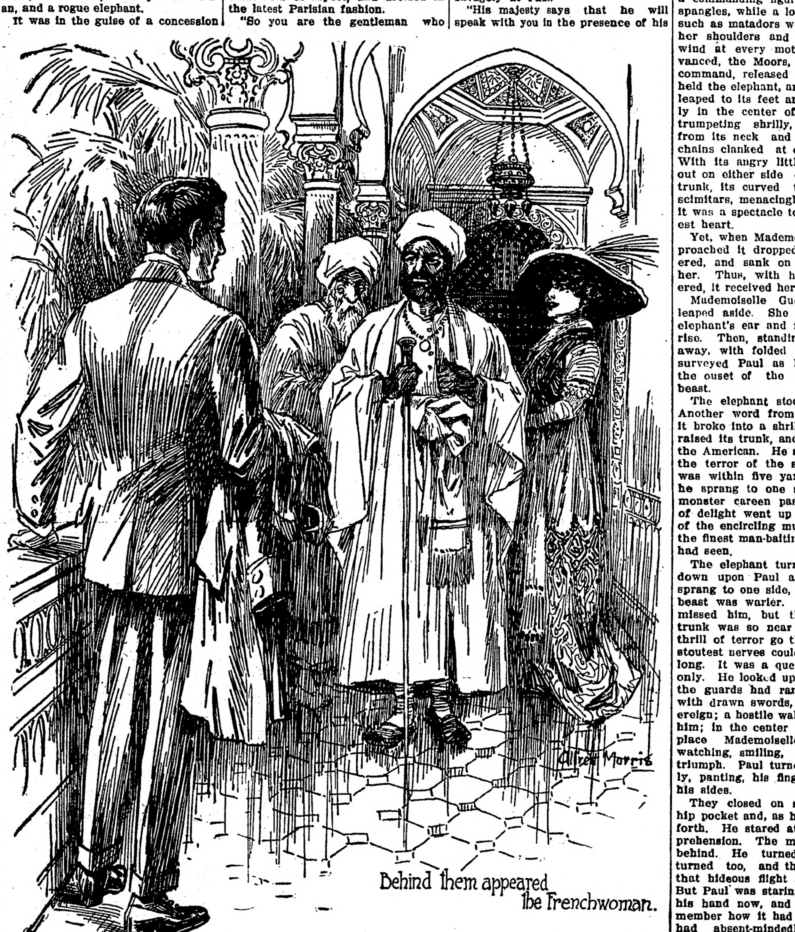
"But why the elephant?" asked Paul.

"Because, Monsieur, Mahmud would pull a load equivalent to that of a dozen horses," answered the circus man.

"And this Mahmud of yours?"

"Alas, he too is in Fez. He would not leave Mademoiselle Guepin, for she had acquired a wonderful power over him. It was a strange contrast, that frail, delicate, woman, and the great beast. A rogue elephant he was, monsieur, a furious monster of whom all stood in dread. Even I could hardly manage him. But Mademoiselle Guepin could make him heed her lightest word, and by reason of her power over him she has acquired the reputation of a prophetess among the superstitious Moors. They say," he continued, "that she is a secret agent of France. Of that I know nothing, except that all women love to intrigue. At any rate, if France does not make use of that admirable woman she will not be the France I know and love, for with her aid Morocco is already hers."

Paul was greatly impressed by the circus owner's naive confidences. Here was a problem requiring all the strength of his courage and the resources of his brain. A treacherous ruler, a beautiful, unscrupulous woman, and a rogue elephant.



Behind them appeared the Frenchwoman.

It was in the guise of a concession hunter that he went to the Sultan's palace immediately after his arrival, leaving his equipment in the French camp outside the walls. French troops were in possession of the citadel, the city was French—but Morocco was not yet French, and technically France was merely his majesty's ally against the rebellious tribes. Paul found everything in confusion at the palace. The Sultan, morose and despondent, had shut himself up in his palace with his favorite wife, the Shereefa. He had executed two of his ministers as traitors and had dismissed the remainder, had cut off all relations with the French garrison, and alternately planned war upon them and sent presents to Commander Caillard, in token of fealty. Under plea of indisposition the Sultan refused to see them. France was growing impatient; the treaty must be signed acknowledging the French protectorate. If Paul could present his credentials and obtain his majesty's signature the French would be checkmated and the struggle would be transferred to the chancelleries of Madrid and Paris, while England and Germany would instantaneously mobilize their war-fleets.

"Tell him," said Paul to his interpreter, a shrewd old Moor whom he had engaged at a lavish wage and pledged to silence, "tell him that I wish to speak with him upon a matter concerning the Khalifate."

Much mystified, Paul entered the palace courtyard, passed through a number of rooms, richly adorned with arabesques and hung with carpets of brilliant hues, and emerged into a small open space with high walls of solid masonry, through a bronze door which the minister opened and immediately closed behind him. Paul found himself alone, completely shut off from access to the other portions of the palace—no, not alone, for there, in the center of the court, confronting him with raised trunk and gleaming tusks, was a huge bull elephant.

As Paul stared at this apparition the monster trumpeted shrilly and rushed toward him, swinging its trunk like an enormous flail. There existed no doubt whatever as to its intentions. Paul dodged agilely and ran past the beast, which, too bulky to turn swiftly, butted its massive forehead against the masonry immediately behind the place which Paul had occupied.

"The passage to the halls of paradise is always a difficult one, monsieur," exclaimed a charming female voice. "Walk through! Mahmud will not longer desire to hurt you. In front of you is a door in the masonry."

Stumbling forward, humiliated and chagrined, Paul found the entrance, so cunningly set in the wall that it had escaped his notice. He entered an apartment decorated sumptuously in the French style, to find himself confronting a woman of about thirty years, attractive of face, but somewhat bold of aspect, and dressed in the latest Parisian fashion.

"So you are the gentleman who wishes to see the Sultan," said the young woman. "You may state your wants to me. What nation do you represent?"

"I am the secretary of a syndicate in Brussels, madam," said Paul glibly. "We desire a land concession for the discovery of rubber, which is believed to grow profusely near Cape Juba. If his majesty will see me—"

She looked at him and laughed impudently.

"There is no rubber near Cape Juba," she answered. "Rubber is associated with moist climates and tropical verdure, my dear Paul Lane."

Paul started up in confusion.

"No, but you must assuredly see his majesty after having gone through such perils," said the young woman. "As a representative of the interests of—Spain, is it not? Pardon me if I am forgetful, for we have so many applicants, seeking to wring something from poor Morocco—as a representative of Spain you must not be allowed to return without having accomplished something. Besides," she added, "Mahmud is very angry about something this morning, and, hard as the journey was, the return from the palace will perhaps prove still more arduous."

She ushered him into a large anteroom. "If you will wait here I will summon his majesty and your interpreter," she said and the door clicked behind her. Paul tried it. It was locked.

At that moment, in the clutches of his enemy, who had evidently obtained secret information of his arrival, trapped in the gin into which he had so foolishly stepped, Paul would have given much to have the freedom of the French camp again.

After waiting for half an hour in dire perplexity he began to examine his surroundings.

There was a large hall adjoining the room in which he sat, and Paul strolled into it. It was a small, narrow chamber without outlet, and evidently formed the inmost portion of the palace, for it was heaped with an astonishing display of treasures.

A sound at the outside door distracted him from his speculations and he passed back hastily into the anteroom, just in time to give the impression of having been waiting there to a short, fat, black-bearded man of middle age, attired in an immaculate white robe and turban, who strode fiercely in, accompanied by the cringing interpreter whom Paul had left at the palace gates. Behind them appeared the Frenchwoman. She smiled at Paul no longer but ranged herself at the side of the Sultan and began speaking in passionate tones. He listened and nodded, then spoke curtly to the interpreter.

"What do you want?" asked the latter briskly of Paul.

"Tell him," said Paul slowly, "that I will speak with him in the presence of his council."

The woman interpreted, and the Sultan's brow darkened. He scowled savagely at Paul.

"His majesty says that he will speak with you in the presence of his council, as you have requested, tomorrow morning," said the interpreter. "Will you have the goodness to come this way?"

At the door half a dozen soldiers sprang from the ground, where they had been squatting in the Moorish fashion. Without violence, but imperatively, they compelled Paul to accompany them through numerous corridors and rooms, each of which was concealed by a heavy curtain, until they arrived at a small cell, plainly furnished in the European fashion. Paul spent the rest of the day there and the night that came after, not tasting the food which was brought to him for fear of poison.

When the first shafts of the rising sun struck through his window his captors unlocked the door and ushered him into a closed carriage, drawn by two Arab stallions, which waited outside in the courtyard. One of the men entered with him; the blinds were drawn across the carriage windows, and they drove for an interminable period. When at last the carriage halted and Paul descended he was almost blinded by the blaze of fierce, tropical sunlight which beat upon him, so that for some time he could hardly grasp his relationship to the outside world.

He was in the palace no longer but in the great market-place of the city of Fez. He stood before a sort of raised dais, on which squatted the Moorish Sultan, close beside him, Mademoiselle Guepin, resting upon a pile of cushions, while ranged around him were his councillors and bodyguard. Extending thence in the form of a large circle, completely surrounding the market place, were thousands of Moors, and they were all uttering exultant cries and pointing at the prisoner. And in the center of the court, a writhing blur of black against the white pavement flags, was the rogue elephant, struggling in the chains which 50 men held in their iron sockets fixed in the ground, and trumpeting earth-shaking blasts.

Muley Abdul stood up and a sudden hush fell upon the assemblage, so that his thin tones were clearly audible on all sides of the market place. He spoke, and cackles and shouts of derision punctuated his sentences. When he had concluded his speech the interpreter rose and addressed Paul Lane.

"His majesty says," he began, "that you are a Spaniard who has come here to steal away this country. Therefore, you shall test your strength against France in the market place. If you conquer, then Morocco will place herself under the protection of your country, but if you lose you will be torn to pieces by the wild elephant. Let Allah decide!"

Paul did not wholly understand, but he was not long in doubt when, with a bound that would have done credit to any acrobat, Mademoiselle Guepin flung aside her cloak and sprang into the market place, displaying herself, a commanding figure in tights and spangles, while a long Spanish cloak, such as matadors wear, dropped from her shoulders and fluttered in the wind at every motion. As she advanced, the Moors, at her shouted command, released the chains which held the elephant, and the great beast leaped to its feet and stood unsteadily in the center of the open space, trumpeting shrilly, while hanging from its neck and legs the stout chains clanked at every movement. With its angry little eyes peering out on either side of its enormous trunk, its curved tusks, sharp as scimitars, menacingly thrust forward, it was a spectacle to appall the stoutest heart.

Yet, when Mademoiselle Guepin approached it dropped its trunk, quivered, and sank on its knees before her. Thus, with head humbly lowered, it received her caresses.

Mademoiselle Guepin arose and leaped aside. She whispered in the elephant's ear and motioned to it to rise. Then, standing some distance away, with folded arms she quietly surveyed Paul as he stood waiting the onset of the great lumbering beast.

The elephant stood watching him. Another word from the woman and it broke into a shrill scream of fury. Raised its trunk, and bore down upon the American. He stood, appalled by the terror of the spectacle, until it was within five yards of him; then he sprang to one side and let the monster careen past him. A shout of delight went up from the throats of the encircling multitude. This was the finest man-baiting sport that they had seen.

The elephant turned and charged down upon Paul again. Again he sprang to one side, but this time the beast was warier. It turned also, missed him, but the sweep of its trunk was so near that Paul felt a thrill of terror go through him. The stoutest nerves could not endure that long. It was a question of moments only. He looked up; in front of him the guards had ranged themselves, with drawn swords, before their sovereign; a hostile wall of Moors ringed him. In the center of the market-place Mademoiselle Guepin stood watching, smiling, anticipating her triumph. Paul turned and ran blindly, panting, his fingers clenched at his sides.

They closed on something in his hip pocket and, as he ran, he drew it forth. He stared at it without comprehension. The monster was close behind. He turned; the elephant turned too, and there ensued again that hideous flight and that pursuit. But Paul was staring at the thing in his hand now, and beginning to remember how it had come there. He had absent-mindedly pocketed it while in the apartments of the Sultan. It was a clockwork mouse.

Again the swish of that flail of a trunk went through the air. Paul turned. This time the elephant was prepared for his manoeuvre, but it did not know which way he would turn. It stopped still, swinging its trunk and watching him with its little evil eyes. Paul dodged backward, gained twenty yards—and set down the mouse upon the ground. It whirred and rushed straight toward the monster.

The trunk went down. The beast stood still. A shrill scream broke from it—and suddenly it turned tail and bolted away, terror-stricken, across the market-place. Its bulk between Paul and Mademoiselle Guepin, she had not seen the cause of its confusion. But as it rushed toward her she looked and saw; and with piercing shrieks, the Honeycomb of Paradise and Footstool of Gabriel cast her cloak over her head and ran also—ran through the clusters of laughing, howling Moors out of the market place and up the long street toward the palace of the Sultan, crying for aid, her skirts drawn taut. But far in front of her, roaring with fear and dismay, lumbered the bulky form of Mahmud, the rogue elephant, seeking the safety of its cemented, walled, mouse-proof enclosure.

Paul Lane drew from his pocket the draft of the treaty of protectorate and went up to the place where the Sultan sat.

"Allah has decided," he said to the interpreter, and held out the document.

And in big, painted Arabic letters the Shadow of Allah affixed his signature

"CASCARETS" FOR A BILIOUS LIVER

For sick headache, bad breath, Sour Stomach and constipation.

Get a 10-cent box now.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable and uncomfortable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get the desired results with Cascarets.

Don't let your stomach, liver and bowels make you miserable. Take Cascarets to-night; put an end to the headache, biliousness, dizziness, nervousness, sick, sour, gassy stomach, backache and all other distress; cleanse your inside organs of all the bile, gases and constipated matter which is producing the misery.

A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. No more days of gloom and distress if you will take a Cascaret now and then. All stores sell Cascarets. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a cleansing, too. Adv.

How Famous Hymn Was Written.

As Tennyson's nurse was sitting one day at his bedside, sharing to a degree the general anxiety about the patient, she said to him suddenly:

"You have written a great many poems, sir, but I have never heard anybody say that there is a hymn among them all. I wish, sir, you would write a hymn while you are lying on your sick bed. It might help and comfort many a poor sufferer."

The next morning, when the nurse had taken her quiet place at the bedside, the poet handed her a scrap of paper, saying: "Here is the hymn you wished me to write."

She took it from his hands with expressions of grateful thanks. It proved to be "Crossing the Bar," the poem that was sung in Westminster abbey at Tennyson's funeral, and which has touched so many hearts.

HEAD ITCHED AND BURNED

Burns, Wyo.—"The trouble began on my baby when she was about four months old. A red pimple was seen at first and it grew larger and larger all the time on the back of her head. It looked scabby and it itched and burned and she began to scratch it and scratched until it would bleed. Sometimes she could not sleep and felt pretty cross.

"The trouble lasted till she was a year old and I saw an advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, so I sent for some. First I washed the sore part with the Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment and left it on for a while, then I washed it again with the Cuticura Soap. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured the sore in a week without a scar." (Signed) Mrs. Otto F. Heckly, Nov. 22, 1912.

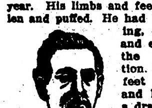
Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Mr. Scadds' Grievance.

"I tell you," said the scowling Socialist, "that wealth is not distributed equitably." "I quite agree with you," replied Mr. Scadds. "I have only about two hundred and fifty thousand myself, while I know a dozen men who have more than a million apiece."—Puck.

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from Dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart fluttering, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that it was difficult to move. After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.



Rev. E. Heslop.

Dodds Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodds Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free. Adv.

Obeying His Doctor.

Gibbs—Wonder why Richleigh when he puts up at a hotel always takes a single room?

Dibbs—His doctor told him he must avoid suites.

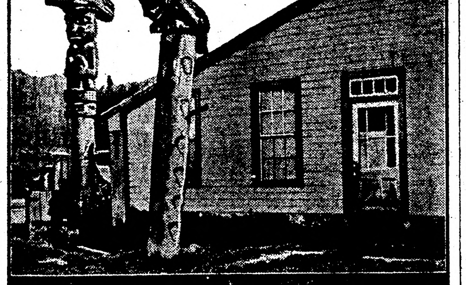
DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

New York is to have several new bus lines on which women will act as conductors.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

Bisbee, Ariz., refuses to employ any but citizens on municipal work.

ALEUTS, A STRANGE ALASKAN TRIBE



RICH ALEUT'S HOME

ALASKA is a land that hitherto has been little understood. Icebergs, snow-capped mountains and frozen streams, and a sense of shivers, constitute the current opinion of this valuable northern possession. Some of the most beautiful scenery in the world has been lost sight of; wooded islands, timbered valleys, and luxuriant vegetation is a pleasant surprise to the tourist. The sun scarcely sets on Alaska in summer, and vegetation, like most industries, works overtime with amazing results. Nature not only smiles in summer but laughs aloud, writes J. H. Romig in The Christian Herald.

As it would not be fair to describe all the whites in Alaska as English, neither would it be fair to call all the natives Indians, though they may be cousins, or be in customs and language kindred. The fact is, they are all alike unable to hold the land, to develop its resources and to compete with the white race. They are, for the most part, now but poor, diseased, under-fed and under-clad spectators of what is happening in this northland. Filled with awe and wonder at the doings of the white race, they can but look on with sorrow, as their fish streams are taken, their game destroyed, and their future made a blank to them.

Education of No Value.

Besides the good work of the churches, the government is doing what it can to educate the native; but that is not much of an exchange for his resources. He cannot eat or keep warm on education. The whites do not need educated natives. It is all wonderful, but not of value to him. One native said: "I will teach my children to catch fish, fox, bear and birds, and when old they will keep me; but the one taken to school left me. He cannot work. He cannot hunt. The white man says: 'He no savvy white man work and he no savvy native kind any more.'" There is more than one crude native that does not send his child to school because he sees no gain by doing so and he does see the separation of the child from him.

Fewer and fewer are the chances for the tribes or villages and smaller and smaller the opportunity to develop the resources of the land, because no provision is being made to keep any for the thirty thousand natives now living. The government is long in considering Alaska's needs, and too long in reserving a few areas where a people can perform some work that will bring them a living; where they can be an asset and not a burden.

As an illustration take the Aleut tribe. The Aleuts occupy the island peninsula of Alaska, and number about one thousand. Three hundred of them are well cared for at the seal islands; but the balance have nothing left but fish, a few fox, and the basket industry. These people occupy the most western portion of the country, being in 172 degrees east longitude, and from thence eastward to Unimak Pass, a distance of about eight hundred miles—making less than one person to a mile. The time was when they were employed to kill seal; also their tribe supplied the men that manned the sea otter boats and killed that most valuable of furs. These furs are practically a thing of the past, and the government has prohibited both the whites and the natives from killing any of them. This is not adding greatly to their troubles, for these fur animals of the sea are now so scarce as to be of little benefit to the Aleuts any more. The basket industry is now their chief support. Their baskets, though the finest in any market, bring them less than one-fourth the retail price, and provisions sell to them at about three times the cost. A woman will work two weeks to make a basket, and then get two dollars for it, pay seventy-five cents for a pound of tea, twenty cents for a pound of sugar, and seven cents a pound for flour, and what for clothing? The father can get a few fish to dry, gather a few drift sticks as thrown up by the sea, as no timber is found on the islands. In winter he catches a very few blue fox, perhaps four or five at six dollars each. Curio seekers pay fabulous prices for an Aleut basket, which is, in truth, one of the best that can be had; the most artistic, the finest weave, and the most beautiful in design. One of the prettiest baskets I ever secured come from the house of a widow at the figure of $2.50; a full two weeks' work!

The word "Aluet" in the Eskimo language means "other utes," or people, and such they are, for their appearance and modes of life differ to such an extent as to warrant their being called "other people." There were two found among them whose birthplace was believed to be Kamchatka in Asia, and it is almost certain that these people came from northern Asia. Their appearance is more of the Mongolian, and in artistic work they have much the same skill and craftmanship as the Japanese. The Aleut is superior to the native race. He is cleaner of habit than the Eskimo and more willing to work. The tribe's ancient dwellings, now long grown over with grass, representing the age of stone implements, when excavated were found to be large roomy houses made of sod, built above the ground, and usually of more than one room. Whalebone was often used for parts of the framework. The cemetery of the community was not in a common burial ground, but in a room of the house especially constructed for that purpose. The corpses were buried in a sitting posture. Certain caves were used also as a place to bury the dead, but owing to the occurrence of skulls with fractures in them it is presumably the warriors, who died away from home, who were so buried. A few had the distinction of being stuffed with moss and made into mummies and placed in caves. These customs have long since changed, owing to the efforts of the Russian priests; and now few there are that can offer an explanation for the strange burial rooms, the cave burials and the moss-stuffed mummies.

GAVE GIRL SEVERE SHOCK

Visitor From Los Angeles to Panama Awoke to Find Tarantula Nestling on Her Arm.

To awaken and find a poisonous tarantula on her arm was the experience of Miss Irene Sturgis of Los Angeles, while visiting the canal zone on a sightseeing tour. Miss Sturgis has returned from Panama, and while she has recovered from the shock of her experience, she admits that she gets the creeps every time she thinks about it.

Miss Sturgis awoke one morning in a hotel at Colon with a feeling of numbness in her arm. Glancing toward it she was horrified to see a large tarantula taking its ease there. The young lady had heard that tarantulas became very angry if disturbed, and it is then that they fix their poisonous darts in the flesh. Instead of becoming hysterical and shrieking, as she said she might have done had it been a mouse, Miss Sturgis by a quick movement of her arm tossed the insect upon the floor. Then she summoned a native maid and promptly swooned.

"The tarantula scurried under the wardrobe," said Miss Sturgis, "and I tried to get the natives to ferret it out and kill it, but they would not. They have a superstition, although they realize that the insect is poisonous, that it is bad luck to kill one.

"The maid took the experience quite as a matter of fact. 'It won't bother you any more,' she said. 'They never come back a second time. There's one lives down in No. 12 all the time.' But I did not wait to try out the experiment. Ugh! It was horrible."

Generous Man.

"I see by the newspapers," remarked Reeder, "that the farmers in Canada are sending out appeals for wives."

"Is that so?" ejaculated Hennypeck, in an eager whisper. "They can have mine."

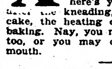
Fewer Clothes Needed.

Patience—Is she going to the masque ball?

Patrice—Yes; she's going to represent Night.

"Why don't she go as Eve? It would be cheaper."

The KITCHEN CABINET



AYE, to the leavening, but here's yet in the word hereafter the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking. Nay, you must stay the cooling, too, or you may chance to burn your mouth. —Shakespeare.

A WORD ON CAKES.

Most expert housewives have some all-'round good cake which they use as a foundation for any number of kinds. For example, a simple cake with vanilla flavoring may have a chocolate frosting if baked in a square loaf or if baked in layers the filling may be varied indefinitely. Spice may be added or chocolate, making a spice cake or one layer may be spiced with fruit and one layer plain with any desired filling. A slight depression in the center of the cake when filling the pans will always result in a level cake.

Just a word to those who are yet unexperienced in the art of cake making: First of all, have your materials and utensils all ready before you begin, or in the midst you will find that you are just lacking some important ingredient. A circle of paper, even in deep layer pans, will help to remove them in shape, and in a square tin the papers are indispensable. Grease the paper well, and line the tin smoothly.

The time was when much creaming of butter and stirring of the sugar and butter together was thought the only way to make a good cake; but times have changed, and with the rush of other things, cake making must keep pace. All the ingredients, if well blended and given a good beating to make a fine grained cake, answers all purposes for every day occasions. A fair cake, good enough for any one if a frosting or filling is added, is made of three level tablespoonfuls of butter, a cup of sugar, half a cup of milk or water, two eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a cup and three-quarters of sifted flour. The flour may vary as the thickening power of flour is often slightly variable, but a cup and a half to three-quarters is usually sufficient. Add flavoring and bake in a hot oven. A cake to be tender and light must be well beaten before putting into the tins.

Another thing worth remembering in cake making is that the thinner the consistency, if baked without falling, the more delicate it is.

Test a cake with a fresh wooden toothpick. It seems neater than using a broom straw. If you notice that the cake ticks or crackles when taken from the oven, do not remove it, but let it bake a little longer.

Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed that he hath grown so great.
—Shakespeare.

Half the joy of life is in little things taken on the run.

Who has no inward beauty, none perceives, though all around is beautiful.
—Dana.

LATE PRESERVES AND PICKLES.

After all the fall canning is done one finds a few of the late fruits and vegetables just coming into market. Malaga grapes at ten cents a pound are not too expensive for a few preserves for variety. Wash the grapes and seed them by cutting an icision with scissors, and remove the seeds with a bodkin or darning needle. Fill cans with the grapes and pour boiling hot pineapple sirup over them. The next morning drain and boil down the sirup until thick. Pour again over the fruit and let stand again over night. In the morning drain again, boil up the sirup, add the grapes, and when boiling hot seal. This is delicious used in fruit salads, gelatines, desserts and punches.

Red Pepper Jelly.—Crush and mash ripe red peppers and place them in a double boiler set in cold water. Put over the heat, and as the water becomes hot, the juice will gradually be extracted. Let it cook until no more juice can be squeezed out. Measure the juice and add equal measures of sugar. Mix and boil until it threads. Turn into glasses and cover with parafine. This jelly may be used as one does fresh peppers in salads and made dishes.

Cranberry Catsup.—Press four quarts of stewed cranberries through a sieve; add to three quarts three pounds of sugar, a pint of vinegar and a tablespoonful each of cinnamon, nutmeg, cloves and pepper. Boil twenty minutes and seal.

Spiced Beets.—To seven pounds of sliced boiled beets take four pounds of brown sugar, a pint of vinegar, twelve cloves, a large stick of cinnamon. Make the sirup and add the beets. Cook ten minutes, then fill the cans and pour over the sirup.

Cake is to the appetite what mirth is to the melancholy.

A clear soup, a bit of fish, a couple of entrees and a nice little roast. That's my kind of a dinner. —Thackery.

MORE GOOD EATS.

Make a rich biscuit dough, roll it out in a thin sheet and cover thickly with chopped apples; roll up and cut in slices about two inches thick. Place in a well greased pan and pour over the following sauce: Mix a tablespoonful of flour with a cup of sugar, add a cup of boiling water, a tablespoonful of butter and a grating of nutmeg; stir until it thickens, then pour over the dumplings. Bake in a hot oven. Serve with cream and sugar.

Banana Omelet.—Put two tablespoonfuls of sugar into an omelet pan, shake it about so that it covers the entire bottom. Cut a banana in slices and lay on the sugar, heat gently to melt the sugar and fry the banana. Turn the slices and heap in the center of the pan so that they will form a layer on the outside of the omelet. Put in a half tablespoonful of butter, then the beaten yolks, letting it cook a bit before adding the white of two eggs. As soon as the whites are added fold the omelet and serve.

Corn Bread, Southern Style.—One pint of sifted corn meal, one pint of thick buttermilk, two eggs, two teaspoonfuls of melted lard, one teaspoonful of salt, one of soda. Mix all together and beat well before adding the soda; then add the soda dissolved in a tablespoonful of hot water. Stir well and pour into a hot buttered baking pan.

Silver Cake.—This may be one we will enjoy reading over; but not many will feel they can afford to make it: Take a pound of sifted flour and add it a little at a time to three-fourths of a pound of creamed butter; add a pound of sugar to the whites of sixteen well beaten whites, then add to the butter and flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder is added to the flour. Stir with the hand until all are well mixed. Add a teaspoonful each of lemon and vanilla or any flavor desired. Bake in a paper lined pan in a slow oven until well baked. Ice with boiled frosting. This cake is worthy the name of wedding cake.

The ornaments of a house are the friends who frequent it.

Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour is the mill;
And back of the mill are the wheat and the shower
And the sun and the Father's will.

SOME GOOD DISHES.

Fruit Layer Cake.—This is a rich cake, but is most delicious and may be used on company occasions when something especially nice is desired. Cream a cupful of butter, add two cups of sugar and six well beaten eggs, two and a half cups of flour, a cup of milk, a teaspoon of vanilla and three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well and bake in three layers.

Filling.—Boil two cupfuls of sugar until it threads; pour over the well beaten whites of three eggs. Beat well and add half a cup of citron shredded fine, half a cup of finely shredded figs, one cup of chopped raisins, one pound of blanched almonds chopped. Spread between the layers and on the top of the cake.

Spanish Bernado.—Wash, skin and cut into small pieces two pounds of bass; have ready five potatoes peeled and sliced, two onions sliced, half a can of tomatoes and a quarter of a cup of catsup. Arrange in a deep baking dish, first the fish, then the potatoes, then the onions, and last the tomatoes. Pour over the catsup and cut two tablespoonfuls of butter into bits and sprinkle over the top. Salt well, and add a few dashes of red pepper. Bake three hours, well covered.

Sea Foam.—Dissolve two cups of sugar in half a cup of water, then add a half cup of table sirup and boil until a little dropped into water will harden. Pour the hot sirup slowly over the well beaten whites of two eggs, beating until it will hold its shape when dropped from the spoon. Add nuts and vanilla and pour out into a greased pan or drop by spoonfuls on a buttered sheet.

Raisin Pie.—Fill a pastry lined plate with the following: One cup of seeded raisins, two eggs well beaten, half a cup of sugar, the rind and juice of half a lemon and a cup of water. Cover with a crust and bake a half hour.

Nellie Maxwell.

Dog Adopts Rabbits.

Unwonted affection between animals of different species is evidenced near Gortin county, Tyrone, Ireland. A local farmer named Fleming, has a female fox terrier which was deprived of her two pups when they were four weeks old. Two weeks ago she was out hunting and came on a rabbit burrow in which were bunnies two or three days old. Three of these the dog carried carefully to her kennel, and since then she has been rearing them.

Like American Music.

American music is popular in Roubaix, northern France, where the windows in several stores handling sheet music are devoted to the display of popular dances, including glides and one-steps.

They're Called "Help" by Courtesy.

"This is a large house you have," said Mrs. Pozozzle to Mrs. Puzuzzins. "Do you have to keep much help?" "I keep two," cooed Mrs. Puzuzzins, "but they're not much help."

MRS. MANGES ESCAPES OPERATION

How She Was Saved From Surgeon's Knife by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mogadore, Ohio.—"The first two years I was married I suffered so much from female troubles and bearing down pains that I could not stand on my feet long enough to do my work. The doctor said I would have to undergo an operation, but my husband wanted me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound first. I took three bottles and it made me well and strong and I avoided a dreadful operation. I now have two fine healthy children, and I cannot say too much about what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. Lee Manges, R. F. D. 10, Mogadore, Ohio.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Foley Kidney Pills Relieve

promptly the suffering due to weak, inactive kidneys and painful bladder action. They offer a powerful help to nature in building up the true excreting kidney tissue, in restoring normal action and in regulating bladder irregularities. Try them.

Sprains, Bruises Stiff Muscles

are quickly relieved by Sloan's Liniment. Lay it on—no rubbing. Try it.

Ankle Sprain and Dislocated Hip.

"I sprained my ankle and dislocated my hip by falling out of a third story window. Went on crutches for four months. Then I started to use your Liniment, according to directions. I must say it is helping me wonderfully. We will never be without Sloan's Liniment anymore."—Chas. Johnson, [illegible] Station, N. Y.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

Kills Pain

Splendid for Sprains.

"I fell and sprained my arm a week ago and was in terrible pain. I could not use my hand or arm until I applied your Liniment. I shall never be without a bottle of Sloan's Liniment."—Mrs. E. H. Springer, Elizabeth, N. J.

Fine for Stiffness.

"Sloan's Liniment has done more good than anything I have ever tried for stiff joints. I got my hand hurt so badly that I had to stop work right in the busiest time of the year. I thought at first that I would have to have my hand taken off, but I got a bottle of Sloan's Liniment and cured my hand."—Wilson Wheeler, Morris, Ala.

At all Dealers. 25c., 50c. and $1.00

Send for Sloan's free, instructive book on horses, cattle, hogs and poultry. Address

Dr. EARL S. SLOAN, Inc.
BOSTON, MASS.

Make the Liver Do its Duty

Nine times in ten when the liver is right the stomach and bowels are right.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS gently but firmly compel a lazy liver to do its duty.

Cures Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, and Distress After Eating.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

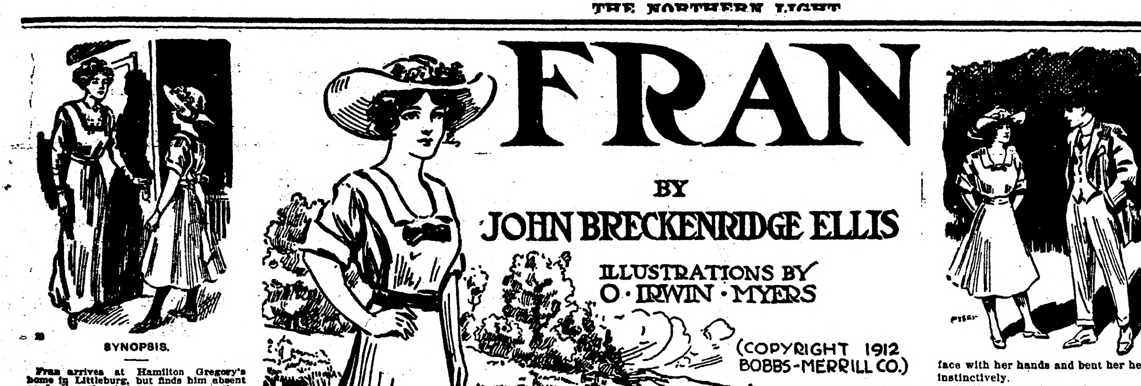
FREE TO ALL SUFFERERS.

If you feel "OUT OF SORTS" "RUN DOWN" or "GOT THE BLUES" SUFFER from KIDNEY, BLADDER, NERVOUS DISEASES, CHRONIC WEAKNESSES, ULCERS, SKIN ERUPTIONS, PILES, write for my FREE book. THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE MEDICAL BOOK EVER WRITTEN, IT TELLS ALL about these DISEASES and the REMARKABLE CURES EFFECTED by THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. [illegible]

THERAPION [illegible]

[illegible] it's the remedy for YOUR OWN ailment. [illegible] Absolutely FREE. No 'follow-up' circulars. Dr. [illegible] MED. CO. HAVERSTOCK RD, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, ENG.

PISO'S REMEDY
25 CTS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS



FRAN

BY

JOHN BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS

ILLUSTRATIONS BY O·IRWIN·MYERS

(COPYRIGHT 1912
BOBBS-MERRILL CO.)

SYNOPSIS.

Fran arrives at Hamilton Gregory's home in Littleburg, but finds him absent conducting the choir at a camp meeting. She repairs thither in search of him, laughs during the service and is asked to leave. Abbott Ashton, superintendent of schools, escorts Fran from the tent. He tells her Gregory is a wealthy man, deeply interested in charity work, and a pillar of the church. Ashton becomes greatly interested in Fran and while taking leave of her, holds her hand and is seen by Sapphira Clinton, sister of Robert Clinton, chairman of the school board. Fran tells Gregory she wants a home with him. Grace Noir, Gregory's private secretary, takes a violent dislike to Fran and advises her to go away at once. Fran hints at a twenty-year-old secret, and Gregory in agitation asks Grace to leave the room. Fran relates the story of how Gregory married a young girl at Springfield while attending college and then deserted her. Fran is the child of that marriage. Gregory had married his present wife three years before the death of Fran's mother. Fran takes a liking to Mrs. Gregory. Gregory explains that Fran is the daughter of a very dear friend who is dead. Fran agrees to the story. Mrs. Gregory insists on her making her home with them and takes her to her arms. Fran declares the secretary must go. Grace begins nagging tactics in an effort to drive Fran from the Gregory home. Abbott, while taking a walk alone at midnight, finds Fran on a bridge telling her fortune by cards. She tells Abbott that she is the famous lion tamer, Fran Nonpareil. She tired of circus life and sought a home. Grace decides to ask Bob Clinton to go to Springfield to investigate Fran's story. Fran offers her services to Gregory as secretary during the temporary absence of Grace. The latter, hearing of Fran's purpose, returns and interrupts a touching scene between father and daughter. Grace tells Gregory she intends to marry Clinton and quit his service. He declares that he cannot continue his work without her. Carried away by passion, he takes her in his arms. Fran walks in on them, and declares that Grace must leave the house at once. To Gregory's consternation he learns of Clinton's mission to Springfield. Clinton returns from Springfield and, at Fran's request, Abbott urges him not to discuss what he has learned. On Abbott's assurance that Grace will leave Gregory at once, Clinton agrees to keep silent. Driven into a corner by the threat of exposure, Gregory is forced to dismiss Grace. Grace is offered the job of bookkeeper in Clinton's grocery store. Gregory's infatuation leads him to seek Grace at the grocery. He finds her alone and tells her the story of his past. Grace points out that as he married the present Mrs. Gregory before the death of Fran's mother, he is not now legally married. They decide to flee at once. They attempt to escape during the excitement of a street fair and are forced to enter the lion tent to avoid Clinton. Abbott wanders into the lion tent to pass the time. A young woman wearing a mask is taking the place of the regular trainer. One of the lions rebels and the trainer removes her mask revealing the features of Fran. She finally overcomes the brute. Gregory's eyes are opened to the real nature of Grace as he sees murder in her eyes during Fran's contest with the lion. He tells her all is over between them.

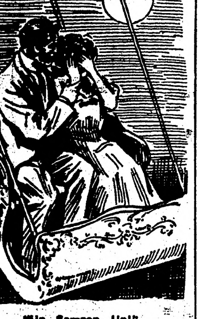
CHAPTER XXIII.—Continued.

He met her eyes unfalteringly. "It's already nine o'clock," he said with singular composure. "Don't forget nine-thirty."

Then he disappeared in the crowd.

Then, to her amazement, she beheld Hamilton Gregory stumbling toward her, looking neither to right nor left, seeing none but her—Hamilton Gregory at a show! Hamilton Gregory here, of all places, his eyes wide, his head thrown back as if to bare his face to her startled gaze.

"Fran!" cried Gregory, thrusting forth his arms to take her hands. "Fran! Even now, the bars divide us. But oh, I am so glad, so glad—and God answered my prayer and saved you, Fran—my daughter!"



"Up, Samson, Up!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

Near the Sky.

It was half-past nine when Abbott met Fran, according to appointment, before the Snake Den. From her hands she had removed the color of Italy, and from her body, the glittering raiment of La Gonizetti.

Fran came up to the young man from out the crowded street, all quivering excitement. In contrast with the pulsing life that ceaselessly changed her face, as from reflections of dancing light-points, his composure showed almost grotesque.

"Here I am," she panted, shooting a quizzical glance at his face, "are you [illegible] for me? Come on, then, and [illegible] you the very place for us."

Abbott inquired serenely: "Down there in the Den?"

"No," she returned, "not in the Den. You're no Daniel, if I am a Charmer. No dens for us."

"Nor lion cages?" inquired Abbott, still inscrutable; "never again?"

"Never again," came her response.

Fran stopped before the Ferris Wheel.

"Let's take a ride," she said, a little tremulously. "Won't need tickets. Bill, stop the wheel; I want to go right up. This is a friend of mine—Mr. Ashton. And Abbott, this is an older friend than you—Mr. Bill Smookins."

Mr. Bill Smookins was an exceedingly hard-featured man, of no recognizable age. Externally, he was blue overalls and greasy tar.

Abbott grasped Bill's hand, and inquired about business.

"Awful pore, sense Fran lef' the show," was the answer, accompanied by a grin that threatened to cut the weather-beaten face wide open.

Fran beamed. "Mr. Smookins knew my mother—didn't you, Bill? He was awful good to me when I was a kid. Mr. Smookins was a Human Nymph in those days, and he smoked and talked, he did, right down under the water—remember, Bill? That was sure-enough water—oh, he's a sure-enough Bill, let me tell you!"

Bill intimated, as he slowed down the engine, that the rheumatism he had acquired under the water, was sure-enough rheumatism—hence his change of occupation. "I was strong enough to be a Human Nymph," he explained, "but not endurable. Nobody can't last many years as a Human Nymph."

Abbott indicated his companion—"Here's one that'll last my time."

The wheel stopped. He and Fran were barred into a seat.

"And now," Fran exclaimed, "it's all ups and downs, just like a moving picture of life. Why don't you say something, Mr. Ashton? But no, you can keep still—I'm excited to death, and wouldn't hear you anyway. I want to do all the talking—I always do, after I've been in the cage. My brain is filled with air—so this is the time to be soaring up into the sky, isn't it! What is your brain filled with?—but never mind. We'll be just two balloons—my! aren't you glad we haven't any strings on us—suppose some people had hold!—I, for one, would be willing never to go down again. Where are the clouds?—Wish we could meet a few. See how I'm trembling—always do, after the lions. Now, Abbott, I'll leave a small opening for just one word—"

"I'll steady you," said Abbott, briefly, and he took her hand. She did not appear conscious of his protecting clasp.

"I never see the moon so big," she went on, breathlessly, "without thinking of that night when it rolled along the pasture as if it wanted to knock us off the foot-bridge for being where we oughtn't. I never could understand why you should stay on that bridge with a perfect stranger, when your duty was to be usher at the camp-meeting! You weren't ushering me, you know, you were holding my hand—I mean, I was holding your hand, as Miss Sapphira says I shouldn't. What a poor helpless man—as I'm holding you now, I presume! But I laughed in meeting. People ought to go outdoors to smile, and keep their religion in a house, I guess. I'm going to tell you why I laughed, for you've never guessed, and you've always been afraid to ask—"

"Afraid of you, Fran?"

"Awfully, I'm going to show you—let go, so I can show you. No, I'm in earnest—you can have me, afterwards . . . Remember that evangelist? There he stood, waving his hands—as I'm doing now—moving his arms with his eyes fastened upon the congregation—this way—look, Abbott."

"Fran! As if I were not already looking."

"Look—just so; not saying a word—only waving this way and that . . . And it made me thing of our hypnotizer—the man that waves people into our biggest tent—he seems to pick 'em up bodily and carry them in his arms. Well! And if the people are to be waved into a church, it won't take much of a breeze to blow them out. I don't believe in soul-waving. But that doesn't mean that I don't believe in the church—does it?—do you think?"

"You believe in convictions, Fran. And since you've come into the church, you don't have to say that you believe in it."

"Yes—there's nothing on the outside, and oh, sometimes there's so little, so little under the roof—what do you think of me, Abbott?"

"Fran, I think you are the most—"

"But do you!" she interposed, still unsteadily. "In the superlative? I don't see how you can, after that exhibition behind the bars. Anyway, I want you to talk about yourself. What made you go away from town? But that's not the worst; what made you stay away? And what were you doing off there wherever it was, while poor little girls were wondering themselves sick about you? But wait!—the wheel's going down—down—down. . . . Good thing I have you to hold to—poor Miss Sapphira, she can't come now! Listen at all the street criers, getting closer, and the whistle sounds—I wish we had whistles; the squawky kind. See my element, Abbott, the air I've breathed all my life—the carnival. Here we are, just above the clouds of confetti . . . Now we're riding through . . . pretty damp, these clouds are, don't you think! Those ribbons of electric lights have been the real world to me Abbott—they were home. . . . No, Bill, we don't want to get out. We intend to ride until you take this wheel to pieces. And oh, by the way, Bill—just stop this wheel, every once in a while, will you?—when we're up at the very tiptop. All right—good-by."

And Abbott called gaily, "Good-by, Mr. Smookins!"

"I'm glad you did that, Abbott. You think you're somebody, when somebody else thinks so, too. Now we're rising in the world." Fran was so excited that she could not keep her body from quivering. In spite of this, she fastened her eyes upon Abbott to ask, suddenly: "'Most'—what?"

"Most adorable," Abbott answered, as if he had been waiting for the prompting. "Most precious. Most bewitchingly sweet. Most unanswerably and eternally—Fran!"

"And you—" she whispered.

"And I," he told her, "am nothing but most wanting-to-be-loved."

"It's so queer," Fran said, plaintively. "You know, Abbott, how long you've fought against me. You know it, and I don't blame you, not in the least. There's nothing about me to make people. . . . But even now, how can you think you understand me, when I don't understand myself?"

"I don't," he said, promptly. "I've given up trying to understand you. Since then, I've just loved. That's easy."

"What will people think of a superintendent of public schools caring for a show-girl, even if she is Fran Nonpareil. How would it affect your career?"

"But you have promised never again to engage in a show, so you are not a show-girl."

"What about my mother who lived and died as a lion-tamer? What will you do about my life-history? I'd never speak to a man who could feel ashamed of my mother. What about my father who has never publicly acknowledged me? I'd not want to have anything to do with a man who—who could be proud of him."

"As to the past, Fran, I have only this to say: Whatever hardships it contained, whatever wrongs or wretchedness—it evolved you, you, the Fran of today—the Fran of this living hour. And it's the Fran of this living hour that I want to marry?"

Fran covered her face with her hands. For a while there was silence, then she said:

"Father was there, tonight."

"At the lion-show? Impossible! Mr Gregory go to a—a—to—a—"

"Yes, it is possible for him even to go to a show. But to do him justice, he was forced under the tent, he had no intention of doing anything so wicked as that, he only meant to do some little thing like running away—But no, I can't speak of him with bitterness, now. Abbott, he seems all changed."

Abbott murmured, as if stupefied: "Mr. Gregory at a show!"

"Yes, and a lion-show. When it was over he came to me—he was so excited—"

"So was I," spoke up the other—"rather!"

"You didn't show it. I thought maybe you wouldn't care if I had been eaten up. . . . No, no, listen. He wanted to claim me—he called me 'daughter' right there before the people, but they thought it was just a sort of—of church name. But he was wonderfully moved. I left the tent with him, and we had a long talk—I came from him to you. I never saw anybody so changed."

"But why?"

"You see, he thought I was going to be killed right there before his eyes, and seeing it with his very own eyes made him feel responsible. He told me, afterwards, that when he found out who it was in the cage, he thought of mother in a different way—he saw how his desertion had driven her to earning her living with showmen, so I could be supported. All in all, he is a changed man."

"Then will he acknowledge you?—but no, no . . ."

"You see? He can't, on account of Mrs. Gregory. There's no future for him, or for her, except to go on living as man and wife—without the secretary. He imagines it would be a sort of reparation to present me to the world as his daughter, he thinks it would give him happiness—but it can't be. Grace Noir has found it all out—"

"Then she will tell!" Abbott exclaimed, in dismay.

"She would have told but for one thing. She doesn't dare, and it's on her own account—of course. She has been terribly—well, indiscreet. You can't think of what lengths she was willing to go—not from coldly making up her mind, but because she lost grip on herself, from always thinking she couldn't. So she went away with Bob Clinton—she'll marry him, and they'll go to Chicago, out of Littleburg history—poor Bob! Remember the night he was trying to get religion? I'm afraid he'll conclude that religion isn't what he thought it was, living so close to it from now on."

"All this interests me greatly, dear, because it interests you. Still, it doesn't bear upon the main question."

"Abbott, you don't know why I went to that show to act. You thought I was caring for a sick friend. What do you think of such deceptions?"

"I think I understand. Simon Jefferson told me of a girl falling from a trapeze; it was possibly La Gonizetti's daughter. Mrs. Jefferson told me that Mrs. Gregory is nursing some one. The same one, I imagine. And La Gonizetti was a friend of yours, and you took her place, so the mother could stay with the injured daughter."

"You're a wonder, yourself!" Fran declared, dropping her hands to stare at him. "Yes, that's it. All these show-people are friends of mine. When the mayor was trying to decide what carnival company they'd have for the street fair, I told him about this show, and that's why it's here. Poor La Gonizetti needs the money dreadfully—for they spend it as fast as it's paid in. The little darling will have to go to a hospital, and there's nothing laid by. The boys all threw in, but they didn't have much, themselves. Nobody has. Everybody's poor in this old world—except you and me. I've taken La Gonizetti's place in the cage all day to keep her from losing out; and if this wasn't the last day, I don't know whether I'd have promised you or not. . . . Samson was pretty good, but that mask annoyed him. So you see—but honestly, Abbott, doesn't all this make you feel just a wee bit different about me?"

"It makes me want to kiss you, Fran."

"It makes you"—she gasped—"want to do—that? Why, Abbott! Nothing can save you."

"I'm afraid not," he agreed.

The car was swinging at the highest reach of the wheel. The engine stopped.

She opened her eyes very wide. "I'd think you'd be afraid of such a world-famous lion-trainer," she declared, drawing back. "Some have been, I assure you."

"I'm not afraid," Abbott declared, drawing her toward him. He would have kissed her, but she covered her face with her hands and bent her head instinctively.

"Up!" cried Abbott. "Up, Samson, up!"

Fran laughed hilariously, and lifted her head. She looked at him through her fingers. Her face was a garden of blush-roses. She pretended to roar but the result was not terrifying; then she obediently held up her mouth.

"After all," said Fran, speaking somewhat indistinctly, "you haven't told why you ran away to leave poor Fran guessing where you'd gone. Do you know how I love you, Abbott?"

"I think I know."

It was a good while later that Abbott said: "As to why I left Littleburg: Bob knew of a private school that has just been incorporated as a college. A teacher's needed, one with ideas of the new education—the education that teaches us how to make books useful to life, and not life to books—the education that teaches happiness as well as words and figures; just the kind that you didn't find at my school, little rebel! Bob was an old chum of the man who owns the property so he recommended me, and I went. It's a great chance, a magnificent opening. The man was so pleased with the way I talked—he's new to the business, so that must be his excuse—that I am to be the president."

Fran's voice came rather faintly—"Hurrah! But you are to be far, far above my reach, just as I prophesied. Don't you remember what I said to you during our drive through Sure-Enough Country?"

"And that isn't all," said Abbott, looking straight before him, and pretending that he had not heard. "In that town—Tahlelah, Okla.,—I discovered, out in the suburbs, a cottage—the dearest little thing—as dear as . . . as Mr. Smookins; just big enough for a girl like Fran. I rented it at once—of course, it oughn't to be standing there idle—there's such a fragrant flower garden—I spent some time arranging the grounds as I think you'll like them. I didn't furnish the cottage, though. Women always like to select their own carpets and things, and—"

Fran's face was a dimpled sea of pink and crimson waves, with starry lights in her black eyes for signal lights. "Oh, you king of hearts!" she exclaimed. "And shall we have a church wedding, and just kill 'em?"

Abbott laughed boyishly. "No—you must remember that your connection with show-life is at an end."

"But—and then—and so," cried Fran rapturously, "I'm to have a home after all, with flower gardens and carpets and things—a sure-enough home—Abbott, a home with you! Don't you know, it's been the dream of my life to—to—"

Abbott was inexpressibly touched. "Yes, I was just thinking of what I heard you say, once—to belong to somebody."

Fran slipped her arms about his neck. "And what a somebody! To belong to you. And to know that my home is our home. . . ."

Abbott, with a sober sense of his unworthiness, embraced her silently.

From far below came a sudden sound, making its way through the continuity of the street-uproar. It was the chugging of the engine.

The wheel began to revolve.

Down they came—down—down—

Fran looked up at the moon. "Good-by," she called, gaily. "The world is good enough for me!"

(THE END.)

LIKE PIRATE DAYS OF OLD

Men Who Were Shanghaied From Norfolk, Va., Seek Satisfaction From Authorities.

The days of the oyster pirates and old wind jammers were recalled when Walter McGirth, son of a North Carolina farmer, and Ebert Cocran, son of a former Pittsburg banker, told how they had been changhaied at the point of a pistol and forced to work their way as seamen to Hamburg when they thought that they were going to ship to Boston, says the Philadelphia Times. The immigration authorities are handling the case and a deputy United States marshal, accompanied by the two men, is on the way to Norfolk to arrest the agent who shipped them.

The two young men met last November in Norfolk, Va. Both were out of employment and sought work about the docks. They were met, according to their story, by an alleged crew shipping agent, who offered to book them on the steamer Dortmund of the Hamburg-American line, which was lying at the docks. The young men were told that the ship was bound for Boston. They accompanied the agent to an office.

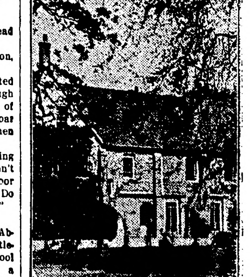
They say that they met a Swede on the way and he consented to go along. The three were asked to sign shipping papers, but the Swede refused to sign until he had read them. This angered the agent, who is alleged to have drawn a revolver and knocked the Swede unconscious.

The young men say that they were given about $3 worth of clothing and put aboard the ship. Then they learned that they were bound for Hamburg instead of Boston, but were forced to work. When the steamer reached the other side of the Atlantic the young men went to Consul General Skinner at Hamburg and lodged their complaint. Mr. Skinner sent them back to this country to make their complaint to the immigration authorities.

WROTE FAMOUS POEM THERE

Milton's Cottage at Chalfont St. Giles the Shrine to Which Numberless Pilgrims Go.

London.—Milton's cottage at Chalfont St. Giles, the shrine of numberless pilgrims, the pretty spot to which travelers journey from the other side of the world, is particularly attractive just now, with its climbing vines in all their fresh young beauty, its latticed windows open to the May sunshine, its garden sweet with old-fashioned flowers, its orchard white with cherry blossoms. It has been altered but little since Milton lived there, being still the "pretty box" that his friend Ellwood, the Quaker, took for the blind poet when he wished to leave London to escape the plague.



Once Home of Great Writer.

The room in which he sat and wrote is now a small museum, containing letters, pictures and various editions of his works. We can easily imagine it as it must have been on that day when the two friends were talking together, and Milton produced the poem he had lately written, asking Ellwood to read it at his leisure. It was as Ellwood says, "that excellent poem, entitled 'Paradise Lost'," and then he continued:

"After I had, with my best attention, read it through, I made him another visit and returned him his book with due acknowledgement of the favor he had done me in communicating it to me. He asked me how I liked it and what I thought of it, which I modestly but freely told him; and after some further discourse about it, I pleasantly said to him: 'Thou hast said much here of Paradise Lost, but what hast thou to say of Paradise Found?'"

Milton's cottage is at the end of the picturesque irregular village street. Its windows look out on fields and hedgerows and on the fragrant garden which seems to be but a part of them.

The back of the house joins on to other houses, in appearance hardly less interesting than itself. In one of them Breakspeare, Milton's publisher, once lived. It is still a charming place in spite of the fact that one of its rooms has become a butcher's shop; that joints of meat hang in one of its windows. Another house calls itself "The Old Cottage," and claims to be the oldest in the village. This is a shop, too, but of far more artistic quality, a curiosity shop, with all sorts of quaint things, peculiar to the county or connected with its worthies.

The back windows look out on the cherry orchard which stretched from Milton's cottage to Breakspeare's farm. It is said that Milton used to find his way thither through the orchard, guilding himself by the tree trunks. In fancy one could see the blind poet stepping slowly through the rich grass, holding out his hands to touch the familiar trees.

WOMEN IN CLIMBING FEAT

Scale Mt. Washington Summit Over Dangerous Trestle—Ascent Was Result of a Wager.

Bretten Woods, N. H.—Climbing to the summit of Mount Washington over the dangerous trestle of the Mountain railway in the darkness, Mrs. W. G. Honford and Mrs. Beatrice Recknadel of New York accomplished a feat never before undertaken, it is said, by their sex. The ascent was made as the result of a wager.

With a high wind blowing and no lights to guide them, the task of the climbers in crossing over the lofty Jacob's ladder trestle was regarded as extremely perilous. As soon as roalroad officials heard that they had started up the mountains, men with lanterns were sent after them to dissuade them from the attempt, but were unable to overtake them until they were close to the summit.

The two women reached the mountain top about ten o'clock, making the distance of five miles in four hours and a half. They remained at the house there until morning, when Mrs. Honford's husband arrived in his motor car and took them back to their hotel.

"Higher Slit Skirts Art"—Sculptor.

Chicago.—Skirts slit higher mean higher art, according to Mario Korbel, the young Bohemian sculptor. "Grecian girls wore skirts slit to the hips and were paragons," said Korbel.

Bothered by Rats! Break Lease.

New York.—If a tenant is bothered by rats or mice he can break his lease and move from the premises, according to Judge Friefield in an opinion rendered here.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

A Story of the Great Outdoors

If you have tired of conventional fiction you should watch for the first instalment of our new serial with the assurance of interest freshly stirred and attention unwaveringly held.

A Man in the Open

is an outdoor story, peculiarly masculine with the virility of life which city people are prone to call uncivilized. You will find vast entertainment in Jesse, in his quaint expressions, his philosophy, his twisted phrases, his sense of humor and his breezy manliness.

Don't Fail to Read It!

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept-22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Samuel G. Iverson has announced his candidacy for the governorship and there is no question but that he will make any other candidate hustle some to beat him for the nomination. Sam has proved himself competent as a public official, and has probably more personal friends all over the state than any other politician in the state. We believe that if he is elected the people can well expect a clean business administration and a cleaning up of a lot of the tricksters that are making the present administration infamous.

Chicago and vicinity had a terrible snow storm a few days ago and several lives were lost in it. But the press reports failed tot errorize the people by calling the storm a blinding and death dealing blizzard, etc., as they would hav done had it occured in Minnesota. We have some pretty rigorous weather up here in the winter, all right, but deaths from storms and exporure are fewer in northern Minnesota than further south and east.

And Governor Eberhart has appointed a committee to look into the matter of devising some more economical system of running the state. That's easy, Just fire Eberhart and the gang with him who have been guilty of bringing on the present condition.

What's the matter with calling a special session of the legislature for the purpose of following the illustrious example of litule old New York? Sulzer is not the only statesman who lied about campaign funds and their disposition.

State taxes have trebled in the last few years. The voters should get posted on the reason why and clean out the crowd that is plundering them.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Martin Nygaard, of Holt, Minn., who, on September 20th, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05640 for S½ SE¼ Sec. 5, W½ NE¼ section 8, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 4th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Lars A. Sagstuen, Knute Nelson, Christ Norbeck, all of Flakne, Flakne, Minn., Carl L. Anderson, of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

It is Our Rule to Talk Lumber

Straight from the shoulder. We tell exactly the quality of the lumber we sell, what it is best used for and just how much is required for a particular job. We try neither to sell you more than you need or to stick you with an inferior grade. You dont have to be an expert to get the right lumber here.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, of Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06964, for NW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses; John Knutson, Carl Sorme, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fosen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 20, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Thomas Knudtsen Sten, of Holt, Minn., who, on Oct. 18, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05688, SW¼ SW¼ Sec. 28, E½ SE¼, SW¼ SE¼ Section 29, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole B. Johnson, Ole O. Garthus, Emil Ostlund, Nels Lysne, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that John H. Smith, of Holt, Minn., who, on February 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07250, for SW¼ Section 11, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: James Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, Charles J. Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Charles J. Smith of Holt, Minn., who, on Feb. 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07251, for SW¼ Section 12, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H. Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, James Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
September 9, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Frank Sherack, Jr., of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on March 30th, 1910, made Homestead Entry, No. 323763, for NE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Three Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 30th day of October, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Frank Conklin, Andy Creik, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made under act of June 6, 1912.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Sept. 30, 1913.

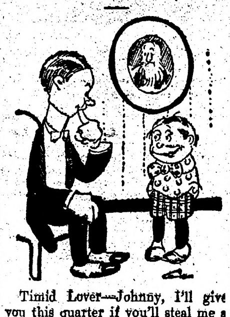
Notice is hereby given that Edvard Svensrud, of Flakne, Minn., who, on Sept. 7th, 1911, made Homestead Entry, No. 06541, amended to read as follows; for Lot 4 SW¼ NW¼ Sec. 4, SE¼ NE¼, NE¼ SE¼ Section 5, Township 156 N. Range 41 W., 5th meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 11th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses; Lars A. Sagstuen, E. A. Wright, C. Norbeck, Martin Nygaard, all of Flakne, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

PLENTY OF IT



Timid Lover—Johnny, I'll give you this quarter if you'll steal me a lock of your sister's hair.

Johnny—A'right—make it fifty cents and I'll steal ye a whole switch!

AUCTION SALE

As I am leaving for Chicago I will have a big auction sale at my place in section 8, Agder township, eight miles southeast of Holt, on Tuesday October 28th, beginning at 1:30 p. m., sharp.

The list of property to be sold includes the following:

1 Brown mare, 12 years old, has been bred; 1 Bay horse years old, weight 1,400 pounds; 1 Team of fine Mules, weight about 2,100 pounds; 1 new Emerson double disc drill 16; 1 new disc, 14; 1 new 6-ft McCormick Mower; 1 new Deering hay rake; 1 John Deere Sulky Plow with breaking attachment; 1 new wide tired wagon complete; 1 fine top buggy, rubber tired, single; cream Separator; 1 Good Cutter, Bureau, fine brass bed, Kitchon Utensils and other things too numerous to itemize.

TERMS: All sums of $10 and under, cash. On sums over $10 time will given until Nov. 1st, 1914, on bankable paper.

S. JOHNSON, Owner,
CHAS. W. LATTA, auctioneer
B. DOCKEN, Clerk.

Notice of Contest

Department of the Interior, United States Land Office, Crookston, Minnesota, October 15, 1913.

To Adolph Schirbel of Gatzke, Minn., Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Christian E. Evens, who gives Duluth, Minn., as his residence and Thief River Falls, Minn., in care of O. A. Naplin, as his postoffice address, did on September 16, 1913, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead Entry Serial No. 06470, made Sept. 1st 1912, for SE¼ NE¼, N½ SE¼ and the SW¼ SE¼ Section 20, Township 157, Range 39, 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Adolph Schirbel has wholly abandoned said land since making entry thereon; that he has not resided thereon within the last six months preceding the institution of this contest; that he has not made the improvement required by the homestead law, and the contestant herein is new the owner and holder of the Assignment Certificates issued by the Auditor of Marshall County for delinquent drainage taxes on said land.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be canceled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the said contestant's written acknowledgment of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the post office to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the postoffice to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Date of first publication, Oct. 17, 1913.
" second " Oct. 24, 1913.
" third " Oct. 31, 1913.
" fourth " Nov. 7, 1913.

Citation for Hearing on Final Account and for Distribution.

Estate of KAERSTAN GRONVALD

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall In Probate Court:

In the matter of the estate of Kaerstan Gronvald, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Karolina Gronvald, Henry Milo Clifford Gronvald, Carl Helin Gronvald, Peter Oliver Gronvald, Clara Helen Gronvald, John Helin Gronvald, and all persons interested in the final account and distribution of the estate of said decedent;

The representative of the above named decedent, having filed in this court her final account of the administration of the estate of said decedent, together with her petition praying for the adjustment and allowance of said final account and for distribution of the residue of said estate to the persons thereunto entitled; Therefore, You, and Each of You, are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this court at the Probate Court Rooms in the City of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 15th day of November, 1913, at o'clock 10 A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal of said court, this 18th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM,
Probaee Judge.

A. N. ECKSTROM,
Attorney for petitioner,
Warren, Minn. (o24n7)

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
October 10, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Ollina Knuts Bolingberg, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on November 29, 1910, made Homestead entry, No. 05763, for NW¼, Section 33, Township 156, Range 41, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Register and Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn. on the 18th day of November 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: George E. Olson, Engebret Moe, Peter Rosand, Alfred Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof mode according to law under which entry was made.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

DR. J. T. TURLEY,

DENTIST,

Will be in Holt Friday and Saturday, October 24 & 25
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS	$1.00	GOLD CROWN	$5 & $6
TREATMENTS	1.50	PORCELAIN CROWN	5.00

PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON

General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.

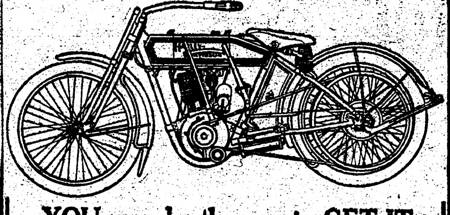
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA

(North of the Minnesota River)

Is Going To Be Given This

HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money



YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.

A good hustler can make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.
Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.

It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name..

Post Office..

Rural Route.................. State..................

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

MINNESOTA
TORIC

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1913 NO. 14

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.23
Wheat	.75
Barley d	.42
Oats	.29
Rye	.41
Flour, Best Patent	2.45

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Nov. 14 & 15. See his "ad."

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the church here Sunday Nov. 9th at 10:45 a. m., and at Ringbo at 3:30 in the afternoon of the same day. Everybody welcome.

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 15th

AUCTION SALE

At The Northern Light office on
Saturday, November 1st

The following property will be sold:

Team Good Mules, 3 and 4 years old
Team small Horses
2-seated Buggy, new last year
Set double Harness, 1 1-4 in., good as new 1 pure bred Chester White Boar Pig and numerous other articles.

Sale begins at 1:30 p. m. sharp

TERMS: All Sums of $10 and under, Cash. On sums over $10 one year's time will be given on approved bankable paper.

CHAS. W. LATTA, Auctioneer

$1,400 in One Day

The above figures represent the amount sold at the Holt Mercantile Co's store here on Friday last, the opening day of their big sale. That's making a record for a small town like Holt, and people wonder how it could happen. The answer is: Intelligent Advertising. There was no circular letters or posters sent out; it was all covered by local newspaper advertising, yet the results were far greater than even hoped for.

There are different methods of advertising; with various results. One man uses a rubber stamp outfit so the printer won't get a cent from him, and the public sizes him up as a man that will take the last possible cent from a customer. Another may keep a jug of alcohol to burn holes in the livers and brains of a few people, and by that method get easy access to their pocketbooks sometimes. But, the careful buyer for cash will pass the rubber stamp signs and sidestep the poison in order to spend his cash with the up-to-date merchant, who through the local newspaper, hands him a clean-cut, money saving proposition to think over in his home.

Lars Backe was up from Thief River Falls monday on business.

Dr. R. L. Olson left for a business trip to Nielsville the firrt part of the week.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Cobweb Basket Social for the benefit of the school at the Woodman hall tomorrow evening.

Ole Nyberg is on the sick list and it is reported that he is threatened with a run of pneumonia.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

mrs. L. Edwardson is here from Ryder, N. D., for a visit with her parents, mr. and mrs. T. O. Saastad.

Henry Bell came in from Whiteford on monday and left for Semans, Sask., to spend some time visiting with a son.

Dr. and Mrs. M. A. Nelson came in from the Mud Lake country the first of the week. Mrs. Nelson went to Minneapolis while the doctor left for a business trip to other points.

LOST—On Monday evening, between the Holt Merc. Co's store and Farmers Restaurant, a $5 bill. Finder please return to Oscar Adolphson or leave at this office for reward.

The Red River Valley Dairymen's Convention will be held at Crookston on November 3rd and 4th. Every progressive farmer interested in dairying should make it a point to attend this convention if possible.

There will be a big Auction Sale of Live Stock and Farm Machinery at the Adolpson Farm, in Section 1, of Agdar township, on November 10th. Watch for sale bills which will appear the first of next week.

Tomorrow night is the date of the Cobweb Basket Social at the Woodman hall for the benefit of the school. The arrangements for the affair are all perfected, and, judging for the degree of enthusiasm manifested so far, the social is bound to be a huge success. Make it a point to attend if possible.

Chris Norbeck came in from Flakne the first of the week to take out a new I. H. C. traction engine which he and a couple of his neighbors have bought for plowing and other uses in their neighborhood. They took the rig out Thursday morning and expect to keep it busy pretty steadily all the time.

The Industrial Contest

Visitors from here who attended the Industrial contest at middle River a couple of weeks ago are inthusiastic over the contest itself and the treatment accorded them. The exhibits were very numerous and graded fully up to the standard usually found at county fairs, to say lhe least. Those who attended were treated to a very substantial lunch by the townspeople and returned home with the will and intent to say a good word for our neighbor village, and a word of advice for the business men of Holt to try and establish simillar contests to be held here, and thats good advice.

Several of the children from this vicinity took part in the contest but we regret that we have not a complete list to publish. We notice however, that Harry and Frankie Heinze managed to carry off several prizes for grains and garden products.

About The New Railroad

Thief River Falls Times: The editor of the Times realises that in order to build up a permanent business the paper must stand square on all questions. He does not believe in boosting wild speculations or impractical schemes and for this reason the Times has had little to say heretofore in the matter of the building of the proposed new electric railway system. We have been watching developments and trying to find out the ability and sincerity of the promoters of this new railroad. So far our search has been very favorable. This week a friend of the editor called at this office and gave us a little information which gives us great faith in this railroad proposition. This gentleman had known the chief promoter for a considerable number of years and had always found him to be absolutely reliable. He also told us of a number of large concerns which Dr. Brandenburg had promoted, including one system of electric railroads, all of which have proved highly succesful financially and otherwise. We believe that this new railroad proposition can be made a winner if only the people of this city and territory will co-operate with the promoters. Let everybody put his shoulder to the wheel and boost for this new electric railroad. A network of electric roads tapping territory tributary to this city would make Thief River Ealls the hub of nothern Minnesota and would link this city with the rural communities in such a way that every body would be prosperous. To be conservative, our city would likely double its population in the next five years.

It is a Very Large Sale

One of the largest Sales ever held in Pennington County is now going on at the E & E Clothing Store at Thief River Falls.

Mr. I. L. Erickson decided recently to go out of business, and the entire stock of finest Clothing and Furnishings for men and boys is now being closed out at unheard of low prices. The crowds have been so large at times that they were forced to lock the doors owing to lack of room. Imagine yourself buying suits at $9.65 which formerly sold up to $30.00, and they have a good assortment on hand as yet. $16.45 will give you choice of the entire stock of fine tailor made Seu'ts, sold up to $35.00. It is advisable for you Mr. Reader, to attend this Sale as you will surely find Great Values. (adv)

D. Payne and family autoed down to Thief River Falls Sunday for a brief visit with relatives and friends.

THE BANK IS THE PLACE FOR IT.

And The SAFEST After All

No use in storing money in home chests or in out-of-the-way corners. If anything happened to you, the money would not be found. If fire happened to your house it would be consumed; if thieves broke in it would be assumed by them. The safest place is where you can always get it, yet always know that it is secure. Let us suggest you bank it with us.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

Ringbo Rumbles

Miss Ella Halleen of Alvarado arrived last Friday, and is visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Erickson.

Mrs. Jens Offerdahl and Mrs. Christian Engen returned Saturday from Grand Forks where they have been visiting.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Engstrom and Skaglund Bros. called at John Engstrom's Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. T. O. [illegible] left Monday for Oslo.

Mrs. C. Gronvald is enjoying a visit with her mother and sister who arrived from Minneapolis the first of the week.

Alfred Anderson and wife were visitors at the C. Engen home last Sunday.

Card of Thanks

We herepy express our heartfelt thanks to our kind neighbors and friends who attended the funeral of our little son, Sherman, and for the many acts of sympathy and helpfulness shown us at the time of his death.

—Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Grover.

C. L. Anderson was in from East Valley Saturday last and found time to make this offibe a pleasant call. He reports that he got a yield of 12 bushels of flax this year, which is about the top figure for this locality. While here he bought a nice team from Chris Norbeck, one of the prominent mud Lake farmers.

Notice For Publication.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olof Kristofferson Viken, of Germantown, Minn., who, on April 8, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07664, for SE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn, on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Gunder Thompson Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., who, on Nov. 13, 1911 made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06875, for Lots 1, 2, S 1-2 NE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olof K. Viken, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

EMPIRE CREAM Separators

REMARKABLE FOR SMOOTH, QUIET EASY RUNNING

Used by Three Generations

THE HANDSOME EMPIRE

It pays to be particular when buying a cream separator. The whole value of the machine depends on quality.

Buyers are looking for quality, too. But they don't look for it by squinting through a magnifying glass, or by feeling the parts to see if they are smooth. They try the crank to see how the machine "feels" and "sounds" when it runs. They want to know how long the machine has been on the market.

Many young farmers are buying EMPIRES today, both because they like EMPIRES and because their fathers and grandfathers used EMPIRES before them.

Come in and see the EMPIRE, or ask to have it sent out to your place.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

MINE DEATH LIST IS PROBABLY 247

FATALITIES WILL REACH THAT NUMBER SAYS LATEST REPORT.

BUT TWENTY-THREE RESCUED

Hundreds of Miners Laboring in Shifts to Reach Men Entombed as Result of New Mexico Explosion.

Dawson, N. M., Oct. 25.—Two hundred and forty-seven miners are now believed to be dead beneath tons of fallen coal and rocks in the Stag Canon Mine No. 2, of the Stag Canon Fuel company, here. Hundreds of miners working in shifts of 15 each are slowly forcing their way through the entries, fighting against dangers of gas and a fire which Thursday started in an adjoining mine and which threatens to reach the space which holds the entombed men.

Few Taken Out Alive.

Only 23 men have been taken from the mine alive. At 6:15 Thursday evening, the first miner to be rescued alive within 12 hours was taken from the main entry. He was found unconscious, two miles within the mine.

Fourteen dead, 23 rescued make up the total of a day's work of recovery. The finding of a live mule in the mine encourages officials in charge of the rescue work to hope that some live miners perhaps still are entombed in a room located more than 4,000 feet into the mine.

Son of Stockholder Killed.

Henry P. McShane, son of Mrs. E. P. McShane, of New York, widow of a former heavy stockholder in the mine, is among the known dead. McShane, who was but 19 years old, had come to the mine in which his father's estate still held an interest, to learn mining from practical experience.

J. C. Roberts, chief of the United States mine rescue bureau in this district, arrived and has taken charge of the rescue work.

In the mine at the time of the explosion were 284 miners, and that the death list will reach so great a figure is attributed to the fact that the great fans which kept the air circulating within the mine were rendered useless by the force of the explosion. Not until four hours after the explosion were the fans repaired.

Some May Have Escaped.

Mr. Roberts said that many of the dead undoubtedly were suffocated. Some of the rescue parties declared it their belief that a party of the entombed miners had reached a room and had sealed it in time to prevent the gas from overcoming them.

The work of rescue will continue unabated, until all of the bodies yet within the mine shall have been recovered.

Dr. S. P. Morris, representative of this district of the American Red Cross society, reached here and made preparations to relieve the families of the victims of the explosion.

Mine Officials Assist Destitute.

Director General Ernest P. Bicknell of the Red Cross society in Washington wired Governor McDonald to draw on the society for $1,000 with which to alleviate the suffering of miners' families here, but Governor McDonald replied that the mine officials had given him every assurance that all destitute families would be provided for and that the company would defray expenses of all funerals.

Orders on the company store for an indefinite length of time have been issued to the families of the entombed miners.

The mine was supposed to have been one of the model mines in the United States and that such a disaster could befall the men within it had been considered impossible.

Examined but Recently.

Only two days before the tragedy, State Mine Inspector Biddow had examined the property and pronounced it in excellent condition.

That most of the miners were killed with suddenness of the explosion is evident from the attitude in which they have been found. One man, unidentified, was found leaning against a wall, with both arms elevated to his face as if striving to ward off an expected blow. Another was found standing erect, with his pick still in his hand just as he had struck his last blow into the coal.

No Intention of Harming Diaz.

Mexico City.—There is no intention on the part of the government to molest General Felix Diaz, according to Querido Moheno, minister for foreign affairs.

Men Higher Up Not Mentioned.

Chicago, Oct. 27.—None of the men higher up in the alleged conspiracy to defame Clarence S. Fund were mentioned in the addresses by counsel in opening the trials of Attorney Daniel Donahoe and Detective Isaac Steifel, charged with conspiracy. Assistant State's Attorney Barnhart said the state would prove that John C. Henning, a former bellboy, received a substantial sum to bring suit against Mr. Funk charging him with having alienated Mrs. Henning's affections.

ATROCITIES WERE FRIGHTFUL

ALL THE BALKAN STATES WERE GUILTY, HOWEVER.

Probers of Recent War Horrors Establish Authenticity of Greek Letters.

Paris, Oct. 27.—Troops of all the warring Balkan states committed gross atrocities according to the evidence gathered by the International Carnegie commission in its searching inquiry just ended.

The conclusions of the commission are to be published in book form with illustrations and facsimiles of a number of the documents on which the report is based. In view of the commission's desire to present an absolutely impartial account of its investigations, the text will not be divided into sections written by individual members, but issued as a whole, for which all the members of the commission take responsibility.

One of the noteworthy tasks was the minute examination and verification by the commissioners of the famous packets of letters from Greek soldiers captured by the Bulgarians, containing horrible descriptions of how Greek soldiers "avenged themselves" on Bulgarians who fell into their hands.

The commission believes that it has established the authenticity of these letters. Other documents testify that the Greeks occasionally made use of the forbidden dumdum bullet and show also the misdeeds of Bulgarians and other belligerents. The inquiry did not extend to the Roumanians.

The commission gathered matter from every available source. After having visited the officials, the commission went to the scene of alleged atrocities and interrogated at length every class of witness, from soldiers who took part in the battles to women and children who were spectators and victims of the horrors. Some of the most important evidence taken by the commissioners came from children.

While it was found that the Bulgarians had committed the greatest faults, the soldiers of other nations taking part in the war were also guilty of many hideous acts. The commissioners appear to be of the opinion that had other belligerents been roused to such a pitch of fury as were the Bulgarians, they would not have acted much better, judging from what happened on certain occasions and by letters captured from Greek soldiers.

FOUR KILLED, SCORE INJURED

Enamel Oven Explodes on Top Floor of Six-Story Factory Building in New York.

New York, Oct. 27.—A gas oven, in which metal was being enamelled, on the top floor of a six-story factory building in Canal street, exploded, killing four persons. More than a score of others were injured or burned in the fire that succeeded the explosion, and some of them may die.

The identity of the dead was not known until hours after the bodies had been taken to the morgue. Three of those killed were women. All were workers in the building.

The escape of some of the trapped workers was spectacular. With their clothing ablaze they climbed out through flame-swept windows to fire escapes and dropped to the sidewalks.

STEAMER SINKS; 44 DROWN

Westkusten Strikes Reef in Gale in Gulf of Bothnia, and But One Survives.

Hernosand, Sweden, Oct. 25.—The steamer Westkusten, which left Vasa, in the gulf of Bothnia, Wednesday afternoon in a gale, ran on a reef a few hours later, and 44 persons were drowned. A single survivor was picked up by the steamer Carlvor Linne and has just landed here.

The crew succeeded in launching a boat, but the steamer sank in a few minutes. The boat was swamped.

Rebels Repulsed; Loss 800.

Mexico City, Oct. 27.—The war department received a despatch, saying the rebels were repulsed at Monterey with heavy losses by the local garrison, who were reinforced by the troops of Generals Ocarranza, Pena and Anaya from Saltillo and Hipolito, after 10 hours' fierce fighting. The despatch estimates the rebel loss at 800 men.

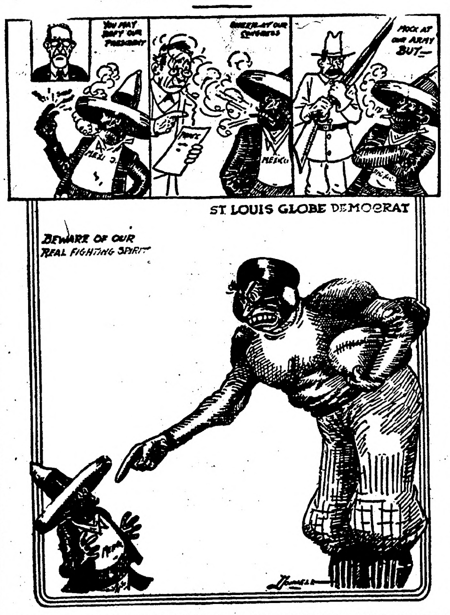
Have Surrounded Monterey.

Dallas, Texas, Oct. 24. — The dispatch to the Times-Herald from a reliable source on the Mexican border, announced that constitutionalists had surrounded Monterey, Mexico, and expected to assault that city immediately. Monterey is the most important city in northern Mexico.

Safe Dumped Into River.

Appleton, Wis., Oct. 27.—A safe stolen from the A. L. Smith homestead recently purchased by Lawrence college, was found in the Fox river at Menasha, five miles from here, with the door blown off and the contents gone. While the house was locked up burglars made off with the safe, three shotguns, fishing tackle and thirty valuable volumes from the library. The property belonged to Franklin T. Smith of Milwaukee. It was insured against burglary.

MEXICO AND UNCLE SAM



YOU MAY DEFY OUR PRESIDENT
SNEER AT OUR CONGRESS
MOCK AT OUR ARMY BUT—
MEXICO
BEWARE OF OUR REAL FIGHTING SPIRIT
ST. LOUIS GLOBE DEMOCRAT

AS TO NUMBER OF REGIONAL BANKS

THIS ISSUE MAY SPLIT CONGRESS DEMOCRATS HOPELESSLY.

QUESTION OF TWELVE OR ONE

Wilson Refuses to Budge From Original Proposition—Many Members Favor Vanderlip Plan.

Washington, Oct. 27.—Shall the country have 12 regional reserve banks or one central bank of that sort? That is the big question that confronts Washington official circles.

Many of the members of the house and senate favor the one-bank idea, espoused by Banker Vanderlip of New York, while the president expresses himself to all visitors that he will never recede from the twelve-bank plan as originally it was written into the currency bill before that instrument left the house.

Hopeless Division Possible.

That issue may divide the majority party in congress hopelessly. That question will be the chief issue of the final currency reform fight in the senate committee. The hearings concluded, the committee members will begin the task of attempting to agree upon a revision of the Glass bill that will prove acceptable to President Wilson and the house.

The president made it known in emphatic terms that he was opposed to the central bank plan, as suggested Thursday by Frank A. Vanderlip of the National City Bank of New York and as endorsed formally by many members of the senate committee. He reiterated through Secretary Tumulty that the Glass-Owen bill, with its system of 12 regional reserve banks, related only through the function of one federal reserve board, sitting at Washington, was "admirably suited" to the needs of the country.

President Wants No Change.

While members of the senate committee were drawing out witnesses in further support of the single bank idea, President Wilson talked at length with other senators, outlining his desire that the Glass bill be left unchanged in this particular.

It is apparent that the course of several members of the committee probably will be determined finally by the attitude taken by President Wilson and other party leaders as to the expediency of the single bank plan. Senators O'Gorman,

Commercial Congress of South.

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 27.—The fifth annual session of the southern commercial congress opened here today with a program that makes it an international event and a list of speakers including President Wilson, members of the cabinet and of congress, and many other men prominent in public life and in business.

Body of Busch in State.

St. Louis, Oct. 27.—Thousands of men and women passed in silent procession by the coffin in which the body of Adolphus Busch lay in state in the family home. When the doors were opened a line four blocks long was waiting. For three hours the public was admitted to the home and in the first half hour it is estimated that nearly a thousand persons, mostly women, viewed the body. Many were wives of men who, for years, have worked in the establishment of which Mr. Busch was the head.

SENATE PASSES SAFETY BILL

IS TERMED LA FOLLETTE SEAMEN'S SERVITUDE MEASURE.

Will Not Affect Treaty Relations of United States Till President Can Act—Promotes Safety at Sea.

Washington, Oct. 25.—The La Follette substitute for the "seamen's sevitude" bill, amended so that it will not affect the treaty relations of the United States until the president has been given the opportunity to readjust them, passed the senate at the end of a debate that was characterized by unusual proceedings.

Senator Fletcher, chairman of the subcommittee that had charge of the preparation of the seamen's bill, declared the measure as passed by the senate would accomplish three important shipping reforms:

"The giving of greater freedom to seamen, the promotion of greater safety at sea for the passengers and crews, and the equalizing of the wage costs in operating vessels in foreign and domestic trade."

The La Follette substitute differed in many respects from the original bill which passed both houses of congress last winter, but which did not meet with the approval of President Taft.

Its chief provisions would require improved working quarters and working conditions on ships; increase the requirements for safety appliances and efficiency of sailors; release sailors from some of the present stringent regulations that compel them to remain with ships when in foreign ports, and would direct the abrogation of any treaties that prohibit the enforcement of the provisions against foreign ships coming into American ports.

FIRST OPERATION OF LOCK

Panama Canal on Pacific Side is Used Completely for First Time.

Panama, Oct. 27.—The pipe line suction dredge No. 85, which has been working at the Pacific entrance of the Panama canal, successfully passed through the locks at Miraflores and Pedro Miguel.

Later the girder span of the railroad trestle at Pairso was lifted to permit the dredge to pass through on its way to the Cucaracha slide, where it will begin excavating.

The passage of the dredge constitutes the first complete operation of the Pacific locks of the canal.

Decollete for Paris Men.

Paris, Oct. 27.—Decollete for men has just made its appearance in a Paris theater for the first time and caused a mild riot. Shortly before the curtain arose at the Varieties theater on Le Bonheur Mesdames, two young men took seats in front row stalls. When they turned in order to cursorily survey the audience a gasp of amazement went up from all their near neighbors. Both had donned white silk shirts with soft roll collars with V-shaped openings in front.

Postoffice Wrecked; $15,000 Taken.

Chicago Junction, Ohio, Oct. 25.—Robbers blew open the safe of the postoffice at Attica, seven miles west of here, and escaped with loot estimated at $15,000. The explosion of the safe, which rocked the town, destroyed the two-story postoffice building. The robbers fled with their loot, consisting of money and stamps of the office, and also a large sum belonging to the Seneca County Fair Association and other organizations of which the postmaster was secretary.

MEXICAN ELECTION PROVES VERY DULL

FEW VOTES ARE CAST AND THERE IS NO SEMBLANCE OF DISORDER.

CONTEST LIKELY NOT LEGAL

At Piedras Negras Huerta Gets 2,200 of a 2,300 Total—Felix Diaz Resigns and Severs Ties With the Dictator.

Mexico City, Oct. 28.—The election promised by the provisional president, General Huerta, was held and there was no semblance of disorder in any quarter of this city.

At the close of the polls the indications were that not sufficient votes had been cast to constitute a legal choice for the presidency to succeed General Victoriano Huerta.

Few Persons Vote.

No official announcement was made but it was estimated, judging from the results in the capital, where it was expected the vote would be up to the average, that less than 10,000 of the 80,000 eligible voters in the republic went to the polls. It would be no surprise if congress, the members of which also were voted for, declared the elections void when the body is organized and revises the returns.

The vote in the city, and throughout the republic, was very light. Not only did the masses disregard the polling places, but leading citizens as well paid no attention to the booths.

Candidate Refuses to Participate.

Manuel Calero, the Liberal candidate, who was once ambassador to Washington, did not vote.

Instead, he took his family early in the day into the country. After he returned, he said:

"I understand the voting was exceedingly dull. Nobody appears to believe in the seriousness of the election. On account of the political conditions many refused to vote. I did not vote. Had we had indirect balloting, I would have done so, but since it was otherwise I did not care to cast a vote either for myself or any other candidate."

Federico Gamboa, the candidate for the Catholic party, on the other hand, cast his ballot for Senor Calero. Neither of these candidates cared to express an opinion as to whether a sufficient number of ballots had been deposited to make the elections effective.

Few of those who went to the polls took the trouble to vote for either senators or deputies.

Long Lead Is Claimed.

The leaders of the Catholic party claimed a long lead, although they were unable to estimate the number of votes polled for their candidates, Federico Gamboa and General Rascon. If this claim is correct, it is generally thought that General Felix Diaz and Senor Requina ran second.

Mr. Huerta spent the day at his Popotla suburban home. A decree will be issued by General Huerta increasing the army from 85,000 men, its alleged present number, to 150,000. General Huerta proposed such an increase some time ago, but the congress which he dissolved limited him to 80,000 men.

Huerta Overwhelming Choice.

Eagle Pass, Tex.—Victoria Huerta was the overwhelming choice for president of Mexico in the votes cast at Piedras Negras, Mexico.

Felix Diaz was the only rival of the provisional president and he received less than 100 votes. Of 2,300 votes cast, General Huerta is shown in unofficial figures to have received more than 95 per cent, or approximately 2,200.

Diaz Resigns From the Army.

Vera Cruz.—The last shred binding General Felix Diaz and General Victoria Huerta was severed when General Diaz telegraphed to the department of war his resignation as brigadier general of the army.

Dry Farm Congess Opens.

Tulsa, Okla., Oct. 27.—In connection with the soil products exposition which has been in progress for the past week, the International dry farming congress has opened its four days' meeting. At the same time the International congress of farm women, an auxiliary of the Dry Farming organization, is holding its sessions.

Congregationalists Are Progressive.

Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 27.—The Congregational church in the United States is progressive. This was demonstrated when its national council swept aside all opposition and by an overwhelming vote adopted a new constitution, containing new statements of doctrine, and other radical changes in church policy.

Attacks Washington Phone Service.

Washington, Oct. 27.—Representative Carey, of Wisconsin, caused at least three young women in the central telephone exchange to choke on their chewing gum and led the entire force unanimously to declare him "a horrible, mean old thing." The Wisconsin statesman is conducting a crusade against what he terms "the miserable telephone service" afforded in the national capital. But he started a storm when he charged that the telephone company employed "young inexperienced persons."

GLASS EDITORIAL SCORES VANDERLIP

AUTHOR OF MEASURE SAYS NEW YORK BANKER CHANGED FRONT.

USES INTERESTING SIMILE

Likens Tactics to Fox Hunt—Quotes From Present Critic and Also Alleges Inconsistencies.

Washington, Oct. 28.—Representative Carter Glass, author of the pending currency bill, has issued a statement on the measure in which he takes particular notice of the proposed amendment of President Vanderlip of the National City Bank of New York.

Powers Are Not Dulled.

Representative Glass owns the morning and evening newspapers of his home city, Lynchburg, Va., and shows in his statement on the money bill that more than a dozen years in the House has not dulled his powers of editorial discussion.

Mr. Glass, among other things, says: "I have somewhere read that in England—or maybe it was in Scotland—they used to have an annaul fox hunt, at one stage of which, with Reynard hardpressed, a red herring was drawn across the trail to divert the pursuit and give the fox another chance. Of course, what popularly is styled the money power in this country is not foxy, nor would anybody dream of suspecting Mr. Vanderlip of being in the red herring business.

Scores Vanderlip Scheme.

"Yet it happens to be a fact that the house currency bill is designed to correct the radical defects of a system under which concentrated wealth ruled the nation; and, likewise, it happens to be a fact that the Vanderlip scheme is projected at the eleventh hour of congressional consideration with the hope of indefinite postponement of currency legislation should the scheme be given serious attention.

"If Mr. Vanderlip's scheme is not actually designed to delay and frustrate currency legislation, it will, if given consideration, have that inevitable effect.

"On July 24 Mr. Vanderlip wrote me a letter voicing the protest of himself and other bankers against certain provisions of the house bill and I wonder that he has so soon forgotten with what vehemence he assailed that feature of the measure which involves government control. He declared the principle to be 'practically inexpedient and fundamentally wrong.' 'The objection,' said Mr. Vanderlip, 'is not to the powers granted to the federal reserve board, but to the hands in which they are placed,' asserting that 'both financial and political history furnish ample illustration of the danger, the ineffectiveness, and inadequacy of politically appointed boards.'

Some Vanderlip Contentions.

"Mr. Vanderlip went to the extreme of saying: 'If such a board as is proposed were formed by appointing the seven leading bankers of the United States—whoever they may be—and these men became disassociated from the daily conduct of actual affairs and sat in Washington, directing at arm's length the operation of the several reserve banks, they would very rapidly lose the power to direct wisely. It seems to me that the only proper method of control must be through a board composed of practical bankers, in direct touch with current business, who are selected for short terms by the member banks.'

"In direct contravention of this position, Mr. Vanderlip and his Wall Street assistants come here at the last hour, flinging consistency to the winds, proposing a politically appointed board, not one member of which is to be selected by the stockholding banks, but all by the president of the United States. Mr. Vanderlip in July objected to the long term of seven years provided by the house bill, but now in October he would stretch out the term to 14 years.

Guard Killed; Striker Missing.

Ludlow, Col., Oct. 28.—A battle between strikers, mine guards and deputy sheriffs was waged for 12 hours in Barwin Canon at Hastings, and in the vicinity of the Colorado and Southern Station at Ludlow. One mine guard was killed and, according to union men, one striker is missing.

U. S. Will Not Drop Milk Probe.

Washington, Oct. 28. — Secretary Houston has issued a statement saying the department of agriculture had no intention of abandoning bacteriological examination of milk as a means of determining its cleanliness and fitness for human consumption.

Election Is Closely Watched.

Washington, Oct. 28 — Officials in Washington kept in constant touch with the state department for news from the Mexican elections and President Wilson, although enroute to the Southern Commercial congress at Mobile, Ala., was kept advised of the situation as it was reflected from Mexico City. Messages were received from Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the American charge at Mexico City, stating that the voting, insofar as reported to the Mexican capital, had been extremely light.

DOCTORS DID NOT HELP HER

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. LeClear's Health—Her Own Statement.

Detroit, Mich.—"I am glad to discover a remedy that relieves me from my suffering and pains. For two years I suffered bearing down pains and got all run down. I was under a nervous strain and could not sleep at night. I went to doctors here in the city but they did not do me any good.

"Seeing Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised, I tried it. My health improved wonderfully and I am now quite well again. No woman suffering from female ills will regret it if she takes this medicine."—Mrs. JAMES G. LECLEAR, 336 Hunt St., Detroit, Mich.

Another Case.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is all you claim it to be. About two or three days before my periods I would get bad backaches, then pains in right and left sides, and my head would ache. I called the doctor and he said I had organic inflammation. I went to him for a while but did not get well so I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking two bottles I was relieved and finally my troubles left me. I married and have two little girls. I have had no return of the old troubles."—Mrs. CHAS. BOELL, 2650 S. Chadwick St., Phila., Pa.

What Doctor Can Beat This?

In less than three months a physician of Portland, Me., has treated professionally five patients representing five successive generations of the same family, beginning with a centenarian and following in the direct line of descent down to her great-great-grandson. He first attended the old lady, who was ninety-nine years old, for senile gangrene resulting in her death. During her illness he was called on to prescribe for her daughter, aged seventy-five. Next this daughter's son, a florist, aged fifty, fell ill and required attention. Following him, a son, a clerk of twenty-seven, found himself in need of medical aid. And lastly to the clerk's wife was born a male child, whom the doctor was called upon to assist into the world, as he had been summoned to ease the great-great-grandmother's exit from it barely three months before.

No Risk.

Doctor—Have you any of that rundown condition?

Patient—No. I can dodge all the autos.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Ambition is the mother-in-law of disappointment.

Housework Is a Burden

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but a woman who is weak, tired and suffering from an aching back has a heavy burden.

Any woman in this condition has good cause to suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered.

Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of suffering women. It's the best recommended special kidney remedy.

A MONTANA CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

Mrs. N. L. Ferguson, 408 E. Fourth St., Anaconda, Mont., says: "I had a constant pain across my back that broke my rest at night. I felt worn out in the morning and had to walk around all bent over. If I did any stooping or lifting, it made me worse. I took different kidney remedies and tried plasters, but nothing helped me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They relieved me right away and three boxes cured me."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

Don't Persecute Your Bowels

Cut out cathartics and purgatives. They are brutal, harsh, unnecessary. Try

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Purely vegetable. Act gently on the liver, eliminate bile, and soothe the delicate membrane of the bowel. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Indigestion, as millions know.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

HIDES AND FURS

We positively give more valuable illustrated information relative to Hides and Furs, than any other house in the world. We pay Highest Cash Prices for Hides, Furs, Pelts, etc., and make prompt returns for each shipment. We sell trappers' supplies very cheap. Write for circular, shipping tags, Illustrated Trap Book, Catalogue, etc. It's free. NORTHWESTERN HIDE & FUR COMPANY. Estab. 1890. Minneapolis, Minn.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

EXPERIMENT IN BEEF PRODUCTION

CATTLE FOOD TEST ON UNPRECEDENTED SCALE ARRANGED.

100 HEAD TO BE STUDIED

Various Diets to Be Tried at University Farm—Work to Start Soon and Last for Years.

Minneapolis.—Preparations for an experiment in beef production, which is considered by experts at the agricultural experiment station at the University of Minnesota college of agriculture as the most comprehensive investigation of the kind ever undertaken in the United States, are practically completed and announcement was made at the agricultural college that the work would be started early next month.

As to Experiment.

The experiment will involve the keeping of individual records of approximately 100 head of beef cattle, the exact amount of feed each consumes, the gains made and the effects on the animals of the different kinds of food. The test in the case of many of the animals will cover the animal's entire life from the time it is born until it is finally disposed of. In the case of some animals that are kept for breeding purposes it is expected to cover a period of no less than ten years.

The work is to be done under the direction of the department of animal husbandry of the college of agriculture, of which Professor H. R. Smith is head. Bulletins will be issued from time to time explaining the results of the work and giving deductions as to what types of beef cattle and the methods of feeding that give the best returns. It is expected to be of tremendous value to the farmers of the state and to stimulate interest in the introduction of better types of animals for beef production.

Most Comprehensive of Kind.

"So far as we know," said Professor Smith, "this is to be the most comprehensive investigation work along this line that has ever been undertaken in any experiment station in the country. Approximately 100 head of beef cattle will be used for the test which will last for a series of years. The four beef breeds, Hereford, Shorthorn, Angus and Galloway, will be represented in about equal numbers. The experiment will show what types of cattle are the most profitable for the Minnesota farmer to raise.

"An accurate record will be kept of every pound of grain and hay consumed by each animal from the time the test is begun until the animal is disposed of. The animals will be weighed at regular intervals and it will be possible to see at a glance just what each is doing.

"The purpose underlying this extensive work," Professor Smith continued, "is to determine exactly the value of the various breeds and types of animals as efficient machines. It is to do for the farmer what he is unable to do for himself—find out for him what kind of beef cattle he can realize the best returns on."

The experiment is to be conducted in the experiment station barns, which are being entirely remodeled inside for the purpose.

EVELETH CHARTER IS VALID

Bitter Election and Hard-Fought Recount Results in the Above Declaration.

Eveleth.—After a bitter election and hard-fought recount the new commission charter for Eveleth was declared valid by Judge Martin Hughes, who in so doing annulled the ballot of Pasqualia Piccannio on the ground that it was cast in the wrong precinct. The ballot in question was marked in opposition to the charter.

Piccannio testified that he had voted against the charter and that no fraud was intended, as he erred in not going to the right polling place.

In declaring the ballot void Judge Hughes granted the passage of the charter by one-seventh of a vote.

Kills White Mud Hen.

Mapleton, Minn. — While hunting, William Schultz shot a white mud hen.

Slayer of Duluth Man Hysterical.

San Francisco, Oct. 21.—Miss Leah Alexander, who shot J. D. Van Baalen, an advertising solicitor, Saturday, inflicting wounds from which he died, chatted and laughed with a young woman friend at the city prison. "By the way, how's Van?" she asked. The visitor lowered her gaze and the prisoner guessed the truth. "It's not true, it's not true," she cried, and became hysterical. The police say she will be charged with murder. Van Baalen's body will be sent to his parents in Duluth, Minn.

SLEEPY EYE CELEBRATION

Governor Speaks at Fair—Says Poor Cooking Breaks Up Homes.

Sleepy Eye.—Sleepy Eye's fair and market day celebration was attended by large crowds, the Second Regiment band of New Ulm furnishing music. Dr. Bryde of the State university was scheduled to speak, but was taken sick and was not able to attend.

Governor A. O. Eberhart arrived here at 2 p. m., Wednesday, from New Ulm, being escorted by Mayor Hauser and W. W. Smith. He complimented the agricultural school, saying it is the best thing in the country to build up better farming. He also said that poor cooking was breaking up many homes and a good remedy is the domestic science schools.

"Minnesota is better equipped with schools than any other state in the union," he said.

The governor spoke of his public utility proposition, saying, "We have enough waterpower in Minnesota to furnish power, heat and light for all our factories and homes. The state must step in and demand that utility corporations furnish facilities at reasonable rates. I am trying to get for Minnesota what Senator La Follette gave his life for, practically, in getting for Wisconsin. We must have state regulation. City regulation has been tried and has failed."

The governor said he was asking for state control of public utilities on the ground of efficiency and economy. He spoke for about forty-five minutes and was enthusiastically received.

SECOND FARM TOUR PLANNED

Southern Minnesota Association Will Equip Another Flying Squadron for 31 Counties.

Mankato.—The Southern Minnesota Better Development league is planning on another Southern Minnesota tour, similar to the successful one just held.

Secretary John D. Deets is corresponding with the Commercial clubs in the larger towns in Waseca, Dodge, Steele, Olmsted, Winona, Wabasha, Goodhue, Rice, LeSueur, Scott and Dakota counties, with a view to securing their co-operation in making the tour a success.

It is proposed to have this run the week of Nov. 17, provided the weather is favorable. Good speakers will be secured, and such subjects as better farming and good roads will be brought to the front.

The arrangements for the annual meeting of the league are under way. At a meeting of the executive committee, to be held in this city Monday, the program will be prepared. The constitution provides for the annual meeting on the first Tuesday in December, but the Southern Minnesota Medical society will meet in Mankato that day, filling the hotels, so only the officers will meet on Dec. 2, and will adjourn the meeting until the next day.

It is expected that each of the thirty-one counties in the league will be represented.

N. E. A. PICKS ST. PAUL FOR '14

Will Hold Sessions There July 4-11, So the Committee Decides.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 24. — The next convention of the National Education association will be held in St. Paul, Minn., July 4 to July 11, 1914. This announcement was made by the executive committee, which met here to choose a convention city.

Rat Poison Proves Fatal.

St. Cloud.—Mrs. Fred Gies, aged forty-three, living south of here, is dead and her 13-year-old daughter is critically ill as a result of eating two slices of bread which were each spread with about 200 grains of arsenic. The bread had been prepared for the purpose of poisoning rats, which were infesting the residence, by a new owner of the home, unbeknown to the Gies family. The young girl found the bread wrapped in a paper on the woodpile, and gave it to her mother, believing that the new tenant had forgotten his lunch.

Seeks St. Paul Chief's Removal.

St. Paul.—The removal of Chief of Police Flannagan of St. Paul and several detectives, alleged to have beaten H. C. Guilford, editor of the Twin City Reporter, is contained in resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens in the old capitol. Chief Flanagan is now the subject of an investigation by the police commission. About 400 people attended the meeting. Guilford and several others, including Father James Donohue, spoke.

Man Falls Five Stories.

Wabasha. — The lifeless body of John E. Young, head miller of the big Joe flouring mill of this city, was discovered on the cement pavement in front of the mill. An open window on the fifth floor told the story, but just how he came to be hurled to his death will probably never be known. He was subject to asthma and the conjecture is that he ran to the window for fresh air and lost his balance. His skull was crushed, both legs and one arm broken, and his body mangled.

TOWN WILL HIRE AN EXPERT

Morris to Try Novel Scheme of Government—Election Will be Held Soon.

Morris.—After the first of January, Morris is going to be "run," or managed, by a town expert, by a man whose specialty is town management, who has been trained by education and experience for just such work.

This is to follow as the result of a change in the plan of government adopted at a recent election. Morris is going under a commission form of government, in other words.

The commission is to consist of three men, one of whom will have the title of mayor. These three men will be responsible for the government of the city.

But the real control of the city, the executive management will be in the hands of a trained expert. This man is not necessarily to be a resident of the city. He may come from anywhere in this or another county. The only requirement to be made of him is that he shall know his business, and know how to put his knowledge into successful practice. It is in this that Morris is making a wide departure from commission forms in other cities.

While the mayor will appoint the chief of police, the latter will have to look to the expert for guidance when he is dealing with matters which give him doubt.

The schools, however, do not come under the supervision of the commission. They will be managed as before by a separate board.

The commission, under the new plan, will be elected on the traditional election day in November. While under the new charter there may be any number of tickets in the field, a certain percentage of the voters being the only requirement for nominating a ticket, this fall there is only one ticket up.

The ticket consists of E. J. Jones, for mayor, and J. R. Krueger and N. Vinge for commissioners.

MANKATO SEEKS UNION DEPOT

Mankato.—Officials of the four railroads entering Mankato were guests of the Commercial club at luncheon last week. The afternoon was devoted to a conference between three committees of the club and the city council and a few leading shippers and the officials, in regard to remodeling the railroad yards in such manner that switching over Main street will be done away with, and the passenger stations will be located east of the railway tracks.

It is the desire of the city that a union station be built, or, if this cannot be done, that the joint Omaha and North-Western station be located in a more accesible place. The proposed improvement would involve the expenditure of a large sum, and some concessions by the city and the railroads to each other.

Council Considers Union Station.

Minneapolis.—The erection of a new union passenger station in Minneapolis by the city, all railroads entering the city being required to use it, is contemplated in a resolution offered in the city council by Alderman Karl De Laittre, president of that body. The resolution provides that the council proceed under a law passed last spring by the state legislature, to acquire in the name of the city, by gift, condemnation or otherwise, all land necessary or convenient, and erect and maintain a union passenger railway station. All railways entering Minneapolis and using the station would be required to pay rental in proportion to accommodations, sufficient to yield 6 per cent on the cost of the property and 2 per cent for a sinking fund.

Carlton County Raising Potatoes.

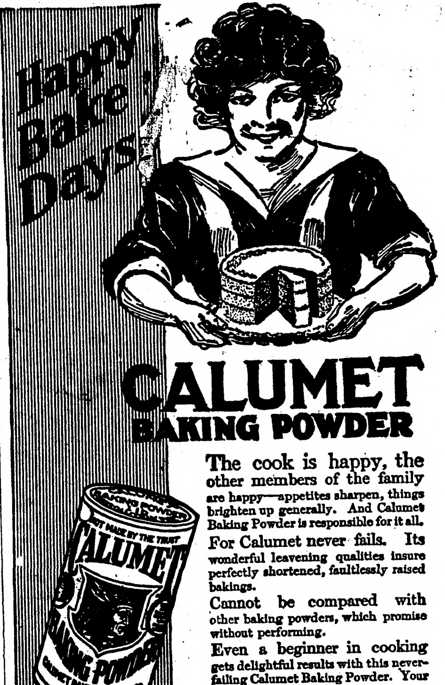
Cloquet.—Four or five yars ago not enough potatoes were raised around Cloquet to supply the camps of the lumber companies. Two years ago was the first time enough was raised to warrant potato buyers. So far this fall twenty carloads have been shipped to the twin cities and as many more will be sent out in the next four weeks, to say nothing of the farmers who are shipping independently. Potatoes are also being shipped from Carlton, Moose Lake, Mahtowa, Barnum, Wrenshall and Atkinson in Carlton county.

$50,000 Fire in St. Paul.

St. Paul.—The St. Paul's downtown business district was menaced by a fire just before noon Monday in the store of the T. C. Borg Furniture company at Sixth and Minnesota streets. The blaze started from crossed electric wires in the elevator shaft. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

Jurors Summoned By Mail.

Faribault.—The sheriff of Rice county has for the first time summoned the grand and petit jurors for the district by registered mail. This was done under the new law. The cost was only $5.64, where it would have been from $30 to $40 in the old way. The notices have a return card attached which the person summoned must fill out and return by mail within three days. All but one of the men notified have returned the cards; the one who failed to do so is away.



CALUMET BAKING POWDER

The cook is happy, the other members of the family are happy—appetites sharpen, things brighten up generally. And Calumet Baking Powder is responsible for it all.

For Calumet never fails. Its wonderful leavening qualities insure perfectly shortened, faultlessly raised bakings.

Cannot be compared with other baking powders, which promise without performing.

Even a beginner in cooking gets delightful results with this never-failing Calumet Baking Powder. Your grocer knows. Ask him.

RECEIVED HIGHEST AWARDS
World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago, Ill.
Paris Exposition, France, March, 1912.

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives best results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

Shipping Fever

Influenza, pink eye, epizootic, distemper, and all nose and throat diseases cured, and all others, no matter how "exposed," kept from having any of these diseases with SPOHN'S LIQUID DISTEMPER CURE. Three to six doses often cure a case. One 50-cent bottle guaranteed to do so. Best thing for brood mares. Acts on the blood. 50c and $1 a bottle. $5 and $11 dozen bottles. Druggists and harness shops. Distributors—ALL WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS.

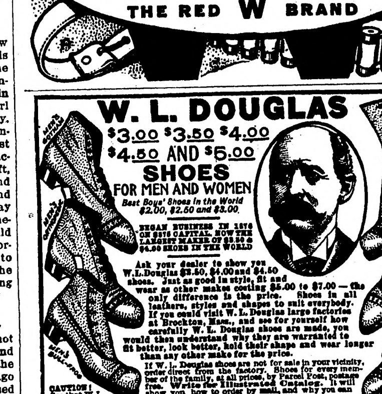
SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists and Bacteriologists, Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

WINCHESTER

"REPEATER" Smokeless Powder Shells

These shells cost a little more than black powder loads, but for bird shooting they are worth many times the difference, as there is no smoke to hinder the second barrel. They are by far the best low priced smokeless load on the market. When you buy, insist upon having them.

THE RED W BRAND



W. L. DOUGLAS

$3.00 $3.50 $4.00 $4.50 AND $5.00 SHOES FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Best Boys' Shoes in the World $2.00, $2.50 and $3.00.

BEGAN BUSINESS IN 1876 ON $375 CAPITAL. NOW THE LARGEST MAKER OF $3.50 & $4.00 SHOES IN THE WORLD

Ask your dealer to show you W. L. Douglas $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 shoes. Just as good in style, fit and wear as other makes costing $5.00 to $7.00 — the only difference is the price. Shoes in all leathers, styles and shapes to suit everybody. If you could visit W. L. Douglas large factories at Brockton, Mass., and see for yourself how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would then understand why they are warranted to fit better, look better, hold their shape and wear longer than any other make for the price.

If W. L. Douglas shoes are not for sale in your vicinity, order direct from the factory. Shoes for every member of the family, at all prices, by Parcel Post, postage free. Write for Illustrated Catalog. It will show you how to order by mail, and why you can save money on your footwear. W. L. Douglas, 201 Spark Street, Brockton, Mass.

CAUTION! See that W. L. Douglas name is stamped on the bottom.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE

Would Jar Him, Too.

"Do you think that the new motor delivery business will ever displace the postman?" asked the conversational young man, when crossing the street, of his companion.

"Certain to if it hits him."

No Small Attentions Now.

"Marriage seems to have made a different man of Tom."

"His wife says it has made an indifferent man of him."

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

THOMPSON'S EYE WATER Quickly relieves weak, inflamed eyes. Sold everywhere 25c. Booklet free. JOHN L. THOMPSON SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 44–1913.

25 CTS. PISO'S REMEDY 25 CTS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

CANADA'S OFFERING TO THE SETTLER

THE AMERICAN RUSH TO WESTERN CANADA IS INCREASING

Free Homesteads

In the new Districts of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta there are thousands of Free Homesteads left, which to the man making entry in 3 years time will be worth from $20 to $25 per acre. These lands are well adapted to grain growing and cattle raising.

EXCELLENT RAILWAY FACILITIES

In many cases the railways in Canada have been built in advance of settlement, and in a short time there will not be a settler who need be more than ten or twelve miles from a line of railway. Railway Rates are regulated by Government Commission.

Social Conditions

The American Settler is at home in Western Canada. He is not a stranger in a strange land, having nearly a million of his people already settled there. If you desire to know why the condition of the Canadian Settler is so prosperous write and send for literature, rates, etc., apply to or address Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada.

W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

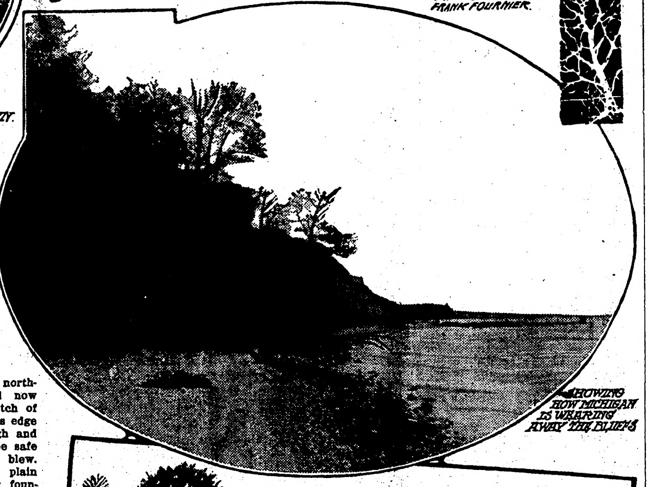
LOST TOWN OF ST. JOHN, ILL.

By EDWARD B. CLARK

© BY WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

PHOTOS BY FRANK FOURNIER

LAST REMINDERS OF SITE OF LOST TOWN.



SHOWING HOW MICHIGAN IS WEARING AWAY THE BLUFFS

WHERE WAVES WASH SITE OF ST. JOHN, ILL.

BLUFFS NEAR SITE OF LOST TOWN

BELOW the bluffs which skirt the shore of Fort Sheridan military reservation the waves of Lake Michigan wash over the site of a lost town. When the winds of a few more storms shall have blown to the beach two apple trees which have but a frail footing at the embankment's edge the last reminders of a once thriving and populous place will have been swept away.

Almost seventy years ago the hamlet of St. John was founded by a man named Hetlinger and a few of his followers. The site chosen was a commanding one on the bluff overlooking the lake and one-half mile east of the point where the northwestern depot at the Village of Highwood now stands. The great clay bank with the stretch of sand beach which shelves away to the water's edge at its foot looks as if it were strong enough and far enough removed from the breakers to be safe against the angriest northeaster that ever blew. The men who built their houses upon the plain surmounting the embankment thought their foundations were as sure as though founded on the traditional rock. They did take the precaution, however, to limit their building operations on the east by a line drawn fifty yards from the edge of the bluff. That line has long since been buried in the sand under the waves, and with it are the houses and the shops of the early settlers.

In the year 1845 the Village of St. John was the rival of Waukegan, which was then called Little Fort. Both were prosperous and both were growing. Highwood tradition hath it that people passing through the two places from Chicago declared that St. John showed the ear marks of success and that it was destined to be a big city. Other people beside the Chicagoans thought so, too, and they flocked to the place and built substantial houses and shops. The two apple trees which alone remain of all that pertained to the Village of St. John grew in the yard of Sebastian Richards, whose house was farther removed from the lake than any other in the village. The apple trees were back of the residence. Not long ago the foundation of bricks, which was all that was left of Richard's dwelling, slid down the bluff into the lake during the height of a winter storm. The roots of one of the apple trees are even now extending into the air through the side of the embankment. One good strong push would send it hurtling to the beach 100 feet below.

Among the names of the builders of St. John in addition to those of Hettinger and Sebastian Richards, the only ones that the oldest Highwood inhabitants can remember, are Frank Mitch, Peter Baker and George Shepard. Mitch was a shoemaker and it is said that he is still following the trade in a town in the far north. As far as is known he is the only survivor of the men who founded the Village of St. John. In the year 1847 there were several stores, a blacksmith shop, a tavern and a postoffice in the Village of St. John, which then held a population of about 200 people. In that day there was a stage coach line between Chicago and Milwaukee. The tavern at St. John was a relay station for the stage. Henry Mowers, who remembers the village in its latter days, says that the tavern was noted for its table, and its liquor, and that people frequently took the stage journey from Chicago for the sole purpose of getting a good dinner and a good glass.

It was a man who intended becoming a resident of St. John that afterward founded the Village of Half Day. He had looked over the lakeside village, and then had declared that he would establish one that would last longer and had more people in it. The automobilists who every Sunday pass through Half Day on their runs to Waukegan and return may look on the half-dozen houses there assembled, and know that the man who turned his back on St. John has kept his word.

When the Chicago and Milwaukee railroad was built the surveyed line ran one-half mile west of the Village of St. John. An adequate idea of the importance of a place of which now barely a vestige remains may be had when it is known that the railroad authorities built a spur line running to the south edge of the town. Some of the practical residents of the place had discovered that an excellent quality of brick could be made from the clay which was found in a pit a short distance south of the blacksmith shop. As a matter of fact, the presence of this brickyard was one of the chief reasons that the branch line of the railroad was built. When Uncle Sam accepted from the Commercial Club of Chicago the land to the north of the city as a military reservation the soldiers drew hundreds of cartloads of both good brick and broken brick from the site of the old brickyard and used the material for temporary road-making and for the filling in of swamp spots. The forethought of the St. John people in leaving behind them specimens of their handiwork saved the United States government a great many dollars.

It is possible to trace today with no difficulty at all the embankment upon which the branch line of the railroad ran to the brickyard and to the now lost Village of St. John. In size and outline it looks like a military redoubt, and it would perfectly answer the purpose of one. The embankment was leveled at its western end when stores were erected in the Village of Highwood. It starts now from a point almost directly back of the little Methodist church, and runs eastward, broken only by roads which have been dug through it.

It was less than ten years after the founding of St. John that the people awakened to a possible danger to their homes by the encroachment of the waves of the lake. It is true that they saw year by year that the face of the bluff was being gradually worn away, but the erosion was so slow that they gave little heed. One night in the winter of 1852 a storm whipped up out of the northeast. It was forty-eight hours before it had fully spent its force. Before its assaults, the bluff gave way, tons upon tons of the hard clay breaking off in great pieces and falling to the beach. When the wind ceased blowing the barn of the dwelling nearest to the lake stood at the edge of the embankment. The villagers started to move the structure inland, but another storm, coming up suddenly, forced them to stop the work, and before it could be resumed the barn, in the shape of disjointed joists and broken planks, was being tossed about by the waves.

It was about this time that the people of St. John received a visitor who was much more unwelcome than the storm. This visitor was a lawyer armed with a lot of formidable-looking papers. He went to the tavern and asked that the elders of the village be sent for. They came. The lawyer told them that their title to the land which they occupied was extremely faulty and that they must either pay again for the ground on which their homes stood, or get out. The villagers made up their minds to fight the matter out, but preliminary court proceedings showed them that the lawyer had fully as good a case as he claimed. They became disheartened, and when another terrific storm arose, and the blacksmith's shop and George Shepard's house went into the lake they lost all courage. They told the lawyer that the lake seemed to have a better claim to the land than either they or he had, and that it apparently was bent on enforcing title rights. One by one the people of St. John moved away, leaving their dwelling and stores to the will of the wind and waves. Settlements sprang up to the south and the west of the deserted village, and the people, during the height of winter storms, used to go to a place near the bluff and watch for some deserted dwelling standing perilously near the edge of the embankment to fall with one final crash onto the water-swept sand below.

Henry Mowers, an old time hunter was a veteran of the residents near the site of the lost village. Not long after the disappearance in the lake of the last building of the Village of St. John, Mowers took a spade and walked up the lake shore until he came to the point where a large part of the site of St. John had disappeared beneath the waves. Mowers' trip was taken up at sunrise, a time when he was not likely to be interrupted in his work. He began a series of mysterious diggings just at the base of the mud cliff. He worked for two hours and then quit. He returned to his task every morning for a week, making several new excavations a foot or two in depth each time. One morning the spade struck something hard, and in a minute Mowers had unearthed an ingot of pure copper weighing eighteen pounds. This was worth having, but it was not what Mowers was after. He kept on digging for a month, and at the end of that time had secured gold and silver French and Spanish pieces in value to the amount of $24. In addition he found some United States copper cents and half-cents of an early date and one bronze Roman coin of the period of Nero.

Mowers kept at his work for weeks, but after unearthing the Roman piece he found nothing for a long time. He was about to giveup the work for good. He shouldered his spade and started homeward. On the sand, glistening in the sun at the water's edge, just as he turned to go for supposedly the last time, he found two United States silver dollars minted on one side only. Here was a puzzle which even his shrewdness could not solve. The coins were silver and of full weight, and in that day silver was of sufficient intrinsic value to make it useless for anyone to make counterfeits out of the pure metal. Mowers searched for another week, but found no more coins. He then showed the result of his labor to neighbors and to some people in the city of Chicago. He said nothing about where he had discovered the treasure. Shortly afterward, however, a man offered him $100 for the secret, and though Mowers told him that the place was probably worked out the man offered the money, said he would take the chance, and the offer was accepted. The purchaser never found anything and gave up the labor in disgust.

It was not long before the story of the place where the coins had been picked up became generally known and the people flocked to the bluff and to the beach marking the site of the lost town. They dug, searched and prospected with all the ardor of Klondikers, but the sole result was a gold piece of the value of $2.50, which a boy picked up from the wake of a retreating wave. The collection of coin which Henry Mowers found is now in the possession of a man who once ran a Chicago dime museum. No one has ever been able to account for the presence of the money in the place. The theory that it was left behind by a departing resident of St. John is said to be hardly tenable, because the people of that place were not rich enough to make them careless of valuables.

There is one metal which the prospector may find in abundance if he will go to St. John before the two old apple trees tumble down the bluff. The trunks and branches of both of them are full of lead. The trees stood just at the end of the old Sixth infantry rifle butt. For three years before the building of the present post the troops that first came to Fort Sheridan pumped lead at target practice into the butt and incidentally into the apple trees at the side. Despite the attacks of the weather and this leaden onslaught the two trees bore a burden of fruit for years as sound and as sweet as that which bent their branches at the time when the town of St. John was something more substantial than a memory.

INTELLIGENT DOG.

"My wife must be doing the cooking today."

"Why?"

"On those days my dog always comes to the office. All right, Towser, you can go to lunch with me."

A PARADOX.

"There is one thing queer about an accusing charge."

"What is that?"

"A man refuses to countenance it when he faces it"

HINTS AND FACTS OF HORSES AND MULES

Home From the Fields.

(By J. M. BELL.)

The very high price of both hay and grain is forcing farmers to sell all surplus stock. Some prices can be picked up by farmers who are supplied with feed.

Some buyers want the advice of a veterinary before they purchase, if so, then by all means pick your man.

When a horse or mule has done his steady work in a city for 20 years, is sour stiff and generally incapacitated, he is a poor investment for anyone most certainly the farmer who is looking for a bargain.

Some men wash their teams all over, each evening when work is done, (during the summer season), a good plan as it removes sweat most effectually.

Cribbing is a bad habit at the best, the only way to stop it is to use a tight strap around the cribber's neck. The writer has cured several of these unsatisfactory animals.

Interfering behind is a bad habit in a horse, as a remedy use only one or two nails on inside of shoe and curve shoe properly inside.

A balky horse had best be gotten rid of as a balky horse. Let the other fellow cure him.

Shying can sometimes be cured by letting the horse pass slowly by the terrifying object. Severe punishment rarely makes a cure.

Musty hay carries many ills.

Keep a good-sized lump of rock salt in each horse trough.

Save money by having the old horses' teeth flattened so they can grind their feed.

Water for the horses should be fresh from the pump during the winter months—no ice water.

Work or exercise the stallion daily, and your next season's colt crop will be much more satisfactory.

No horse is well broken until he has no fear whatever of the automobile.

Try to turn your horse's back to the wind and blanket him when tying him up, as the wind blowing against his breast is apt to lay the foundation of rheumatism, stiffness and similar ailments.

If the brood mares are not worked reguarly, see that they get out in the open air and sunlight and move around.

Often we do not appreciate the virtues of the modest, unassuming mule. He costs no more than a horse colt to foal and raise and is less trouble and expense to put in the harness. He is not as susceptible to disease as the horse, and he is not so easily made stiff or lame. He requires less feed than a horse of the same size, yet will do as much or more work with less fatigue. He will do you 20 years' faithful service.

See that the animals are comfortable and that they have at all times plenty of water.

This may be the threshold of the horseless age, but just try to buy a pair of good horses and you will find out that the horse is still in good demand.

The best sale you can possibly make of your farm crops is to sell them to your stock in the way of food. And then, too, the fertility of the soil is kept where it will bring the biggest returns.

With the increased prices of horses, more attention is being paid to the care of the feet.

Most of the trouble with horses' feet is caused by improper shoeing.

"Breaking a horse" is a harsh expression. Nowadays the farmer "gentles" the colt without ruining its disposition.

LIME IMPROVES SOIL CONDITIONS

On Some Land It Is Necessary as Actual Plant Food for Alfalfa and Clover.

(By R. G. WEATHERSTONE.)

When we apply lime to our soil we look to its effect upon the soil rather than to its direct influence upon the plants. While many farms contain sufficient deposits of lime, it is also true that many soils are deficient in this element.

Lime has various functions. It corrects soil acidity; thus stimulating the action of the bacteria that assist in making plant food available and gather nitrogen from the atmosphere. It changes dormant plant food into active plant food, by carbonating the soil water and makes it a more powerful solvent.

It improves the physical condition of the soil by making a heavy soil more friable and a loose soil more compact. On some soils it is needed as an actual plant food, for such crops as alfalfa and clover.

There are various kinds of lime used for agricultural purposes and each kind has certain advantages but my experience has led me to believe that it is much safer to use the carbonate, or ground limestone, because it does not have a tendency to destroy the humus in the soil, especially if large quantities are used at one time.

On heavy soils that are inclined to be wet the caustic lime will have more beneficial effects and liberate more plant food. Such land requires a more powerful agent to tear apart and decompose the soil particles and improve its physical conditions. For sweetening the soil the carbonate, or ground limestone, is equally valuable.

Lime should be applied early in the spring, when it has not been applied the previous fall, and should be applied a number of days before fertilizer and be thoroughly incorporated with the soil.

If fertilizer containing nitrogen is applied where it will come in contact with the caustic lime there will be a waste of ammonia and a consequent loss of fertility.

The great question is how much shall we use. I believe that one ton of caustic lime is an adequate amount to supply at one time. If the ground limestone is applied, we may safely double the amount. A moderate application every four or six years is more desirable than a heavier application less frequently.

PROPER CARE OF SWEET POTATOES

Unlike Other Vegetables, Tubers Should Be Stored in a Warm and Dry Place.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

Sweet potatoes need to be handled carefully if they are to be kept through the winter and unlike most other vegtables, sweet potatoes should be kept in a warm, dry place.

In the first place sweet potatoes must be dug at the right time. They should be dug before the hard frosts have killed the tops, for this injures the quality of the tubers somewhat.

After digging, the potatoes must be handled as carefully as though they were eggs. Irish potatoes can be shoveled around rather carelessly, and often a bruise in one of the potatoes, or even a decayed spot, will not affect the other part which is left in sound condition.

But not so with the sweet potato, for a bruise at one end will affect the quality of the sound part at the other end and will render it unfit for use. This fact is not generally understood by many growers who handle sweet potatoes as carelessly as they do Irish potatoes.

This fact is responsible for many of the potatoes of poor quality which are served during the winter.

After being handled, the sweet potatoes should be stored in a warm, dry place. A temperature of 60 to 70 degrees is about right for the proper keeping of sweet potatoes.

Some persons have stored them in the sand, or dust from the country road, to help preserve an even temperature.

If the potatoes are stored in sand or dust, care must be taken that the sand is perfectly dry.

Handled carefully, sweet potatoes can be kept for some months and will be found of good quality late in the winter.

The Poultry Mite.

The red mite works at night; it crawls forth from its hiding place and attacks the fowls while they are at roost. Hundreds of these may prey upon a single hen, fill themselves with blood, and then crawl back to their hiding-places contented until the next night. During the day these parasites lie dormant in the cracks and crevices about the henhouse, hence they are not so easily detected by the novice

---

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

How the Kaiser Went to Paris

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

CHOSEN for his position, his taciturnity and his discretion, Lord Claude occupied the post of secretary to what might fairly be called the most exalted club in Europe. A young man, barely turned thirty, after a brilliant career at Oxford, he had declined the honors that might legitimately have been his, and had chosen instead to wander from court to court among the highways of Europe. Wherever he went he made friends. He was one of those silent Treshams who have played and still play so large a part behind the noisy politicians in whose control the destinies of Europe are supposed to lie. At present, however, he was engaged in a wider sphere of operations than the field of English politics allowed. He was secretary to what was nicknamed among its exalted members the "Black Cabinet"—more familiarly, the "Blacks."

Rumor ascribed to the aged emperor of Austria, Franz Joseph, the formulation of this unique conception of a club of reigning monarchs. Certainly the proposition, whoever had propounded it, was taken up with alacrity. In these days of democracy kings must preserve the dignities of their order, even if it necessitates the formation of a royal trades union. What more fitting, then, than that the club should be inaugurated in Paris, where kings and emperors love to spend their holidays, far from the cares of state and pomp of power?

Most of the ruling sovereigns, and not a few prospective or deposed ones, were members of the club, but not all were of the first order. The "Blacks," in fact, comprised a limited number of the graver rulers, who were pledged to diverse things, but mainly to stand by one another and discountenance the spread of republican doctrines, to preserve the peace of Europe, and to act together in case that peace were menaced by the ambitions of the smaller, restless kings. The club was, theoretically, always in session, though it had no fixed meeting place. Lord Claude Tresham was traveling secretary, and carried the minutes of the meetings under his hat. The leaders of the "Blacks" were: Franz Joseph of Austria, Gustav of Sweden, George of England, Victor of Italy, George of Greece, Charles of Roumania and Haakon of Norway. "Outside" members, who were looked on with a certain suspicion, on account of their spirit of adventure and recklessness, though they were nominally of the club, were the czar, the kaiser and Ferdinand of Bulgaria.

Given the black, the red must be created if it does not exist. The "Reds" were not members, but it was understood that they, too, were pledged to support each other in their various schemes. They comprised Alfonso of Spain, ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Peter of Servia, Nicholas of Montenegro and a number of leading statesmen, pledged in the main to overthrow democracy and the constitutional monarchies and to revive the spirit of absolutism in Europe. But for their support of Polish ambitions they might have numbered the wavering Czar Nicholas among their members. They were represented in western Europe by Jean Rosny of Paris, and it was to him that Paul Lane, American millionaire and would-be adventurer of fortune, made his reports.

The successful issue of his Moroccan mission had given Paul the hope that admission to the secret councils of the "Reds" might be his, that the mysterious woman whose urging had induced him to devote himself and his fortunes to the League of Lost Causes would again be seen by him, would reveal her identity and let him plead his love. That she was in high rank among the ancient families of Europe he was aware, that she scorned him as a mere moneyed American he suspected. But the memory of her burned in his heart like an inextinguishable fire, and the impossibility of even gaining audience with her embittered him. In his despondency he broached the subject to Jean Rosny anew.

The latter looked at him quizzically.

"Paul, you are impatient," he said. "Tell me one thing; did you ally yourself with us in the hope of gaining your lady's affections, or out of sympathy with our cause?"

"It was because I believed in the cause," said Paul somberly. "But," he added naively, "undoubtedly it was the charming personality of Mademoiselle—"

"Yes, of Mademoiselle," answered Rosny dryly.

"Let us call her that, then," Paul Lane responded. "It was that which had a leading influence upon my decision. Rosny, my money is indispensable to the league. You have admitted as much to me. Then why—"

"Why should you be debarred from meeting Mademoiselle again? Why, is it not enough, Paul, to know that she watches you, that she approves of your work, to feel that some day you shall assuredly meet her again? My dear Paul, trust yourself to us, with the knowledge that by each success you hasten the day when all that you desire will be revealed to you, and when you will be admitted into the inner circles of the league. Now listen well, my friend. We have need of you again."

And he unrolled the plan which brought about this situation: that, while Lord Tresham gave to Monsieur Gabriel, the restaurant keeper, his last instructions as to the menu for a certain banquet, Paul, in the guise of a waiter, stood patiently by, napkin in hand, and a very clean white tie reposing on an immaculate, stiff shirt front.

There were six places at the table and five men, four of them kings, waited gravely for the last to arrive. They had shaken off the gayety that is so contagious in Paris, for the occasion was a momentous one. If he should not arrive!

"I know he will not come," said the Greek sovereign, playing with his bread. "He could not hope to escape recognition with those confounded Yankee journalists tagging him everywhere that he goes."

"I think he will come," said Haakon. "Did you ever know him to refuse an opportunity for such an adventure?"

"Yes, he'll come," answered Lord Claude. "Unfortunately—because—"

The door opened and Monsieur Gabriel bowed to the floor like a fat angel of the Annunciation. And close behind him strode a tall, kingly figure, clad in a voluminous robe, which he threw into Monsieur Gabriel's arms, disclosing the personality of the kaiser himself.

His four brother sovereigns rose simultaneously and embraced him.

They joked and chaffed with one another throughout the meal, the kaiser's presence lending an atmosphere of supreme good-fellowship to the proceedings. Lord Claude, impassive and inscrutable as he was, unbent at the kaiser's charming raillery. The meal was nearly ended before Haakon remembered something.

"By the way, Tresham," he said, "why did you remark that his majesty would come 'unfortunately?' That was the very word, I believe. Come, speak up and tell us."

"That," answered Tresham, "will form part of the subsequent proceedings of the club. The meeting," he added, looking at his watch, "will not begin till nine. It is now twenty minutes short of the hour."

The cloth was removed, walnuts were placed beside the port, in accordance with Monsieur Gabriel's immemorial custom, and the guests relaxed themselves in their chairs. The clock struck nine. Monsieur Gabriel, bowing low, dismissed himself to a chorus of compliments.

"Go now, mademoiselles," he said to the pretty waitresses. "Go, monsieur," he added to Paul. The latter moved with the girls toward the exit behind the curtain. His mission was in the making—ten minutes more and—

Then Lord Claude Tresham stood up in his chair.

"One moment, please," he said. "Monsieur Gabriel, where did you get these ladies?"

"These ladies, monsieur, as you are pleased to call them, are experienced waitresses and highly recommended," answered the proprietor, smiling. "Mademoiselle Armine, here, served with the family of the Duc de Berry for three years. Mademoiselle Nannette grew up, as I may say, with the family of the Duc de Nemours. Her references are irreproachable."

"Enough," said Tresham. "You and Mademoiselle Armine may retire through the door. Mademoiselle Nannette remains; she wishes to speak with us."

"Gentlemen," he said, "you have wished to know why I referred to the visit of his majesty, the German emperor, as 'unfortunate.' We need have no secrets here. Our cards are all on the table. Your majesties, permit me to present Miss Nancy Shand."

The rulers inclined their heads gravely. "A friend of yours, Lord Tresham?" inclined the Greek sovereign blandly.

"No," answered Lord Claude curtly. "One of your confounded Yankee journalists, and the cleverest in Europe at the present day."

"The devil!" shouted the Greek king, springing up in his chair and then collapsing with an apologetic air. "Well, the fat's in the fire now," he muttered.

"Miss Shand," said Lord Tresham, addressing the very composed young lady, "you are here tonight because, by a stroke of good fortune, you have learned of the existence and meeting of our club.

"You are well aware of what I discovered an hour before the dinner, that a conspiracy has been formed against his majesty, the kaiser, in the interests of two gentlemen—his majesty, King Peter of Servia and his highness, Prince Nicholas of Montenegro. Am I correct?"

"I am not at liberty to give out advance information," Miss Nancy answered.

"But since you know more than I, Miss Shand—or else you would not have been here—I will be frank with you. King Peter and Prince Nicholas have resolved to make a sudden attack on Turkey—pray, sir, be seated and have patience for a moment. They learned that his majesty, the German emperor, intended to visit France. They planned to detain him here for four and twenty hours, confident that, in his absence, none would have courage enough to veto their intentions. And, once the war had begun, all Europe would be aflame, and they would pull some fine plums out of the pudding."

Suddenly the door was burst open and Monsieur Gabriel appeared on the threshold, livid with fear. "Gentlemen, your majesties—" he stammered; and then Lord Claude took in the situation. He ran toward the door, followed by the rest. They were too late. Advancing toward them came a file of six infantrymen, headed by a young lieutenant, who stopped six paces distant and motioned them back.

"Gentlemen," he said, "you are under arrest on the charge of conspiring against the French republic. You must come with me at once. Shall I read the warrant?"

The sovereigns looked at one another aghast. Arrest in Paris was no joke, even though the charges must fall and their release be effected immediately after they had reached the station house and held a confidential discussion with the sergeant in charge. But the kaiser—the kaiser, arrested in Paris!

But the monarchs' dismay was fully equaled by that of Paul, who, still attired in waiter's garb, lingered by the curtain. So far he had fulfilled his instructions admirably. It was necessary, as Lord Tresham had said, that the kaiser should be detained in France, while Peter and Nicholas of Montenegro carried out their schemes of aggrandizement.

Paul sized up the situation before Tresham could put his wits together. The kings still clustered at the entrance to the dining-room; the officer was still fumbling with his papers. He sprang from behind the curtain and seized the kaiser by the arm, dashed back with him into the dining-room and ran to a sliding panel behind the big fireplace, a remnant of the stirring days of the thirties, when the last Bourbon reigned on his uneasy throne and conspiracy was rife in Paris. He pushed it back, disclosing a narrow flight of stairs. At the head he hesitated. The woman journalist, who, all unsuspected by him, had also been present at the banquet!—if she escaped she would reveal the story as Lord Tresham had told it to her, and his efforts would be useless. He must make her a captive as well as his majesty. And as he turned he uttered an exclamation of surprise, for there stood she beside them, her eyes alight with eagerness, and the great "story" of the year half written in her brain. Miss Nancy Shand was always on the spot when news was in the making.

Motioning to both to precede him, Paul pulled back the sliding panel into position just as the lieutenant, becoming aware of the flight of some members of the party, dashed into the dining-room—to see only the furniture and the walls.

Black darkness confronted them, but Paul had learned the way before that night. He urged his charges down the narrow stairs until they found themselves, at a turn of the path, in a large, dimly-lit chamber of stone, with a stone door. Round this apartment were ranged enormous tuns, in which Monsieur Gabriel stored his choice Burgundy from the Midi. Paul closed the door behind him—it had no key. Then he turned on his guests.

"You majesty," he said, "I owe you a thousand apologies. But I can save you. There is only one way out of your dilemma, and not a dignified one. Still—"

He walked toward the nearest wine tun and turned the spigot, and a rich crimson flood began to stain the stone of the floor. The next was empty, and the next also. Drawing himself backward, he shot his fist with all his might. The blow shattered the head of the tun into two pieces. Another blow did likewise to the second tun. Paul Lane removed the heads and returned, rubbing his injured knuckles.

"Sir," he said, "there is but one thing to be done. You must conceal yourself awhile from your enemies."

"But the police!" the kaiser shouted. "The soldiers! Can such an outrage be perpetrated in the heart of Paris?"

"No, sir," said Paul. "It would mean only a temporary detention. But every hour's delay is likely to be fatal to your aims. Besides, there are journalists attached to all police stations."

And Miss Shand smiled.

"If I were armed—" the kaiser shouted.

"Your majesty, time is very precious," said Paul, and led the kaiser toward the tun. "If you will deign to place your royal foot in my hand," he said. And a moment later the kaiser had crawled inside. "Place your lips against the bunghole, to get the air," said Paul, and fitted on the head. Fixed as it was, it could be dislodged only from the outside. He turned to the American girl. "Now, Miss Nancy," he said.

This was a proposition entirely new.

"You want me—me—to go inside that tun!" exclaimed Miss Shand indignantly.

Paul nodded and approached her.

"I won't!" Miss Nancy cried, stamping her foot indignantly. "How dare you!—Oh! Monster!"

Paul calmly seized her round the waist and drew her toward the tun. She screamed. Overhead the trampling of feet was heard, voices came faintly to their ears. Then Paul Lane quietly deposited Miss Shand inside the vacant tun adjoining royal Germany.

He placed his lips to the bunghole.

"I shall have to cork you up, madam," he said, "since you persist in screaming. But don't be alarmed. In five minutes you shall be free to breathe through the bung-hole once more."

He placed the cork in place as the soldiers ran down the stairs and came bursting into the room.

"Here's one of them," shouted the officer in charge. "Where are the rest of you? Why—it's the waiter!"

Indeed Paul Lane looked the character to perfection at that moment as he flung himself at the officer's feet.

"Spare me—spare my life!" he pleaded.

"To the devil with your miserable life! Where is Bulgini, the leader of the dynamiters?" cried the officer.

"I do not know, monsieur," Paul whined. "They threatened me and I ran away through the secret panel. Ah, he was terrible, that brigand Bulgini; his very mustaches seemed to bristle."

From somewhere, very far away, the very faintest knocking came, and the faintest of cries. Paul Lane seized the lieutenant by the arm.

"They must be above, in the flooring," he cried. "Ah, that loose plank that sqeaked. I will get them, monsieur, I will—"

"Come on, men!" shouted the officer, and darted out of the cellar and up the stairs. Paul followed leisurely.

Thus it came about that their majesties of Sweden, Norway, Greece and Roumania made their appearance in the central police station of Paris. And in a short while they were released with the most abject apologies. The secret was kept, for, by a miracle of luck, there were no reporters present.

But when the news was telegraphed in several ciphers to the capitals of Europe that same night and no word came of the kaiser, it is reported that Bethmann-Hollweg tore his hair and drafted a dozen different letters of resignation. Meanwhile Servia and Montenegro dispatched an ultimatum to Constantinople to demand certain advantages, and there was none to rattle the war sword on behalf of Islam—for the Lord of the Sword was missing.

And here is the dilemma that confronted Paul as he strolled a free man, through the streets of Paris. He had accomplished his end; he had bottled up—literally, almost—the kaiser and that babbling reporter. If he left them to four and twenty hours war would break out and his enterprise succeed. But then—the thought came to him with hideous meaning as he approached the door of his residence—he had left the cork in the bung-hole of the barrel in which Miss Nancy lay!

He must release her. To uncork the barrel would mean that her screams would bring aid to her. He must free her—and so the kaiser, too. The fate of Europe rested with this obscure Yankee girl, buried inside a tun. It has hung on more trivial things.

It was midnight when Paul got back to Gabriel's, and the frightened proprietor stared at him as he entered, and throwing up his hands, vanished like an apoplectic angel into the recesses of his house. Paul entered the wine cellar, and, as he passed through the door, cried loudly in dismay.

There was not a tun or barrel in the place. He saw a bare cellar, with bare, whitewashed walls and the marks of muddy shoes around the entrance—no more. He ran back at full speed and hammered upon the door of Monsieur Gabriel's apartment on the first story.

"Open, open!" he shouted, "or I break it in. Open, Monsieur Gabriel! I shall not hurt you!"

At last the bolt shot back and the proprietor appeared, livid, shaking with terror. He fell on his knees. He did not recognize the waiter in this peremptory visitor.

"Ah, forgive me, forgive me," he exclaimed, almost distraught. "I knew nothing of this. Oh, monsieur—!"

He groveled upon the floor, incapable of further utterance. Paul raised him, not ungently.

"Monsieur Gabriel, where are the tuns that were in your cellar?" he asked.

"The tuns, monsieur? The tuns?" babbled the Frenchman. "Ah, yes, the tuns, of course, the tuns. Why, monsieur, this is the night which falls each quarter when the vans collect them for shipping back to the south of France. Tomorrow my new tuns arrive. They were all empty, monsieur, even the last of them, for somebody had turned the spigot and spilled the wine—"

"You ass," said Paul; "when were they collected?"

"Half an hour since, monsieur. I was distraught; I watched the men like a madman; I could say nothing. My beautiful wine, all spilled, and—"

"Where have they gone?"

"To the Southern station, monsieur. All tuns go thither, to be shipped back to the wine-growers each quarter. Doubtless all Paris is yielding up tuns this night. There is a special train, monsieur, which starts in the morning, and—"

Paul thrust Monsieur Gabriel from him and rushed out into the street. He hailed a passing fiacre and ordered the man to drive to the terminal station of the Southern railway. Arrived there, he tossed the man a louis and rushed into the freight yard. There were thousands of tuns, piled up, rolled into heaps which every now and then collapsed, like topheavy pyramids, and tumbled over other tuns, sending dozens of them skipping and rolling in every direction. And at each gate wagons and vans were discharging tuns and barrels of every sort and size. Paul stared in dismay at this fearful panorama. Among those thousands, which tun held Germany's ruler and which the woman spy? He could never find either.

He staggered like a drunken man around the yards. At the gates porters were joking and chatting with drivers as the hideous tuns were unloaded and sent crashing upon the tops of others. From their battered sides thin drops of wine stained the ground like blood. Which one? Dear God, which one?

Stay! There was a song. For had not His Majesty composed a famous song, the "Song to Aegir," which had been satirized and ridiculed and admired throughout all Germany and Europe, too?

Paul Lane began to hum that song. Presently, as he threaded his way among the maze of tuns, it occurred to him that the barrels from Gabriel's having been collected only recently, would of necessity be on the outskirts nearest the gates. This thought gave him new hope. He picked his way thither and began singing again. And at last, just as he had abandoned hope, he heard the faintest answer.

He stopped, hardly daring to hope. He sang loudly. Now he could distinguish the tun from which the voice proceeded. He listened; it was the answer. It was the "Song to Aegir," and sung under circumstances such as its royal composer had never in his wildest dreams imagined.

Paul went toward that end of the barrel where he knew the Kaiser's feet must be. He swung his arm back and his fist forward. An instant later he was helping Germany's ruler out of his hiding place.

And both gasped:

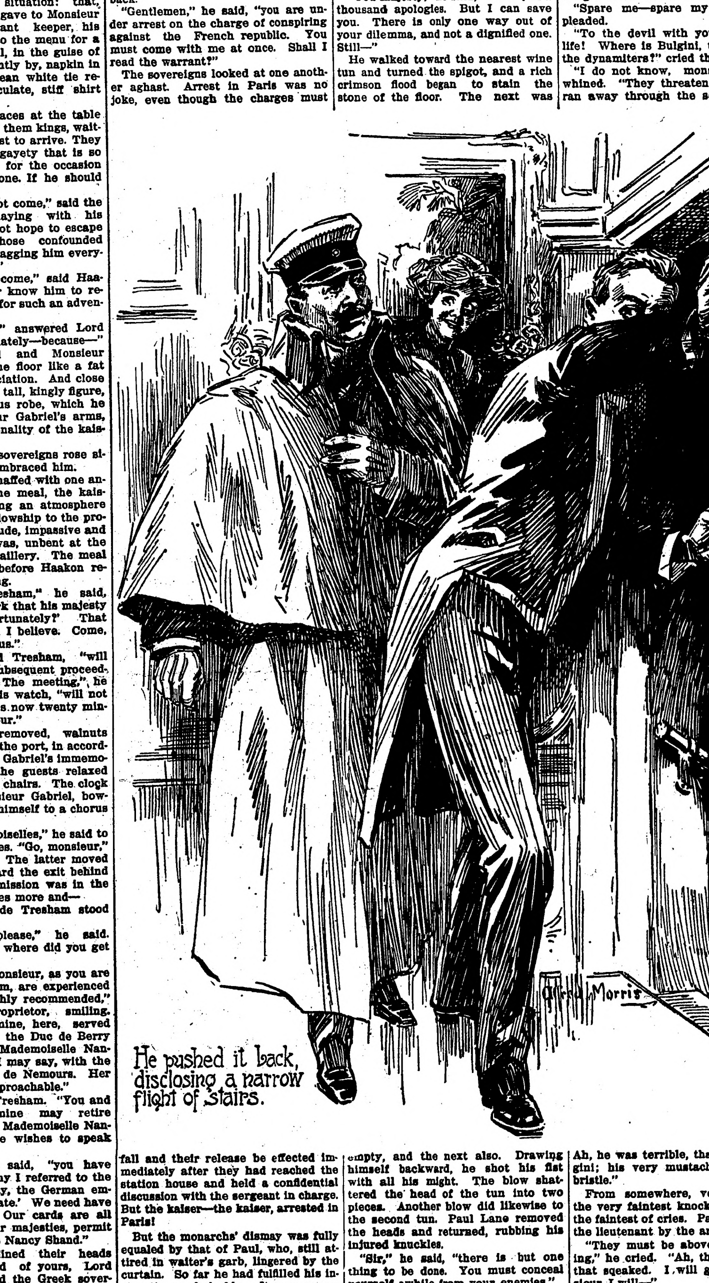
"The woman!"

The second barrel must lie near the first. Paul half lifted and tested them. Light—light—light—ha! this one must hold all that was left of her. Again he swung his fist and the barrel head burst asunder. And out of it scrambled, very flushed and indignant and hopelessly in disarray, Miss Nancy Shand.

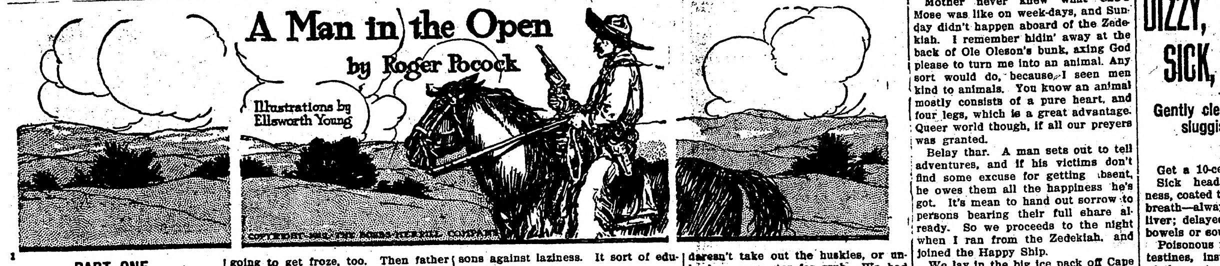
"You are alive," gasped Paul. "But how—how did you breathe? I thought I corked the bung-hole."

"Idiot!" sobbed Miss Nancy, "didn't you ever hear of a hairpin?"

That is how Germany got back her sovereign in time to stay the war. They say Prince Nicholas received his kingship in place of his princedom, for staying his hand. That is disputed, but it is certain that Paul Lane possesses the Order of the Black Eagle.



He pushed it back, disclosing a narrow flight of stairs.



A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

COPYRIGHT 1912 THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

PART ONE

CHAPTER I.

On the Labrador.

Dictated by Mr. Jesse Smith.

Don't you write anything down yet, 'cause I ain't ready.

If I wrote this yarn myself, I'd make it good and red from tip to tip, claws out, teeth bare, fur crawling with emotions. It wouldn't be dull, no, or evidence.

But then it's to please you, and that's what I'm for.

So I proceeds to stroke the fur smooth, lay the paws down soft, fold up the smile, and purr. A sort of truthfulness steals over me. Goin' to be dull, too.

No, I dunno how to begin. If this yarn was a rope, I'd coil it down before I began to pay out. You lays the end, so, and flemish down, ring by ring until the bight's coiled, smooth, ready to flake off as it runs. I delayed a lynching once to do just that, and relieve the patient's mind. It all went off so well!

When we kids were good, mother she used to own we came of pedigree stock; but when we're bad, seems we took after father. You see mother's folk was the elect, sort of born saved. They allowed there'd be room in Heaven for one hundred and forty-four thousand just persons, mostly from Nova Scotia, but when they took to sorting the neighbors, they'd get exclusive.

Anyway, mother's folk as a tribe, is millionaires in grace and pretty well fixed in Nova Scotia. Then she's found out, secretly married among the goats. Her name's scratched out of the family Bible, with a strong hint to the Lord to scratch her entry from the Book of Life. She's married a sailorman, before the mast, a Liveyere from the Labrador, a man without a dollar, suspected of being Episcopalian.

In them days the Labrador ain't laid out exactly to suit mother. She's used to luxury—coal in the lean-to, taties in the cellar, cows in the barn, barter store round the corner, mails, church, school, and a jail right handy, so she can enjoy the ungodly getting of their just deserts. But in our time the Labrador was just God's country, all rocks, ice, and sea, to put the fear into proud hearts—no need of teachers. It kills off the weaklings—no need of doctors. A school to raise men—no need of preachers. The law was "work or starve"—no place for lawyers. It's police, and court, and hangman all complete, fire and hail, snow and vapors, wind and storm fulfilling His word.

Father's home was an overturned schooner, turfed in, and he was surely proud of having a bigger place than any other Liveyere on the coast. There was the hold overhead for stowing winter fish, and room down-stairs for the family, the team of seven husky dogs, and even a cord or two of firewood. We kids used to play at Newf'nlanders up in the hold, when the winter storms were tearing the tops off the hills, and the Eskimo devil howled blue shrieks outside. The huskies makes wolf songs all about the slowness of fish, and we'd hear mother give father a piece of her mind. That's about the first I remember, but all what mother thought about poor father took years and years to say.

I used to be kind of sorry for father. You see he worked the bones through his hide, furring all winter and fishing summers, and what he earned he'd get in truck from the company. All us Liveyeres owed to the Hudson Bay, but father worked hardest and he owed most, hundreds and hundreds of skins. The company trusted him. There wasn't a man on the coast more trusted than he was, with mother to feed, and six kids, besides seven huskies, and father's aunt, Thessalonika, a widow with four children and a tumor, living down to Last Hope beyond the Rocks.

There was secrets about father, and if mother ever found out! You see, he looked like a white man, curly yaller hair same as me, and he was fearful strong. But in his inside—don't ever tell!—he was partly small boy same's me, and the other half of him—don't ever let on!—was mountaineer injun. I seen his three brothers, the finest fellers you ever—yes, Scotch half-breeds—and mother never knew.

Thar's me on father's knee, with my nose in his buckskin shirt, and even to this day the wood smoke in camp brings back the wuff, whereas summers his boots smelt fishy. What happened first or afterwards is all mixed up, but there's the smoke smell and sister Maggie lying in the bunk, all white and froze.

There's fish smell, and Polly who used to wallop me with a slipper, lying white and froze. And yet I knew she couldn't get froze in summer.

Then there's smoke smell, and big Tommy, bigger nor father, throwing up blood. I said he'd catch it from mother for messing the floor, but father just hugged me, telling me to shut up. I axed him if Tommy was going to get froze, too. Then father told me that Tommy was going away to where the milk came out of a cow. You just shove the can opener into the cow so—and the milk pours out, whole candy pails of milk. And there's vegi tables, which is green things to eat. First time you swell up and pretty nigh bust, but you soon get used to greens. Tommy is going to Civili Zation. It's months and months off, and when you get there, the people is so awful mean they'd let a stranger starve to death without so much as "Come in." The men wear pants right down to their heels, and as to the women—

Mother comes in and looks at father, so he forgets to say about the women at Civili Zation, but other times he'd tell, oh, lots of stories. He said it was worse for the likes of us than New Jerusalem.

I reckon Tommy died, and Joan, too, and mother would get gaunt and dry, rocking herself. "'The Lord gave,'" she'd say, "'and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.'"

There was only Pete and me left, and father wagging his pipe acrost the stove at mother. "They'll die, ma'am," I heard him say, and she just sniffed. "If I hadn't taken 'em out doors they'd be dead now, ma'am."

She called him an injun. She called him—I dunno what she didn't call him. I'd been asleep, and when I woke up she was cooking breakfast while she called him a lot more things she must have forgot to say. But he carried me in his arms out through the little low door, and it was stabbing cold with a blaze of northern lights.

He tucked me up warm on the komatik, he hitched up the huskies, and mushed, way up the tickle, and through the soft bush snow, and at sunup we made his winter tilt on Torngak Creek. We put in the winter there, furring, and every time he came home from the round of traps, he'd sell me all the pelts. I was surely proud when he took me hunting fur and partridges. I was with him to the fishing, in the fall we'd hunt, all winter we'd trap till it was time for the sealing, and only two or three times in a year we'd be back to mother.

Then I'd see Pete, too, who'd got pink, with a spitting cough. He wanted to play with me, but I wouldn't. I just couldn't. I hated to be anywheres near him.

"Didn't I tell yez?" father would point at Pete coughing. "Didn't I warn yez?"

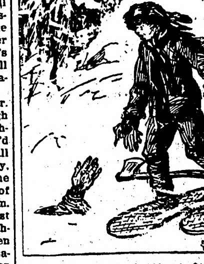
But mother set her mouth in a thin line.

"Pete," said she, "is saved."

Next time we come mother was all alone.

"'The Lord gave,'" she says "'and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord,' but it's getting kind of monotonous."

She hadn't much to say then, she didn't seem to care, but was just numb. He wrapped her up warm on the komatik, with just a sack of clothes, her Bible, and the album of photos from Nova Scotia, yes, and the china dogs she carried in her arms. Father broke the trail ahead, I took the gee pole, and when day came, we made the winter tilt. There mother kep' house just as she would at home, so clean we was almost scared to step indoors.



There Was Father's Hand Sticking Up.

It was along in March or maybe April that father was away in coarse weather, making the round of his traps. He didn't come back. There'd been a blizzard, a wolf-howling hurricane, blowing out a lane of bare ground round the back of the cabin, while the big drift piled higher and packed harder, until the comb of it grew out above our roof like a sea breaker, froze so you could walk on the overhang. And just between dark and duckish father's husky team came back without him.

I don't reckon I was more'n ten or eleven years old, but you see, this Labrador is kind of serious with us, and makes even kids act responsible. Go easy, and there's famine, freezing, blackleg, all sorts of reasons against laziness. It sort of educates.

Mother was worse than silent. There was something about her that scared me more than anything outdoors. In the morning her eye kep' following me as if to say, "Go find your father." Surely it was up to me, and if I wasn't big enough to drive the huskies or pack father's gun, I thought I could manage afoot to tote his four-pound ax. She beckoned me to her and kissed me—just once in ten years, and I was quick through the door, out of reach, lest she should see me mighty near cryin'.

It was all very well showing off brave before mother, but when I got outside, any excuse would have been enough for going back. I wished I'd left the matches behind, but I hadn't. I wished the snow would be too soft, but it was hard as sand. I wished I wasn't a coward, and the bush didn't look so wolfy, and what if I met up with the Eskimo devil! Oh, I was surely the scaredest lil' boy, and dead certain I'd get lost. Then I went on because I was going, and there was father's trail blazed on past Bake-apple Marsh. The way was as plain as streets, and the sun shining warm as he looked over into the valley.

Then I saw a man's mitt, an old buckskin mitt sticking up out of the snow. Father had dropped his mitt, and without that his hand would be froze. When I found him, how glad he'd be to get it!

But when I tried to pick it up, it was heavy. Then it came away, and there was father's hand sticking up. It was dead.

Of course I know I'd ought to have dug down through the snow, but I didn't. I ran for all I was worth. Then I got out of breath and come back shamed.

It wasn't for love of father. No, I hated to touch that hand, and when I did I was sick. Still that was better than being scared to touch. It's not so bad when you dare.

I dug with a snow-shoe for a shovel. There was the buckskin shirt smelling good, and the long fringes I'd used to tickle his nose with—then I found his face. I just couldn't bear that, but turned my back and dug until I came to the great, big, number-four trap he used for wolf and beaver. He must have stepped without seeing it under the snow, and it broke his leg. Then he'd tried to drag himself back home.

It was when I stood up to get breath and cool off that I first seen the wolf, setting peaceful, waggin' his tail. First I thought he was one of our own huskies, but when he didn't know his name I saw for sure he must be the wolf who lived up Two Mile Crick. He'd got poor inspecting father's business instead of minding his own. That's why he was called the Inspector. It was March, too, the moon of famine. Of course I threw my ax and missed. His hungry smile's still thar behind a bush, and me wondering whether his business is with me or father. That's why I stepped on the snow-shoes, and went right past where he was, not daring to get my ax. Yes, it was me he wanted to see—first, but of course I wasn't going to encourage any animal into thinking he'd scared a man. Why, he'd scarce have let father even see his tracks for fear they'd be trapped or shot. So I walked slow and proud, leadin' him off from father—at least I played that, wishing all the time that mother's lil' boy was to home. After a while I grabbed down a lopped stick where father'd blazed, not as fierce as an ax, but enough to make me more or less respected.

The Inspector was bigger than me, stronger 'n any man, swifter 'n any horse. I tell yer the maned white wolf is wiser'n most people, and but for eating his cubs, he's nature's gentleman.

The trouble was not him hunting, but me scared. Why, if he'd wanted me, one flash, one bite, and I'm breakfast. It was just curiosity made him so close behind like a stealthy ghost. When I'd turn to show fight, he'd seem to apologize, and then I'd go on whistling a hymn.

Thar he was cached right ahead in the deadfall, for a front view, if I'd known. But I thrashed with my stick in a panic, hitting his snout, so he yelped. Then he lost his temper. He'd a "sorry, but-business-is-business" expression on him. I ran at him, tripped on a stump, let out a yell, and he lep' straight at my throat.

And in the middle of that came a gunshot, a bullet grazed my arm, and went on whining. Another shot, and the Inspector ran. Then I was rubbing whar the bullet hurt, sort of sulky, too, with a grievance, when I was suddenly grabbed and nigh smothered in mother's arms. She'd come with the team of huskies followin' me; she'd been gunning, too, and I sure had a mighty close call.

She'd no tears left for father, so when I got through sobbin' we went to the body, and loaded it in the komatik for home. Thar's things I don't like to tell you.

It wasn't a nice trip exactly, with the Inspector superintending around. When we got back to the tilt, we daresn't take out the huskies, or unload, or even stop for grub. We had to drive straight on, mother and me, down the tickle, past our old empty home, then up the Bacalieu all night.

The sun was just clear of the ice when we made the Post, and we saw a little ball jerk up the flag halyards, then break to a great red flag with the letters H. B. C. It means Here Before Christ.

The air was full of a big noise, like the skirl of sea-gulls screaming in a gale, and there was Mr. McTavish on the sidewalk, marching with his bagpipes to wake the folk out of their Sunday beds. Then he saw father's body, with legs and arms stiffened all ways, and the number-four trap still gripped on broken bones. Off came his fur cap.

Mother stood, iron-hard, beside the komatik.

"Factor," says she, "I've come to pay his debt."

"Nay, it's the Sabbath, ma'am. Ye'll pay no debts till Monday. Come in and have some tea—ye puir thing."

"You starved his soul to death, and now I've brought his body to square his debts. Will you leave that here till Monday?"

Mr. McTavish looked at her, then whispered to me. "B'y," said he, "we must make her cry or she'll be raving mad. Greet, woman, greet. By God, I'll make ye greet!"

He marched up and down the sidewalk, and through the skirl of gulls in a storm, swept a tune that made the meat shake on my bones.

Once mother shrieked out, trying to make him stop, but he went on pacing in front of her, to and fro, with his eyes on her all the time, peering straight through her, and all the grief of all the world in the skirl and wail, and that hopeless awful tune. She covered her face with her hands, trying to hold while the great sobs shook her, and she reeled like a tree in a gale, until she fell on her knees, until she threw herself on the corpse, and cried, and cried.

CHAPTER II.

The Happy Ship.

Cap'n Mose of the Zedekiah W. Baggs 'e was a Sunday Christian. All up along 'e'd wear a silk hat, the only one on the Labrador. Yes. Sundays 'e'd be ashore talkin' predestination an' grace out of a book 'e kep' in 'is berth, but never a word about fish or the state of the ice. Mother'd been raised to a belief in Christians, so when Mose dropped in at her shack, admirin' how she cooked, she'd be pleased all up the back, and have him right in to dinner. He'd kiss me, talkin' soft about little children. Yes. That's how 'e got me away to sea as boy on a sealin' voyage, without paying me any wages.

Mother never knew what Cap'n Mose was like on week-days, and Sunday didn't happen aboard of the Zedekiah. I remember hidin' away at the back of Ole Oleson's bunk, axing God please to turn me into an animal. Any sort would do, because I seen men kind to animals. You know an animal mostly consists of a pure heart, and four legs, which is a great advantage. Queer world though, if all our preyers was granted.

Belay thar. A man sets out to tell adventures, and if his victims don't find some excuse for getting absent, he owes them all the happiness he's got. It's mean to hand out sorrow to persons bearing their full share already. So we proceeds to the night when I ran from the Zedekiah, and joined the Happy Ship.

We lay in the big ice pack off Cape Breton. The Zedekiah was old, just paint an' punk, and she did surely groan to the thrust of the pack. I was too scared to sleep, so I went up on deck.

I'd allus watched for a chance to run away, and thar was Jim, the anchor-watch, squatting on the bitts dead asleep. He used to be that way when nobody chased him.

I seen the lights of the three-masted schooner a couple of miles to windward. I grabbed a sealing gaff, and slid down on the ice.

First, as the pans rocked under me, I was scary, next I warmed, gettin' venturesome, until I came near sliding into the wet, and after that I'd look before I lep'.

You know how the grinding piles an edge around each pan, of broken splinters? That edge shone white agin the black of the water, all the guide I had. But times the squalls of wind was likes scythes edged with sleet, so I was blinded, waiting, freezing until a lull came, and I'd get on. It was broad day, and I reckon each step weighed a ton before I made that schooner.

A gray man, fat, with a chin whisker, lifted me in overside. "Come far?" says he, and I turned round to show him the Zedekiah. She wasn't there. She was gone—foundered.

So that's how I came aboard of the Happy Ship, just like a lil' lost dog, with no room in my skin for more'n bones and famine. Captain Smith used to say he'd signed me on as family ghost; but he paid me honest wages, fed me honest grub, while as to clothes and bed, I was snug as a little rabbit. He taught me reading and writing, and punctuation with his belt, sums, hand, reef, and steer, catechism, knots and splices, sewing, squegee, rule of the road, soojie moojie, psalms of David, constitution of the United States, and playing the trombone, with three pills and a good licking regular Saturday nights. Mother's little boy began to set up and take notice.

The five years in the Pawtucket all along, from Montreal to Colon, from banjos plunking in them portales of Vera Cruz, to bugles crying revally in Quebec, and the oyster boats asleep by Old Point Comfort, and the Gloucester fleet a-storming home past Sable, and dagos basking on Havana quays. Suck oranges in the dinghy under the moonlight, waiting to help the old man aboard when he's drunk. If ever he went ashore without me, I'd be like a lost dog, and he drunk before the sun was over the yard-arm. But away together it wasn't master and boy, but just father and son. He'd even named me after himself, and that's why my name's Smith.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

ACCORDED A HIGH POSITION

Women of Servia, Well Educated and Able, Are Companions of Their Husbands and Brothers.

There is no country in the world where women occupy a more dignified position in the home than Servia. The Servian idea is quite different from that of the Turk, who keeps his women behind shut doors or the German, whose ideal woman is a hausfrau. In Servia the woman is the companion of the man.

A man is responsible for his unmarried sisters, and throughout the Balkan states it is considered rather a breach of etiquette for him to marry before his older sister.

No Servian girl would feel she could hold up her head in society unless she could speak four languages. There is hardly a Servian woman who cannot play some musical instrument. Embroidery, painting, drawing, and sculpture are all studied. Politics is a popular feature among women.

Servian women are very domesticated and the highest ladies pay personal attention to trivial matters of housekeeping.

There are two women doctors practicing in Belgrade, and several women teachers. But public opinion, on the whole, is rather against women entering the labor arena.

Want Protection for Lions.

The legislative council of British East Africa is expected to adopt a proposal at present before it for the protection of lions on crown lands. Up to the present game licenses which stipulate the number and class of animals that may be killed or captured have ignored lions, which have been regarded as vermin. Now, however, it is proposed to limit each holder of a big game shooting license to four lions. The other day a game ranger who is said to be familiar with all the conditions in British East Africa expressed the opinion that the proposal would do very little, if carried into effect, to prevent the extermination of lions in certain parts of the protectorate. "They are being exterminated," he said, "by the advance of civilization. Exterminated may not be the right word, for they are really being driven away. In my opinion, however, there will be no actual disappearance of the lion for a very long time to come, although, even when he is on the game license, there will be complete freedom to hunt and shoot on private land."

Unconventionalities.

"It was printed in your paper, was it, mister? That's the reason I didn't see it."

"You don't seem to notice, Gerald, that it's nearly midnight, and I'm yawning to beat the band!"

"There's no need of your apologizing for these sliced tomatoes, Mrs. Nayber; I saw they were spoiled, and I haven't touched 'em."

"Yes, I notice, Mrs. Sykes, that your boy Bill takes my Mary Jane to the moving picture shows quite often. What she sees in him I can't imagine."

"Oh, well, Mrs. Glizzard, my Bill goes to see your Mary Jane because nobody else does; he kind o' pities her."—Chicago Tribune.

Interesting Memory Test.

Ask anyone to draw a representation of a watch face with Roman numbers and you will have plenty of evidence of the unreliability of incidental memory.

Of two hundred persons examined by Myers only eight omitted the VI from their drawing of the watch face, and only twenty-one put IIII instead of the more familiar notation, IV. From this it would appear that impeachment of a witness because of his inability to report some incidental feature of an event or scene is not psychologically justified.—Case and Comment.

DIZZY, HEADACHY, SICK, "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

DID DRAW THE LINE AT THAT

After All, There Was Something the Victorious Insurgents Would Not Be Guilty Of.

The successful revolutionist (for that month) leaned back in his chair.

"While you correspondents have been reasonably accurate in your accounts," he remarked, "you have overlooked some of our good points. We acknowledge capturing the insurgent general, starving him a week, beating him regularly, cutting off his ears and finally banishing him, but—"

He paused that the force of the remark might be fully felt.

"When you say we have been inhuman and given to extreme cruelty, you overdraw it. We haven't even hinted at running him for vice-president!"—New York Evening Post.

ECZEMA ON BACK AND CHEST

Pierson, N. Dakota.—"The eczema started on my scalp. It finally went on to the back of my neck, then on to my back, arms and chest. It broke out in pimples first and then seemed to run together in some places, making a sore about the size of a dime. At times the itching and burning were so intense that it seemed unbearable. The more I scratched it the worse it became, and there would be a slight discharge from it, especially on my scalp, so as to make my hair matted and sticky close to the scalp. The hair was dry, lifeless and thin. My hair was falling so terribly that I had begun to despair of ever finding relief. My clothing irritated the eruption on my back. The affected parts were almost a solid scab.

"I had been bothered with eczema for about a year and a half. Then I began using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used them daily for two months and I was cured." (Signed) Miss Mildred Dennis, Apr. 30, 1913.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Stopping the Wind.

In the village church during the morning service the organist was annoyed because the organ-blower kept working the lever noisily after he had finished playing. A famous preacher had come down from London to preach. The organist scribbled a note to the blower, and sent it round by a choir boy, who, misunderstanding his instructions, put it into the hands of the preacher. The note was as follows: "Perhaps you will kindly stop when I tell you to. The people have come here to hear my music, not your noise."

Quips and Quiddities.

A soldier crossing the barrack square with a pail met a sergeant, who noticed that Pat was wearing a very disreputable pair of trousers. Intending to report him for unsoldierly appearance, he stopped him and asked: "Where are you going?" "To get some water, sor," answered Pat. "What, in those trousers?" "No, sir, in the pail."—Saturday Evening Post.

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Two For a Nickel.

Tom—That gent certainly rose from the ranks.

Jerry—So?

Tom—Yes; he used to be a cigarmaker.—California Pelican.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

She Has.

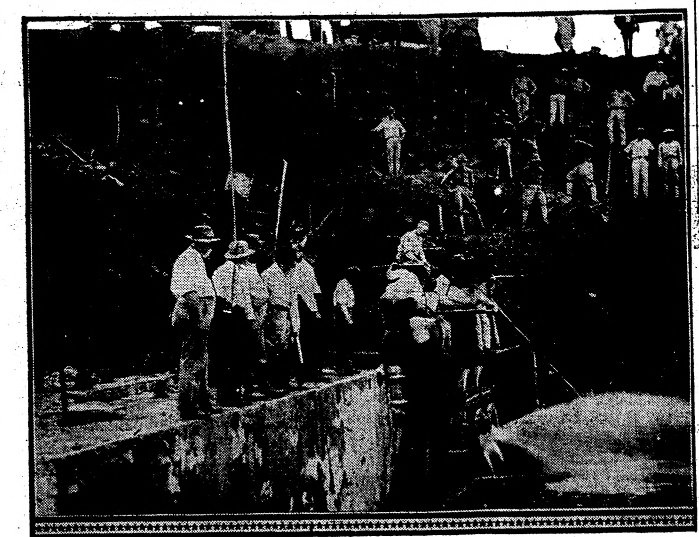
"Has Miss Gotcoyne a nice figure?"

"Has she? She has six of 'em, with a dollar mark in front."

Break up that cough. A single dose of Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops brings prompt relief—5c at all Drug Stores.

Where some women are concerned beauty is only enamel deep.

FIRST OPENING OF THE VALVES IN GAMBOA DIKE



Before the Gamboa dike in the Panama canal was blown up a considerable amount of water was let into the Culebra cut through pipes in the dike. Our photograph shows the first opening of the valves of these pipes, in the presence of Colonel Goethals and other officials.

PLUMAGE IS TAKEN

Woman With Aigrettes in Hats Have Interesting Time.

New Tariff Bill Forces Very Disagreeable Duty Upon Customs Officials—Feminine Headgear Is Badly Mutilated.

New York. — With the passage of the new tariff bill the customs official has had thrust upon him a new and disagreeable office. He must tear out the aigrettes and plumage of foreign birds that women passengers are wearing in their hats when they arrive in American ports.

When the Underwood bill went into effect, a score of women on the French liner Lorraine were subjected to this treatment. Their indignation was so great they could not contain themselves.

Recriminations were heaped on the inspectors, who were acting in the only way that insured the execution of the clause forbidding the importation of aigrettes or the plumage of any wild bird.

Try as they could, the customs men were unable to make the women understand they were carrying out orders. Disorder and confusion prevailed. This probably will be the rule, steamship men say, every time an inspector steps aboard a vessel.

Mme. Ada Bevilaqua was one of the first to suffer. She was dressed in ultra-Parisian style and an aigrette set off her small velvet hat.

Mme. Bevilaqua said she was being scrutinized and grew embarrassed. She learned the worst a second later when an inspector, a veteran, who feared neither the cold glare of a woman passenger nor the angry swearing of a man bearing dutiable tobacco or liquor, stepped forward and started the program.

"Your hat, madam," the inspector said. "We must have that aigrette."

Mme. Bevilaqua looked astonished, then became indignant. It was not until the inspector reached out and took the feather that she realized what was wanted. Then the customs man explained the provision of the law under which he was acting, and the woman was loud in her denunciation.

"My milliner never told me a word about that," she said angrily, and the inspector, shrugging his shoulders, remarked by way of consolation that a good many American women who are homeward bound with Paris bonnets are going to suffer a keen disappointment when they arrive at this port.

Before the passengers of the Lorraine had been cleared, a great pile of aigrettes, feathers and stuffed birds had been collected. And for each of the exhibits, which might be called No. 1 in Uncle Sam's new tariff trial, in which thousands of American women travelers are to be the defendants, the inspectors received sarcastic remarks and acrid adjectives.

The "chivalry" of the "gentlemen" who drew up the tariff was touched upon time and again.

Taking courage from the example the inspector who attacked Mme. Bevilaqua, the rest of the force went to work with zest. Milliners' decorations worth several hundred dollars were conficated on the Lorraine.

The customs men got busy also on the Campania of the Cunard line, which arrived later. A collection of bird of paradise was found in short order by the inspectors. The trunks of the women passengers were ransacked for them.

Plumage seized was turned over to the appraisers, who will set a price on each piece and send word to the owners, who will be permitted to return them to the dealer from whom they were purchased. If anything goes wrong with this program and the feathers stay here, the travelers will be guilty of smuggling.

PRINCESS HIT BY POVERTY

Mary of Teck Must Live in Three Rooms—Husband Is Financially Embarrassed.

London.—It is said that Princess Mary of Teck, a close relative of King George of England, husband has become so financially embarrassed as to necessitate their vacating the Teck country estate to live in a more economical three-room apartment.

Princess Mary of Teck.

EGGLESTON STORY IS DENIED

No Such Man on the Merrimac, Says Capt. Bob Wright, Who Was Our Engineer.

Richmond, Va.—"There was no such man as J. E. Eggleston, chief engineer, nor as assistant engineer on the Merrimac," said Capt. Bob Wright of this city after reading a press dispatch from Sewanee, Tenn., telling of the death of Eggleston and referring to him as the last survivor of that famous fighting vessel.

Captain Wright continued: "I was an assistant engineer on the Jamestown of the Confederate navy, and I knew all the officers on the Merrimac and all the other vessels in the fleet. I was in the navy during its entire life. Charles Ramsey of Baltimore was the chief engineer of the Merrimac. He was an assistant engineer in the United States navy, and when war came he resigned and joined with the Confederacy. He is living in Baltimore at this time and is engaged in the iron business. I think his name was Charles Ramsey. At any rate, there was a Ramsey, who was the chief engineer, and there was no Eggleston in the service that I ever before heard of, and I have seen nothing of him in the records."

Captain Wright says that the last survivors of the Merrimac are so plentiful that he believes if all who claim to have served on that vessel had done so there would have been men enough to have manned at least ten vessels of the same size.

Bloodhounds Locate Hair Clipper.

St. Louis.—Bloodhounds used to trace the person who clipped the long, auburn hair of Miss Myrtle Hamilton, fourteen, followed the trail to Miss Hamilton, and she confessed that she had done the clipping herself, saying she wanted to figure in a sensation. She had accused two strangers.

Is 97 and Uses Tobacco.

Spotswood, N. J.—"Uncle Jimmy" Bennett, hale and hearty, celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday here. Although he has refrained from intoxicants, he is an inveterate user of tobacco in all forms.

STRAY HORNETS SPIKED GUN

Mosby Failed to Capture Train Because of Them.

While Waiting for Federal Sutlers' Wagons Confederate Rangers Met With a Warm Reception—Luck With Men in Blue.

Boston.—Col. John S. Mosby, commander of the Partisan Rangers, who gave such dashing service in the southern cause fifty years ago, is living now in the city of Washington, the Youth's Companion states. One of the really amusing incidents that passed under his notice during the war he told not long ago.

In the summer of 1864 when Gen. Phil Sheridan was in the valley of the Shenandoah, he found himself much harassed by Mosby, who was continually cutting off his supply trains. An army cannot fight on an empty stomach, and Mosby knew it.

One bright morning Mosby heard that a long supply train was winding its way down the valley. By noon the rangers, in their gray uniforms, were gathered at the forks of the valley pike, watching for the head of the wagon train to appear.

Presently a cloud of dust was seen rising far up the road, and, as the wind blew it aside, the Confederates caught sight of a line of men in blue escorting a caravan of lumbering wagons drawn by mules. Instantly Mosby gave the order to run a little howitzer up on the side of the hill and unlimber it. As soon as the gun had opened fire the rest of the men were to make a cavalry charge and throw the train into confusion.

The rangers jerked the gun into position and began to swab it out. Suddenly the man with the swab gave a shrill yell, seized the seat of his pantaloons and fled down the hill and out into the road. Almost the same moment the other man at the gun abandoned it. He seemed to be fighting at the air as he disappeared over a stone wall.

The sutlers' wagons were creeping nearer and Mosby did not know what to think of such extraordinary conduct. He ordered four more men to the gun, but hardly had they reached it when they, too, yelled, began to beat the air madly with their hats and took to flight.

Spurring his horse over the stone wall Mosby rode toward the gun, but his stay was short. The howitzer stood just over a hornet's nest and those busy insects were resenting the intrusion. They had repelled the invaders on foot and now they swarmed on Mosby's horse till the maddened animal tore off down the pike on a run. Then they turned their attention to the rest of the troop.

Their attack was so vicious that the rangers gave up any idea of standing by the gun. They scattered far and wide and it was an hour before they returned. When they did the wagon train had safely vanished in the distance. So the hornets saved the day for Sheridan.

TEAMS ARE TOO SLOW

Football Follower Says Modern Play Lacking in Speed.

Contention Is Upheld, in Small Way, by Recent Showing of Maroon and Hoosier—Hyde Park the First Real Fast Team.

Ever and anon some old time follower of football rises to complain of the slowness of modern teams as compared with those of a decade ago. A man who played the game in the latter '90s and the early part of this century was among those at the Indiana-Chicago contest, and after the contest the chief subject of his conversation was regarding the lack of speed displayed in the teams' lineup.

"If teams were as slow as that when I played the game," he declared, "they would have been drilled for speed to the exclusion of everything else. Coaches in the old days would not permit loafing in lining up, and once lined up the plays went off with a snap that I have not seen in the last five years."

His criticism was partly justified, for both Chicago and Indiana were lamentably slow getting the ball into action. This was partially explained by the failure of the Maroons to know their signals. With only two weeks of preparation, Stagg was compelled to give his men more than they could digest in the way of formations, for Indiana was so strong it was not wise to take chances with the Hoosiers. In consequence, only three or four of the plays were fixed firmly in the minds of the players and there was noticeable confusion in getting the plays under way at various stages of the game.

Indiana contributed her share toward slowing up the game by lack of condition. Criticism of lack of speed, however, is not always so just. If anything, the speed of teams now is better than it was in the days of "old" football. There were few teams of ten or fifteen years ago with more than ordinary speed despite every favoring factory. The first "fast" team was the famous Hyde Park High School eleven of 1902, and although the college teams on which members of this squad played later were fairly fast, none of them were much better than the teams of the present. With weight at a premium, it is scarcely to be expected the old teams could class in speed with the ones today, where speed is the chief requisite for individual candidates.

The growth of "formation" football has much to do with the seeming slowness. It is the exceptional team which goes on the field nowadays with less than thirty formations to remember, while it was the exceptional eleven in the old days which had more than ten or twelve to remember. The old style attack consisted of straight bucks, cross bucks and end runs, with their variations. The lineup was nearly always the same, only a few formations, like the tandem, the whoaback and a few more, having been invented.

Series plays were the rule rather than the exception. One set of signals usually served for three or four successive plays in the old days, and often a team would traverse half the length of the field without the quarter-back calling numbers more than three or four times. Now the series signals have been abandoned owing to the exigencies of the game. Each play is a separate problem, and its solution depends entirely upon the position of the ball, the amount to be gained and other circumstances which could not possibly be prepared for in advance.

INDIANA CAPTAIN HURT

Captain Davis of Indiana.

Edward Davis, captain of Indiana University football team, may not be able to play again this year. This was the belief expressed the other day on account of an injury received in the recent Chicago game.

TWO CLEVER PRINCETON FOOTBALL STARS

E. Trenkman and Pendleton of Princeton.

USE FOOTBALL IN BASEBALL

New Winter Game Invented by Pennsylvania Professor Has Unique Features—Accidents Few.

Baseball may soon be an all-year-round sport, for you can now play it with a football. The new friend of the magnate and the professional players' nemesis is Professor Benscoter of the Wilkesbarre high school. As inventor of the new game, he explains it as follows:

"A baseball can not be easily held by players in cold weather, hence the need of a game with the larger, clumsier football. It is played on a baseball diamond, with the same number of players on a side, the most notable difference being that there is no pitcher; this player occupies the position of another shortstop—'right shortstop'—between first and second.

"The ball is put into play by being kicked from home plate and the runner hikes for first, as in baseball, and is put out by the passing of the ball to first ahead of him, as in baseball, or being touched by it in the hands of a player.

"The runner may not advance from a base when the ball has been passed to the baseman who touches the base while the runner is there; this debars the runner from advancing from the base until it has been again kicked out; it likewise debars any runner back of him. The kick may be of any sort—place, punt or drop kick. The runner may be declared out if he advances from the base before the ball is kicked out. If the ball is kicked foul or the kicker is out; he is also out if he fails in an attempt to kick.

"The game is very lively, being full of constant kicking, running, catching and passing. It develops strength, speed, accuracy, skill and with less liability to accidents even than in baseball on account of the freedom from the chance of being injured by a pitched or batted ball."

Judge Jones Trots One Mile in 2:12 3-4

At a "tin cup" record meeting under auspices of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association at the Lexington track former United States Senator Joseph W. Bailey's Judge Jones, driven by Harold Childs, trotted a mile in 2:12¾, a new world's record for two-year-old geldings. The previous record was Endows, 2:14¼, in 1899.

Quigley Is Disgruntled.

Umpire Quigley, who was given a trial in the National league this season by President Lynch, has returned to his work at St. Mary's college, Kansas, where he is athletic director. Quigley is much disgusted with his experience in the big league, for he feels that he has been disgraced by associating as much as he did with some of the ball players who use the vilest kind of language in their attacks on umpires.

Travers Best Golfer.

Jerome D. Travers is amateur golf champion of the United States for the fourth time. He defeated John Anderson at Boston, 5 up and 4 to play in the 36-hole final round at Garden City and again became the best golfer that America can boast.

Lejeune Is Hard Hitter.

Lejeune of Grand Rapids, formerly a member of the White Sox, was the leading batter in the Central league this season. He averaged .346, just beating out Tutweiler of Fort Wayne, who had a mark of .345.

Breaks His Shoulder.

Barrett, candidate for the backfield on the Western Reserve university eleven, broke his right shoulder in practice the other day. He will be unable to play this season.

Yale Loses Captain Because of "Conditions"

Charles N. Snowdon of Pittsburgh, Pa., has resigned as captain of the Yale 'varsity crew. Thomas B. Denegre of New Orleans has been chosen to succeed him. This announcement was made at a meeting of the Blue oarsmen.

Snowdon's resignation was due to his being ineligible to row in the Harvard regatta next June. As captain and No. 2 of the crew last year Snowdon devoted his afternoons to the oarsmen and did not put in sufficient time at his studies to graduate. He will complete his course about mid-year, and this will render him ineligible for the race in June with the Crimson crew.

Denegree is a junior. He rowed bow last year.

RUSSELL TOLLEFSON

Fast Little Quarter-Back of the Minnesota Football Team.

Wins Checker Championship.

M. E. Pomeroy of Binghamton, N. Y., won the world's championship at checkers from Alfred E. Jordan of England, who had held undisputed possession of the title. The competitors were tied up to the fiftieth game at one victory each, forty-eight games having resulted in draws. Pomeroy learned to play the game in a backwoods grocery store at Sidney Center, N. Y., his home, many years ago.

Jubilee Run.

John D. Nolan, fifty years old, ran one-fifth of a mile in 55 seconds at Norwich, Conn. Nolan works 15 hours a day on his farm and trains at night. He has been athletic trainer for clubs since 1887.

Strong on Paper.

Harvard looks strong on paper with a big majority of its champions of 1912 returning and the Crimson is the rated favorite in the east.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

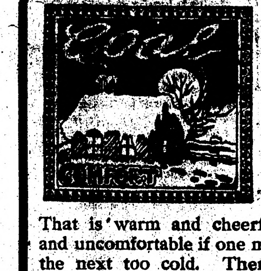
KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - Minn
Phone Central

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Subscribe for
The Northern Light
$1.50 per Year.



How Cozy The Home

That is warm and cheerful. How disagreeable and uncomfortable if one minute it is too hot and the next too cold. There are NO DOCTOR BILLS for coughs and colds and pneumonia if care is used in having proper ventilation and a uniform heat in your home, but to do this you must have good uniform coal. Nothing better than Pocahontas and Clarkson's Nut.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; its solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Bank Statement.

Bank No. 899.

Statement of the condition of Holt State Bank, at Holt, Minn., at close of business on October 21st, 1913.
Date of call by Supt., Oct. 25, 1913.
Date of report by Bank, Oct. 27, 1913.

RESOURCES.
Loans and Discounts		$57,036 24
Overdrafts		107 09
Banking House, Furniture and Fixtures		2,522 89
Due from Banks	4,489 30
Cash on Hand (items below)	3,435 29
Currency	3,070
Gold	25
Silver	263 75
Other	76 54
Total Cash Assets	7,924 59	7,924 59
Checks and Cash Items		722 88
Paid out for expenses, etc., in excess of earnings		683 77
Total		$69,000 46
LIABILITIES.
Capital Stock		$10,000 00
Surplus Fund		1,000 00
Bills Payable, (including certificates for money borrowed)		7,000 00
Notes rediscounted		500 00
Deposits subject to check	27,349 40
Cashier's Checks	1,961 02
Total Immediate liabilities	29,310 42
Time Certificates	21,190 04
Total Deposits		50,500 46
Total		$69,000 46

State of Minnesota } ss
County of Marshall }

We, D. B. Bakke, President and B. Docken, Cashier of the above named Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of our knowledge and belief.

D. B. BAKKE, President,
B. DOCKEN, Cashier.

Correct Attest: O. H. GUNHEIM,
[Two] Directors. R. REIERSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of October, 1913.
[SEAL] —Nils Engebretsen, Notary Public.
My commission expires June 15, 1919.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Martin Nygaard, of Holt, Minn., who, on September 26th, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05640 for S½ SE¼ Sec. 5, W½ NE¼ section 8, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 4th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Lars A. Sagstuen, Knute Nelson, Christ Norbeck, all of Flakne, Flakne, Minn., Carl L. Anderson, of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, of Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06964, for NW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Knutson, Carl Sormo, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fosen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 20, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Thomas Knudtsen Sten, of Holt, Minn., who, on Oct. 18, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05688, SW¼ SW¼ Sec. 28, E½ SE¼, SW¼ SE¼ Section 29, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole B. Johnson, Ole O. Garthus, Emil Ostlund, Nels Lysne, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that John H. Smith, of Holt, Minn., who, on February 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07250, for SW¼ Section 11, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: James Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, Charles J. Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Charles J. Smith of Holt, Minn., who, on Feb. 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07251, for SW¼ Section 12, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of Nov., 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H. Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, James Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Edvard Svensrud, of Flakne, Minn., who, on Sept. 7th, 1911, made Homestead Entry, No. 03541, amended to read as follows: for Lot 4 SW¼ NW¼ Sec. 4, SE¼ NE¼, NE¼ SE¼ Section 5, Township 156 N. Range 41 W., 5th meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 11th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Lars A. Sagstuen, E. A. Wright, C. Norbeck, Martin Nygaard, all of Flakne, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
October 10, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olina Knuts Bolingberg, of Golden Valley, Minn. who, on November 29, 1910, made Homestead entry, No. 05763, for N.W¼, Section 33, Township 156, Range 41, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Register and Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn, on the 18th day of November 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: George E. Olson, Engebret Moe, Peter Rosand, Alfred Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
October 28, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that George Charlson of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on June 26th, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06350, for SE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make commutation proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 5th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christofferson, Gunder Sannes, Charlie Charlson, Andrew Charlson, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

A TURN OF PHRASE.

Cigar Smoker (facetiously)—Still studying the sea, professor? You must know it upside down by now.

The Professor (feelingly)—Say, rather, inside out!—London Sketch.

Notice of Contest

Department of the Interior, United States Land Office. Crookston, Minnesota, October 15, 1913.

To Adolph Schirbel of Gatzke, Minn., Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Christian E. Evens, who gives Duluth, Minn. as his residence and Thief River Falls, Minn., in care of O. A. Naplin, as his postoffice address, did on September 16, 1913, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead Entry Serial No. 08470, made Sept. 14, 1912, for SE¼ NE¼, N½ SE¼ and the SW¼ SE¼ Section 20, Township 157, Range 39, 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Adolph Schirbel has wholly abandoned said land since making entry thereon; that he has not resided thereon within the last six months preceding the institution of this contest; that he has not made the improvement required by the homestead law, and the contestant herein is new the owner and holder of the Assignment Certificates issued by the Auditor of Marshall County for delinquent drainage taxes on said land.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be canceled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the said contestant's written acknowledgment of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the post office to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the postoffice to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Date of first publication, Oct. 17, 1913.
" second " Oct. 24, 1913.
" third " Oct. 31, 1913.
" fourth " Nov. 7, 1913.

Citation for Hearing on Final Account and for Distribution.

Estate of KAERSTAN GRONVALD

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall In Probate Court:

In the matter of the estate of Kaerstan Gronvald, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Karolina Gronvald, Henry Milo Clifford Gronvald, Carl Helin Gronvald, Peter Oliver Gronvald, Clara Helen Gronvald, John Helin Gronvald, and all persons interested in the final account and distribution of the estate of said decedent:

The representative of the above named decedent, having filed in this court her final account of the administration of the estate of said decedent, together with her petition praying for the adjustment and allowance of said final account and for distribution of the residue of said estate to the persons thereunto entitled; Therefore, You, and Each of You, are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this court at the Probate Court Rooms in the City of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 15th day of November, 1913, at o'clock 10 A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal of said court, this 18th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM,
Probate Judge.

A. N. ECKSTROM,
Attorney for petitioner,
Warren, Minn. (o24n7)

Citation for Hearing on Petition for Determination of Descent of Land

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall, In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of Anders R. Gutterud, Decedent;

The State of Minnesota to Julia Isabella Gutterud, Carl Nikolai Gutterud, Alma Christine Gutterud, Ida Jonette Gutterud, Oscar Elvin Gutterud, Thea Elisa Gutterud, Arthur Gutterud, and Christi Gutterud, and all persons interested in the determination of the descent of the real estate of said decedent;

The petition of Christi Gutterud having been filed in this Court, representing that said decedent died more than five years prior to the filing thereof, leaving certain real estate in said petition described, and that no will of decedent has been proved nor administration of his estate granted in this State, and praying that the descent of said real estate be determined by this Court.

Therefore You and Each of You, Are hereby cited and required to show cause if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Room in the city of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of November, 1913 at 10 o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal thereof, this 24th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM,
Probate Judge.

H. O. KJOMME,
Attorney for Petitioner,
Thief River Falls, Minn. (o31n14)

DISCOURAGED POET.

Alfred Noyes, the British poet, though usually very successful in marketing his wares, suffered a slump on toward the end of his American visit, and naturally became low-spirited in consequence.

"Everything seems to be going wrong," he sighed one evening at the Franklin Inn in Philadelphia. "I'll have to change my luck somehow or other."

He laughed grimly and resumed:

"I asked the maid at my lodgings this morning what had become of the paper that I'd left lying on my desk.

"'Oh, sir,' said she, 'I thought it was waste paper, and I threw it in the waste-paper basket.'

"'No,' said I, 'it wasn't waste paper. I hadn't written anything on it yet.'"

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn

DR. J. T. TURLEY,
DENTIST,
Will be in Holt Fiday and Satuday, November 14 - 15
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS	$1.00	GOLD CROWN	$5 & $6
TREATMENTS	1.50	PORCELAIN CROWN	5.00

PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

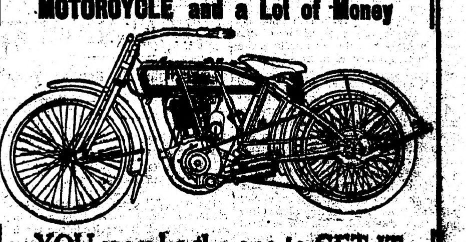
V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA
(North of the Minnesota River)
Is Going To Be Given This
HARLEY-DAVIDSON
MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money



YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.

A good hustler can make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.

It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
[illegible] Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name............

Post Office............

Rural Route............ State............

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

Defective Page

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1913 NO. 15

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.20
Wheat	.74
Barley	.43
Oats	.28
Rye	.42
Flour, Best Patent	2.45

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Nov. 14 & 15. See his "ad."

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the church here Sunday Nov. 9th at 10:45 a. m., and at Ringbo at 3:30 in the afternoon of the same day. Everybody welcome.

Hans Stensrud went to Thief River Falls yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Olson made a trip to Thief River Falls in his auto on Wednesday.

B. L. Backe spent Tuesday at Thief River Falls taking in the election doings.

Ole Torrison was up from Thief River Falls on Tuesday attending to some business matters.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Al Huseth and P. L. Anderson were business visitors at Thief River Falls Tuesday afternoon.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Bank Examiner Brandvold has been here all week looking over business at the Holt State Bank.

Louis Wegge boarded the afternoon train yesterday with a view to transact some business at Thief River Falls.

S. S. Kolden has been very sick during the first days of the week but is now reported as improving nicely.

The Ladies Aid had a very pleasant and succesful meeting at the Dovre home east of town on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Tony Anderson came in from Mud Lake the first of the week to do some shopping and visit with friends.

Fred Peterson went to Thief River Falls Monday and stayed there over Tuesday to take in the election doings and see friends.

Charlie Martell came in from Mud Lake the first of the week and went to Beaudette to look up work for his teams in the woods this winter.

Miss Christine Saastad came up from Thief River Falls to take in the Cobweb Basket Social Saturday evening and returned on Monday.

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 15th

AUCTION SALE

At the Adolphson farm in northwest quarter of section 1, Agder Township, 9 miles east of Holt, on

MONDAY, NOV. 10

The following Property will be sold:

Team brown mules, 8 and 4 years old, weight about 2,000 pounds
1 bay mare, 5 years old, ab't 1100lds
1 bay mare, 14 " " 900
1 bay horse, 12 " " 1,200
1 small gray horse, 12 years old
1 small sorrel horse, 15 years old
4 good milk cows
2 heifers, 2 years old, in calf
2 heifers, 18 months old
1 red bull, 1 year old
2 wide tired wagons, 1 new
1 2-seated buggy, new last year
1 single buggy, in fine condition
1 new top buggy
1 spring cutter, nearly new
2 pairs bobsleighs
2 hay racks
3 sets work harness
1 set double buggy harness
1 single harness
double wagon box with spring seat
5-foot Deering mower
10-foot Deering hay rake
1 12-shoe drill
1 3-section wood harrow
1 14-inch walking plow
1 500-lb De Laval cream separator, good as new about 2 dozen chickens
about 15 tons of hay, if wanted
all small farm implements and other articles too numerous to mention.

Sale begins at 11 o'clock A. M. sharp. Free Lunch at noon.

TERMS: All Sums of $10 and under, Cash. On sums over $10 time will be given until Nov. 1st, 1914, on approved bankable paper.

Mrs. Hanna Adolphson

CHAS. W. LATTA, Auctioneer B. L. BACKE, Clerk

Reierson's Revenge

HELP! HELL-UP!

R. Reierson has discontinued his subscription to The Northern Light. What Shall we do?

In two years and four months since this paper was started, Mr. Reierson has spent with us the princely sum of $2.65 altogether for subscription, advertising, etc., and now he's stopped his paper, by heck.

We will probably have lots of nice things to say about him later on—if we can poss'bly survive without his support—and how is he going to know? Of course, he may borrow The Northern Light and read it, but surely a man of his business prominence and independence wouldn't stoop to join the Borrower's Club.

Reierson seems to be pretty sore over an item we published last week concerning alcohol as an advertising medium, and he says—. But isn't it nice that people don't pay much attention to what he says anyway?

Another Pioneer Called

Arne J. Folden, a pioneer resident of this section died at his home in Section 1 of Newfolden township on October 26th after quite a long illness with a complication of diseases. He was in the 76th year of his age and is survived by his widow and four sons, T. B., Arnold and John Folden who reside near here, and James who is located at Sand Point, Idaho. Deceased came to this country from Norway in 1883, and resided at Calumet, Mich., for about five years when he came and homesteaded the land where he has lived ever since. He was a good citizen and highly respected by all who knew him.

The funeral was held on the 29th Pastor Gilseth officiating, and the remains were interred in the Newfolden cemetery.

Holt School Notes

(Primary Department)

Last Friday afternoon those in the Primary Department were invited over to Miss Hanson's room for a little Halloween party. Stories were told, and the little people dramatized the "Gingerbread man;" after which there was ducking for apples and a peanut hunt. One little Kindergartener says: "Can't we have a party every Friday?"

There are now 28 pupils enrolled. Oscar and Edith Swanson have stopped, as they are going to move away.

Teacher—"What is a greenhouse?"
Pupil—"It's a house painted green."

PROFESSIONAL JEALOUSY.

Gibbs—Dr. Smart says it requires lots of patience to run a motor car.

Dibbs—Well, he's got the patients.
—Christian Science Monitor.

ONLY SAFE WAY.

Griggs—Can you keep a secret from your wife?

Briggs—Not unless I keep secret the fact that I have one.

HANDLING CUBIST ART.

Knicker—Did you turn the picture to the wall?

Bocker—It was a cubist affair, so we turned the wall to the picture.

ALWAYS WHAT HAPPENS.

"What happened to his business when he let it run down?"

"The last I heard of it, the bankruptcy court was winding it up."

ALL BILLS PAID ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH MONTH

Handing Out Checks

On the first of the month is a much more dignified method of paying bills than counting out the money. Much quicker too, and there is no possibility of paying out too much. Moral: Open an account at this bank and reap all these and other advantages.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

Sunday school in the Holt school house Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Arthur Jacobson left on Saturday for Grand Forks where he will visit with friends.

P. A. Risberg is suffering from another attack of eye trouble and his sight has been so bad for several days that he has not been able to do any active work.

The Cobweb Basket Social at the Woodman Hall Saturday evening was indeed a complete success and the evening was replete with fun and frolic which everybody enjoyed. The Misses Hanson and Tharaldson, teachers in the local school, are entitled to great credit for carrying out the entertainment so successfully.

Oscar Olson and wife and Martin Olson arrived Wednesday from Mondak, Mont., to spend a couple of weeks visiting with the Jahr brothers and looking over the country. They bame from the country where irrigation is carried on and seem to be quite favorably impressed with the looks of a place where there is abundant rainfall every year.

Dr. F. H. Gambell was up from Thief River Falls Wednesday on professional business. He was accompanied in his car by Theo. Quale, who recently located at Thief River Falls to engage in the practise of law. Mr. Quale has been a successful lawyer for many years and believes that the territory around Thief River Falls is bound to develop so as to make that city one of the the best in the northwest.

Notice For Publication.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olof Kristofferson Viken, of Germantown, Minn., who, on April 8, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07664, for SE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn, on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Gunder Thompson Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., who, on Nov. 13, 1911 made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06875, for Lots 1, 2, S 1-2 NE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olof K. Viken, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

EMPIRE CREAM Separators
REMARKABLE FOR SMOOTH, QUIET EASY RUNNING

Used by Three Generations

It pays to be particular when buying a cream separator. The whole value of the machine depends on quality.

Buyers are looking for quality, too. But they don't look for it by squinting through a magnifying glass, or by feeling the parts to see if they are smooth. They try the crank to see how the machine "feels" and "sounds" when it runs. They want to know how long the machine has been on the market.

Many young farmers are buying EMPIRES today, both because they like EMPIRES and because their fathers and grandfathers used EMPIRES before them.

Come in and see the EMPIRE, or ask to have it out to your place.

S. S. KOLDEN & CO.

CARRANZA HAS WAY TO SECURE PEACE

OLD CONSTITUTIONALIST LEADER TELLS U. S. HOW TO EXPELL HUERTA.

WOULD LIFT ARMS EMBARGO

Dr. Tupper, Bryan's Friend, Bringing Message to Washington—Will Fight Until One Side Is Winner.

Nogales, Sonora, Nov. 4.—Dr. Henry Allen Tupper of the International Peace Forum and generally regarded here as the personal envoy of Secretary Bryan, has left here for Washington with an official message to President Wilson from General Carranza. The message tells Wilson the quickest way to Mexican peace is for the United States merely to accord to the Constitutionalists the right to import arms from the United States.

Situation Sized Up.

The struggle in Mexico will continue until one side or the other is beaten into helplessness, the statement asserts. It further declares that the Constitutionalists are confident of wiping out Dictator Huerta and his partisans if the embargo on arms is lifted. Otherwise, the struggle may continue indefinitely.

HARRIS & EWING

General Carranza

Carranza came here from Hermosillo, the rebel capital, with Tupper, who had been with him there for several days. The rebel chief intended to first ask recognition from the American government, but after conferences with advisors determined to confine requests to the lifting of the ban on the shipment of arms.

Tupper was quoted before he left for Washington as saying he believed President Wilson would soon grant the plea of the Revolutionists and permit them to import arms in the interest of early peace.

Americans Shoot Mexican.

Los Angeles.—As an indirect result of what was said by police to be bitter anti-American feeling among the thousands of Mexicans in Los Angeles, Adolfo Moreno, a Mexican, was shot and killed here by Albert C. Staples, a policeman who had been fired upon by Moreno and four ocpanions.

Officers went through the Mexican quarter and took 50 Mexicans to jail, where they were seached for weapons. Thirty were released and 20 held.

Washington Program Unchanged

Washington.—Although every official of the United States government has been cautioned to maintain silence while the plans of the Washington administration for solving the Mexican problem are worked out, it became known from many well informed sources today that a supreme effort is being made to bring about General Victorano Huerta's retirement from the provisional presidency of Mexico.

W. N. U. FIGHTS FREIGT RATE

Say Railroads Are Charging Customers Too Much on Plate Shipments.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Freight rates on sterotype plates for newspapers were attacked before the inter-state commerce commission by the Western Newspaper Union of Chicago, with branches in many important cities. The present rates are alleged to be excessive and unreasonable.

Suffragists in Big Parade.

New York, Nov. 3.—Suffragists of Greater New York, reinforced by many out of town allies, marched two and a half miles through the streets of Brooklyn as a pre-election demonstration of their strength. Seven thousand women and 1,500 men were assigned places in the line of march. Headed by an exact copy of the famous liberty bell, this one with its tongue tied until woman suffrage has become general throughout the United States, the parade started for Grant square.

INCOME TAX LAW IS NOW EFFECTIVE

WASHINGTON TREASURY OFFICIALS RECEIVE THOUSANDS OF INQUIRIES.

EVEN WALL STREET AT SEA

Claims Not to Know How Collections Are to Be Made—Expresses Confidence All Will Work Out Well in End.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Although millions are expected to flow into the public treasury through the operation of the income tax law which now becomes operative, much confusion prevails throughout the country as to how and at what sources the tax is to be collected. Reports reached Washington that even Wall Street men professed to be hopelessly at sea as to the intent and scope of the law.

While it is recognized here that the income tax is the most revolutionary power conferred in the American government since its foundation, optimists are predominant who say that all will be working well in a few weeks.

Optimists Are Predominant.

Although an income tax has been agitated for many years, and its existence was assured by an amendment to the constitution agreed to by the necessary number of states early last spring, its collection by a government which has not tried it will strain the resources of the fertile minds in the treasury department and will be accompanied, it is not doubted here, with a thousand complications not now foreseen.

Ever since President Wilson signed the tariff bill with its income tax provision, early in the present month, the machinery of the treasury department has been at work upon the regulations that are to govern the collection of the tax. It has been a task that has kept Assistant Secretary Williams, Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue Speer and other officials constantly at work and the end is not in sight.

Many Inquiries Received.

Mr. Williams said that the regulations of the department were not difficult to understand, but in this some other officials in the department do not agree. Thousands of letters and telegrams, bringing up for settlement points in the new law, have poured into the department.

They have come from every conceivable source and added to the labor of making regulations, have made the task of the experts one not to be envied.

No one in the treasury department believes that the regulations so far formulated are perfect, but they will stand until some one proves that they should be changed, and officials are not inclined to believe that expert lawyers employed by big corporations particularly concerned with collection "at the source" of income on bonds, mortgages, salaries, etc., have failed to understand them.

Since the administration began framing an income tax law the talk has gone the rounds in Washington that it would lead to many fights in the courts, and as the tariff bill progressed through the senate, many a senator quietly expressed the view that every line of the income tax provision was subject for a lawsuit.

Business to Get Money.

With the lawsuits the treasury department has little concern. It is not looking for them; its business is to go out and get the money, and that is what it is trying to do. Officials believe that the regulations they have put out are framed, not with an idea of causing trouble to those who must pay, but in the only way they could be framed to safeguard the government's interest. The man in the street who knows he makes more than $3,000 a year and who is personally responsible for his share of the tax, does not need to begin worrying about his payment for the present. The operation of the law affects only banks, corporations and others responsible for payment on bonds, mortgages, salaries, etc.

For such part as they are bound by the law they must withhold "at the source." The amounts so withheld are not payable immediately to the treasury, and the money from the tax will not begin owing into the treasury vaults for many months.

The tax for 1913 is to be collected from March 1, shortly after the constitutional amendment was ratified, until Dec. 31. Withholding agents, however, must begin deducting the normal tax of one per cent at the source now, withholding it for November and December.

Vice President Going West.

Chicago, Nov. 3.—Vice President and Mrs. Marshall passed a few hours here on their way to spend a few weeks at the home of relatives near Phoenix, Ariz. Speaking of the currency bill, the vice president asserted that the senate cannot be forced to work, but when it gets started it works rapidly. "My impression is that so far as the underlying principles are concerned, the bill is satisfactory to members of the senate committee and to the public," Mr. Marshall sai'

AWFUL SCOURGE OF WAR IN MEXICO

Whether it be Federalists or Constitutionalists that pass through a Mexican town, the result is the same—death and devastation. This photograph was taken in the city of Torreon just after the revolutionists had attacked the place and depicts vividly the horrors of the civil war that is going on below the Rio Grande.

MAROONED FOR TEN YEARS

ESKIMO PARTY IS FINALLY RESCUED FROM DRIFT ICE.

Remarkable Story of Adventures of Ten Persons Received at Winnipeg From Frozen North.

Winnipeg, Man., Nov. 1.—Hudson Bay officials here received meagre reports from the North that a party of Eskimos numbering, it is said, ten persons, were rescued from an island in the mouth of Hudson bay, upon which they had been marooned for a period of 10 years.

The Eskimos were caught off shore on drift ice and carried, after weeks of hardships, to the island upon which they were found. This island has been steadfastly avoided by vessels because of reefs and magnetic disturbances which affected ships' compasses. It is over 100 miles off the mainland.

The Eskimos had lived during all the period of their forced stay on fish and seal meat.

Several children were born during the decade of their imprisonment and some of the party had died.

Those who were rescued seemed all to be in good health.

DISASTROUS PRANK OF BOY

Lad Causes Flood—Traffic Is Stopped for Hours and Many Fine Clothes Ruined.

Kansas City, Nov. 3.—The old story, beginning "for want of a nail," etc., was re-enacted here when the Hallowe'en prank of one small boy caused a flood, a call for the police, the fire department and the water department, closed a saloon temporarily, ruined four dresses and two suits of clothes, and tied up traffic on two downtown streets for half an hour.

The boy spied an empty telephone cable spool in a street. A little block of wood held it from rolling down hill. The boy waited until he was sure there were no policemen watching, then removed the little block of wood and ran.

The big spool started slowly at first, but as its diameter, and weighing 1,000 pounds, rolled on, its momentum increased until it was traveling 30 miles an hour. Just before reaching a crowded thoroughfare it crashed into a water plug.

The plug was broken at its base and the rushing water shot into the door of a saloon. Four girls were within ten feet of the plug. Their dresses were ruined. Two men also were soaked.

Seven Syrians Are Killed.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 3.—Seven people, Syrians, are believed to be dead as a result of an explosion in Loveland's five-story brick warehouse in North Front street, when the walls of the building toppled on the roofs of two adjoining wooden tenement houses. The cause of the explosion has not been determined. The building took fire.

Pepper Thrown on Asquith.

London, Nov. 3.—Suffragists attacked Premier Asquith again, throwing pepper on him and trying to get at him with whips as he motored from Larbert house to Stirling.

Hunters Find Skeleton of Man.

Washburn, Wis., Nov. 3.—Washburn police are confronted with what they believe to be a murder mystery. A skeleton of a man was found by Peter Bolander and A. Einsfeld of Chicago, who were hunting two miles from here. Indications are that the body had lain in the woods for about a year. Fifteen gashes on the skull bones such as might be made with a knife were apparent. Gold and silver fillings in the teeth were found near the skeleton.

MRS. EATON GOES HOME FREE WOMAN

JURY HOLDS HER NOT GUILTY OF CHARGE OF MURDER.

IMPRISONED FOR 7 MONTHS

Will Keep Chickens and Bees and Sell Eggs and Honey—Has Written a Book While in Jail.

Plymouth, Mass., Nov. 1.—Mrs. Jennie May Eaton has gone home to keep chickens and bees and sell eggs and honey. She has written a book while in jail.

A Free Woman.

After seven months' imprisonment on a charge of having murdered her husband, Rear Admiral Joseph G. Eaton, by poison, Mrs. Eaton stepped from the courthouse here a free woman.

Mrs. Eaton received the verdict calmly. She was standing between her counsel when the verdict was read and then sank wearily into her chair. Judge Aiken had warned the spectators against any demonstration. A faint cheer broke from the crowd, however, which was cut short by the pounding of a gavel in the hands of a deputy.

Crowd For Defendant.

The all-night session of the jury had led to reports of a disagreement and much uneasiness was shown in the crowd, which was openly in sympathy with the accused woman. Many believed it was the record of Mrs. Eaton as a wife, mother and daughter, as told by herself on the witness stand, which had the greatest influence in causing her acquittal.

Although the prosecution was at no time able to prove a direct case against Mrs. Eaton, the circumstantial evidence was damaging when Attorney Morse announced that Mrs. Eaton would take the stand. Failing conviction, the prosecution hoped to prove Mrs. Eaton insane. On the stand she was clear-headed, calm and convincing. She developed the story of her life as a life of service to her husband and her daughters, and withstood all attempts by the prosecution to involve her in contradictions.

After Mrs. Eaton had left the courtroom the jurors through their foreman asked that they might be allowed to meet her. The permission was granted and they formed a semi-circle in the corridor. Mrs. Eaton came out from the judge's lobby and thanked them individually. As she did so she burst into tears for the first time since her trial started. A little later Mrs. Eaton gave out the following statement:

"I am glad most of all because of my aged mother and my lame child, both of whom need me."

The accused woman freed of the charge of murder confided her ambitions to a friend as she left for her home. "Since I have been in the Plymouth jail I have written the story of my life," she said. "It is stranger than any novel of fiction."

Big Four Embezzler Freed.

Columbus, O., Nov. 1.—After serving about four years, Charles L. Warriner, former treasurer of the Big Four Railroad company, has been released from the penitentiary. He left at once for his home in Cincinnati where he proposes to resume his residence temporarily. Later he expects to engage in fruit farming in some rural community. Warriner was sentenced at Cincinnati in 1910 to six years' imprisonment for the embezzlement of $643,000 of the Big Four's funds.

WILSON PLAN IS DEFEATED

FOUR FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS PLAN IS ADOPTED.

The Original Idea Was for Twelve Branch Concerns in the Nation.

Washington, Nov. 3.—The Wilson administration was defeated when the senate banking and currency committee tentatively agreed upon four regional reserve banks for the proposed new currency system, with a provision that after two years the federal reserve board may add as many additional banks as it deems necessary, not exceeding 12.

The pending bill fixes the number at 12 and it has been understood that the administration would not consent to have it reduced below nine.

The sharp reduction in the number of reserve banks was the first radical amendment the committee has agreed upon and it was earnestly opposed by the administration supporters in the committee. Senators Reed and Hitchcock, however, voted with the five Republicans for the reduction, leaving but five Democrats behind the administration proposal.

The White House was silent concerning the committee's action, but it has been generally supposed that the president was vigorously opposed to cutting the number below nine.

The committee has pending still the proposal to abandon the administration regional plan and to create a government-controlled central bank. There is also pending Senator Reed's proposal that the unification of the regional banks be accomplished by the creation of a government clearing house which would act as a reserve reservoir.

The question of the capitalization and stock ownership of the proposed regional banks was taken up immediately after the number was tentatively fixed, but no decision was reached in the matter.

The administration supporters contested every step in the reduction in the number of the regional banks. Two of them voted to retain the 12 and three voted for 10 banks. The proposal to fix the number at eight was defeated seven to five, and by the same vote the number was fixed at four. The proposition to insert the provise that the federal reserve board might increase the number to 12 after two years, was voted into the bill with only two members opposing it.

The committee took a recess to allow various members to go to their homes for elections, consideration of the bill going over until Wednesday.

Railway Men Pass Substitute.

Washington, Nov. 1.—Another determined effort to have the so-called "states rights" resolution adopted by the National Association of Railway Commissioners resulted in the passage of a substitute offered by Commissioner Esselman of California. Without going into constitutional questions he declared that "The sense of this association is that no legislation by congress is at this time necessary or desirable attempting to enlarge the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission over commerce purely intra-state."

Heroes Get About $100,000.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 3. — Nearly $100,000 is disbursed to heroes or their relatives by the Carnegie Hero Fund commission in its report just made public. The commission distributes immediately $91,000 in awards of $2,000 and $1,000. There are 16 awards of $2,000 and 39 of $1,000. The remainder are in awards consisting of pensions ranging from $5 to $35 a month, and in cash sums under $1,000. In every award a medal is given, either bronze or silver. In a few instances only a medal was awarded.

CONGRESS COLONY ABOUT DEPLETED

NATIONAL LEGISLATORS ARE AT HOME FOR THE COMING ELECTIONS.

MONEY BILL IN SENATE SOON

Measure Likely to Go Before Upper House By Next Monday—Some Predictions in Contests of Country.

Washington, Nov. 4.—Elections in many parts of the nation this week has depleted the legislative colony in the capital for a few days. Even the banking and currency committee will not meet until Wednesday.

Started Leaving Sunday.

The members of congress called away from the capital by elections at home began leaving Sunday, and until Wednesday hardly a handful of legislators will be in Washington. The house will not meet until Wednesday and the senate has adjourned until Thursday.

The administration supporters in the banking and currency committees are hopeful that the committee will be able to agree upon a report by the end of this week. The president has expressed the opinion that the currency bill should be in the senate by next Monday and an effort will be made to fulfill his expectations.

Mitchel Picked to Win.

New York.—"I have no intention of retiring," said Charles F. Murphy, big chief of Tammany hall, adding, "We will win in this city by 150,000 majority."

"We will win by 150,000," asserted Robert Adamson, campaign manager for John Purroy Mitchel, fusion candidate for mayor.

With these two predictions offsetting each other, the odds in the Wall Street betting ring favor Mitchel.

John A. Hennessy, graft investigator of the deposed governor, William Sulzer, and a leader in the fusion campaign, expected to continue till the twelfth hour his bitter assaults on Murphy, McCall and the Democratic organization.

Many Meetings Held.

Hennessy spoke at many meetings during the afternoon and evening. Sulzer made a final tour of the East Side in his two-fold purpose of blighting the aspirations of leaders in his removal from office and of insuring his own election to the assembly on the Progressive ticket from the Sixth district.

Upon this election verdict rests control of New York City, its officeholders and its vast expenditures amounting into hundreds of millions of dollars and its thousands of contracts yet to be awarded for the many city improvements planned and in contemplation. Chief among these are contracts for building portions of the $300,000,000 subway.

Senate Toga is Maryland Prize.

Baltimore, Md.—Maryland is selecting a United States senator to fill the unexpired term of the late Isidor Rayner, a state comptroller clerk of the court of appeals and members of the legislature. In the Third congressional district there is a special election for a successor to the late Representative George Konig.

The issues are local, although the temperance question was injected into the campaign for the United States senatorship by the Anti-Saloon league, which is opposing State Senator Blair Lee, the Democratic nominee, on the ground that Lee helped defeat the state-wide local option bill in the last legislature.

8,000,000 Acres Is Involved.

St. Paul.—That the state of Minnesota has violated the conditions under which 8,000,000 acres of swamp land have been patented to the state by the federal government is the complaint made to Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior. The complaint is signed by President C. M. King and Secretary W. R. Mackenzie of the Northern Minnesota Development association. They ask Secretary Lane to refrain from patenting an additional 500,000 acres of swamp land to the state, until he has made an investigation.

Hunter Kills Only Daughter.

Penn Yann, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Ruth Rowley, 14 years old and only child of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Rowley, was killed by an accidental discharge of her father's shotgun. With Mr. Rowley, the girl was in a boat on Keuka lake, fishing and duck shooting. Rowley had shot into a flock of birds and one fell. Reloading the gun, Rowley handed it to his daughter and pulled toward the floating prize. As the girl pushed the gun away from her it exploded.

Hebrew Council Organized.

New York, Nov. 4. — The Young Men's Hebrew council was organized here by delegates from Young Men's Hebrew associations and other organizations in all parts of the country. The council is a national body that is to meet triennially. It was announced that an assured income amounting to $62,500, covering five years, had been pledged. A board of five trustees will invest and care for endowments and bequests. Dr. Cyrus Adler of Philadelphia and Jacob H. Schiff of New York are members.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

By Timely Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Here is her own statement.

Cary, Maine.—"I feel it a duty I owe to all suffering women to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. One year ago I found myself a terrible sufferer. I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached, I had no appetite and was so nervous I could not sleep, then I would be so tired mornings that I could scarcely get around. It seemed almost impossible to move or do a bit of work and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation. I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and was fat and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. I shall always feel that I owe my good health to your medicine."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Cary, Maine.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES

Men's $2.00 $2.50 $3.00 $3.50 $4 & $4.50

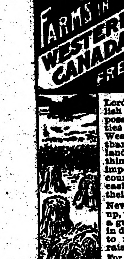
Women's $2.50 $3 & $4

Misses, Boys, Children $1.50 $1.75 $2 $2.50 $3

Began business in 1876; now the largest maker of $3, $3.50 and $4 shoes in the world.

Over 150 styles, kinds and shapes, in all leathers, sizes and widths.

W. L. Douglas shoes are famous everywhere. Why not give them a trial? The value you will receive for your money will astonish you. If you would visit our factory, the largest in the world under one roof, and see how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would understand why they are warranted to look better, fit better, hold their shape and wear longer than other makes for the price. Your dealer should supply you with them. Don't take a substitute. None genuine without W. L. Douglas name stamped on bottom. Shoes sent everywhere, direct from factory, by Parcel Post, postage free. Now is the time to begin to save money on your footwear. Write today for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail. W. L. DOUGLAS, 210 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.



160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says: "The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

For illustrated literature and reduced railway rates, apply to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.

Constipation Vanishes Forever

Prompt Relief—Permanent Cure CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS never fail. Purely vegetable—act surely but gently on the liver. Stop after dinner distress—cure indigestion, improve the complexion, brighten the eyes. SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

Fargo Directory

Shotwell Floral Co. Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

EARN $25 TO $100 A WEEK

Young Men Wanted to fill the demand of Automobile and Gas Traction Engineers. "Now is the time to act." Write for free information. Fargo School of Automobile & Gas Engineering, 1018 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakota

Queer Customs in Mexico

STREET SCENE IN MEXICO CITY.

A BRISK agent from the United States banged into a Mexico City hotel and voicefully asked the price of rooms. "Five dollars a day," the manager replied, without looking up from the newspaper he was reading behind his desk.

"But there will be seventy-five persons in my party," the agent said, "and we shall need fifty rooms at least."

"If you want fifty rooms the rate will be $6 a day," the manager answered as he arose, walked away and ended the dialogue.

The Mexican way in most of the visible events of life is not like the American way. Many statesmen and some diplomats may be ignorant of that fundamental truth.

A professional interviewer, jaded and irritable by 1,220 miles of travel from the Texas frontier, covered with sand and full of it even to his shoes, dragged himself out of a cab in front of one of the best hotels in Mexico City at seven o'clock in the morning.

The interviewer, this being his first journey into the country, expected he would be met at the curb by a porter. No porter was there. The interviewer, bearing his own baggage, entered a huge door and found himself in a large court. In a far corner he saw a black man in a blue coat.

Yes, he was the porter, but he was playing with a dog and didn't know anything about rooms. The manager would appear by and my. For thirty minutes the indignant interviewer walked the patio. He did not exist so far as the Indian porter was concerned.

The interviewer was a nervous American and he kept busy. He moved his baggage several times and tried to read the Spanish signs hanging on the wall. Also he wanted to be noticed.

Refused to See American.

A thin little man leisurely descended the stairs at eight o'clock. He wore an overcoat and a white silk muffler. Mexico City is cold at night, but the days are warm and brilliant.

The thin little man, almost as dark as the porter, did not look at the American. He was smoking a cigarette and seemingly had eaten his breakfast. Anyway, he appeared serene and satisfied. Presently he went behind the counter, slowly took off his overcoat and muffler, opened an account book and began to write.

The interviewer, determined to make a business-like demonstration, grabbed up his bags and rapidly walked to the counter. He whacked the stone floor with his heels, dropped his bags and coughed. The little man never looked up.

"I should like to see the manager," the interviewer said in a voice of peace, but with the heart of a warrior.

"I am the manager," the thin man answered in English that easily could have sounded better. His face was without interest or expression, and he continued to write and utterly by look to ignore the interviewer.

"I want a room," the American said, roaring inwardly, but concealing his anger.

The dark little man put down his pen, lighted another cigarette and walked to the blackboard which hung in the court near the large door. Written thereon in chalk were the numbers of the rooms and opposite the numbers were the names of the persons occupying the rooms.

Having read the blackboard up and down and down and up, the thin little man said: "I have no room."

"But," the American continued, "No. 85 appears to be unoccupied; so does 96, so does 107 and so does 125."

"Those are store rooms," the Mexican replied. He walked back to his desk. He had not looked at the American; he never did look at him.

"But can't I have a room some time during the day?" the interviewer asked.

"I don't know," the manager answered. He was again writing in his account book, and the porter was still playing with the dog.

The American gathered up his property and passed out into the street. He had learned his first American lesson in Mexico City. That is where John Lind—"Mr. Confidential Agent," as Gamboa, foreign minister, disdainfully calls him—got his.

Old Spanish Customs.

Nothing in Mexico is quite like anything in the United States. The customs of Spain reach back into the years—they are rooted far and deep in the social laws and the lives of the people. Even the mountains of the parched north are strange to northern eyes—mountains hung in fleeting vapors, now black, now blue, but always harsh and inhospitable.

For hundreds of miles the traveler sees nothing but cactuses—which look like pillars made of immense green pancakes edge to edge—and struggling bushes. As one sinks away into the south little round stacks of grain appear at the rims of irrigated fields. Walls three or four feet high, constructed of spongy, volcanic rock, slip over the parched plains and, straight as a surveyor's line, climb the dreary mountains and are lost beyond.

In front of huts built of clay or rotten railroad ties are old tin cans containing flowers. The Aztecs loved flowers, though they ate the hearts of their enemies. There are also birds in cages, fashioned out of reeds. Presently cattle are seen in great droves and a high hill is made white with thousands of goats. Wide ditches are full of muddy water and dark men in white cotton shirts, their trousers rolled to the hips, let in the flood or shut it out with long-handled shovels.

A gray wall is thrown around the clay houses, barn and other buildings of a planter. There is a church behind the wall and the Spanish priest lives on what the planter and his workmen give him for marrying them when living and burying them when head. The lord of the flat acres is a baron, passed into this from another generation, and he has his vassals, his chapel and his strong drink.

The train stops. There are a dozen square huts made of large bricks, hardened in the sun. Every floorless hut has a door and two windows without glass. Men who work on the railroad and keep the tracks in repair live here. Red pigs, black pigs, dogs and chickens walk into the huts and come out again.

Women, men and boys squat on the ground and eat something from crude earthen pots.

Just About the Limit.

"I'm so blamed mad I can't see straight," snorted Fansome.

"What rubbed you the wrong way?" asked Mr. Gadders.

"I met Snoddles on the street just now."

"Well?"

"And when I asked him if he was keeping up with the world series he asked me, 'The world series of what?'"

ANOTHER SIDE TO MATTER

One Man Has Discovered That Offering Floral Bouquets to the Living Is Not All Joy.

"There has been a good deal in the paragraph section of our exchanges for some weeks to the effect that you should give the bouquets now; not wait to lay them on the coffin lid," says Tom Thompson in the Howard Courant. Ella Wheeler before she was a Wilcox wrote a poem on that theme; Chancellor Bradford at the chautauqua dinged it into us, and most of us have been affected by it. But say, my brother-sister, have you tried it yet? I have—twice. First, I tried it on a very dear friend of the other sex, and she began to get nervous like she thought I was trying to flirt with her. Then I quit, for I am pre-eminently no flirt. Next I tried it on a brother in my lodge and Sunday school, and he shied off like he expected me to ask him for a loan. So after this I shall water my flower beds and raise nice bouquets for funeral occasions exclusively. Very few people know how to receive floral offerings, anyway.—Kansas City Star.

Only William.

At a singing contest at Frankfort recently Kaiser Wilhelm, who attended, was served by several high-school boys as pages. According to Jugend, he was attracted by the bright face of one of them and asked his name.

"Korner, your majesty," said the boy.

"And your first name is Theodore?" said the emperor, thinking of the patriot-poet Theodore Korner, whose centennial year this is.

"I'm sorry," replied the uncourtierlike youngster, "but it's only Wilhelm."

When Kaiser Wilhelm broke into a hearty laugh at the answer the page realized his missed opportunity.—New York Evening Post.

JUDGE CURED, HEART TROUBLE.

I took about 6 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills for Heart Trouble from which I had suffered for 5 years. I had dizzy spells, my eyes puffed, my breath was short and I had chills and backache. I took the pills about a year ago and have had no return of the palpitations. Am now 63 years old, able to do lots of manual labor, am well and hearty, and weigh about 200 pounds. I feel very grateful that I found Dodds Kidney Pills and you may publish this letter if you wish. I am serving my third term as Probate Judge of Gray Co. Yours truly, PHILIP MILLER, Cimarron, Kan.

Judge Miller.

Correspond with Judge Miller about this wonderful remedy.

Dodds Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodds Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free. Adv.

Peculiar Belief.

Two centuries have passed since the Scottish judge Lord Monboddo was born. In his "Origin and Progress of Language" he argued that human beings should be studied like other animals; but this doctrine seemed to the contemporaries of Dr. Johnson so ridiculous that the wags based many a jest upon it. His belief that men got rid of their tails by sitting upon them would now scarcely raise a smile among anthropologists. Among his more startling proposition was the earnestly maintained one that the ourang-outang "was a class of the human species, and that its want of speech was merely accidental."

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

The Safe Ones to "Kid."

"That joke you printed about your wife—did it make her angry?"

"Bless you, no. I spent a half hour trying to explain the point of it to her and finally got angry myself."

Raises Another Fine Legal Point.

Another fine technical point for the able lawyers to quibble over has been raised in a New York appellate court. It is this: "Is a colt a horse?"

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

Scale.

Gabe—He boasts that he does business on a large scale.

Steve—Yes, he's a coal dealer.

Coughs vanish in a night. Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops soothe the throat, effecting a speedy cure—5c at all Druggists.

Every married man knows that it takes but one to make a quarrel.

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

What So Precious As a Healthy Baby?

Every Youngster Can Have Fine Digestion if Given a Good Baby Laxative.

In spite of the greatest personal care and the most intelligent attention to diet, babies and children will become constipated, and it is a fact that constipation and indigestion have wrecked many a young life. To start with a good digestive apparatus is to start life without handicap.

But, as we cannot all have perfect working bowels, we must do the next best thing and acquire them, or train them to become healthy. This can be done by the use of a laxative-tonic very highly recommended by a great many mothers. The remedy is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and has been on the market for two generations. It can be bought conveniently at any drug store for fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, and those who are already convinced of its merits buy the dollar size.

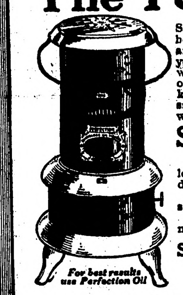
Its mildness makes it the ideal medicine for children, and it is also very pleasant to the taste. It is sure in its effect, and genuinely harmless. Very little of it is required and its frequent use does not cause it to lose its effect, as is the case with so many other remedies.

Thousands can testify to its merits in constipation, indigestion, billousness, sick headaches, etc., among them reliable people like Mrs. James R. Rouse, of Marinette, Wis. Her little son Howard was fifteen months old last April, but he was sick with bowel trouble from birth and suffered intensely. Since Mrs. Rouse has been giving him Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin all trouble has disappeared and the boy is becoming robust.

HOWARD ROUSE

Thousands keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it from infancy to old age. The users of Syrup Pepsin have learned to avoid cathartics, salts, mineral waters, pills and other harsh remedies for they do but temporary good and are a shock to any delicate system.

Families wishing to try a free sample bottle can obtain it postpaid by addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. A postal card with your name and address on it will do.



For best results use Perfection Oil

King of Oil Heaters!

This is the heater that has won the throne through the popular vote of the people.

King of Oil Heaters—because the most pleasurable to own and the most economical to maintain.

Approved by over half a million families in the United States last year—enjoying twice the sale of any other. Because it is a practical necessity and a positive economy. And by far, the best of its kind.

The "Perfection"

Smokeless Oil Heater is needed in every home, no matter what its heating facilities are. Handy to carry from room to room, you can have heat where you want it, when you want it. And in the mild days of Fall and Spring it saves the cost of keeping up furnace fires. It will save its small cost during the first cold spell of winter.

Smokeless! Odorless!

Ten hours' warmth from one single gallon of oil. No smoke, no odor and no danger to contend with.

An ornament to any room and a necessity in every home.

Ask your dealer to show you the various models. Descriptive booklet mailed free.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(AN INDIANA CORPORATION)
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Rheumatism, Sprains Backache, Neuralgia

"Yes, daughter, that's good stuff. The pain in my back is all gone—I never saw anything work as quickly as Sloan's Liniment." Thousands of grateful people voice the same opinion. Here's the proof.

Relieved Pain in Back.

"I was troubled with a very bad pain in my back for some time. I went to a doctor but he did not do me any good, so I purchased a bottle of Sloan's Liniment, and now I am a well woman. I always keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment in the house."—Miss Matilda Cotton, 364 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Sciatic Rheumatism.

"We have used Sloan's Liniment for over six years and found it the best we ever used. When my wife had sciatic rheumatism the only thing that did her any good was Sloan's Liniment. We cannot praise it highly enough."—Mr. Perigo, Des Moines, Iowa.

Sprained Ankle Relieved.

"I was ill for a long time with a severely sprained ankle. I got a bottle of Sloan's Liniment and now I am able to be about and can walk a great deal. I write this because I think you deserve a lot of credit for putting such a fine Liniment on the market and I shall always take time to recommend Dr. Sloan's Liniment."—Mrs. Chas. Rouse, Baltimore, Md.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

At all Dealers—25c., 50c. and $1.00. Sloan's instructive book on horses, cattle, hogs and poultry sent free.

Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan, Inc. • • • • Boston, Mass.

HIDES AND FURS

We positively give more valuable illustrated information relative to Hides and Furs, than any other house in the world. We pay Highest Cash Prices for Hides, Furs, Pelts, etc., and make prompt returns for each shipment. We sell trappers' supplies very cheap. Write for circular, shipping tags, Illustrated Trap Book, Catalogue, etc. It's free. NORTHWESTERN HIDE & FUR CO., Established 1890. Minneapolis, Minn.

FREE TO ALL SUFFERERS.

If you feel 'OUT OF SORTS' 'RUN DOWN' or 'GOT THE BLUES' SUFFER from KIDNEY, BLADDER, NERVOUS DISEASES, CHRONIC WEAKNESSES, ULCERS, SKIN ERUPTIONS, PILES, write for my FREE book. THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE MEDICAL BOOK EVER WRITTEN, IT TELLS ALL about these DISEASES and the REMARKABLE CURES EFFECTED by THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. No1. No2. No3. THERAPION & you can decide for yourself if it's the remedy for YOUR OWN ailment. Don't send a cent. Absolutely FREE. No 'followup' circulars. DR. LECLERC MED. CO., HAVERSTOCK RD, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, ENG.

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES

Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. WRITE FOR FREE booklet, calendar, blotters, etc. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

KING OF SIAM WANTS AN AMERICAN WIFE

KING OF SIAM AND ROYAL BEARERS

KING IN MILITARY UNIFORM

KING IN ROYAL ROBES

AN UP-TO-DATE SIAMESE WOMAN

A RECENTLY returned visitor to the Orient is authority for the statement that the "King of Siam will marry no one but an American." The report is more illuminating than is at first remembered. When the young king—then crown prince—after his years of European education and American travel returned home to take up the serious study of his father's kingdom it was thought that as a matter of course he would follow the custom of the royal house to which he belonged and marry. But, greatly to the astonishment of the entire realm, this he flatly refused to do, and not even his father's kingly "requests" could change his decision. Now, marriage by a Siamese monarch means not the simple taking of one wife, but the complicated and wholesome absorption of a hundred. His late majesty King Chulalongkorn had three wives when he was crown prince and added 97 others to his household before ascending the throne, and his father, the great Mongkut, claimed many hundreds of wives. So when young Prince Vajiravudh turned his back upon the beauties of the court and would have none of them he established a precedent of celibacy unheard of in his domain since "before time was."

There was never a suspicion of scandal connected with the prince, either while he was at Sandhurst or at Christ college, Oxford; nor during his many visits to Berlin, Paris, Madrid, Vienna or London—covering many years of his most impressionable age—not even a word during his flying trip through the states and if he went back to his Asiatic throne leaving his heart here or in Europe the world has never been notified of the matter nor has any particular caretaker been singled out as the possible happy custodian of the royal gift.

But, should this rumor have more than the usual claim for credence—should his majesty, Maha Vajiravudh, the supreme ruler of all Siam, "marry an American"—what then? There is no royal family in this democratic country from which the young man could or should make his choice and by so doing cement the bonds that already hold his little kingdom in far away Asia very close to Uncle Sam's heart. But there are American ladies a-plenty that are fair to look upon, rightminded and talented enough to be any monarch's queen, and if this be a culture quest as well as a longing of the heart—there can be no question of money in the affair, no bargain of gold for a title, for Siam is one of the richest of the little kingdoms of the world and her sovereign holds by the right of possession legal title to about everything worth having in his entire state—if this then be a quest of the royal girl, his majesty could make no better choice than one of the true American nobility, many of whose daughters are already serving in similar positions of trust and responsibility with rare distinction and dignity, though as co-rulers over smaller principalities.

When the writer was a child he remembers being taken by the hand by King Mongkut, Vajiravudh's grandfather, and being led into the king's favorite room—his American room. On the walls were rows of portraits of the presidents of the United States. They were not good likenesses—some of them—but they were the best his native artist could make from the photographs and other pictures his majesty had secured. They were all there, however, and in order, from Washington to the ruler at that time—Abraham Lincoln.

"I am very fond of America," said his majesty, as he closed the door, "very fond. And some day we are to be united."

Was this a prophecy, that, uttered a half century ago, is to be fulfilled by the marriage of his grandson to an American?

Old King Mongkut patterned his policy of "righteous rule" as closely after the principles found in the Declaration of Independence as he dared and remain on the throne of his father. His son, King Chulalongkorn, never ceased to lament that he was not permitted to see the promised land of America. His multiplicity of wives and his desire to bring more than one with him on his official visit caused a coldness in Washington diplomatic circles that damped his ardor at the time—and he insisted upon his son making a special effort "to visit the United States and personally meet the president of the great country of which your grandfather was so fond and which I have been unable to see."

There have always existed the most cordial relations between these two diametrically opposed governments—the most despotic and the most democratic. France has bullied her Asiatic others; the descendant of a line of princes dating back to a time when Egypt was in her infancy and before Greece was born; he, the illustrious, the invincible, the divine master of the immortal souls, has played football at Rugby.

"friend" Siam into giving up a very large portion of her northeastern territory and has been watching for more than a half century for a ripe opportunity to turn the entire kingdom into a French dependency; and England, on the south, is guarding her Malayan peninsula with more and more skill and care, hoping for her chance to squeeze her neighbor into a hole and then to extricate her at the price of some of the adjacent land belonging to the lord of the white elephant. America alone of the three most influential nations in southern Asia has never sought for conquest of land or for official emolument for favors past, present or future. Her Stars and Stripes for the last three-quarters of a century have floated from the masthead of the American consulate undisturbed amid all the vexatious rivalries for political and territorial gain which have obstinately come to the surface with great regularity—some of which have been referred to Uncle Sam's resident deputy for settlement.

So it would seem that if the king of Siam were to marry an American he would be but following his political and social predilections and would be endeavoring to bind still closer the bonds of friendship and real brotherly affection that have held through the reigns of his two immediate forebears—Mongkut and Chulalongkorn.

But there is a better reason than this for this preference. Vajiravudh is not only a very independent but pre-eminently a practical person, and has often openly admired the independent and practical young American women whom he has met both in Europe and here. A man of tremendous energy and vitality himself, he has naturally looked for the same characteristics in the women whom he has admired enough to make his companions, and has found them in the women of America in a more pronounced degree than in the women of any other country in the world. Among his own Siamese ladies are examples of some of the most beautiful of creatures. They are slender and small boned; they carry themselves with exquisite grace; their eyes are large and luminous and are half covered with heavy lids and long, silken lashes; their voices are low and their hands and feet truly Andalusian. They are companionable and steadfast and make ideal wives and mothers, and, taken collectively, fifty or a hundred of them will combine to please almost any husband—preferably a sybarite. But the present ruler of their kingdom is looking for a wife and not a harem, and unless he changes from the manner of man he has shown himself to be in other matters pertaining to himself and to his rule he will select and obtain the girl of his choice and will make her the most envied bride and the happiest queen of the century.

She will be the bride of a good looking young man of thirty-three, who is a graduate of Oxford and Heidelberg, a charming conversationalist and a speaker of and a writer in many European as well as many Asiatic languages—a writer of prose and poetry, of fiction and philosophy—a good horseman, a fencer to be feared, a lover of sport and a tireless worker, with exquisite taste as to externals as well as in matters pertaining to the mind. Generous and loving by nature and with an unlimited pocketbook to satisfy the desires of himself and his beloved, King Vajiravudh seems to have the making of the ideal husband and lover, as well as an energetic and wise ruler of his kingdom.

Geographically Bangkok is usually considered as far removed from Broadway as is Mars from the Metropolitan, but there are compensations for even the lack of opera in this charming eastern capital. One of the most beautifully situated cities in southern Asia, stretching down on both sides of the Menam river, and sumptuously provided with cool gardens, broad highways and inviting parks, Buddha's city is as cosmopolitan as a united New York, Moscow and Budapest. On her street, and her waterways—for Bangkok is the Venice of the east and is provided with more canals than roadways—are to be seen Americans and Chinese, English ladies and French cavaliers, German barons and Russian diplomats, Malays, Abyssinians, Parthians and Turks.

Ever since the days of King Mongkut there has been a delightful colony of European and American society in the capital. King Chulalongkorn, with his many years spent on the continent, encouraged the sending of some of Europe's best diplomatic timber to his little "Paris of the South" and fostered the intercourse between his native princesses and the foreign hostesses, and King Vajiravudh is stimulating in every way the mingling of the races within his realm. There are half a dozen clubs in a radius of a few miles from the palace, all with more or less activity of a social nature, and springing from them and from the embassies, from the increasing foreign population and the aristocracy of the native gentry there has arisen a large cultured community in Siam's capital, a community that needs a leader. And who can do these gracious honors with more dignity than the sovereign's queen!

But there is far more than all this that the "King of Siam" is looking for in the American wife—far more than even the leadership of the most cultured set in the kingdom. Vajiravudh has stupendous ideas for his country and its people, and already (in less than two years since he set the crown of Siam upon his head) he has had time to show of what stuff kings are made. The reported rebellion and reputed uprising of republicanism he halted with a word; the wishes of his late father in affairs of state and religion have been carried out; he has revised where revision seemed best and has made new where the old could no longer serve; he has chosen wise counsellors and has pressed many new men into new positions; himself young, he has drawn about him the youth of the kingdom—the new minister at Washington, Prince Triados Prabandh, is only thirty and, like his majesty, a graduate from an English university—and he has planned and put into execution seemingly impossible improvements, from the laws on the statute books to the trivialities of everyday living. Altogether he is a personality to be watched; one upon whom already are focussed the eyes of both the east and the west.

Vajiravudh is the first Asiatic ruler to have studied in western schools. Numberless Japanese and Chinese of high rank have been welcomed to the educational centers of Europe and America, but never before has a crown prince or budding emperor been allowed to mingle with the rough and ready westerner. Vajiravudh, the king of kings; head of the most ancient empire of the earth; he, who in his supreme rulership holds rights and privileges withholden from all crossed swords with the daredevils at Heidelberg, drilled as a private at Sandhurst and won his spurs in competitive theses against the brainiest of Britishers at Oxford.

This is the man who, according to rumor, is seeking an American wife to aid him in his rule!

HINTS FOR MAKING MONEY WITH SHEEP

Sheep are the most nervous of animals and if allowed to run down quickly become the prey of disease. The well kept, well fed sheep is the only kind to keep.

Sheep will not thrive in dark, damp, badly ventilated quarters, even if they are only confined in such places over night. Better keep them in an open lot than house them under such conditions.

Never permit the sheep to lie on foul bedding or in barns that are muddy and dirty.

Low, muddy pastures make fine breeding ground for germs and sheep should therefore always be pastured on high, dry land.

Never turn a sheep lose after clipping without first having dipped him thoroughly as a preventive of parasites.

No matter if the ram or breeding ewes you buy come from the best breeding farm in the country, do not permit them to run with your flock for at least ten days. This time is necessary to develop any disease that may be carried about with them.

Sheep require more careful inspection than any other farm animal because the disease attacks them quickly and often becomes fatal before it has been really discovered.

A good flock master will not fail to have every sheep on the place pass under his own eye once every day.

Some farmers imagine that by breeding a large, rangy lamb with a small ewe larger lambs will result This is seldom the case and the best results are obtained by breeding ewes to rams of the same type.

Oil meal is excellent to prevent indigestion and keep the young sheep in fine condition generally.

Every flock of 50 or more animals will be better off under the care of a sheep dog.

Never buy a sheep dog from a fancier unless you know positively that he or his ancestors have been actually worked on sheep. So many collies are now being bred for looks alone to sell to city people that most of them are entirely worthless for work among sheep.

The shorter the pasture becomes the deeper the sheep will go after the roots. It is bad policy to pasture grass too closely. It only kills out the grass and does the sheep no good. Supplementary feeds must be supplied when the grass grows short.

The last month before weaning time is hard on the mother ewe. The vigorous lambs are pulling them down rapidly and they must have plenty of nourishing feed or they'll end the season in poor condition.

Whenever you hear a sheep coughing you may known that it is suffering from some sort of disease—indigestion, catarrh, bronchitis, thread worms or other parasites. They need attention at once.

We can do much to sustain weight and quality of fleece by generous and sensible feeding.

Sheep that are allowed to run down and become very thin during late summer will not thrive when the cold weather comes on no matter how much feed is given them.

ENCOURAGE PURE BREED OF POULTRY

Farmer Should at Least Purchase Full-Blooded Cock, Disposing of Old Rooster.

(By B. NELSON.)

In many localities the barn-yard fowl will not give way to the improved breeds. If you cannot afford to buy an entire breeding-pen of pure stock, at least obtain a full-blooded cock and send the old common rooster to market. This will greatly improve matters, if you are careful to retain the best pullets of this cross-breed, and when you have a stock of good ones sacrifice the old hens. Cannot farmers be prevailed upon to do this, when the supply of eggs, even in the villages, is too small in winter? When eggs are scarce and the prices high, do not some diminish home consumption, and even then complain of the small number they have to take to market. A thoroughbred hen of a good strain will lay nearly fifty per cent. more in the number of eggs than a common hen. If the prices diminish a little the increased production of eggs will much overbalance the account. Too many persons raise poultry without regard to the use of pure breeds and regardless of an effort to maintain the high standard to which our domestic fowls have attained. The increased evidence of the fact that high-class poultry pays, is surely sufficient to encourage us to strike out boldly and extensively in this field of enterprise. Every effort in this direction will meet with such favor that success will surely follow. Contrast the present with the past, and notice whether the improvement in poultry has been a paying venture. Let us not hesitate to try all the late common-sense methods. We must not drift from year to year in the same channel or we will certainly become the active agents of a system that destroys progress. The present is an auspicious time to move in this matter, and it is certainly something that should interest all, and must be conceded to be a theme that should be discussed by farmers and poultrymen everywhere.

PROPER MANNER TO UNCOIL NEW ROPE

There Are Two Ways of Performing This Important Duty, One Right, One Wrong.

(By J. M. DREW.)

The proper way to take rope from a coil is to draw it from the middle. There are two ways to do this, a right and a wrong way. If it happens to be done the wrong way the rope will become twisted in a manner that will make it almost unmanageable. If done the right way it will come out without any twisting or snarling and all the rope in the coil may be drawn out without trouble. To do it properly the rope should be uncoiled toward the left, or opposite the way the hands of a watch or clock run.

By finding the inside end of the coil and observing how it uncoils, one may tell whether or not he is starting in the right way. If the rope uncoils to the right instead of the left the whole coil should be turned over and the end pulled through from the opposite side of the coil. The rope will then uncoil to the left and cause no trouble.

MOST IMPORTANT POINT IN RAISING HOGS

Prize Berkshire Sow.

It is true that warm water is just as wet as cool water, but it is not so palatable and the hogs will thrive better if they have a cool drink at least twice a day. Water should always be within reach.

Hogs exposed to the hot sunshine day in and day out during the summer will lose much of the gains they make even though the clover fields be of the finest.

The main and only point in raising hogs is to produce flesh that will bring the most money and every little thing that will work toward this end should be put into operation.

No farmer who continually stuffs his breeding sows with corn can hope to secure the best pigs. Breeding stock requires more clover, bran and alfalfa than corn.

The short-nosed hog is always to be desired against the long, slender-faced type.

The sow should be longbodied and the boar short.

It has always been a disputed question as to whether a hog gains anything by rooting. Even if he doesn't he has plenty of time to spare and rooting will certainly not hurt him.

The man whose sows raise two litters a year has learned something about the hog business, and if he succeeds in saving eight out of every ten he has learned about all there is to know about the hog business.—E. V. B.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Misplaced Dream

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

PAUL LANE stood on the heights above Delhi, looking down upon a city of tents.

The ancient capital of the Moguls stretched away beneath him, mile after mile of mean and squalid buildings, relieved here and there by the splendid orb of temple or marble minaret. But it was not at the native city Paul looked; rather at the mushroom town which had sprung up almost overnight, with its acres of canvas and high scaffolding. King George and Queen Mary were to be crowned in their magnificent pavilion on the third morning, when all the feudatory chiefs of the sub-continent would present themselves before them to pledge their loyalty.

It was the first time that a reigning British sovereign had set foot within the boundaries of his Indian empire. And the cause of this long journey was known to every one. India was seething with disaffection, so that it required the presence of the king-emperor to strike home into the imagination of the natives something of the power of the British sway.

Paul's mission had been suddenly determined on. The League of Lost Causes, as it was popularly termed, sitting at its headquarters, had resolved that England's prestige must be shattered in the East, that, out of her difficulties, something might be gained. The league spun webs within webs; no stroke was planned but had some bearing upon its ultimate ends: the restoration of the monarchical ideal among the peoples and the overthrow of democracy. And England, as the leader of the democratic nations of Europe, was hated perhaps most bitterly by those who directed the league.

Jean Rosny, its secretary, had called on Paul in Paris and outlined the situation.

"Desperate as the chance appears," he said, "it requires only determination and self-confidence to effect our purpose. The British power is tottering; India will never willingly see a king from overseas crowned in the sacred capital of the Moguls. We have secured the adhesion of the most powerful of the feudatory princes—the Jam of Nagshipur. He commands thirty millions of subjects—as many as the population of all Italy. The native troops look to him as their leader and will follow him. When he stands before King George and Queen Mary, then, instead of pledging his loyalty, he will address their native bodyguard, order them into arrest, and himself pluck the crown from the British sovereign's head and place it on his own. Delhi will acclaim him emperor, and all India will be ablaze with rebellion.

"Now, my dear Paul," Rosny had continued, "unfortunately the Jam, who alone can commit this action with the certainty of success, is vacillating. Educated at Oxford, he has something of an Englishman's loyalty to his emperor, or rather, let us say, he realizes the might of England's power. But the thought of dominion has dazzled him. He can be persuaded. You will go, then, to his palace at Delhi and communicate with him through his chief officer, Ramchundra Sing, our Indian representative. Together you will overcome the Jam's reluctance. And to prevent all possibility of failure I may tell you that, out of the millions which you have placed at the disposal of the league, we have devoted nearly $500,000 to this purpose.

"And now, Paul, I may speak upon a subject more to your heart than even this magnificent opportunity to overthrow the power of England in the East. I will speak as man to man and not as the league's western secretary. I am not blind to the perception of your ultimate desires; you love Mademoiselle, as we have agreed to term her—the mysterious, unknown woman who visited you in America and pledged you and your millions to our cause. You feel that we are playing with you—no, don't protest—utilizing your services and your millions without the intention to admit you into our councils. Rest assured that Mademoiselle has followed each effort of yours with interest and appreciation, and that, if you succeed in this endeavor, you shall at least learn her identity. That much I guarantee, and the rest shall come after."

This much Paul recalled as he looked down upon the Durbar city, with tents and pavilions and flying flags, roped-off courses for camels and elephants, and its circles of seats for the spectators. The Jam, clad in the robes of empire, was at last resolved to make his coup at the psychological moment. So much he had learned at an interview with Ramchundra Sing, a Sikh of high lineage, who, speaking in flawless English, dilated upon the possibilities of the scheme.

"Think of it, Mr. Lane," he said, as his eyes flashed, "a continent of three hundred million souls dominated by seventy thousand English troops! Why, we shall sweep them away as the wind sweeps the threshing floor. But first we need the man. And the Jam has determined to cast his all upon this throw."

Paul had an appointment at the Jam's palace for that afternoon. Much remained to be done. The disbursement of the immense sum of money which had been devoted to the enterprise lay in the hands of Ramchundra, but it was Lane's duty to supervise all the details of the scheme. He was especially perplexed because it was impossible to witness a rehearsal of the Durbar, especially of the coronation ceremony. With one so vacillating as the Jam was known to be, there was always the fear that the psychological moment would be allowed to pass, that the Indian prince, overawed by the magnificence of the scene, would fail to strike, and that the latent hostility of the crowd toward England would be converted into a genuine enthusiasm for their foreign ruler.

His visit to the Jam did not prove productive of much confidence. The prince was a fat man, approaching middle life, and evidently more adapted to the enjoyment of his placid and protected sovereignty than to heroic measures. For a long time only generalities were discussed; each time that Paul approached the subject of his visit the Jam cast a terrified glance toward Ramchundra as though to beseech him to change the topic of conversation. At last Paul left in despair; he came to the conclusion that the prince did not mean to keep his part in the bargain and could not be trusted.

On the next morning, however, Paul received a visit from Ramchundra which materially altered the situation.

"I had a talk last night with his highness," began the secretary in mellifluous English. "He wants to consult his astrologer before finally committing himself. You are to meet us there." He gave Paul an address in a little blind alley leading out of the Grand Bazar. "As the astrologer has been amply bribed," he continued, smiling, "I do not doubt that he will consider the omens favorable.

"Now, Mr. Lane," he went on, "it is understood that at the moment when his highness approaches the dais to make his obeisance you, who will be watching from the top tier of seats immediately in front of the pavilion, will drop your handkerchief. The signal will be seen by the commander of the Sikhs and will indicate that all is in readiness. As his highness arrests the king and queen the commander will swiftly move his troops to encircle them, cutting off all access on the part of the natives. A revolt will break out, his highness will rule in Delhi, and English rule is shattered forever throughout India."

He stopped and looked craftily at Paul.

"You are thinking, 'Suppose the prince changes his mind again at the last moment,'" he said.

"Well—yes," admitted Paul.

"Mr. Lane," said the secretary, in an apparent spontaneous outburst of confidence, "you have never fully trusted me in this affair. Now don't explain your position; a secretary to a prince somehow gets into the habit of reading his fellowmen fairly accurately. Well, sir, let me tell you that I, too, have a good deal at stake, for I would assuredly rather be the prime minister of an Indian empire than a mere secretary to a principality. So I have taken a certain step to clinch the matter. I have seen the astrologer in private and have arranged that the prince's coffee shall be drugged when we three meet there tomorrow night, twelve hours before the Durbar begins."

"Drugged!" exclaimed Paul Lane. "But how can a drugged man play so important a part?"

"You have heard of hashish?" asked Ramchundra Sing.

"Assuredly."

"It is a very mysterious drug, especially when blended with certain other narcotics, the knowledge of which is confined to some of the Indian practitioners. For half an hour after swallowing it one feels no effects at all; after that, when given in certain quantities and combinations, it possesses the peculiar property of destroying the perception of time. For instance, to the man under hashish, a thousand years may pass, or seem to pass, in a moment, and conversely also. This is by the way. The most important effect of the drugs which the astrologer is to administer is that one under their effects is able to go about his business apparently in full possession of his senses. Actually, he is an automaton. He is like one hypnotised; he obeys all orders unquestioningly. For the inhibition of the processes of ratiocination leaves the mind in a state to carry out the one idea which has been placed in it. You understand me? Good! Well, then, his highness the Jam, when under the influence of this drug, will be told exactly what he is to do and will set about to do it. He will conquer an empire in a dream and awake to find himself an emperor."

Skeptical as he was by nature, Paul was forced to admit to himself that the idea was not wholly impracticable. At any rate the apathy of the Jam had made desperate measures essential.

The enthusiasm of the secretary seemed equal to his own; before he left he pronounced a malediction upon British rule and painted the prospects of a free India in such glowing terms that Paul's own ardor was again awakened. They parted with a warm hand-clasp and in the understanding that they were to meet on the following night at the astrologer's house.

Paul was admitted to the little two-story shanty by an evil-looking Hindoo, dressed in a dirty white loin cloth and turban of the same indeterminate hue.

He followed the Hindoo into an apartment on the ground floor and stumbled into almost complete obscurity, except for the glow of a small brazier in one corner, in which incense was burning. Somebody came forward and grasped his hand. It was Ramchundra, and he led Paul to a large, ornate chair, beneath the small aperture high in the wall which served for a window. In the chair sat a fat man in a long cloak, now thrown open carelessly. This was the Jam of Nagshipur, and beneath his outer garment Paul could see the brilliant uniform of his order, which his religion forbade him to cast aside when he left the enclosure of the palace. The Jam grunted and, paying Paul no further attention, fixed his gaze upon the brazier. And now, behind the tiny, leaping flame, Paul saw, with startling suddenness, the head and shoulders of a white-bearded old man emerge from the obscurity. It was the astrologer, whom, hidden as he was in the shadows, Paul had not at first seen. He was incredibly old, and his aspect was incredibly evil. In the deep furrows stamped into his face one might have read the story of a life given up to wickedness. Paul shuddered at the sight of the man, but could not turn his eyes from this hideous apparition.

Evidently there was more than incense in the bowl, for the smell of fragrant coffee now assailed Paul's nostrils, and the secretary, stepping toward the Jam, proffered him a tiny cup of the liquid. The prince grunted and began sipping noisily. The other cup Ramchundra handed to Paul; in the darkness Paul could make out a meaning look upon the secretary's face. The man's hand, too, shook as he handed it to him. Despite their understanding Paul seemed to sense treachery in the air. But there was nothing to be done now, nor any going back. He had trusted himself to Ramchundra and must follow the path on which he had entered. He tasted the coffee cautiously; there was no flavor or odor of any foreign drug, and hashish, he had understood, was intensely bitter. Smiling at his fears, he set the empty cup upon an inlaid table, and saw Ramchundra obsequiously take the other empty cup from the Jam. And now there remained nothing but to wait until the drug took effect on the unstable ruler.

Presently Paul's eyes became accustomed to the darkness. He saw the dim figure of the old astrologer clearly outlined now, and the Jam, seated motionless in his chair, and Ramchundra at his side. The prince's lethargy seemed to indicate that the drug was beginning to take effect on him. Presently the astrologer beckoned to the three men to draw up their chairs. They did so. Paul had expected that the old man would address them in his own language, of which he understood not a word; instead, he began speaking in excellent English, glancing at a glass crystal which he held in his hand.

"The heavens are favorable," he began, in a low, croaking utterance. "Your project is already assured of success. Look into the crystal!"

He addressed himself to the Jam, who mumbled lethargically. His secretary took the glass and placed it in his hand. It lay there for an instant and then crashed down to the floor, rolling, with uncanny precision, directly to the feet of the astrologer, and remaining there.

"Sir!" pleaded Ramchundra. "Will you deign to look into the crystal?" No answer came, except a stertorous snore. The Jam slept in his chair, his eyes wide open, his hands limp at his side.

Satisfied that his ruler was completely under the influence of the drug, Ramchundra leaped to his feet and his face underwent a remarkable metamorphosis. He struck a match and lit a small silver lamp upon the table, then turned to Paul.

"The first part of our task is accomplished," he said briskly. "Now, my friends, we have no time to lose. In a few moments the immediate effects of the drug will wear off. It will be your task to instil into our sovereign's empty—unusually empty—mind the understanding of what his duty is tomorrow. Address him in as peremptory a fashion as you please and have no fear; though he will seem to be a man in full possession of his senses, he will in reality be nothing more than an automaton."

Paul nodded vaguely. The dimness, the scent of the incense, the uncanniness of his surroundings had reduced him, also, to a lethargic condition. He could summon no resolution to his aid. He heard the astrologer's voice from afar off.

"Our friend is somewhat wearied," he said. "Perhaps, if I were to show him the events of the Durbar, as they will actually occur, photographed upon the crystal by the projective power of thought, he will be able to concentrate better."

"A good idea!" exclaimed the secretary. "His highness, my beloved master, will not awake for a little while. And I believe," he added to the astrologer, "that you can show our friend a complete panorama of the Durbar, as it will appear, during the hundredth part of a second?"

"Time is not measured by moments," answered the astrologer sententiously, and stooped and picked up the crystal. He handed it to Ramchundra, who placed it in Paul's hand. Then, to Paul's utter astonishment, out of the clear glass flashed forth figures of men riding, camels and elephants, and white forest of tents. He uttered an exclamation of amazement, and the astrologer's soothing tones fell on his ear.

"Have no fear," said the old, crooning voice. "This is not magic, nor any device of the Evil One. It is nothing but a projection of your own thoughts, mirrored upon the glass, and is a trick well known in many western lands. Look, now! Look closely, before the prince awakes!"

"It is merely a series of mind images," said the secretary, watching Paul curiously. "Note them well, Mr. Lane, for this is, to all intent, a dress rehearsal of the ceremony."

Paul leaned back in his chair and stretched out his limbs luxuriously. All sense of strangeness had departed; he felt only a blissful ease, mingled with which was a sense of utter peace, as though all his fears and indecisions had yielded to the knowledge of some secret power within him which made success a certainty. He looked into the glass.

He saw the white city of tents, the gathering spectators. How real they appeared! He could even distinguish the expressions of amazed reverence and excitement as the elephants slowly lumbered past, each with its mahout, and each clothed in trappings of silk and gold, with silver tips upon its massive tusks.

He was one of the procession now and following among the long line of watchers. A company of soldiers flashed into sight; white-turbaned Sikhs, with curled beards, spotlessly clad, holding their rifles suddenly to the attention as a mounted general rode past. He bore some message, evidently, for a thrill seemed to pass through the crowd, and then—then, in a cloud of dust, preceded by mounted men and followed by a whole coterie of attendants, King George and Queen Mary passed in their carriage, while deafening acclamations rent the air.

Darkness! The scene had changed As in the picture show, when a new film passes before the rays, so this new scene flashed into clear precision before Paul's eyes. He was seated, as he had arranged to sit, upon the topmost tier of the great amphitheater of wooden benches that rose from the ground opposite the pavilion in which the coronation was to occur. Around him were thousands upon thousands, all waiting in deep silence for the final act of the great ceremony. The king was crowned, with his consort, and they awaited the approach of the feudal princes to pledge their loyalty.

And slowly up the dusty carpet-decked road which led to the royal dais there came, one by one, the feudal princelings, and one by one they bowed low before these rulers of alien race and, placing their hands upon their hearts, they vowed submission.

Suddenly Paul became aware that he held a handkerchief in his hand. His mind rushed back through a fog of bewildering dreams. What did this portend? This handkerchief—did not an empire hang upon the fall of it?

He looked down. There, far under him, he saw the commander of the Sikh troops, seated upon his horse at the head of his men. As he looked the face of the man projected itself clearly upon his perceptions. He was looking upward, straining his eyes to catch the flutter of white.

And all at once the voice of the astrologer seemed to break the silence.

"You must not drop that handkerchief," he croaked, "or the whole picture will fade away. Remember, this is nothing but a vision. The reality comes tomorrow."

Paul crumpled up the handkerchief and hid it in his sleeve. Far beneath him he still saw the Sikh officer look upward; he fancied that he detected an appearance of uneasiness on the part of the man. His horse reared, and, in checking it, he pulled the reins so taut that it was flung back on its haunches. Why was he attempting to attract Paul's attention?

A deep, indrawn exclamation answered the question. As every head craned forward and every heart beat hard Paul, instinctively following the gaze of the crowd, perceived the Jam of Nagshipur advance slowly in his turn toward the royal dais. Though chief of all the princes, he had been held almost to the last before being permitted to pledge his allegiance; it was a subtle slight devised by the minds of the rulers of the country in return for the Jam's supposed anti-English proclivities. The people, perfectly aware of the meaning of this maneuver, watched him with bated breath. Upon his action depended the fate of the empire. Would he pledge himself or would he fling defiance into the faces of his English rulers?

The Jam advanced uneasily, evidently almost overcome by nervousness, and glancing as he advanced toward the Sikh officer, who, with his back turned to him as he sat his horse, could see nothing, but kept his gaze fixed steadfastly upon the top tier of the amphitheater.

Suddenly a sigh ran through the assembled multitudes. They quivered, as wheat quivers in a summer breeze. For with a gesture which might have been either of despair or self-immolation, the Jam had thrown himself into the dust before the dais and kissed the monarch's robe.

Suddenly, out of the crowd, a face burned itself into Paul's heart like a live ember—a beautiful, imperious face, a woman's face, set sternly in unutterable contempt as the eyes met his.

It was the face of the beautiful unknown, whom he had so dramatically met in America and who had sent him upon his quest. She stared up at him from among the distinguished guests assembled under the royal canopy; and as he met those eyes Paul flung up his arms and cried.

And the moving picture quivered and vanished out of the crystal.

Paul opened his eyes.

It was evening and the sun hung, a ball of fire, low down in the west. The tamarisks quivered in the evening breeze. Somewhere a nightingale was singing. The astrologer, the secretary, the sleeping prince were gone.

He was lying under a bench on the top tier of the deserted amphitheater. Opposite him was a bare stretch of ground, where formerly the royal tent had been. And everywhere tents were being packed, wagons loaded, troops deploying over the ground. The city of tents was gone.

Paul stumbled down the almost endless stairs toward the city street. His head ached and his limbs would hardly respond to the promptings of his will. When at last he reached the level of the street he noticed that his clothes were damp, as though after a rain, and that he was dishevelled as a tramp.

A passing policeman eyed him suspiciously, and then, seeing that he appeared to be a gentleman, admonished him:

"You'd better go home, my man. What are you doing here the day after the show, anyway? Where did you come from?"

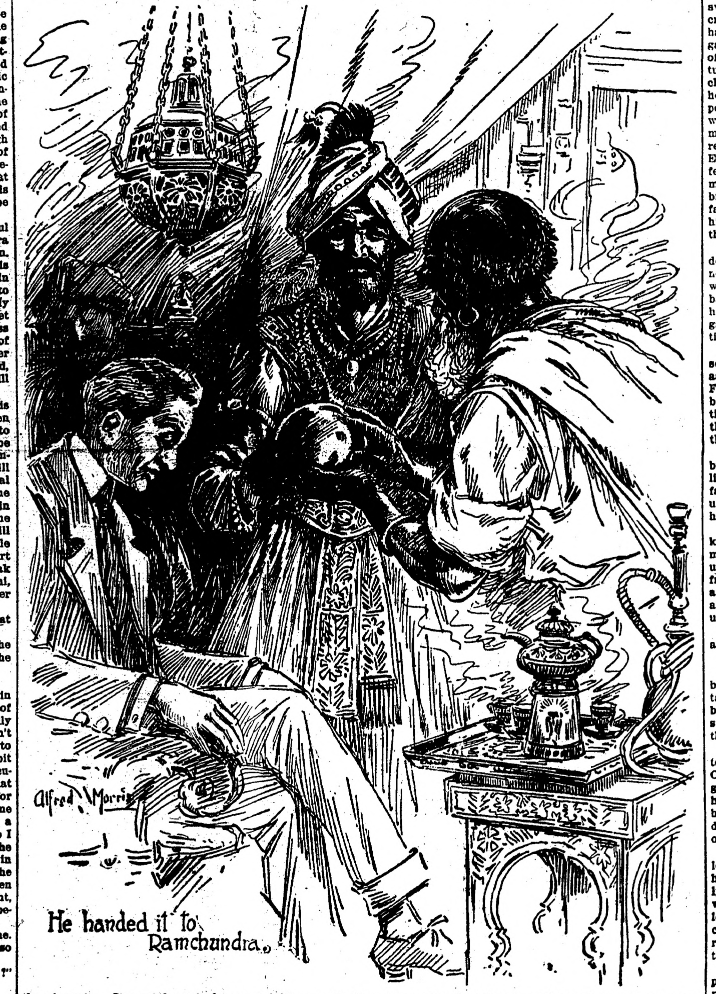
"The show?" Paul cried. "The coronation? When is it to be?"

The other laughed. "Yesterday," he said curtly. "Of course there may be another one in thirty years or so, but my advice to you is, go home!"

Paul stood still, staring into the policeman's face. Then, thrusting his hands through his hair, he set off wildly toward his quarters. He saw all clearly now. His cup had been drugged as well as the Jam's. It was real, then, all that he had seen, and in his stupor he had attended the Durbar and sat in his appointed place, while the Sikh officer waited in vain for the signal that did not come. Ramchundra Sing had outwitted both his masters and pocketed their money.

But the face of the girl—had that been more than a dream? If she were in Delhi, how should he face her, how confess the reason for his mission's failure?

Disconsolately he flung himself upon his bed. All was lost, all that he had hoped and dreamed. He had been hoodwinked and had displayed his incapability. He had lost wealth and honor, and his hopes of winning the one whom he prized more than all else in the world.



He handed it to Ramchundra.

"CASCARETS" FOR LIVER; BOWELS

No sick headache, biliousness, bad taste or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

RARE PRESENCE OF MIND

At Least It Is to Be Supposed Young Lady's Mother Regarded It as Such.

Speaking of rare presence of mind recently recalled to ex-President Taft the case of a handsome young woman of his acquaintance. She had gone to the railway station to meet a man friend of the family, and when he debarked from the train the young man lost his head and impulsively kissed her. The girl thought it the part of prudence to tell her mother of the affair, upon which the latter was simply horrified.

"You don't mean to tell me that he had the impudence to kiss you?" she cried. "And to think of the crowd at the station! Why, my dear, what did you do in such an embarrassing situation?'

"Why, mother, I just kissed him back, of course,' coolly replied the young woman. "I wanted to give all those people the impression that we were relatives."—The Sunday Magazine.

Penalty of Having Too Much Rope.

"I note that Mexico is again peeved at the United States," commented Batsin Garrett. "This reminds me of the familiar yarn of the negro who was about to be hanged for the murder of another negro, and after a lengthy and rambling farewell to the world addressed the widow who, fat, black and pessimistic, sat in front of the scaffold: 'De Lawd in his infinite wisdom has done fuhgiven muh sins and innickerties, and now I axes yo', Sistah Wadkins, to fuhgive me, and—' 'Aw, git hung, nigger!' impatiently interrupted the bereaved lady. 'Git hung!' Mexico having been given an abundance of rope, I am grimly awaiting the inevitable outcome. I am of the same attitude of mind, too, toward the person or persons, as the case may be, who has or have, been so long messing with and muddling up the gas situation."—Kansas City Star.

Perpetual Motion.

One may well be sure that there is no "perpetual motion machine." For this purpose machines have been constructed from time immemorial, but nothing has ever come of it. Men have gone mad on the subject, but without any practical results. It was demonstrated long ago by Sir Isaac Newton and De la Hire that perpetual motion is impossible of attainment. Even the solar system, the most wonderful machine of which we have any knowledge, will run down in the course of time, some say in about $11,000,000 of years from now.

Somewhat.

"Was that a heated debate?"

"In one way. It had plenty of hot air."

SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

Experience of a Southern Man.

"Please allow me to thank the originator of Postum, which in my case, speaks for itself," writes a Fla. man.

"I formerly drank so much coffee that my nervous system was almost a wreck." (Tea is just as injurious because it contains caffeine, the drug found in coffee.) "My physician told me to quit drinking it but I had to have something, so I tried Postum.

"To my great surprise I saw quite a change in my nerves in about 10 days. That was a year ago and now my nerves are steady and I don't have those bilious sick headaches which I regularly had while drinking coffee.

"Postum seems to have body-building properties and leaves the head clear. And I do not have the bad taste in my mouth when I get up mornings. When Postum is boiled good and strong, it is far better in taste than coffee. My advice to coffee drinkers is to try Postum and be convinced."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for copy of the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

CHARLES G. GATES DIES IN WYOMING

MINNEAPOLIS MILLIONAIRE DIES OF HEART FAILURE ABOARD TRAIN.

IS LAST OF FAMILY LINE

John W. Gates, His Father, Died Two Years Ago After a Remarkable Career As Financier—Fortune is Quite Large.

Minneapolis.—Charles G. Gates, the noted Minneapolis millionaire, died at Cody, Wyoming, aboard his private car Tuesday of apoplexy. Death was preceded by 24 hours of sluggish heart action, not considered serious until shortly before his death. Mr. Gates went to Cody on Sept. 26 following advice of New York physicians that he must have out of door exercise.

The day of his arrival, he went 20 miles into Shoshone canon on a big game hunting trip and returned to Cody Saturday to prepare for his return to New York.

Slight Stomach Indisposition.

His departure was delayed by a slight stomach indisposition and Monday night his heart action weakened.

Tuesday afternoon he became visibly worse, failed to respond to stimulants and died. He was attended by his private physicians, Drs. Montgomery and Mothersell, who had been with him constantly since he left New York in September.

The body was immediately sent East under instruction from Mr. Gates' mother, Mrs. John W. Gates, in New York. Mrs. Charles G. Gates was in a suburb of Uniontown, Pa., at the time of his death. Buriel will undobtedly be beside the body of his father, John W. Gates, on the Hudson river just out of New York. A magnificent mausoleum, said to be one of the finest in the country, is now under construction at the Gates family burial plot.

Charles G. Gates.

As to Fortune.

Men who had some knowledge of the business affairs of Mr. Gates say that his fortune cannot be placed under $15,000,000. No one in Minneapolis can say whether there was a will, but it is thought that there is not, in which event the entire estate will go to the widow. Estimates of the wealth of John W. Gates when he died at Paris in 1911 varied widely, but it was fairly fixed that he had amassed $30,000,000. Mrs. Gates and Charles G. Gates were the only heirs and the will was said to have split it equally.

Mother Residuary Legatee.

John W. Gates, in his will, did not leave the bulk of his estate to his son. Instead he made his widow, Mrs. Dellora R. Gates, the residuary legatee. He bequeather his son $100,000 outright and an annual income of $100,000 derived from a trust established for his benefit which amounted to about $2,000,000. The trust was to continue during the son's life.

It was understood at the time the elder Gates made his last will that his widow would turn over to the son a portion of the estate bequeathed to her, sufficiently large to make their shares approximately equal.

Family Line Ends.

With the death of Charles G. Gates, at 37 years of age, the line of a spectacular family ends. John W. Gates, the father, died two years ago after a career that electrified the world.

Indians Stage Big Orgie.

Tower.—After the Indians of the reservation here had been paid their annuities by Superintendent Reagan, they proceeded to spend their money freely for alcohol and whisky. As a result, there was but one sober Indian family in or about Tower, according to Mr. Reagan. The superintendent said that paying the Indians is but a short cut to handing out money to unscrupulous bootleggers who have been preying on the reservation residents.

NO FEAR OF LEPER NURSE

PHYSICIAN GIVES REASON WHY MINNESOTA IS HAVEN FOR HER.

Physician Says Race of People Is Largely Responsible for the Liberal Attitude of State.

Minneapolis.—Why Minneapolis can be a haven of refuge to the nurse who has suffered social ostracism in Chicago because of her former connection with a colony of lepers was pointed out by Dr. J. E. Engstad, a Minneapolis physician. Dr. Engstad was the man who wrote the nurse, Miss Marie Colliers, and advised her that Minnesota was a "Christian community," and that here she would not be hounded because of her former association with the social outcasts.

Dr. Engstad, seen in Grand Forks, said that he had suggested to Miss Colliers that she communicate with Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the state board of health, who could get her a favorable location.

"It is a shame," said Dr. Engstad, "to ostracise her because she nursed lepers. I simply told her to get in touch with Dr. Bracken. There are 16 cases of leprosy in Minnesota, but the people think very little of it. Minnesotans take a Christian attitude and a leper is not quarantined.

"There is no disease that arrests public attention as does leprosy. It is contagious, but you have to be in constant contact before it is communicated. Dr. Bracken of the Minnesota board of health, has taken a very liberal attitude.

"I simply wrote Miss Colliers, telling her to come to Minnesota where she could make a living and where no one would pay any attention to her. Leprosy, you know, seems to be a disease that does not interest Minnesota people. The peole largely are of Scandinavian descent, and in Norway leprosy is not scarce, but they know how to handle it."

STUDENTS CREATE NEAR RIOT

Five Hundred See Team Off and Proceed to Make Merry—Police Draw Pistols and Clubs.

Minneapolis.—A dozen policemen, several detectives and a squad of firemen fought a battle royal with a mob of 500 university students, high school boys and their sympathizers at the Gayety theatre Thursday. Clubs were used freely and several policemen flashed their revolvers when the mob surged upon them after two young men, said to be ringleaders, were being dragged toward the patrol wagon.

The students, several hundred strong, had seen the university football team on its way to Madison, and then started in a body toward the theatre. They attempted to force their way toward the front entrance, but there theatre employes and Detective Hardin fought them back.

There were many that went to their homes with swollen heads where police clubs had fallen, and there were also several hatless students.

SECOND VON KLEIN TRIAL

Main Witness Against Minneapolis Man Has Disappeared.

Portland, Ore.—Edmund E. C. von Klein, a Minneapolis man, has been on trial here for the second time for the alleged theft of $3,500 worth of diamonds from Ethel Newcomb of San Francisco, who he is charged with having duped into a fictitious marriage. The jury in the first trial disagreed.

Mrs. E. E. Webber of St. Louis, who asserted she lost $12,000 in diamonds through her acquaintance with von Klein, is here to lend her support to the prosecution, but Miss Newcomb, the main witness against the prisoner, disappeared after the first trial and has not been located.

When the present case is disposed of von Klein will be tried on another indictment charging polygamy.

Washburn-Crosby Embezzler Found.

Minneapolis.—John C. Schildknecht, embezzler of $55,000 from the New York office of the Washburn-Crosby Company, has been found in a rooming house in Brooklyn. Two automobiles of the racing type are all that the Washburn-Crosby Company have to show for the $55,000 taken during a period of six months through a system of "kiting" accounts by the 23-year-old clerk, who was paid $20 a week. One car was used in the Vanderbilt cup race two years ago. His escapes from scores of detectives read like fiction.

Hotel Fire Paralyzes Traffic.

Duluth.—A bad fire in the Exchange hotel temporarily paralyzed traffic on Superior street, the main thoroughfare, while firemen from all of the stations in the city fought a stubborn blaze that originated from an overheated furnace pipe. Ten occupants, who were asleep when the alarm was turned in, were forced to flee the place in scanty attire and complete dressing on the sidewalk in the presence of hundreds of persons. After an hour's fight the blaze was under control.

WOULD SAVE STATE $3,500,000 YEARLY

J. O. A. PREUS, STATE INSURANCE COMMISSIONER, GIVES SOME SIGNIFICANT FIGURES.

SEEKS FIRE PREVENTION AID

Says If People Were Properly Aroused Much Good Would Result—State Officials to Confer in New York City Relative to Rates.

St. Paul.—The average per capita fire loss in the state of Minnesota for the past ten years has been $2.02. The average per capita loss in the leading European countries is 33 cents, or approximately one-sixth the loss in this state. These are interesting figures with which State Insurance Commissioner J. O. A. Preus prefaces a scheme for saving the people nearly $3,500,00 annually.

Losses Might Be Reduced.

"The losses in Minnesota could, if proper action were taken, be reduced to the European figure," declared Mr. Preus. "If this were done," he continued, "our losses in 1912 should have been $706,387 instead of $4,045,698. In other words, premiums paid out on such a basis might have been $5,628,166 instead of $8,968,477; that is, a saving of $3,339,311. Nothing short of a catastrophe in any one year could alter these figures and cause a greater loss, if the question of fire prevention were properly treated."

As to Fire Prevention.

Speaking of the importance of fire prevention provisions, Mr. Preus said, in part:

"The general public should be aroused to the situation which prevails in this state. There should be a concerted action in order that our people may be relieved from the tremendous fire loss which they are at present forced to bear. It is argued that it is not the function of the fire insurance companies to prevent fires, but that their duty is simply to equalize the misfortunes to the public. In 1912 companies carrying approximately 90 per cent of the fire inurance of the country received $290,000,000 in premiums and expended but six millions, or 2.7 per cent for fire prevention purposes. Their expenses during the same year amounted to $120,000,000."

As pointed out by Mr. Preus, the people of the state are not expected to become interested in the question of reducing the fire losses until they can be shown that a direct financial gain to them will result.

Steps Being Taken.

As a step in the right direction towards adjusting the rates now being charged by fire insurance companies of the country, a special committee, consisting of nine commissioners of insurance, of which Commissioner Herman L. Ekern of Wisconsin is the chairman, and of which the commissioner of Minnesota is a member, has been charged by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners with the duty of drafting a uniform measure for the supervision of rate-making institutions, if deemd advisable, and the equalizing of fire insurance rates between individual property owners, and in order that the cost of protection may be equalized throughout the various states without discrimination against any state.

It is hoped that through the efforts of this committee uniform legislation in regard to the supervision of rate-making institutions, may be enacted in the various states.

The next meeting of the committee will be held in New York City, Nov. 10.

MANKATO SEEKS UNION DEPOT

Mankato.—Officials of the four railroads entering Mankato were guests of the Commercial club at luncheon last week. The afternoon was devoted to a conference between three committees of the club and the city council and a few leading shippers and the officials, in regard to remodeling the railroad yards in such manner that switching over Main street will be done away with, and the passenger stations will be located east of the railway tracks.

It is the desire of the city that a union station be built, or, if this cannot be done, that the joint Omaha and North-Western station be located in a more accesible place. The proposed improvement would involve the expenditure of a large sum, and some concessions by the city and the railroads to each other.

Jurors Summoned By Mail.

Faribault.—The sheriff of Rice county has for the first time summoned the grand and petit jurors for the district by registered mail. This was done under the new law The cost was only $5.64, where it would have been from $30 to $40 in the old way. The notices have a return card attached which the person summoned must fill out and return by mail within three days. All but one of the men notified have returned the cards; the one who failed to do so is away.

MOUNTAIN OF FUJI

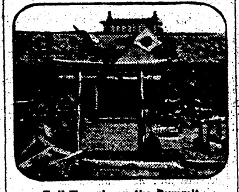
Description of Visit to Holy Mount of Japan.

"White Ghost of Fuji" Half Veiled in Mist an Interesting Sight on Jap Coast—Story of Ascent and Features of Trip.

Tokyo, Japan.—I and my Buddhist priest brother were settled in the train with our minds happily dwelling on the wisdom of nature which grows green foliage in summer, and our hearts leapt up when we first beheld Fuji mountain, or, more true to say, the white ghost of Fuji, as a certain poetess wrote. She is, indeed, a ghost half-veiled in dream-mist, always haunting us, now from the left or right, then from behind or before, during the run of 70 or 80 miles along the Pacific coast, where she mirrors her own beautiful face patiently and breathlessly all the day on the waves of jade. Why were our minds so much taken with Fuji mountain? Because we were this day, July 20, on the very way to climb the holy mountain of Japan.

As our serpent-like train crossed the desolate Banryu river and we entered the mountains and valleys of the Hakone range, our immediate thought was that we had happened by accident or dream within the domain of some Scottish mountain elf. We left the train at Gotemba to take a horse car toward Subashiri, one of the three places (it is generally called the Eastern Gate, and is the easiest route) where the holy climb may properly begin. We left the place on horseback, accompanied by a mountain-guide, or goriki, who carried on his back plenty of food and water and some blankets and clothing. We wore large bamboo mushroom hats, on which the words, "We two shadowy pilgrims of the holy highway" were written; and our shoulders bore, according to the fashion, wide straw rain-coats. We sang a song that was not of a city's rise or fall, but of a wind or flower, for we were glad that our ascent of Fuji mountain had started well. But where was the mountain? We were, indeed, hardly yet on the real Fuji; but the way in front and behind us was darkened by the heavy fog, except for a few yards. We were encouraged by the guide, who assured us of the fair sunlight on Fuji mountain, on whose top our footsteps would be printed on the morrow.

The mists did not disappear even when we reached Umagayeshi, or "The Place to Bid Your Horse Adieu." We did not part from our horses, but rode slowly up underneath the large forest of pine trees, dewy and dark, and we left the horses at Ichi no Miya, or "The First Temple," where we were told that we must now walk. On the steep pathway we felt at once that we were holy pilgrims with the song of prayer for "Rokkon Shojo" (the six vital parts, the eyes, nose, ears, tongue, body and heart). On the way we met with two pilgrims who were descending. One of them told us that the mountain-hut at the second station (the whole mountain is divided into ten stations, each with a stone hut, or Muro, where one can sleep) was not yet opened, as the season was a little early; and we were obliged to stop at the place called Ochujiki, or "Honourable Lunch Place," although evening had not yet fallen.



Fuji Temple on the Summit.

Here at Ochujiki the mists faded away under the blessing of spring, who was enthroned over the valley, although the season was in July, as I said before. Every sort of flower tried its best, while the nightingales and Japanese wrens brought down heaven's golden messages. We welcomed a hundred stars after our supper was over, and went to sleep with rich dreams. We rose early next morning, and again the mists troubled our ascent. Suddenly the great sunlight burst forth upon Mount Fuji right before us.

Last Scottish Stage Coach.

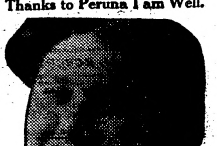
Edinburgh.—The last stage coach, so far at least as Scotland is concerned, has just made its last run. The daily journey between Campelltown and Tarbert will now be made by motor. For over 40 years the coach has carried the mails and passengers over this wild part of Argyllshire. The driver has many stories of adventure to tell, but only once did he fail to complete his double journey. On that occasion the coach was snowed up in returning.

Pastor to Teach Dancing.

Jersey City, N. J.—Rev. George D. Hadley, rector of St. John's Episcopal church here, will open a school for dancing, with a view to eliminating "hugging" from the modern dances. "One can be up-to-date without being a 'bear,' or a 'bunny,' or a 'turkey,'" he said.

MY FRIENDS SAID

I Could Never Get Well Again. Thanks to Peruna I am Well.



Miss Clara Lohr, 21 North Gold St., Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Doctors said I had consumption. Weighed only 90 pounds. Commenced taking Peruna. Now weigh 135 pounds. I am so thankful for what Peruna has done for me."

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets.

NOT AS BAD AS ALL THAT

Judge Resents Attitudes of "Funny Men" as to Present Tendency in Dress.

Judge Ralph S. Latshaw squelched, in Kansas City, the other day, an incipient movement against the close-fitting skirt with a slash.

"Narrow skirts don't mean immorality," said Judge Latshaw. "One of the most vicious epoch was when hoop skirts were worn.

"Why, I remember when it was considered immodest for a woman to arrange her coiffure so as to show her ears. We have advanced.

"We have advanced, but we haven't advanced as far as the jokesmiths and cartoonists would pretend.

"'Doctor,' said a pretty girl—so runs the latest joke—doctor, I want you to vaccinate me, please, where it won't show.'

"'Humph,' said the gruff doctor. 'I guess you'll have to take it internally, then.'"

RED, ROUGH HANDS MADE SOFT AND WHITE

For red, rough, chapped and bleeding hands, dry, fissured, itching, burning palms, and painful finger-ends, with shapeless nails, a one-night Cuticura treatment works wonders. Directions: Soak the hands, on retiring, in hot water and Cuticura Soap. Dry, anoint with Cuticura Ointment, and wear soft bandages or old, loose gloves during the night. These pure, sweet and gentle emollients preserve the hands, prevent redness, roughness and chapping, and impart in a single night that velvety softness and whiteness so much desired by women. For those whose occupations tend to injure the hands, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are wonderful.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Must Wait a Bit.

The litle group at the side of the road waited until Stealthly Stiggins returned from the nearby farmhouse.

"Poor pickings," he muttered as he threw down a scrawny beef bone and a half loaf of bread.

"Where's dat improvement in handouts youse promised?" demanded Muggsy Jones.

Happy Higgin shook his head reproachfully.

"You gotter wait," he said, "till de public adjusts itself to de new tariff."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

Anyway, a woman never believes all her husband believes she believes.

STOP THAT BACKACHE

There's nothing more discouraging than a constant backache. You are lame when you awake. Pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to rest and next day it's the same old story.

Pain in the back is nature's warning of kidney ills. Neglect may pave the way to dropsy, gravel, or other serious kidney sickness.

Don't delay—begin using Doan's Kidney Pills—the remedy that has been curing backache and kidney trouble for over fifty years.

A TEXAS CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

J. H. Lee, 412 W. Walnut St., Cleburne, Texas, says: "For four years I had intense pains through the small of my back. I could hardly pass the kidney secretions and morphine was the only thing that relieved me. I had gravel, too. Finally, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and they permanently cured me. I haven't suffered since."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

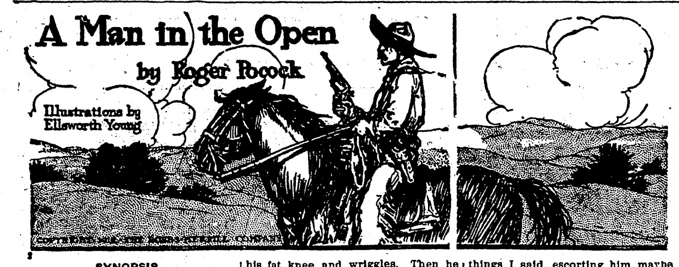
A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

Pettit's Eye Salve QUICK RELIEF EYE TROUBLES

25 CTS. PISO'S REMEDY 25 CTS.

Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.

FOR COUGHS AND COLDS



A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

COPYRIGHT 1912, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor.

CHAPTER II.—Continued.

I disremember which port—somewheres up the St. Lawrence where we loaded lumber for the Gulf o' Mexico, but the captain and me was away fishing. Mother had come from the Labrador to find me, old gray mother. She put on her round horn spectacles to smile at the mate aft, and the second mate forward, the or'nary seaman painting in the name board, and Bill in his bos'n's chair a-tarring down the rigging, and the bumboat laundress who'd been tearing the old man's shirt-fronts. She just sat happy at the sight of the Pawnticket, and she surely admired everything, from Old Glory to Blue Peter—until our nigger cook came and spilled slops overside. Seems he'd had news of the lady, and came to grin' but was back in his galley, like a rabbit to his borrow, while she marched up the gangway. "Can't abide dirt," says mother, and even the new boy heard not a word else 'cept the splash. For mother just escorted that nigger right through the galley, out at the other end, over the port rail, and boosted him into the blue harbor, for the first and only bath he'd ever had. Then she took off her horn spectacles, her old buckskin gloves, and her bonnet, and sot to cleaning a galley which hadn't been washed since the days of President Lincoln. She hadn't time to listen to the wet nigger or the mate, and narry a man on board could get more than yea or nay out of mother. She cooked them a supper too good to be eaten and spoilt, then set the dishes to rights, got the lamp a-shining, and axed to be shown round the ship.

The cap'n and me comes back along with the dinghy, makes fast, and climbs aboard. There's old gray mother, with the horn specs, calm in her own kitchen, just tellin' us to set right down to supper. Cap'n lives aft, and I belongs up forrard, being ordinary seaman, and less important aboard than the old man's pig. Yet somehow mother knew, feeding us both in the galley, and standing by while we fed. Never a word, but mother had a light for Captain Smith's cigar, and her eyes looking hungry at me for fear she'd be sent ashore.

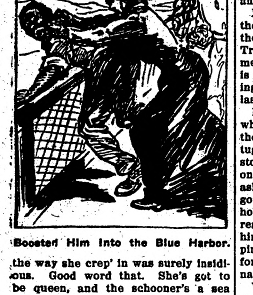
"Well, ma'am," says the captain, "sent your baggage aft? Oh, we'll soon get your baggage aboard."

Then I heard him on deck seeing mother's dunnage into the spare berth aft, and the nigger's turkey thrown out on the wharf.

Sort of strange to me remembering mother, gaunt, bitter-hard, always in the right, with lots to say. And here was little mother sobbing her heart out on the breast of my jersey. Just the same mother changed. Said she was fed up with the Labrador, coming away to see the world, meet folks, and have a good time; but would I be ashamed of having her with me at sea?

Shamed? All the ways down to Joe Beef's clear to Rimouski you'll hear that yarn today, of how the old sea custom of winning a berth in fair fight was practiced by a lady, aboard of the Pawnticket.

You've heard of ship's husbands, but we'd the first ship's mother. And the way she crep' in was surely insidious. Good word that. She's got to be queen, and the schooner's a sea palace, when we suddenly discovered she only signed as cook.



Boosted Him Into the Blue Harbor.

Now we're asleep at eleven knots on a beam wind, and Key West wide on the starboard bow, the same being in the second dog-watch when I'm invited aft. There's the old man setting in the captain's palace, there's mother at the head of the table sewing, and she asks me to sit in the mate's seat as if I was chief officer instead of master's dog.

"Son," says she—queer, little, soft chuckle, "son. You'll never guess."

I was sort of sulky at having riddles put.

Then the old man gets red to the gills, giggling. He slaps hisself on his fat knee and wriggles. Then he up and kisses mother with a big smack right on the lips.

"Can't guess?" says mother.

"I'm the old man," he giggles, "she's the old woman." Then he reached out his paw. "Put her there, son!" says he; "what's yer name, boy?"

He'd a hand like a bear trap "Smith!" I squealed. "Smith!"

"Fast," says he. "Fill yourself a goblet of that 'ere sherry wine, with some sugar. Drink, you cub, to Captain and Mrs. Smith. Now off with ye, and pass the bottle forrard."

Next day, or next week, or maybe the Monday following, the ship's got a headache, with the sky sitting down on the mastheads, the sea like oil, the sheets slapping the shadows on the deck, where the tar boils, and our feet is like overdone toast.

The sky's like copper edged with sheet lightning, then there's scud in a hurry overhead, the horizon folding in, and a funnel-shaped cloud to the southard wrapping up the sky. There's no air, and I noticed the binnacle alight, so it must have been nigh dark under that funnel cloud. Just as it struck, some one called out "All aboard!" and I heard the mate yell, "You mean, all overboard!"

Couldn't see much at first, as I was busy getting mother out of the drowned cabin. When I'd passed a halyard round her and the stump of the mizzen, I'd just breathing time. The sea was flattened, white under black sky, and what was left of us was mostly blowing about.

Dad was just taking command again of what remained. No use shouting either, so he hung on and beckoned. The masts overside were battering holes in us, until we cut adrift. Then to the pumps, but that was sort of ex officio just to keep us warm. Workin's warmer than waiting.

Being timber-laden we couldn't sink, which was convenient. But, as mother said, there wasn't any grub on the roof, and we couldn't go down-stairs. For instance, we wanted a drink of water.

Well, now, we been three days refreshing our parched mouths with beer stories, when a fishing vessel comes along smelling salvage. Happens he's one of them felucca-rigged dago swine out of Invicta, Texas. His charges was quite moderate, too, for a breaker of water and some fancy grub—until we seen the bill.

I never knew till then that our old man was owner. Of course that's all right, only he'd run astern with his insurance. That's why he'd stay with the ship, so it's no good talking. As to mother, she come aboard the feluccy, ship's cat in her arms, and a sort of cold, dumb, going-to-be-good-and-it's-killin'-me sort of smile. She bore up brave until she struck the number-one smell in the dago's cabin. "It's too much," she says, handing me the cat, "too much. I'm going back to drown clean."

But I was to stay with our sailors aboard the dago, to fetch Invicta quick, and bring a tug. Dad trusted me, even to play the coward and quit him. I dread to think back on the passage of four days to the port of Invicta.

Now in them days I was fifteen, and considered homely. The mouth I got would be large for a dog, smile—six and three-quarters. Thar ashore at Invicta, I'd still look sort of cheerful, so all them tug skippers took me for a joke. It was four days and three nights since I'd slept, so I suppose I'd look funny wanting to hire a tug.

I showed power of attorney, wrote in indelible pencil on dad's old dicky cravat, but the tugs expected cash, and the agents went back on me.

Nothin' doing Saturday nights at the office, tug crews all ashore, but the port will get a move on Monday. Trust grown men to know more'n a mere boy. The glass is down the gulls is flying inland, thar's weather brewing. I seen in my mind the sprays lash over the wreck.

It was dark when I went to the wharves with Captain McGaw to see the Pluribus Unum. He'd show me a tug cheap at ten thousand cash—stores all complete, steam up, engineer on the premises, though he'd stepped ashore for a drink. Cute cabin he'd got on the bridge, cunning little glory-hole forrard. Why, everything was real handy, so that I only had to bat him behind the ear with a belaying-pin, and he dropped right down the fore hatch. All I wanted now was a navigating officer I could trust.

Which brings me to Mr. McMillan, our own second mate, buying a dozen fried oysters in a card box with a wire handle, all for twenty-five cents, though the girl seemed expecting a kiss.

"Hello, Frankie," says I, slapping him on the back. A foremast hand can make his officer act real dignified with less. "Say, Mac! D'ye know what Greed done?" I grabbed his oysters. "Greed, he choke puppy," says I, and in my mind I seen the gulls wheel around the wreck, where something's lying huddled. "Come on. puppy!" says I, waving Frankie down the street with them oysters, so all the traffic pauses to admire, and our second officer is running good. More things I said, escorting him maybe a mile aboard of the Pluribus Unum. And there I ate them oysters while he was being coarse and rude, but all the time I seen the wreck heave sick and sodden on the swell of the gulf, the circling gulls, and how they drove down, pecking at a huddle of torn clothes beside the wheel.

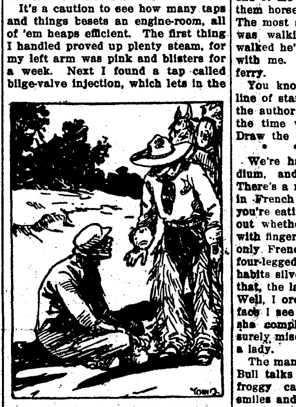
Up thar on the tug's masthead I was owning to being in the wrong, while Frankie Mac was promising faithful to tear my hide off over my ears when I'm caught.

"Please, sir," says I, "it ain't so much the oysters worries me. It's this yer Cap'n McGaw I done embezzled. Cayn't call it kidnaped 'cause he's over sixty, but I stunned him illegal with a belaying-pin, and I hears him groaning—times when you stops to pant."

But Frankie Mac wouldn't believe one word until he went down in the fore peak to inquire, while I applied the hatch, and battened down.

So you see I'd got a tug, and the crew aboard, so the next thing was to take in the hawsers, shove off, and let her drift on the ebb.

It's a caution to see how many taps and things besets an engine-room, all of 'em heaps efficient. The first thing I handled proved up plenty steam, for my left arm was pink and blisters for a week. Next I found a tap called bilge-valve injection, which lets in the sea when you wants to sink the ship. I turned him full, and went to sit on the fore hatch while I sucked my arm, and had a chat with the crew.



When He Moves, There's a Tinkle of Iron.

They was talkative, and battering at the hatch with an ax, so I'd hardly a word in edgeways. Then they got scared we'd blow up before we drowned. Allus in my mind I'd see them gulls squawkin' around the wreck, and mother fighting them. That heaped thing by the wheel was dad, for I seen the whites of his eyes as the ship lurched him. An' the gulls—

Cap'n McGaw was pleadin' with me, then Mr. McMillan. They swore they'd take me to the wreck for nothin', they'd give their Bible oath, they'd sign agreements. McGaw had a wife and family ashore. McMillan was in love.

I turned off the bilge-valve injection, opened the fore hatch, and set them two to work. They was quite tame, and that night I slept—only to wake up screechin' at the things I seen in dreams.

Seven days we searched for the wreck before we gave up and quit, at least the captains did. Then night came down black overhead, with the swell all phosphorescent. I allus think of mother in a light sea under a black sky, like it was that night, when our tug run into the wreck by accident.

I jumped first on board. The poor hulk lay flush with the swell, lifting and falling just enough to roll the thin green water, all bright specks, across and across the deck. Mother was there, her bare arm reaching out, her left hand lifting her skirt, her face looking up, dreaming as she turned, and turned, and swayed, in a slow dance. It's what they calls a waltz, and seems, as I stood watching, I'd almost see the music swaying her as she wove circles, water of stars pouring over her bare feet. Seems though the music stopped, and she came straight to me. Speaks like a lil' small girl. "Oh, mummy," she says, "look," and draws her hands apart so, just as if she was showing a long ribbon, "watered silk," she mutters, "only nine-cents a yard. Oh, mayn't I, mayn't I, mummy?"

And there was dad, with all that water of stars, washing across and across him.

CHAPTER III.

Youth.

A dog sets down in his skin, tail handy for wagging—all his possessions right thar.

Same with me, setting on the beach, with a cap, jersey, overalls, sea boots, paper bag of peanuts, beached wreck of the old Pawnticket in front, and them two graves astern. Got more'n a dog has to think about, more to remember, nothin' to wag. Two days I been there, and the peanuts is getting few. Little gray mother, dad, the Happy Ship, just dead, that's all, dead.

I didn't hear the two horses come, but there's a young person behind me sort of attracting attention. When he moves there's a tinkle of iron, creaking leather, horsy smell, too, and presently he sets down along of me, cross-legged. I shoved him the peanuts, but he lit a cigarette, offering me one. Though he wasn't, he just felt same as a seafaring man, so I didn't mind him being there.

He wanted to look at my sheath knife, and when I handed it he seen the lettering "Green River" on the blade. He'd been along Green River and there's no knives like that.

Then I'd got to know about them iron things on his heels—spurs. We threw peanuts, my knife agin his spurs, and he won easy. Queer how all the time he's wanting to show himself off. He'd never seen salt water before. So we went in swimming, and afterward there's a lunch he'd got with him—quart of pickled onions, and cigarettes.

This stranger begins to throw me horse talk and cow stories. It seems cow-punchers is sort of sailors of the plains, only it's different. Seafaring men gets wet and cold, and wrecked, but cow-boys had adventures instead, excitement, red streaks of life. Following the sea, I been missing life. Why, this guy ain't no more'n two years older'n me—say, seventeen, but he's had five years ridin' for one man, four years for another, six years in Arizona, then three in Oregon, until he's added up about half a century. Says his name's Bull Durham.

Well, his talk made me small and mean as a starved cat, but that was nothing to the emotions at the other end of me when he got me on one of them horses. I wanted to walk. Walk! The most shameful things he knew was walking and telling lies. If I walked he'd have nothing more to do with me. I rode till we got to the ferry.

You know in books how there's a line of stars acrost the page to show the author's grief. I got 'em bad by the time we rode into Invicta City. Draw the line right thar:

* * * * * * *

We're having supper at the Palladium, and I'm pretty nigh scared. There's a menu to say what's coming, in French so you don't know what you're eating, and durned if I can find out whether to tackle an a la mode with fingers or a spoon. Bull says it's only French for puckeroo, a sort of four-legged burrowing bird which inhabits silver mines, but if I don't like that, the lady will fetch me a foe par Well, I orders one, and by the lady's face I see I done wrong, even before she complains to the manager. I'm surely miserable to think I've insulted a lady.

The manager's suspicious of me, but Bull talks French so rapid that even froggy can't keep up, although he smiles and shrugs, and gives us sangfraws to drink.

This sort of cocktail I had, was the first liquor I'd tasted. It's powerful as a harbor tug, dropping me out of the conversation, while the restaurant turns slowly round with a list to starboard, and Bull deals for a basket in the front window full of decorated eggs. Says they're vintage eggs, all verd-antique and bookay. For years the millionaires of Invicta has shrunk from the expense. My job when we leaves is to carry the basket, 'cause Bull's toting a second-handed saddle.

I dunno why Bull has to introduce me to the gentleman who keeps the peanut store down street—seeing I'd dealt there before. Anyway, I'm introduced to Affable Jones, and I'm the Markis of Worms—the same being a nom de plume. We proceeds to the opery-house, climbs in through a little hind window, and finds a dressing-room. Affable Jones dresses up as a monk, Bull Durham claims he's rigged out already as a vice-bishop, and I'm to be a chicken, 'cause I'm dealing vintage eggs in the cotilion. All the same, I'm left there alone for hours, and it's only when they comes back with a cocktail that I'll consent to dressing up as a chicken—which in passing out through that lil' window is some crowded. We proceeds up street, me toting eggs, and practicing chicken-talk, and it seems the general public is surprised.

So we comes to the Masonic Hall, which is all lights, and band, and fashionable persons rigged out in fancy dress, dancing the horse doover. I got the name from Bull, who says that the next turn is my day boo in the omlet cotillion. Seems it's all arranged, too Affable Jones lines up the ladies on the left, the dudes on the right, all the length of the hall. Bull marches up the middle, spurs trailin' behind him, and there's me dressed as a chicken, with a basket of eggs, wondering whether this here cow-boy is two persons I see, or only the one I can hear. Band's playing soft, Affable serves out tin spoons to the dudes, and I deals each a decorated egg, laying it careful in the bowl of the spoon, till there's only a few left over, and I'm safe along with Bull.

So far everybody seems pleased. Bull whispers in my ear, "Make for the back door, you son of a sea cook," which offends me, being true; waves an egg at the band for silence, and calls out, "Ladies and gents." From the back door I seen how all the dudes has to stand dead still for fear of dropping an egg.

"Ladies," says Bull, "has any of you seen a live mouse? On the way up among you, seems I've dropped my mouse, and it's climbing skirts for solitude."

Then there's shrieks, screams, ladies throwing themselves into the arms of them dudes, eggs dropping squash, eggs going bang, Bull throwing eggs at every man not otherwise engaged, and such a stink that all the lights goes out. I'm grabbed by the scruff of the chicken, run out through the back door, and slung on the back of a horse. Bull's yelling "Ride! Ride! Git a move on!" He's flogging the horse with his quirt, he's yelling at me: "Ride, or we'll be lynched!"

My mouth's full of feathers, chicken's coming all to pieces—can't r'de—daresn't fall off. So on the whole I dug the chicken's spurs into Mr. Horse, and rode like a hurricano in a panic. All of which reminds me that the hinder parts of an imitation bird is comforting whar she bumps. Still, draw them stars across.

* * * * * * *

I'm feeling better with twenty miles between me and Invicta City. The sun transpires over the eastern skyline, the horses is taking a roll, I'm seated on the remnants of the chicken, and Bull Durham says I'm his adopted orphan.

Looking back it seems to me that the first night's proceedings was calm. Thar was the fat German fire brigade pursuing an annual banquet across lots by moonlight, all on our way north, too, till the wagon capsized in a river.

Thar was the funeral obsequies of a pig, late deceased, with municipal honors, until we got found out.

Then we was an apparition of angels at a revival camp, only Bull's wings caught fire, and spoiled the whole allusion.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

SHOW THE GAMBLING SPIRIT

Bidders at Auction Sales, Without Funds, Find Delight in Just Avoiding Being Shown Up.

One of the funny sights, to the person who didn't bid at all, at the Morris Park real estate auction, was the look of high courage, shading insensibly into reckless daring, on the face of some man who was bidding $800 when he knew he would have trouble raising 30 cents.

"A-trun dolls! A-trun dolls!" the auctioneer would call, trippingly on the tongue. "A-trun dolls! Going at a-trun dolls. Going! Unless!" The strain on the bidder's face would be terrible to behold. What on earth was he going to do if the lot was knocked down to him? What was he going to do, he asked you, with wild, beseeching eyes.

"Why doesn't somebody go on and bid? I don't want the darn lot," he whispered to his next neighbor one night.

"Ateny-five, Ateny-five!" called the auctioneer, just then.

"What does he say?" queried the reckless one.

"Eight-twenty-five. You've lost your lot."

"Ain't that the plague-take-it luck!" said the reckless one, who was also resilient. "Neb mind. I'll get another chance before this thing is over."—New York Post.

Thinks Aged Must Deserve Respect.

Many people tell you that you must be respectful to older people, quite leaving out of the question whether or not they're worthy of respect. I've known some of the most obstinate, bad-mannered, unkind, unjust old people, whose faults were borne in silence because they were old. I've known a grandmother who would actually bribe her grandchildren to disobey their mother, her daughter-in-law. I've known an old man who by his unceasing bullying and heckling actually broke down the health of his son, who was carrying a heavy burden of care, but who might still be a well man if his father had not literally worried him into sickness. In both these cases I hold that the respect of the daughter-in-law and the son were misplaced, and that the old folks should not have been allowed to subject their kin to such ill treatment. Just being old is no guarantee of qualities worthy of respect.—Woman's Home Companion.

English Poetry as Chants.

Masterpieces of English literature are now being set to chant music by the West London Ethical society. Swinburne's "The Holy Spirit of Man," Walt Whitman's "Whoever You Are," and Wordsworth's "The Soul That Rises Within Us" are among the poems lately thus sung, partly as unaccompanied solo, partly as harmonized chant. The president of the society entertains the rather bold hope of eventually obtaining the introduction into English church service of readings from the masters of English literature.

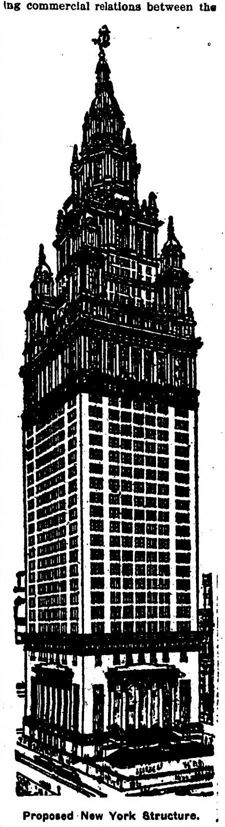
Imagination in Dreamland.

A man who awake is most prosaic, whose mind is commonplace, who is utterly unable to invent a story or write a drama, will asleep have the most astonishing flights of imagination. He imagines a story. He peoples it with players, men, women and animals, and each one of them—even the animals at times—speaks his part as perfectly as if he actually were alive.

TALLEST BUILDING IN WORLD

Proposed Structure Will Be Erected to House Goods for South and Central American Trade.

New York.—Here is projected the tallest building in the world. It is still in embryo, but has progressed to the stage of blue print and architectural plan. The site has not yet been selected, but if this great conception should gain the essential financial support of the parties interested—American manufacturers who desire to establish their goods in South and Central American markets, and the big Southern-American concerns who believe in the great opportunity of fostering commercial relations between the two Americas—it will probably tower among the great structures arising around the new terminal of the New York Central.



Proposed New York Structure.

It is to be more than a commercial structure, however, for it is to house the club rooms and exhibition halls of the Pan-American States association, which is now engaged in the important task of introducing the two interests to one another.

The design calls for a wonderful Spanish tower, pinnacled with red and gold, 900 feet in height. That is 151 feet higher than the Woolworth, the present record holder among the world's tall buildings.

Of course, the Eiffel Tower of Paris is higher yet, with its 304 meters, or approximately 1,000 feet. But the Eiffel tower is not either in form or purpose a building; it is rather an engineering demonstration along the lines of steel bridge construction, and beats about the same relation to a building proper that a fire escape or an extension ladder does to a staircase.

The step ladder order of Manhattan's—and that means the world's—half-dozen champion skyscrapers will therefore line up as follows:

Pan-American, 901 feet; Woolworth, 750 feet; Metropolitan Life, 700 feet; Singer, 612 feet; Bankers' Trust, 539 feet; Park Row, 382 feet.

The estimated cost of this latest building designed by Francis H. Kimball—who is the architect of the City Investing building, the Manhattan Life and a dozen other of the colossal structures that have helped to make downtown New York famous—rather stuns the imagination, as do other figures mentioned in association with this project.

The Pan-American building will call for some 21,000,000 cubic feet of building material of various kinds—steel, granite, terra cotta, concrete, tiling, bronze, iron, glass, etc.

Its estimated cost will be from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000.

The main structure is to be 33 stories high, above which the tower, with its efflorescence of spires and cupolas in the general style of the Spanish renaissance, will soar to the altitude of 901 feet.

Farmer Swallowed a Bee.

Norwich, N. Y.—Suffering from the sting of a bee that flew down his throat, John Dye, a farmer near here, is in a dangerous condition. Dye owns thousands of bees and while collecting honey, one flew into his mouth and passed down his throat, stinging him in the stomach, according to attending physicians. When he dropped the honey swarms of bees attacked him.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Fa s, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon (Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Subscribe for
The Northern Light
$.50 per Year.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, innesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Mud Lake Murmurs.

Ole Saastad transacted business at Holt the first os the week.

Lars Sagatuen was a business caller at Middle River last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Nielson were Sunday visitors with Mr. and Mrs Sundin.

Clyde Grover made a business trip to Middle River the first of the week.

School commenced in district No. 152 last week with Myrtle Groshon of Whiteford as teacher.

Chris Sibelrud returned home last week from Hartland, Minn., where he had been working for the past few months.

The Auction Sale held at the George Walker place on Thursday last week was attended by a large crowd and everything sold for a fair price. Cows sold as high as $65.00 apiece.

The Golden Ladies Aid Society will have their annual sale Saturday afternoon Nov. 15th at the school house in the Johnson district. Everybody come and bring your coin along.

Mr. and Mrs. George Walker left the first of the week for Emerado, N. D., where Mr. Walker will be engaged in the butcher business. Their fine farm here has been rented to Mr. Flakne who will move on the place soon. It is with great regret the neighbors and friends of this excellent family see them leave this place but we all wish them happiness and success in their new home and industry.

The Continental Insurance Co. has an unexcelled record for paying all losses. Why not have insurance that insures? CHAS W. LATTA, ag't.

Creamery Statement

Business of Holt creamery for the month of September, 1913.

Cream received	19,265 lbs
Average test	28.93
Butter fat	5,573.90 lbs
Per cent overrun	23.75
Received for butter sold	1,894.36
Balance from last month	260.63
From other sourbes	23.56
Total	$2,178.55
Paid patrons by check	1,671.70
Expense fund, etc.	379.86
Balance on hand	126.99
Total	$2,178.55

Number of patrons, 101.
Price paid for butter fat, 30 cts.
T. B. FOLDEN' Secretary.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, of Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05064, for SW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Knutson, Carl Sorino, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fosen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 20, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Thomas Knudtsen Sten, of Holt, Minn., who, on Oct. 18, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05[illegible], SW¼ SW¼, Sec. 28, E½ SE¼, SW¼ SE¼ Section 29, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole B. Johnson, Ole O. Garthus, Emil Ostlund, Nels Lyne, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that John H. Smith of Holt, Minn., who on February [illegible], 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 0[illegible], for SW¼ Section 11, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: James Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, Charles J. Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Citation for Hearing on Final Account and for Distribution.

Estate of KAERSTAN GRONVALD

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall In Probate Court:

In the matter of the estate of Kaerstan Gronvald, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Karolina Gronvald, Henry Milo Clifford Gronvald, Carl Helin Gronvald, Peter Oliver Gronvald, Clara Helen Gronvald, John Helin Gronvald, and all persons interested in the final account and distribution of the estate of said decedent:

The representative of the above named decedent, having filed in this court her final account of the administration of the estate of said decedent, together with her petition praying for the adjustment and allowance of said final account and for distribution of the residue of said estate to the persons thereunto entitled; Therefore, You, and Each of You, are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this court at the Probate Court Rooms in the City of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 15th day of November, 1913, at o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal of said court, this 18th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM,
Probate Judge

A. N. ECKSTROM,
Attorney for petitioner,
Warren, Minn. (o24n7)

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
October 10, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olina Knuts Bollingberg, of Golden Valley, Minn. who, on November 29, 1910, made Homestead entry, No. 05[illegible], for NW¼, Section 33, Township 156 Range 41, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Register and Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn., on the 18th day of November 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: George E. Olson, Engebret Moe, Peter Rosand, Alfred Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof mode according to law under which entry was made.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

Notice of Contest

Department of the Interior, United States Land Office, Crookston, Minnesota, October 15, 1913.

To Adolph Schirbel of Gatzke, Minn., Contestee:

You are hereby notified that Christian E. Evens, who gives Duluth, Minn. as his residence and Thief River Falls, Minn., in care of O. A. Naplin, as his postoffice address, did on September 16, 1913, file in this office his duly corroborated application to contest and secure the cancellation of your homestead Entry Serial No. 08470, made Sept. 16, 1912, for SE¼ NE¼, N½ SE¼ and the SW¼ SE¼ Section 20, Township 157, Range 39, 5th Prin. Meridian, and as grounds for his contest he alleges that said Adolph Schirbel has wholly abandoned said land since making entry thereon; that he has not resided thereon within the last six months preceding the institution of this contest; that he has not made the improvement required by the homestead law, and the contestant herein is now the owner and holder of the Assignment Certificates issued by the Auditor of Marshall County for delinquent drainage taxes on said land.

You are, therefore, further notified that the said allegations will be taken by this office as having been confessed by you, and your said entry will be canceled thereunder without your further right to be heard therein, either before this office or on appeal, if you fail to file in this office within twenty days after the FOURTH publication of this notice as shown below, your answer, under oath, specifically meeting and responding to these allegations of contest, or if you fail within that time to file in this office due proof that you have served a copy of your answer on the said contestant either in person or by registered mail. If this service is made by the delivery of a copy of your answer to the contestant in person, proof of such service must be either the said contestant's written acknowledgment of his receipt of the copy, showing the date of its receipt, or the affidavit of the person by whom the delivery was made stating when and where the copy was delivered; if made by registered mail, proof of such service must consist of the affidavit of the person by whom the copy was mailed stating when and the post office to which it was mailed, and this affidavit must be accompanied by the postmaster's receipt for the letter.

You should state in your answer the name of the postoffice to which you desire future notices to be sent to you.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Date of first publication Oct. 17, 1913.
" second " Oct. 24, 1913.
" third " Oct. 31, 1913.
" fourth " Nov. 7, 1913.

Citation for Hearing on Petition for Determination of Descent of Land

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall, In Probate Court,

In the Matter of the Estate of Anders [illegible] Gutterud, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Julia Isabella Gutterud, Carl Nikolaf Gutterud, Alma Christine Gutterud, Ida Jonetta Gutterud, Oscar Elvin Gutterud, Thea Elisa Gutterud, Arthur Gutterud, and Christi Gutterud, and all persons interested in the determination of the descent of the real estate of said decedent:

The petition of Christi Gutterud having been filed in this Court, representing that said decedent died more than five years prior to the filing thereof, leaving certain real estate in said petition described, and that no will of decedent has been proved, nor administration of his estate granted in this State, and praying that the descent of said real estate be determined by this Court:

Therefore You and Each of You, Are hereby cited and required to show cause if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Room in the city of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the [illegible] day of November, 1913 at 10 o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal thereof, this [illegible] day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM
Probate Judge.

H. O. Kjorme,
Attorney for Petitioner,
Thief River Falls, Minn. (o31n14)

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
October 25, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that George Charlson of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on June 25th, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. [illegible], for SE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make commutation proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 5th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christifferson, Gunder Sannes, Charlie Charlson, Andrew Charlson, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 1, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Charles J. Smith of Holt, Minn., who, on Feb. 3rd, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07251, for SW¼ Section 12, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 8th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H. Smith, Marshall Gehrke, Hjalmer K. Johnson, James Smith, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Sept. 30, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Edvard Svensgaard, of Flakne, Minn., who, on Sept. 7th, 1911, made Homestead Entry, No. 06541, amended to read as follows: for Lot 4 SW¼ NW¼ Sec. 4, SE¼ NE¼, NE¼ SE¼ Section 5, Township 156 N, Range 41 W., 5th meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 11th day of Nov. 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Lars A. Sage[illegible], E. A. Wright, C. Norbeck, Martin Nygaard, all of Flakne, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

Mascot Flour

and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

H. OIEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn

DR. J. T. TURLEY,

DENTIST,

Will be in Holt Friday and Saturday, November 14-15

Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS	$1.00	GOLD CROWN	$5 & $6
TREATMENTS	1.50	PORCELAIN CROWN	5.00

PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,

OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON

General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.

Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

LUMBER
LUMBER

In Carrying The Lumber WE Do

We are ready to supply any demand and with the best material at shortest notice. Do not go elsewhere, as we will give you the best attention possible; and the man who shops around always comes back to us at last. Better be wise first as last. A trial order will convince you.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

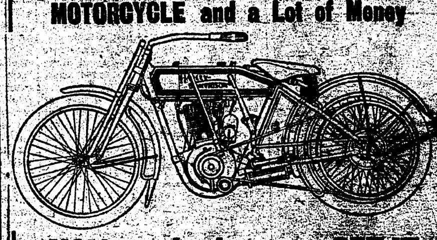
If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA

(North of the Minnesota River)

Is Going To Be Given This

HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money



YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.

A good hustler can make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.
Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.
It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name...

Post Office...

Rural Route.................... State....................

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

Chas. Martell 3

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1913 NO. 16

GREETING

We beg to announce that the Farmers' State Bank of Holt is now open ready for business. We extend to all a cordial invitation to call, and we respectfully ask for a share of your deposits and banking business.

Our fixtures and vault are strictly up-to-date, and we have taken every precaution to make this bank absolutely safe for our depositors and other patrons. Our efforts will be to

Always take care of local wants and assist local development To the Limit of Our Resources

FARMERS STATE BANK of HOLT

Board of Directors:
LARS BACKE, President; S. S. KOLDEN, Vice-president and Cashier; B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier; ARNOLD BJERKHOEL, CHAS. W. LATTA

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.22
Wheat	.75
Barley	.42
Oats	.28
Rye	.42
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

K. O. Flakne came in from Mud Lake and went to Crookston Tuesday.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Nov. 14 & 15. See his "ad."

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginu Block, Thief River Falls.)adv)

Rev. Martin T. Strom left yesterday for Climax and North Dakota points and expects to be absent for about two weeks.

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sod in Hot
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 15th

New Bank Has Started

The Farmers' State Bank of Holt opened its doors to the public last Tuesday and it looks as though the people generally welcome its advent. The issuing of its charter was delayed on various trivial pretenses for several months, but it is apparent that political string pulling by certain "bosses" furnished the actual reasons for the delay.

The new bank has capital stock of $10,000 and a surplus of $1,000. It is under competent and experienced management, and has no alcoholic decorations attached to its directorate. Here's hoping that it may speedily grow into a real power to assist in local dvelopment.

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (ad-tf)

Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Koldon and baby went to Thief River Falls Wednesday afternoon in Pete Anderson's car.

Bert Terwilliger returned Tuesday after several months during which he has been working in Iowa and Dakota

WANTED—Some good farmer to deliver good butter and eggs at this office. Will pay highest market prices, cash.

Chris Berkeland moved to Thief River Falls last week and Martin O. Nelson has rented and moved onto the Berkeland farm south of Mud Lake.

CHICKENS FOR SALE—About 200 Plymouth Rock and White Leghorns; all fine spring chickens. Price, 40cts per head. Martin O. Nelson, Holt.

Frank Coppoy left on Tuesday to take the misses Lena and minnie Hoffman out to their claims in Beltrami County near malcolm postoffice. He'll come back all right.

OXEN FOR SALE—Yoke of red and white oxen, 5 years old, good and true workers, weight about 3,200 pounds. Swan Carlson, NW 1-4 section 23, East Valley township.

The hunting season for big game opened on monday and quite a number of the local sportsmen donned red coats and went to the timbered country in search of deer and moose.

Lars Backe and Arnold Bjerkhoel were up from Thief River Falls Tuesday to take part in a directors meeting of the Farmers State Bank and put things in smooth running order for the business of the new institution.

There will be a basket social tomorow evening at the Hanson & Barzen place, 3 miles northeast of town, formerly occupied by Tom Severson. The proceeds will be for the benefit of School District No. 59. Everybody invited.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl will conduct services in the Thief Lake church at 10:30 a. m. on Sunday, and at Golden Valley, in the school house near Olaf Dahl's, the same afternoon at 3 o'clock. English Confirmant class will meet at the Ordahl residence on Monday, the 17th, at noon.

Al Huseth is fixing up his building next to the Farmers State Bank in nice shape to install a complete line of cigars, confectionery and soft drinks in connection with his barber shop. He ir going to have rather nifty quarters and is sure to enjoy a liberal patronage from the start.

Blocking the crossings here seems to have become a habit with freight conductor "Ole" Johnson, who seems to have got the idea that the public is entitled to no consideraton. Monday evening he kept the crossing blocked for about an hour with the result that a warrant has been issued for his arrest.

Boy Terribly Injured

On Saturday last Andrew Erickson aged 14 years, came near being killed in a runaway while returning to his home near Ringbo from a trip to Middle River. According to the stories told, booze played a most important part in the near tragedy.

It seems that the injured boy had gone to Middle River in company with two older brothers, one of whom was leaving on a hunting trip and the other, age 16, returned home with Andrew. It is stated that a jug of whiskey was bought at the saloon in Middle River and sent home with the younger boys. On the way they drank some of the stuff with the result that both became some what intoxicated, and when their horses ran away they were powerless to stop them. The younger boy fell out of the rig, his foot catching in the buggy spring, and he was dragged along the ground a long distance. When the horse reached home the older boy is reported to have been sitting in the buggy asleep.

Dr. Gambell was called from Thief River Falls and dressed the boy's wounds and on Sunday he was brought to town and taken to Crookston to the hospital next day. There the boy is at the present time hovering between life and death. One eye is totally destroyed and the other so badly injured that even if he lives there is little hope that he will ever be able to see again. His scalp was literally torn to ribbons and hung in loose strips from his head with all kinds of dirt from the road ground into the raw flesh. If he lives he will always be disfigured.

Henrik Erickson, father of the injured boy, returned Wednesday from a trip to Minneapolis, and yesterday went to Crookston. The mother is said to be nearly crazed with grief.

A boy's bright young life, spoiled hopelessly at best, to pay for some other person's appetite for booze. A child destroyed.

The Auction Sale at the Adolphson farm, in section 1, of Agder, was in every sense a good sale. The total figures were far higher than the owner expected, and a new local record was made when one cow sold for $67. Young cattle also brought high prices. Moral: Get Latta to cry your auction sale.

ONE FORM OF PRIDE.

"What sort of fellow is Bronson?"

"He's the sort of fellow who would rather stay away from Europe all his life than not go across in the biggest boat."

NOT AN IMPROVEMENT.

Bacon—And has your neighbor done anything to improve the neighborhood?

Egbert—I should say not. He's just bought his son a cornet.

TRIMMING FOR HATS.

"I see Burbank has perfected several new fruits. He's a useful man."

"No doubt, in his way. But what a man milliner he would have made."

CLUES.

"What made you suspect the prisoner was a man trying to escape?"

"Because I noticed he wore a slouch hat and a cutaway coat."

FAST MANUFACTURE.

"Did that slick swindler make anything by his game?"

"Yes. When the police got on to him, he made tracks."

UNTOLD.

"Dad, what do they mean by untold wealth?"

"Means the man hasn't filed a tax statement, son."

ALL BILLS PAID ON THE FIRST DAY OF EACH MONTH

Handing Out Checks

On the first of the month is a much more dignified method of paying bills than counting out the money. Much quicker too, and there is no possibility of paying out too much. Moral: Open an account at this bank and reap all these and other advantages.

Holt State Bank

General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

Holt School Notes

These who were neither absent nor tardy for the month of October were:

Gladys Hagen, Rosie Heinse, Ida Hagglund, and Ida Relerson.

The highest average in spelling in the three grades for the month of October were:

A class—Amanda Mickelson, 99.
B class—Rosie Heinse 85 and Merril Latta 85.
C class—Ida Haggland, and Kenneth Latta, 84.

Olga Saartad has again resumed her work after a months absence.

WANTED;—Some one to hold Merrill's book in class.

Elmer Hagglund started school on Monday.

All pencil boxes that fall on the floor belong to Miss Hanson.

(Primary Department)

Ruth Tobiason has had perfect spelling since school started.

Those having perfect attendance for last month are: Arne Huseth, Vernon Huseth.

Last week we omitted to mention that Lars Backe, president of the Farmers State Bank of Holt, was reelected as mayor of Thief River Falls by an overwhelming majority. The opposition put up the hardest fight they were capable of, but it's pretty hard to turn down a man that the people have known and trusted for thirty years.

Notice For Publication.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olof Kristofferson Viken, of Germantown, Minn., who, on April 8, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07664, for SE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn, on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Gunder Thompson Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., who, on Nov. 13, 1911 made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06875, for Lots 1, 2, S 1-2 NE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olof K. Viken, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

EMPIRE CREAM Separators

REMARKABLE FOR SMOOTH, QUIET EASY RUNNING

Used by Three Generations

THE HANDSOME EMPIRE

It pays to be particular when buying a cream separator. The whole value of the machine depends on quality.

Buyers are looking for quality, too. But they don't look for it by squinting through a magnifying glass, or by feeling the parts to see if they are smooth. They try the crank to see how the machine "feels" and "sounds" when it runs. They want to know how long the machine has been on the market.

Many young farmers are buying EMPIRES today, both because they like EMPIRES and because their fathers and grandfathers used EMPIRES before them.

Come in and see the EMPIRE, or ask to have it sent out to your place.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

INDIANAPOLIS CAR STRIKE ARBITRATED

EMPLOYES WIN THEIR DEMAND FOR ARBITRATION OF DIFFICULTIES.

TROOPS ARE ORDERED HOME

Strikers to Get Jobs Back and Car Service Is Immediately Resumed —Union Is Not Recognized.

Indianapolis, Nov. 10.—The strike of the employes of the Indianapolis Traction and Terminal company has been settled through the efforts of Governor Samuel M. Ralston. The employes won their demand for arbitration, but nothing is said about recognition of the union in the terms of settlement.

Street car service is resumed, according to the terms of the settlement of the strike, which also provides against any further interference with the operation of cars.

All Men Reinstated.

All the men who were in the employ of the company on Friday night, Oct. 31, when the strike was called, and all employes discharged since that date on account of joining the union, are to be reinstated by the company, with full seniority rights and without prejudice. The company, however, is not compelled to reinstate men who engaged in violence during the strike, but the refused men may appeal to the public utilities commission of Indiana for a hearing.

Disputes and grievances as to wages, hours, conditions and service will be referred to the utilities commission for arbitration if the company and employes fail to reach an agreement within 10 days. The company must take up these grievances with its employes within five days after the resumption of service. The utilities commission, by the terms of settlement, must give a decision, which shall be binding on all parties interested, for three years, and shall revert to the resumption of work within 30 days from the date of the first hearing.

Arbitors Sign Pact.

In addition to the union official and traction company officers, the agreement was signed by Ethelbert Stewart, representing the United States government, and Governor Ralston for the state of Indiana.

After the settlement of the strike the 2,000 members of the Indiana national guard, who were called here Thursday by the governor, were sent to their homes.

The strike resulted in four deaths and many injuries, including several police officers.

Until Thursday the downtown streets have been the scenes of almost continuous rioting. A large amount of damage has been done to property.

Each side claims a victory in the settlement of the strike. The union officials say that while they are disappointed in that they did not obtain recognition of the union, they obtained their main contention, which was a demand for arbitration of all disputes between the employes and the company. The railway company asserts it won in its fight not to recognize the union.

SEEKS SENSATION; GAGS SELF

Chicago Girl Also Ties Herself and Fires Rubbish Heap Near Stake.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—Gertrude Han-16 years old, who was found bound and gagged in the cellar of the home of O. V. Jahns, with a pile of rubbish burning near her, confessed to the police that she had set fire to the rubbish and bound and gagged herself. She said her object was to "create a little excitement."

The girl was uninjured by the blaze, although nearly unconscious from the smoke.

The police were called by Mrs. Jahns who smelled the smoke and discovered the girl. After she had been released the girl told the police that she had been attacked by a pyromaniac, whom she had discovered setting fire to the house. To prevent an outcry, the man had bound her and left her near the fire, she said.

Automobiles Clash; 4 Killed.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 8.—Four persons were killed and seven injured when two automobiles collided. A seven passenger automobile packed with men and women ran into a smaller machine and overturned, crushing four of its occupants to death. The dead are Ervin Chapman, owner and driver of the larger car; Miss Vride Elmore, W. R. Sanders and Harry B. Curtis.

Has to Show Decree of Divorce.

New York, Nov. 10. — Roland B. Molineux, twice tried 12 years ago for the murder of Mrs. Katherine J. Adams and acquitted, applied at the city hall for a marriage license to wed Miss Margaret Connell of this city. The license was not granted because he had forgotten to bring with him a copy of the decree of divorce which his former wife, Blanche Cheseborough, obtained against him in the South Dakota courts. Miss Connell said that she was 28 years old and a secretary. Molineux is 47.

LIND TO QUIT MEXICO SOON

MISSION OF PRESIDENT'S ENVOY IS NEAR END.

Opinion Is That Mexican Dictator Will Get Ultimatum Soon—Near Panic in Mexico City.

Mexico City, Nov. 10.—It is generally understood that John Lind, special envoy of the president of the United States, will quit Mexico soon. The envoy said that he would depart from Mexico City immediately.

Mr. Lind saw no Mexican government officials and probably will not see any during his stay in the capital. He had a long conference with Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the American charge.

There was nothing at the American embassy to indicate that a more favorable turn in events is expected, and there is every reason to believe that an ultimatum, in its full diplomatic sense, will be handed soon to Huerta, the time limit being brief. It is expected that this new document will be so written as to bring an end to the relations between the two countries before Nov. 22, the date fixed for the convening of the new congress, unless Huerta sees fit to agree to the terms of the Washington communication.

Silver is the most elusive thing in the capital. The price of foreign exchange has stiffened and some merchants have resorted to the plan of issuing vouchers in place of silver in making change.

At some of the banks the bank notes of some states have been refused. This caused a slight panic among holders of such paper.

The credit slips issued by the mercantile houses have no legal standing and in many cases were refused.

In such cases the business houses were forced to hand back the bank notes to would-be patrons without having made a sale.

DENIALS AND REITERATIONS

McGuire Denies, Says Hennessy Charges are False—Counter Charge.

New York, Nov. 8.—George H. McGuire of Syracuse denied on the witness stand that he had ever furnished John A. Hennessy, former Governor Sulzer's graft investigator, with a list of construction firms which had been "sandbagged" into giving campaign contributions to Tammany Hall as testified by Hennessy last week. McGuire, who is a brother of James K. McGuire, former Democratic mayor of Syracuse.

No sooner had McGuire sworn that he had never specified to Hennessy a single instance of any construction company engaged in state highways or barge canal work having given up campaign contributions, than he was withdrawn from the stand and Hennessy, taking his place, reiterated his statement and added that he could prove it by others.

McCOMBS WILL ACCEPT POST

To Be Ambassador to France—Successor Is Being Discussed.

Washington, Nov. 10.—Persons close to the White House say that William F. McCombs, chairman of the Democratic national committee, who was married in London to Miss Dorothy Williams, will accept President Wilson's offer of the ambassadorship to France. The post has been open to Mr. McCombs since the inauguration. He has twice declined it, but there is every expectation now that he will send the president word of his acceptance.

Talk of a successor to Mr. McCombs as national committeeman includes the name of Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to the president.

Allege Heir Was Duped.

New York, Nov. 10. — Charges of conspiracy in the legal battle over division of the $10,000,000 estate of the late Caroline D. Fair and her husband, Charles L. Fair, killed in an automobile accident near Paris in 1912, are contained in amended complaints filed in the supreme court. The amended complaint alleges that Mrs. Fair's aged mother, Hannah R. Nelson, was induced, through misrepresentations made to her that her daughter, Caroline, was the mother of an illegitimate child, to accept $125,000 for her rights in the $10,000,000.

Funk Case Going to Jury.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—The case of Attorney Daniel Donahoe and Detective Isaac Stiefel, charged with having conspired to defame Clarence S. Funk, will go to the jury Tuesday, according to attorneys after the presentation of evidence. Judge Pam refused for the second time to take the case away from the jury and direct a verdict of not guilty.

Dupes Over 500 Women.

Chicago, Nov. 7.—What was said by the officials to have been an extensive gambling scheme in which more than 500 women participated and to which women were attracted through the mail, resulted in a federal indictment against Mrs. Sarah Foster. The woman is charged with conducting a card game and lottery and offering prizes to those who pay membership fees. It was alleged that at one time Mrs. Foster had several thousand members, procured by advertisements sent through the mail.

MR. AND MRS. "BILLY" HITT AND THEIR HOME

William F. (Billy) Hitt, having succeeded in winning the heart and hand of Katherine Elkins, is hurrying to completion his new residence in Washington. It is on Massachusetts avenue, near Dupont circle, among the homes of many millionaires.

THAW LITIGATION ONLY JUST BEGUN

GOV. FELKER SIGNS EXTRADITION PAPERS, BUT DOESN'T MEAN MUCH.

UP TO SUPREME COURT NOW

Return to Matteawan Not Yet Determined—Attorneys Prepare Further Fight for Client's Liberty.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 10.—Governor Felker, Saturday, signed the extradition papers for the return of Harry K. Thaw to New York on the request of Governor Glynn. Thaw is charged with conspiracy in New York county.

The decision, although a victory for William T. Jerome and his assistants in their fight to return Thaw to New York, does not mean that he will go back to Matteawan immediately. The fugitive's fight may last years.

Basis of Decision.

The governor based his decision on the indictment returned against Thaw in New York county, which charged him with conspiracy to escape from the insane asylum at Matteawan, N. Y., to which he was committed after his second trial for the killing of Stanford White. Thaw made his sensational flight August 17, and a few days later was arrested near Coaticook, Canada.

Thaw's attorneys announced that they would immediately file an amendment to their petition for a writ of habeas corpus, application for which was made soon after Thaw was arrested in this state following his deportation from Canada.

The Original Petition.

Because the extradition has now been granted on the basis of the New York county indictment, the petition must be amended accordingly.

Thaw was not present when Governor Felker announced his decision to the attorneys representing the fugitive and the state of New York at the capitol. He will remain here in the custody of United States Marshal Nute and Sheriff Drew pending the federal proceedings.

Litigation May Take Years.

It had been generally expected that Governor Felker would sign the requisition papers presented by Governor Glynn of New York. In so doing he followed the conventional lines and in this case shifted the whole matter automatically onto the shoulders of Judge Edward J. Aldrich, of the United States court for the district of New Hampshire.

Neither Mr. Jerome nor Sheriff Fred C. Dornbeck, of Duchess county, deputized to receive the fugitive in event the extradition was granted, was here to receive the decision. It was a foregone conculusion that Thaw could not be taken back to New York on account of the writ of habeas corpus which is pending in the United States district court.

Filipinos Starving; Make Appeal.

Ghent, Belgium, Nov. 7.—Members of a party of 55 Filipinos brought here to be an attraction at the exposition, are said to be starving. Nine of them have died from exposure. The survivors declared they had received no wages for eight months, owing to the failure of promoters by whom they were engaged. The Filipinos have petitioned the American consul general at Antwerp to send them home, stating that otherwise they will starve or will be sent to jail as vagabonds.

SURVIVORS TELL OF LIVES LOST

SCHOONER WAS ABANDONED UNNECESSARILY IT DEVELOPS.

Vessel Which Had Gone Ashore in Gale, Brought to Port Undamaged.

Portland, Me., Nov. 7.—The probable loss of their captain, Vincent Nelson, and three of his mates, and the death of one, form part of the tale of the sea brought here by the survivors of the crew of the Gloucester fisherman, Annie M. Parker. The fact that their abandonment of the stranded schooner, near Nantucket, and the loss of life was unnecessary, was not known to the crew until word reached them that the schooner was in port at New Bedford, practically undamaged.

Nine survivors of the Parker's crew reached here aboard the lumber vessel Tifton from Jacksonville, which had picked them up from dories 30 miles off Nantucket Sunday morning, after they had been afloat 24 hours without food or drink.

A tenth survivor, Henry Nelson of Beverly, son of the captain, was left behind on the Boston fishing schooner, Josie and Phoebe, exhausted from his experience, but hoping to find trace of his father.

The Annie M. Parker, bound home from the fishing ground, went aground on Rose and Crown shoal, off the Nantucket coast, early Saturday morning. The crew agreed with Captain Nelson that hope for safety lay in getting clear of their craft, so they abandoned her.

"AIGRETTES" NOT AIGRETTES

Customs Inspectors Find Most of the Plumage Seized Is Made of Horsehair.

New York, Nov. 10.—Most of the plumage seized by customs inspectors here as aigrettes proves to be imitations made of horsehair, customs officials announced after completing their appraisal of the confiscated ornaments.

Originally considered by the inspectors to be worth $3,000 to $4,000, the value of the so-called aigrettes has dwindled to $400. They probably will be returned to the women who were forced to surrender them.

Appraisers said the imitations were clever and had been sold to American women in European shops at prices equal to those of the genuine plumage. Only 10 per cent of the seizures proved to be what their owners declared they were in placing values upon them.

U. S. Mexican Policy Undecided.

Washington, Nov. 10.—No announcements have been made either at the White House or state department as to the program of the negotiations being conducted by Charge O'Shaughnessy and John Lind in Mexico City to bring about the retirement of Huerta. Though there have been intimations that Huerta would reject the American demands, the next step is dependent on the receipt of an absolute and final answer.

Prisoners Operated on for Morals.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Nov. 8.—The surgeon's knife as a cure for moral delinquency obtained temporary liberty for two men who had been convicted before Circuit Judge Bridgman here. George Dorgan, charged with a crime involving moral turpitude, and Clarence Chappelle, who pleaded guilty of burglary, returned from an Evanston, Ill., hospital, where they had undergone operations, which, the surgeon hoped, would effect their moral regeneration. Other experiments are to follow.

MEXICAN CRISIS IS PROBABLY AT HAND

HUERTA STILL DEFIANT—PRESIDENT WILSON DETERMINED IN ATTITUDE.

ALL DAY CONFERENCE HELD

Senators Borah and McCumber Advise Lifting Embargo on Arms for the Rebels—Lind Advises Break.

Washington, Nov. 11.—Foregoing his usual custom of banishing official business on Sunday, President Wilson worked practically all day on the Mexican problem. He did not go to church.

Conferences Are Held.

The president summoned Senators Borah and McCumber, Republican members of the senate foreign relations committee, and spent nearly two hours with them in discussing the situation.

The president later conferred with Secretary Bryan last night.

From the way the president's callers talked, the situation rapidly is approaching a climax and some definite developments are expected immediately. Officially, no copy of the statement of Provisional President Huerta to the diplomatic corps Saturday night had been received, nor had the formal reply to the American demand that Huerta resign arrived.

That the United States had given Huerta until the first of this week to reply before making the next move was the general belief in official circles.

The Next Step.

The next step in the view of some of those who have talked with the president within the last two days—since he began summoning members of the senate foreign relations committee, probably will be an announcement by the United States, not only reiterating its final refusal to recognize the Huerta government, but making it clear to the world that it also shall refuse to recognize any acts of the new congress soon to be convened by Huerta.

The Washington movement, it is understood, will not undertake to guarantee any business of commercial relations with the Huerta regime, and probably will stand by any constituted government, which, in the future, may repudiate the loans or transactions of the present government.

Senators Express Views.

Both Senators McCumber and Borah declined to talk of what the president had told them in their conference, but expressed their own views later.

Senator Borah told the president that in his opinion, even should Huerta accede to the American request for his resignation at this time, there would be no responsible person or persons to establish a government. The Idaho senator suggested that if the embargo on arms were lifted the Constitutionalists probably could get possession of the reins of government in Mexico City in about 30 days and that the United States ought to give them an opportunity to establish themselves. Should they fail, he believes, the United States might consider other steps when their contingency arises.

Senator McCumber says the embargo on arms should be raised, but realizes the position of the president, he said, in being unwilling to send munitions of war into the rebellion-torn republic, which might add to the inhumanity of the fighting.

Lind Advises a Break.

Mexico City.—It is well understood here that Special Envoy Lind has recommended the termination of all diplomatic relations between Mexico and the United States.

Government officials, foreign residents and the people of Mexico realize that the relations between this country and the United States are strained almost to the point of war, but there is perhaps no man in the republic who knows what Washington will do.

John Lind, who represents the president of the United States, is ignorant of the intentions of his chief and if General Huerta is anxious at all regarding what may develop he does not betray it.

Mrs. W. H. Seward Is Dead.

Auburn, N. Y., Nov. 10.—Mrs. Janet Watson Seward, wife of General William H. Seward, is dead, aged 74. She was married to General Seward, son of William H. Seward, secretary of state in President Lincoln's cabinet, in June, 1860, and when he went to the front as a lieutenant colonel in the Civil War she accompanied him and spent several years in camps along the Potomac. Her husband, one son, William S. Seward, Jr., and two daughters survive.

Miss Clark Selects Gift.

New York, Nov. 11.—Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of Champ Clark, speaker of the house of representatives, has returned to Washington. She came here last week to select, for the house of representatives, a suitable wedding present for Miss Jessie Wilson, daughter of the president. Miss Clark's return to Washington was apparently unexpected and followed telephone messages and telegrams from her father and from Representative Mann, the Republican minority leader in the house.

LARGEST GATHERING OF SCIENTIFIC MEN

ABOUT 3,000 GREAT SURGEONS ARE ASSEMBLED IN CHICAGO FOR MEETING.

TO REVIEW HUMAN SUFFERING

Hundreds of Operations to Be Performed in Clinics—Transplantation of Organs From Dead to Live Bodies on Program.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—The furthest advance that has been made by surgery for the relief of human suffering will be marked out by the fourth annual clinical congress of surgeons of North America, which has just begun a week's session here.

Three thousand surgeons are in attendance, the largest body of scientific men ever gathered in this country. The foreign surgeons are headed by Sir Rickman Godlee, president of the Royal College of Surgeons of England.

Plan 2,000 Operations.

More than 2,000 operations will be performed in clinics in the presence of the delegates. The most startling surgical miracle that will be staged during the week may be the transplantation of a human limb. Possibility of the success of this operation clearly has been indicated in experimental work on animals. It is certain that attempts will be made at this demonstration if human beings who have lost limbs can be brought to the operating table when the corresponding limbs of persons who have died in health are available. Owing to the great interest in this new promise of surgery every effort will be made to perform one or more such operations this week here.

Transplantation of organs, such as kidneys, is included in the scope of this operation and a number of such operations will be performed.

Scourges to be Reviewed.

Cancer, tuberculosis and diseases of the ductless glands are the chief scourges of humanity in the present day. Surgeons will take a square look at what progress has been made in the last year toward the conquest of these maladies.

Lung surgery and study of the mysterious influence of every function of the body of the isolated organs known as the ductless glands will occupy several days of clinics. Manufacturers of new joints from old ones, solidified by tuberculosis of arthris, will be shown in a number of operations under the eyes of Sir Arbuthnot Lane of London, who first performed the operation.

The American College of Surgeons will hold its first convocation Thursday, when 1,100 fellowships will be conferred. The college has been organized to take place with the Royal College of Surgeons of England and similar bodies in France and Germany. The first work of the organization will be the planning of legislation to institute a surgeon's degree in America, without which no physician will be licensed to perform operations. A year's extra study in a medical college is to be one requirement for a surgeon's license.

Dr. Edward Martin of Philadelphia, retiring president, turns over his office to Dr. George Emerson Brewer of New York, president-elect. Dr. John A. Witherspoon, president of the American Medical association, and Dr. Murray McLaren, president of the Canadian Medical association, will deliver addresses. The clinics will continue daily and nightly throughout the week in all Chicago hospitals.

Aged Educator Dies Suddenly.

Exeter, N. H., Nov. 11.—Harlan Page Amen, principal of Phillips Exeter academy and an overseer of Harvard college, is dead. He had been in charge of the academy for nearly a score of years. Death followed a shock of apoplexy. He was found unconscious in his home beside a telephone to which he had gone apparently to summon a physician. Mr. Amen was 60 years old. He was graduated from Harvard in 1879.

Freight Train in Snowdrift.

East Liverpool, Ohio., Nov. 11.—Gangs of laborers were sent out to Spiedel to release a freight train of the Baltimore & Ohio road that was caught in a snowdrift and was stalled for several hours. This city was in darkness for several hours, electric lights, street railway and telephone and telegraph wires having gone down in the storm.

Exempt From Income Tax.

Washington, Nov. 11.—Receivers of insolvent corporations are not required to pay the corporation tax imposed by the Payne-Aldrich law, according to a decision by the supreme court.

Brooklyn Has $150,000 Fire.

New York, Nov. 11. — Twenty-five frame buildings, including several yacht clubs, were destroyed by fire in the Sand bay section of Canarsie, in Southeast Brooklyn. The loss was $150,000.

German Soldiers in Danger.

Berlin, Nov. 11.—A dispatch from Lisbon says the wireless station there received distress signals from the German steamer Rhenania, off Vigo, Spain. The steamer has 300 German soldiers on board.

It isn't every man who is whole souled when he is well heeled.

The most effective, yet simplest remedy for coughs is Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops—5c at Drug Stores.

Any Way He Wanted.

The Professor—Boy, get me a fly.

New Page—Yes, sir. Dead or alive, sir?—Punch.

Persuasion.

"No," said the timid man, "I don't want any flying machines today. I'm afraid of them."

"Why, sir," said the persuasive salesman, "a flying machine might save your life."

"How?"

"You might be out riding in one when an earthquake takes place."—Washington Star.

BLISTERS ALL OVER BODY

Hollene, New Mexico.—"Our little boy first broke out in little yellow blisters about the size of pin heads and they itched and hurt so badly he could not rest day nor night. In a few days they were running sores and kept spreading until they were as large as a dollar. He had them all over his body and was nearly tortured to death, as they hurt him so badly he could hardly sleep. He would scratch and cause great sores all over his face and legs.

"We tried several highly recommended remedies but they didn't seem to help him a bit. Nothing seemed to do any good until we got Cuticura Soap and Ointment. We hadn't used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before he was completely cured without a scar." (Signed) Mrs. J. H. Northcutt, Nov. 22, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Needed Only the Beginning.

Anatole France once agreed to write an essay on Moliere. He repeatedly broke his promise to his publisher, who finally threatened him with legal proceedings unless a certain number of pages were delivered within a specified time. France hurried off to his lawyer, who was none other than Raymond Poincare, now president. M. Poincare heard his story and said that the author would better comply with the publisher's demand. "It's impossible," said France. "But you're a genius," was the reply. "Genius is infinite patience. I can't possibly do it in the time," said France. "Nevertheless begin," replied the advocate, "and we'll see." So Poincare dictated the first sentence, "Moliere is a Parisian," and added, "Go on from there." France was complacent, perhaps inspired by the suggestion of the words, and the brilliant piece of criticism was easily done in time.

Maid Had Helped.

Young Van Winkle waited nervously in the parlor for Julia to appear. He had been sitting there, twiddling his thumbs, for half an hour. Finally a step was heard in the hall and he rose to his feet expectantly.

But it was not Julia. It was her maid.

"Marie," said the impatient young man, "what keeps your mistress so long? Is she making up her mind whether she'll see me or not?"

"No, sir," answered the maid with a wise smirk. "It isn't her mind she's making up."

Not Fit, But Fitting.

"She must dress in all the latest styles."

"What makes you think so?"

"I just overheard her telling a friend that she hadn't a thing fit to wear."—Detroit Free Press.

The Reason.

"A musical comedy is a gamble."

"I guess that is why they have bookmakers in that, too."

Toasted to a Golden Brown!

Sounds "smacking good," doesn't it?

That's

Post Toasties

Tender thin bits of the best parts of Indian Corn, perfectly cooked at the factory, and ready to eat direct from the package — fresh, crisp and clean.

There's a delicate sweetness about "Toasties" that make them the favorite flaked cereal at thousands of breakfast tables daily.

Post Toasties with cream and a sprinkling of sugar—

Delicious

Wholesome

Easy to serve

Sold by Grocers everywhere

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

DISCUSS HEALTH OF CATTLE AND HOGS

CHOLERA AND OTHER DISEASES OF LIVESTOCK SUBJECT OF COUNTY AGENTS.

CATTLE ARE A "SAFE BUY"

So Says Veterinarian in Discussing Herds of Minnesota—Various Hints Given Farmers By Experts.

Minneapolis.—Hog cholera was discussed in detail by a conference of county agricultural agents at the state agricultural school.

Dr. M. H. Reynolds and Dr. H. Creston Hoskins, both veterinarians, delivered the principal addresses, the former in a talk on diseases of cattle, with special reference to prevention and treatment of hog cholera and the latter on the work of the serum plant at the agricultural college.

Cattle Well Protected.

"No place in America and probably nowhere else in the world," declared Dr. Reynolds, "can a man buy cattle with greater safety than in Minnesota. Cattle in this state are extremely free from tuberculosis and other diseases, and the risk on that score is the minimum for the world." He gave statistics on hog cholera showing success in more than 80 per cent of cases.

H. M. Bush discussed the advantages to be derived through organization of farmers' clubs. The club and co-operation ideas, fruit marketing and other similar topics were on the final program.

Farm water supply, farm sewage disposal and farm forestry were discussed at the session of the county agents. Dean Albert F. Woods told how water supplies are polluted and how to prevent pollution. The principal points made by Dean Woods may be summed up as follows:

Points of Dean Woods.

The movement of bacteria through close clay soil is slow. A shallow well is never safe unless it is in close clay soil. Care should be taken in curbing a well to see that the drainage is away from the well and that the well is high enough so that surface water will not get into it. Springs and wells are frequently affected with typhoid germs by persons washing in the water and then allowing it to drain back into the well. The covering of a well should be absolutely tight. Typhoid germs and cholera germs and mosquitoes may be killed in ponds by a treatment of copper sulphate or chloride of lime, using one part to a million parts of water by weight. Dean Woods said extensive experiments had been carried on by the government with sulphate and hyperchloride and he referred his auditors to the government bulletins explaining the results.

Sewage Dangers Shown.

The danger of allowing sewage to be drained into the ground where it might get into water supply was emphasized by J. T. Stewart of the engineering department. He explained the use of the septic tank and said that at its worst the septic tank is better than the cesspool.

FAIL TO CONVICT VON KLEIN

Second Jury Disagrees and Next Trial Will Occur Charge of Polygamy.

Portland, Ore.—The new jury in the case of Edmund Von Klein of Minneapolis, charged with having robbed Miss Ethel Newcomb of San Francisco of her jewels, reported a disagreement and was discharged. This was Von Klein's second trial, the first jury also having disagreed. He will be next tried on an indictment charging polygamy.

Purity Congress Has Fight.

Minneapolis, Nov. 8.—Wide variance of sharply-expressed opinion as to the province of the International Purity congress was voiced by delegates at the first business meeting when formal demand was made for an explanation from Dr. Keshava Deva Shastri of Benares, India, one of the prominent speakers programmed, for what was construed as an attack on the Christian missions in his native land expressed by him in the form of a published interview. "I stand by what I said," said Dr. Shastri after a later interview.

Too Much Tornado Relief Fund.

Minneapolis.—Bankers of Minneapolis were much surprised when they received a letter from the treasurer of the restoration committee of Omaha, returning $2,000 of the $4,000 sent to Omaha last spring for the relief of tornado sufferers. The letter thanked the Minenapolis banks for their aid and enclosed a check for $2,000. The letter stated that the money, instead of being used for relief, for which there had been plenty of funds, had been used in restoration work.

BENSON TEACHERS MEETING

County Agricultural Agent and others Make Addresses Before County Educators.

Benson.—A teachers' meeting recently held here was one of the most successful ever held in this county. About fifty of the school districts were represented by their teachers. The meeting was opened by Miss Ida Hanson, who taught singing by rote. Miss Agnes Hawkinson taught a poem to several of her pupils. The primary language class by Miss Petra Hamre was interesting and instructive.

Alfred Carlsted, the agricultural agent for this county, emphasized the responsibility of the teacher and advised them how to gain the co-operation of parents. Professor A. Z. Arehart, director of the agricultural department of the Benson high school, spoke on "Farmers' Clubs," and Professor W. L. Nies of the Murdock schools told the teachers what he was doing to promote industrial work in his school.

Miss Emma Rodberg, who has been instrumental in organizing a boys' and girls' club in district 46, told of the work of the club.

The county superintendent, Lillie E. Thorson, gave an outline of her plans for the county spelling contest.

ST. PAUL'S MYSTERIOUS CAVE

Explorations Reopened and Mouth of Fabled Rendezvous Is Located.

St. Paul.—Carver's cave, which has been an archaeological mystery here for thirty years and the object of considerable investigation and excavations for months, has been rediscovered. John H. Colwell is the explorer. Mr. Colwell, who is president of the Mounds Park Improvement association, has had workmen digging at the mouth of the cave and the opening has been finally reached. Initials were carved on the walls, but were almost indiscernible and the cave is flooded with water. The cave is located in the bluff under the Indian mounds and Mr. Colwell will ask the city to make park improvements around it.

Thirty years ago Jonathan Carver described the cave and said it contained many Indian hieroglyphics. The mouth has since been closed by washouts. Many stories have been told about treasures concealed in the cavern.

MRS. LECKWOLD HELD INSANE

Confessed Poisoner of Child Declared Not Responsible for Her Acts.

Minneapolis.—Because she was considered insane when she gave her daughter, Viola, poison, Mrs. Ida Leckwold, was found not guilty in a verdict returned after the jury had deliberated the case for nearly two hours.

Under terms of the statute governing such cases, Mrs. Leokwold was remanded to jail pending the sentence of the court sending her to the state hospital at Rochester, where she will be held until discharged by competent authority.

Without apparant concern in the findings of the 12 men, Mrs. Leckwold was led into the court room without the slightest sign of interest or nervousness. When the verdict was read and the court ordered her taken back to her cell, tears trickled down her cheeks as her sister embraced her.

AUTO BANDITS ROB A BANK

Waltham Institution Loses $4,400 and Many Valuable Papers.

Waltham.—Bandits riding in an auto descended upon Waltham some time Thursday night and blew the safe of the State bank.

Some $4,400, practically all the bank's cash on hand, was taken, and the robbers soon made off in the machine which brought them into the town. The bankers had no night watchman on guard, and the robbery was not discovered until early Friday.

The sheriff at Austin, county seat of this (Mower) county, was notified and came here at once to begin an investigation and start pusuit.

Waltham, scene of the robbery, is twelve miles north of Austin and is the center of a prosperous farming district.

All the valuable papers in the bank were carried away. The job was a scientific one and there is no clue for the officers to work upon.

High License Forces Win.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Nov. 6 High license carried here in the city election by a vote of 624 to 373.

Ore Records are Broken.

Duluth.—The former record … shipments for 1912 already have been broken by the total shipments from the American head of the lakes up to Nov. 1 of this year. Reports on the ore traffic up to Saturday last from all the ports show that 37,942,412 tons have been shipped since the season opened. This is 2,348,118 tons more than was shipped in the corresponding period of 1912. It is several thousand tons more than the total shipment of last year.

TWO FAMILIES WILL OWN ALL

ABSOLUTE MONOPOLY OF FARM IMPLEMENTS FEARED.

Attorney for Government in Harvester Case Makes Some Forceful Statements.

St. Paul.—Dissolution of the International Harvester company in such a manner as to prevent effectually any possibility of two or more of the disintegrated parts ever coming into ownership of companies having common stockholders was asked by Edwin T. Grosvenor, special assistant to Attorney General J. C. McReynolds, in opening the government's final arguments in its anti-trust case against the company in the United States district court here.

Mr. Grosvenor declared that the International Harvester company is in and of itself a combination in restraint of trade in harvesting implements.

Concluding the first portion of his final argument for the government, Mr. Grosvenor declared to the judges that unless "the Harvester trust" is disintegrated, two families within a few years will own a monopoly of every implement made in this country for the farmer. The special assistant to Attorney General McReynolds specified Cyrus McCormick and James Deering of Chicago, as the heads of these families and characterized them as willing to use their "great power to fix prices and intimidate local dealers as a means of crushing competition."

Then with dotted maps of agricultural states of this country as exhibits to drive home his argument to the court, Mr. Grosvenor showed the location of 40,000 local agents or dealers in 9,000 villages, towns and cities, which he declared were but a portion of the vast selling machinery dominated absolutely by the International Harvester company. Through the medium of the general sales committee of the corporation, said Mr. Grosvenor, acting directly through district managers, the local dealer was forced to accept the dictates of the trust or be crushed. Also, the federal lawyer said, the local dealer was used to keep the corporation informed of competition at whatever point it might arise so that immediate steps could be taken to smother such competition.

"We have shown," argued Mr. Grosvenor, "by evidence that cannot be disputed that Cyrus McCormick, James Deering and Harold M. McCormick, acting as members of this general sales committee, have approved directly the monopolistic methods of the corporation's managers or employes and in doing so we have established beyond any doubt the character of these people and that character is such as to make it necessary for the courts to restrain them in the future to prevent the destruction of competition and the entrenchment of monopoly by unfair methods."

DISPOSITION OF FORTUNE

Bulk of Late Charles G. Gates' Wealth Likely to Go to His Widow.

New York, Nov. 5.—Following the funeral of Charges G. Gates, it is stated by several intimate friends of the late financier that his fortune, estimated at fully $40,000,000, is left outright to his widow, who was Miss Florence Hopwood of Minneapolis. The bulk of John W. Gates' wealth will eventually pass to his nephew, Henry Rockwell Baker.

Mrs. J. W. Gates regards young Baker as a son. When his health failed she gave him $250,000 so that he could complete his college education. Had Charles Gates lived the bulk of the $35,000,000 estate left to his mother would have gone to him. Now it is believed that young Baker will inherit this money.

Boiler Explodes; One Killed.

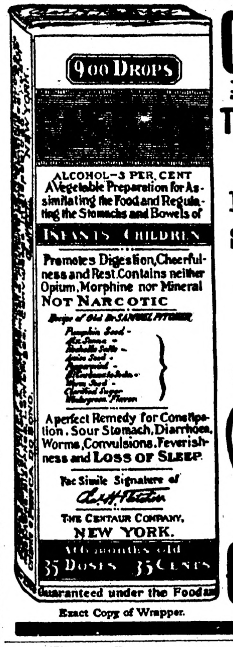
Frazee.—An engine boiler exploded at the farm of Peter Schram, two miles south of Frazee, resulting in the death of one man and severe injury to two others. The men were running a corn shredder when the boiler exploded. Otto Bebeskie was struck in the head, dying instantly. Ed. Dinehart, the engineer, was struck by a flying door. George Richman, who was attending the schredder, was struck in the head by flying pieces.

Isle Is Now Incorporated.

Isle.—This village, on the south side of Mille Lacs lake, has voted to incorporate. The proposition carried by unanimous vote. Isle has been making progress the past year, many new settlers arriving.

Fair Sex to Hunt Deer.

Red Wing.—For what is the first time in the history of Goodhue county and perhaps the state, women have made application to hunt big game in the state. Mrs. R. A. Davenport of Dennison and Mrs. L. E. Kruse of Stenton, near here, represent the fair sex of the county who are willing to endure the hardships of trailing through the northern pines to hunt deer. Their husbands have gone north every season and both will follow them into the dense woods on Nov. 10.



900 DROPS

ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT

A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of

INFANTS CHILDREN

Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral NOT NARCOTIC

A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP.

Fac Simile Signature of

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK.

35 DOSES 35 CENTS

Guaranteed under the Food

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of

Chas. H. Fletcher.

In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

For PINK EYE DISTEMPER CATARRHAL FEVER AND ALL NOSE AND THROAT DISEASES

Cures the sick and acts as a preventive for others. Liquid given on the tongue. Safe for brood mares and all others. Best kidney remedy; 50c and $1 a bottle; $5 and $10 a dozen. Sold by all druggists and horse goods houses, or sent, express paid, by the manufacturers.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists, GOSHEN, INDIANA

The Best Light for Any Home

For best results use Perfection Oil

Any authority on "eye-matters" will tell you that kerosene lamps are best for reading and studying. And the Rayo is the best of all Oil Lamps.

Rayo Lamps

now light three million American homes—the best evidence of their superiority.

Let your dealer demonstrate and explain. Illustrated booklet free on request.

Standard Oil Company, Chicago

(AN INDIANA CORPORATION)

Near Tragedy.

A Pittsburgh millionaire stood beside his $8,000,000 automobile wondering where to go next.

A woman whom he had known rushed out of the hotel and sought to solve this problem for him in a hurry.

She shot at him, but, of course, she did not hit him.

Instead the bullet punctured the chauffeur's leg.

"Great guns, that was a narrow escape!" exclaimed the millionaire. "She might have punctured a tire!"

Different.

Ruff—Hello, Fluff. I heard you married a woman with an independent fortune.

Fluff (disconsolately)—No. I married a fortune with an independent woman.—Judge.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

It's as easy to buy experience as it is difficult to sell it.

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

Your Liver Is Clogged Up

That's Why You're Tired—Out of Sorts —Have No Appetite.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS will put you right in a few days.

They do their duty.

Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion and Sick Headache

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

CARTER'S ITTLE
IVER
PILLS.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 46–1913.

PISO'S REMEDY

Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.

FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

BOOK BARGAIN CATALOG

HOLIDAY BOOKS & BOOKS IN SETS AT UNHEARD-OF PRICES

Send postal today for Catalog 50

THE TABARD INN BOOK COMPANY

1302 Filbert St. Philadelphia

Magnificent Crops in All Western Canada Is 1913 Record

160 ACRE
FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA
FREE

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of wheat, oats, barley and flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912 at Chicago, Western Canada carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

Apply for descriptive literature and reduced railway rates to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

W. E. BLACK

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK

Raw Furs and Hides

We want large quantities of Raw Furs and Hides. Will pay big prices for same. Write for our price lists, they are free. Correspondence invited and cheerfully answered. LA CROSSE FUR & HIDE CO., 232 S. Front St., La Crosse, Wis.

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. High-est references. Best results.

Pettit's Eye Salve TONIC FOR EYES

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

An Amazon of Tripoli

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

PAUL LANE, duped, disgusted, and abjectly conscious of the utter failure of the important mission which had been entrusted to him, roamed through the streets of Delhi.

The powerful League of Lost Causes had sent him upon an undertaking involving the destruction of England's power in India. He had failed miserably, and, at the moment of his failure, had encountered the eyes of the mysterious woman who had induced him to leave America and to devote his millions to the purposes of the League. She had seen his disgrace and read and reflected the abatement in his eyes.

He loved her, this beautiful unknown lady of lofty rank, though, in obedience to the command which she had laid on him, he had never sought to discover her identity. He was ignorant even of her name. He had believed her a personage of title at the Austrian court; behold, she was in India, an unsuspected watcher of the way in which he carried out his mission and her mandate!

A flood of anger and resentment swept over him; anger against himself, that he had been blind enough to allow himself to be used as a tool; resentment against his friend Rosny, the League's Paris secretary, that he should have duped him so many times by the promise of some day meeting the girl again.

Now he would be fooled no longer. He would seek her out, find her, though he searched Delhi for days; he would speak face to face with her, plead his own cause, as was the right of every American, and stand or fall by her answer.

It seemed madness, but it was a glorious madness that enwrapped him, enmeshing spirit and senses until nothing seemed longer impossible to Paul. Imagining that Mademoiselle—the only name by which he knew her—was a visitor at the Durbar at the invitation of some ambassador, he haunted the railroad station for days until the last of the visitors had departed, searching and scanning every face eagerly in hope of seeing her again. But all his efforts were to no purpose, and at last, sick at heart, he resolved to abandon his object, to sever his alliance with the League, to see Rosny no more, and to return home to America again.

He took ship for Egypt; thence he embarked aboard a French steamer for Marseilles. The sun was warm, the sky bright and cloudless. The vessel skirted the low sand-dunes of the Tripoli coast preparatory to heading north for Malta.

On the second morning the white sides of a warship appeared some miles astern. As the hours wore on she began to draw nearer. At last the watchers, through their telescopes, could make out the Italian flag at her foremast. The French ship turned northward, being then within half a mile of the Tripoli shore; as she shifted her course, however, a gun roared from the Italian vessel. It was a blank shot, signifying that the liner was to heave to until her papers could be examined.

The coast being blockaded, this order excited much comment, but no alarm, among the passengers, who, crowding the liner's decks, watched with interest the approach of the pursuing warship. She anchored about half a mile distant and a cutter left her side, containing a boat's crew with an officer in charge.

But an astonishing effect was produced by this maneuver among a small fleet of Arab fishing vessels, which had been placidly sailing between the liner and the shore. As the warship hove to they turned and began to scurry toward the beach. One, which had been caught between the liner and the battleship, passed close under the Frenchman's bow as she beat her course landward. Paul, watching idly from the taffrail, saw two bronzed oarsmen pulling to supplement the power of their flapping sail, and then—

Seated in the bow, veiled, attired in white from head to foot, a woman in Arab garb guided them, issuing short, curt orders as they tugged at the oars. All the blood in Paul's body rushed through his veins furiously at the sight of her. It was the woman he sought. He had no doubt of it. Love's intuition would have told him that, but apart from it there was no mistaking that trim, slight figure, that imperious mien, displayed even under the desert veil.

As the boat passed under the liner's bow and scurried toward the shore Paul hesitated no longer. Without a thought, actuated solely by that overpowering impulse which possessed him, he vaulted over the taffrail and leaped into the sea.

A cry of horror went up from the liner's decks. The Arab dhow, as though fearing some hostile design in this maneuver, redoubled its efforts to make the land. As Paul came up he saw the taffrail crowded with excited, shouting, gesticulating passengers, and, twenty yards in the distance, the flying boat. Two hundred yards from the opposite side of the liner was the Italian cutter. As the officer perceived him rise to the surface he issued an order to his men, and the boat, altering its course, pulled directly toward him.

Paul struck out for the shore.

On that triangular race he ever looked back with astonishment that he should have won, though but a hair's breadth separated him from failure, and with gratitude that he escaped the swarming sharks, whose presence in those waters he had so stupidly ignored. He felt the shelving sands beneath his feet at last, stood erect, laughed, and plunged forward across the rank undergrowth that fringed the shore, just as the cutter grounded. Fifty yards to the right of him the Arab boat had pushed into a sandy cove, and the Italians, uncertain which to pursue, hesitated, and then ran forward, waist-deep through the surges, in pursuit of Lane. As he ran he heard the spit of bullets past his head and the report of rifles. Then, just as he began to anticipate his fate, he heard the crackle of musketry from along the shore, and, turning, saw a party of white-robed Arabs rise from the depression in which they had lain concealed and pour in a furious volley upon the Italians. Three sailors fell; after a moment of indecision the rest turned tail and ran back into the sea, launching their boat under a galling fire and pulling away toward the battleship.

A moment later Paul was surrounded by the exultant tribesmen.

Horses were brought up, and, at a sign from the veiled woman, Paul was placed upon the back of a scrub pony and the troop started at a quick pace into the interior. The low fringe of mangrove and acacia bushes which lined the shore quickly gave way to a waste of sand, into which the horses' legs sank to the fetlock. They journeyed onward without a pause for hours; the coast sank into the distance behind the rolling dunes; soon the wilderness of the Sahara surrounded them. But Paul's heart beat high in ecstacy, for though a vallainous-appearing Arab rode on each side of him, armed to the teeth and occasionally venting his feelings in an expressive gesture with his long knife, before him rode Mademoiselle. He could not be mistaken. Presently he would disclose himself. She had not recognized him.

But at last she did. For, turning where a small cluster of dying palms gave unfulfilled promise of an oasis, and riding back to her escort, she paused and gazed into his face. He saw her start, saw the quick flush of blood dye her cheeks and recede again; then with an expression of sublime contempt, she rode past him, issued an order to the Arabs, and the whole party veered sharply to the right and headed for a blue ridge of mountains which, as they progressed, resolved itself into an oasis of palm trees and ultimately disclosed the well-ordered tents of the Turkish army. They rode in late in the afternoon.

Paul was taken to the tent of the commander, Fethev Pasha. He had expected to meet a half-savage nomad; he encountered instead a stalwart, well-groomed Turk, in the prime of life, seated at a small camp table, on which were spread a number of official-looking documents. An orderly stood at his side and an armed guard on either side of the captive.

Mademoiselle had disappeared.

After a long, excited colloquy, in which the bronzed boatmen figured in the main, Fethev Pasha addressed Paul first in Italian, then in French, at last in English.

"Your business here?" he inquired.

"I am a traveler," answered Paul; and the commander smiled.

"The accusation is," resumed the Turk, "that you leaped from the deck of a passenger steamer in order to head our boat into the path of an Italian cutter. Unless you can explain your business somewhat better—" He smiled expressively.

Shame kept Paul silent. The commander, looking at him, smiled more and more blandly.

"Yau have no witnesses?" he asked. "The law of Mohammed prescribes that three witnesses must give evidence in capital cases. Only two have testified against you—the two boatmen." He issued an order to his servant, who went out of the tent, leaving Paul standing defiantly between the two rigid soldiers. Presently the tent door was brushed aside and the girl entered with the orderly. At the sight of her Paul weakened for the first time. The fear of imminent death became a reality, the terror of that eternal silence, in which they would be sundered forever, appalled him. His knees trembled and an icy sweat dripped from his forehead.

The girl stood beside Fethev Pasha imperiously; it was evident that even here she dominated the situation. And then began a strange argument between the pair. Though it was carried on in German, of which Paul understood hardly a word, its tenor was as clear as though English had been the medium. It was evident that Fethev had decreed Paul's death and that Mademoiselle was pleading for him. Hope kindled into joy again. All was not lost; this purposeless, wild adventure might yet bear fruit for him.

Presently Fethev, with a shrug of his shoulders, turned to Paul and addressed him in English again.

"Our third witness refuses to testify," he said.

"But you can testify against yourself," says the Sheria. "Now, since your memory is evidently poor, my friend, it needs to be refreshed. And I—I confess that I am curious concerning the motives which induced you to leap into shark-infested waters. You will have an opportunity of remembering."

He signed to the soldiers and spoke a few words in the Arabic tongue. They saluted and led Paul out of the tent. Though it had seemed but a few minutes since he entered, it was in reality an hour or more. The sun was low on the horizon and, with the swiftness universal in those low latitudes, darkness was already approaching, spreading over the east defiantly, as though mocking the inefficient luminary whose orb, red and enormous, declined toward the sand ridges in the distance. In silence Paul accompanied his captors under great fronds of palm branches which bent low over a rippling stream of purest water, and so to the edge of the oasis, where the eternal sands began once more. Halting there, one of the men stood guard over Paul, while the other, opening the haversack which hung over his shoulders, drew forth a jointed spade-blade, which he affixed to the tip of his rifle in place of the bayonet. Then he began stolidly digging in the sands.

Paul watched him with an accession of horror. Was he digging his grave? There could be no other purpose in this manuever. He dug deep, though, rather than wide, shoveling away the sand until he had excavated a hole some five feet six inches in depth. Then he stood up, stretched himself, yawned, and signified to Paul to step in.

Paul hesitated, and the second soldier prodded him in the back with his bayonet tip. A wild thought of resistance passed through Paul's mind and disappeared. There was no need to prolong the agony. He sprang down into the hole and stood there, while the soldier with the spade began shoveling in the sand again. It rose to Paul's knees, his waist, his armpits, his throat. A little mound above the level of the desert would hide his face. He was helpless against the dead weight of sand that held down his hands. He could not struggle or resist. Silently he awaited what seemed to be the inevitable end. But when the sand reached the level of Paul's throat the soldier patted it down, ceased his labors, looked at his companion, laughed; and the pair trudged back among the palms again.

They had buried their victim to the throat and left him there, a head above the desert, apparently cut off at the throat, to suffer death from the broiling heat of next day's sun—unless some prowling beast discovered him.

The sun had long since sunk. It was quite dark, save for a galaxy of brilliant stars that seemed to drift through the flying cloud. A cold wind rose. Immobile in the sand, Paul felt all his limbs tortured with cramps of intense agony; after awhile these were succeeded by a merciful numbness which crept icily from the chilly depths and enveloped him, blotting out all sense and consciousness. It reached his brain as though a clammy hand were laid on it, gripping it with its relentless fingers. Paul swooned away.

He must have been unconscious all through the night, for when he opened his eyes the east was rosy with the dawn. A crashing sound beat on his ear-drums, thunderous and prolonged. Paul was awake and alert now. There was no mistaking that sound; it was the noise of artillery, and as he listened it broke forth in a long and continuous roar, while shells burst among the palm trees and flung boughs to earth and drove great wedge-like gaps in the sand. Then from the rolling dunes to the right a line of little figures in yellow swept forward—tiny figures, like toy soldiers, each carrying a rifle as it raced toward the trees. It halted, extended, disappeared, rose from the sands again, and a roar of rifle shots crackled and spluttered. The Italians were attacking the Arab-Turkish camp.

Then hoarse shouting was heard, and figures of men on horses broke from among the trees, riding toward the line of riflemen. They drove forward in a compact body, in line of columns, riding with intrepid recklessness against their enemies. And at their head, not a hundred yards from where Paul watched, rode the veiled woman of his dreams.

He stared in terror at her, saw her lead the line forward, heard the murderous shouts of the attacking Arabs; then the rifle fire crackled again and of a sudden horses and men went down. White-robed bodies littered the plain. Riderless horses galloped madly here and there, found each other, gathered as if by mutual understanding into line, and trotted back again toward the camp in as orderly precision as though their riders still controlled them.

The battle had become general now. Screened as he was by the cover of the palm trees, Paul was out of the immediate zone of rifle fire, but the shells tore over him, hurling the boughs upon the sand and delving graves among the debris of the dunes. But Paul had no thought of his own danger. Fascinated, self-forgetful, he watched the re-forming line of Arab riders sweep forward once more. And at their head she rode again, undaunted, reckless, a veritable angel of battle. Once she turned round in her stirrups and shouted to her wavering forces. Again the line rode on; again that death-dealing rifle fire broke forth. There was no resisting that. The line shriveled away. The battle was over.

It was but a rear-guard defense after all, for the Turks had packed their tents and drawn away their impediments during the night. When the Italians occupied the oasis they found nothing but the bodies of those who had fallen. They halted there—some half a mile from Paul. They did not find him.

He saw men pass nearby by at times, but could not cry for aid, for his swollen tongue clove to the roof of his parched mouth and all his senses seemed about to fail him. He felt the pangs of imminent dissolution. He closed his eyes, waiting for death. He had no longer any fear, for he had seen her horse go down; and he knew that few of those who had fallen could have survived that intrepid ride into the zone of death.

He did not feel the burning sun that beat on him. He did not see the shimmering wastes of sand, nor taste the sand drift in his choking throat. But he heard the softly whispered words that came to him; and, as a man in a dream who does not dare to wake lest the vision vanish, he listened.

A soft hand soothed his brow. At last, venturing to open his eyes, he knew that his dream was true.

For she crouched at his side—the woman who had been the cause of all his venturings, she who had drawn him from the placid existence of his Long Island home to dare and do among the world of men. And all the scorn had faded from her face; only with looks of compassion; now she soothed him and stroked his burning forehead.

She crouched at his side and he saw that her white burnouse was spotted with blood from a crippling wound which had left her arm limp and helpless.

"Was it for me—Paul?" she whispered, and the sound of his name, whispered by her lips, thrilled him. "Was it for me, Paul?"

"It was for you," he mumbled through his swollen lips. "You have always been in my thoughts night and day since I found you, only to lose you. And I have never learned your name. It was too hard a test of service that you laid on me."

"But you were so impatient, Paul," she whispered. "Had you been cautious all would have gone well."

There was none of the old imperious glance in her eyes—nothing but softest compassion. In that moment of ecstacy Paul knew that his love was returned. But he knew also that there was some barrier which might not be easily passed.

She thrust her hand into the sand and began frantically digging to release him. But her efforts were futile. The sand, baked hard by the hot morning sun, might have been stone. With bleeding fingers the girl ceased her labors at last and stared into his eyes in terror.

"I cannot help you," she whispered. "I must go to the Italian quarters. I must bring aid." She rose and staggered a few paces forward, then sank down with a moan. She crept toward him again.

"I cannot!" she said slowly. "We must die here."

"But together!" whispered Paul. There was exultation in his voice. "Suppose we shout in unison," he continued.

Their voices hardly made themselves audible across the wilderness of sand.

"Tell me you love me!" Paul whispered eagerly, and heard the whispered answer. "And there is—there is none who has the right to claim you?" he asked again.

She shook her head faintly and fell forward beside his grave. Paul closed his eyes. He had no further wish to live. He swooned into what he thought was eternity.

It was long afterward that he fancied he heard the whirring of great wings above him. The sound passed through his mind like the shadowy fancy of a dream. He hardly felt the sand shoveled away or the hands that hoisted him from the pit. It was the taste of brandy in his throat and the long succeeding draught of cooling water, infinitely grateful; above all it was the agony of the returning circulation in his limbs that brought him back to consciousness.

When he opened his eyes he found himself lying in the shadow of a great aeroplane. At his side stood an officer wearing the uniform of the Italian aeronautical corps. Within the machine, strapped carefully to the uprights, her face pale as death, her eyes closed, was the unknown lady.

But when Paul stared, not yet quite sure of his surroundings, into the face of the man who had rescued him, he was more amazed than at anything that had occurred during his adventure. For this was Captain von Holzrath, whom he had met in antagonism on the Long Island shore that day when he had his first meeting with Mademoiselle.

The captain gazed into Paul's face steadfastly; he knew him, too.

"I am glad that we have met again," he said. "It is a far cry from the command of an Austrian battleship to that of an aeroplane scout in the Italian army, you think. Nevertheless, many things are possible which might seem impossible to you now, as you will learn on the occasion of our next meeting." He bent his head forward and continued in a low voice, filled with intense earnestness:

"Relinquish your hopeless quest, Monsieur. You see how fate has worked against you. Here I cannot meet you in honorable combat, and the the chance task of rescuing you from a living death which was laid upon me you owe me no gratitude. That is merely part of humanity's code. But, Monsieur, let me warn you, urge you to go back to America. You do not understand the strength of the forces with which you have to contend, or the impossibility of your aspirations."

Paul staggered to his feet and held out his hand. The captain grasped it.

"I shall never go back until I have succeded," he said. "But we will at least play our parts honorably, and God grant that we meet in honorable encounter at no far distant date."

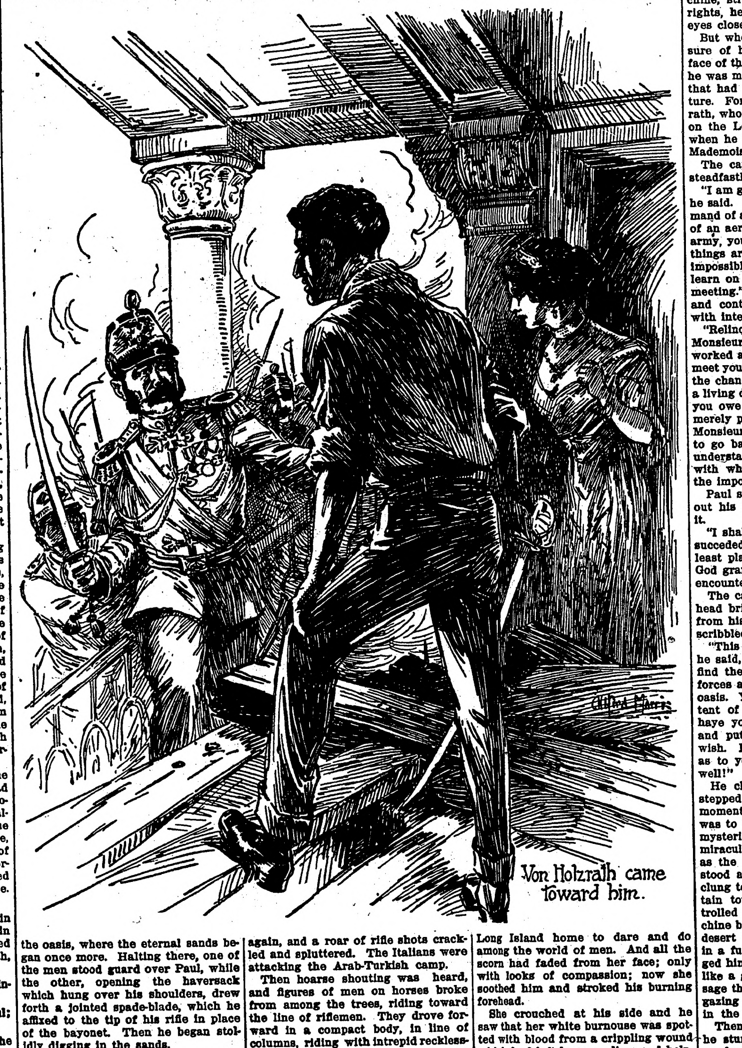
The captain smiled, and nodded his head briskly. He pulled a card case from his pocket, extracted a card and scribbled a few words on it.

"This will aid you to reach safety," he said, handing it to him. "You will find the headquarters of the Italian forces a mile beyond the limit of the oasis. You will make your way to the tent of General Rinaldes, who will have you conducted to the seashore and put aboard any steamship you wish. I have given you my warning as to your best destination. Farewell!"

He clasped Paul's hand again and stepped into the aeroplane. Until that moment Paul had not realized that he was to be parted once more from the mysterious woman who had been so miraculously given back to him. But as the captain sprang in Paul understood and, with a cry of dismay, he clung to the steel uprights. The captain touched the lever which controlled the mechanism and the machine began to move. It skimmed the desert sand, Paul still clinging fast in a fury of delirious anger. It dragged him, flung him aside, rose slowly, like a great bird, and winged its passage through the air. Paul stood still, gazing at it until it was only a speck in the distance.

Then, his head bowed with anguish, he stumbled slowly over the desert sands in the direction of the Italian quarters. He had found his love only to lose her again. And even now he did not know her name.

But he knew that she loved him. And he vowed that he would follow her and win her yet, though seven gates, each guarded by an angel with a fiery sword, as in the Arab legend, divided them.



Von Holzrath came toward him.

Well Drugged.

A doctor was summoned to a police station to examine an unconscious prisoner. The prisoner, very muddy and disheveled, lay on the floor of the cell. The physician bent over and examined him, and then, rising, said, in a loud, stern voice:

"This man's condition is not due to drink. He has been drugged."

A policeman turned pale, and said, in a timed, hesitating voice:

"I'm afraid ye're right, sir. I drugged him, all the way—a matter of a hundred yards or more."

Sounds Like It.

Mrs. Young—They say Mrs. Tubbs treats her husband like a mandolin.

Mrs. Younger—How like a mandolin?

Mrs. Young—Picking on him all the time.

FIGHTING A FOREST FIRE

BURNING THE "SLASH" TO PREVENT FIRES

MAKING A TRENCH FROM WHICH TO FIGHT FOREST FIRE

SWEPT BY FOREST FIRE

SELF SOWN PINE PROTECTED FROM FIRE

HOW THE REFORESTATION IS DONE IN BURNED DISTRICTS

FOREST fires! There is something awe-inspiring and terrible in the very thought of them. You may never have traveled hours, on a railway train, through the choking smoke. You may never have seen the light of a blazing forest. Yet, though you have not come as near as this to a forest fire, the words carry a feeling of danger and of tremendous might for evil.

It is hard for the average layman to realize how fires can assume such magnitude in territory supposed to be under supervision of men appointed for the particular purpose of preventing fires, but the fact is quite readily comprehended by those who have had occasion to travel through some of the remote and inaccessible regions within the national forests. As a matter of fact, the lands withdrawn as national forests are almost entirely of a rugged, mountainous nature. Necessarily, there are large and comparatively open portions included, particularly in the range country, but instances point to the fact that the sections subject to the most severe fires are invariably those of the most rugged and inaccessible nature, made up of high, steep mountains, covered with a dense forest and heavy underbrush. Many places are, in their present condition, practically impenetrable; and while they are being opened up as rapidly as funds will permit of trails being built, yet there is so much area, so many other duties are required of the forest officers and the funds mentioned are so limited and inadequate, that progress of such work, while keeping pace with the available resources, is necessarily slow.

Before enlarging upon conditions under which large fires begin, it might be well to mention briefly a few of the forest fire terms with which the layman frequently meets and may not understand.

Forest fires are classified generally as crown or top fires—those where the fire travels through the tops of the trees with surprising rapidity and working disastrous results; and ground or surface fires, where the fire travels along the ground, consuming soil covers or humus, brush and litter, seedlings and often small trees, and, consequently, doing little or no damage to mature timber. Luckily, in most cases forest fires are ground fires and it is these that are the most quickly controlled. Yet a single top fire can cause vastly more damage than a great number of ground fires. However, it is generally under unusual conditions that crown or top fires occur—such as high winds, very bushy or steep country and severe drought, when such conditions can in an incredibly short time change a creeping ground fire into a sweeping crown fire, leaving a path of ruin and often death in its wake. In brief, drought and wind are the two dominant conditions favorable to severe fires. The wind is always the most dreaded factor during the fire season, its freakishness and uncertainty upsetting the best of plans. So fierce was the wind at the time of the destructive fires of 1910 that whole hillsides of timber were uprooted and men were forced out of their saddles. The fire leaped across rivers half a mile wide at a single bound, traveling nearly a mile a minute at times and devouring everything in its path. Often wide canyons were spanned as by a great jump, the fire continuing on the opposite side and leaving the canyon timber green and unharmed. Numerous instances of the absolute freakishness of the fire could be cited, and all tend to show its very uncertainty.

In fighting a fire there is constructed around the burning area what is called a fire line or trench. This consists of clearing away all debris and brush, generally for three or four feet, though wider when conditions allow or warrant it, and exposing the mineral soil for one or two feet or wider as necessary. An ordinary ground fire, unfanned by a strong wind, will die out on reaching the strip of mineral soil, often as effectually as if the line were a stream of water. When the fire is moving slowly and men can stand the heat and smoke, it is always desirable to build the trench close to the fire so as to prevent its gaining momentum as it progresses; but where the fire is traveling quite rapidly, often the fire line has to be placed some distance away from the fire, and where adequate patrol or supervision is assured the burned material on the inside of the line is fired in order to meet the advancing fire and destroy the inflammable material in its path. Backfiring, as this is called, is generally used only in an emergency and by experienced hands. Often, of course, where the fire is severe, strips of timber for variable distances are cleared, but in the ordinary ground fire such work is usually too slow and unnecessary.

The best tools used by a fire-fighting crew in the mountains are axes, shovels and mattocks or grub hoes, the hoes being usually in greatest proportion and most effective. Often one or two crosscut saws are useful, particularly where the fire is traveling through a lot of down timber. The axmen generally go first, clearing out and cutting away the heavy stuff along the line; then follow the grub hoe or mattock men, breaking through the heavy sod and roots; and last the shovel men, who clean out the trail, or, as might be stated, put the finishing touches on the work of the others. The amount of work a gang of men can do depends upon various circumstances, such as the nature of the country, tools available, etc., but roughly it might be said that a gang of twenty men can build a mile of line a day.

Aside from a few general principles there are no set rules for fighting forest fires—in fact, it is far from a black-and-white proposition. Rather, it calls into play initiative and headwork, and the result attained bears mute evidence of the success or failure of the supervising officer, although always it must be remembered that that uncertain and uncontrollable factor, the wind, can snatch victory from the hands of man so quickly and easily as to make it seem sometimes a veritable mockery of his efforts. And, too, the unbelievable action of fire, even when apparently under control, makes it absolutely necessary that it be watched closely and continuously until there is not a single remaining vestige of its existence.

Among the principal causes of forest fires are locomotive sparks, lightning, camp fires left unextinguished, burning of slash in clearing land, logging operations—principally from fire in the resultant slash accumulated by the average logger in cutting over an area. There are minor other ways, such as incendiarism, ashes from a pipe, a lighted cigar or cigarette stub or lighted match cast thoughtlessly aside. The first three mentioned, however, are the most general.

When a fire has once assumed the proportions of a large top fire, it is generally inadvisable to attempt to check it; rather, it is good judgment to consider the safety of the fire fighters themselves, so that they may be in readiness to attack the fire when it again leaves the tops of the trees and assumes its slower progress along the ground.

It might be mentioned right here that forest fires, with particular reference to ground fires, do not always destroy standing timber, but often only the very small trees, brush and surface cover or humus. Potential timber, of course, has a distinct value, and the destruction of a good soil cover is a decided detriment to the forest, but many trees, such as Douglas fir, tamarack and yellow pine, have a thick, heavy bark which forms a good resistance to fire and will often withstand periodic ground fires for years. Other trees with thin bark, of course, succumb quite readily.

In the report of the secretary of agriculture, embodied in the Yearbook of the department of agriculture for 1911, he states that "the fires of the calendar year 1910 covered more than 3,000,000 acres of government timberland and 800,000 acres of private timberland within the national forest boundaries, and inflicted damage to national forest timber, including young growth, estimated at a little less than $25,000,000. The loss in timber destroyed or damaged was slightly over 6,500,000,000 feet . . . In fighting the fires, special expenditures were incurred totaling over $1,000,000, besides the cost in time of the regular protective force." In addition to this, there was an added toll of 74 human lives lost in fighting the fires and a large number injured, to say nothing of many ranchers, settlers, prospectors, etc., who perished. Altogether, it certainly puts the fire season of 1910 down as one of the country's great catastrophes, to be listed with the great Hinckly fire in Minnesota in 1894, which did such devastation.

One watches quite breathlessly a serious conflagration in a city and admires the fearless and systematic work of the firemen fighting to subdue the flames. Here they are but minutes away from the source of the fire, with speedy conveyances for reaching it and every possible assistance of human ingenuity to control the fire.

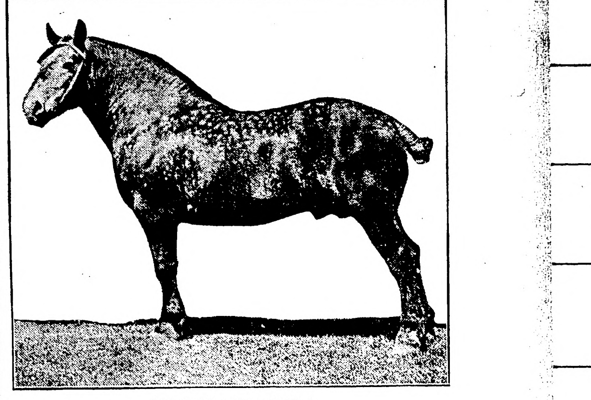
Compare this with the many obstacles with which the forest fire-fighter has to contend. Sometimes he is more than a day's journey from the fire. He has a limited and often inexperienced crew to help him. He must travel on foot or on horseback, and he cannot lope along as they do in the city parks—mountain trails are not made for loping horses. He must rely on packhorses for conveying commissary supplies, because it may mean many days of hard work ahead of him on the burning area. Very often, indeed, he must blaze his way a number of miles through a trailless wilderness, carrying his bed and grub on his back, and through a country where every step seems a greater impediment to rapid progress; and when he reaches the fire it may be of such proportions as to appall a less sturdy nature.

The rapidity with which fire can spread in the mountains is almost unbelievable. For instance, in 1910, by the middle of August over 3,000 small fires had been put out by patrolmen and over 90 large ones had been brought under control by crews of from 25 to 150 men. And yet, when the cyclone of August 20 came, that work was all undone so quickly as to make one gasp with wonder and awe. Within 48 hours a strip of country more than 100 miles long and more than 25 miles wide had been burned over. And still the fire was advancing. Against all this an army of more than 3,000 men fought persistently and courageously and always in the face of overwhelming odds, yet never did they falter until the rains came.

In passing, it is but fitting to give credit to the brave men in the government's employ, who risked and lost their lives in earnest endeavors to carry out their duties, and many are the tales of heroism and unselfish devotion during those strenuous times, when men toiled and sweated shoulder to shoulder.

Men can and will, in the course of time, make effort to reforest the great devastated areas, but the scope of years to carry out such work is broad indeed. Man's best work, now and for always, lies in the prevention of a recurrence of such calamities as have gone before. Through legislation man can compel the railroads to use contrivances to prevent sparks from leaving the engines; he can educate campers into the necessity for their co-operation in extinguishing camp fires (a truly little thing, yet big in results) and exact a severe penalty for failure to abide by the law; he can appropriate more money for improvement and protection work, to place the forests under closer supervision and make them more accessible, so that the fires caused by lightning, for instance, can be caught at their very inception; but mostly, he must enlist the cooperation of all his fellowmen to help in the great work of preserving and perpetuating the forests because they represent a source of wealth and necessity and beauty, not to any single individual, but one in which every member of our great country is, and always will be, directly or indirectly a participant, even unto our children's children, ad infinitum.

SOME PRACTICAL HINTS ON THE HORSE



Imported Percheron Stallion.

(By J. M. BELL.)

A bran mash, once a week, is a renovator for the driving horse. Two quarts of shelled oats and the same quantity of wheat bran, scalded about mid-day and then covered with a blanket or cloth, to keep in the steam, add a pinch of salt and feed at night. Give no other grain with this mash, but of course the regulation ration of hay. This once a week mash, given preferably Saturday night, will do your driving or riding horse all the good in the world.

The work stock will also appreciate the mash, too.

Sell off the old stock. Corn and hay are both high this year, and it's a long time before spring. It is hard to put fat on these old fellows in cold weather, so you had better sell them for what they will bring, and thereby save feed and incidentally expense.

The plan of blanketing work horses is a very good one in many respects, but you must remember that when once you put the blanket on, you must be very careful as to how you take the blanket off.

Give the horses more care and warmer quarters, thus saving high priced feed and horse flesh.

Try a measure of kindness for a balanced ration.

The work-horses must have exercise and fresh air when not in use. Turn them out during the warm part of the day, and let them enjoy themselves.

Are you simply feeding the horses to keep them alive this winter, or are you feeding and caring for them with an eye to their good flesh and usefulness when next spring's work opens up?

Honestly, now, how many men did you ever see salt their horses in winter?

Don't allow the offer of a good, stiff price for the best colts to tempt you in letting go of them. You'll need some fresh young teams one of these days, and it takes an almost fabulous sum of money to buy a span of young horses suitable for farm purposes.

If you can't get a competent blacksmith to shoe the horses, they are better off without any. The cause of most hoof troubles may be traced back to ill-fitted shoes.

EUROPEAN FARMER EXCELS AMERICAN

Give Back to Soil Everything That Could Be Fed in Way of Manurial Value.

Manure has a peculiar effect upon the ground. In some ways it loosens the food necessary to plants by quickening the chemical action of the soil, and inert soil particles change into active food constituents for the growing plants. It is not alone the direct food value that is at issue, but the whole effect upon the physical, chemical and bacterial life of the soil that must be considered. In England and other European countries where the soil has been tilled for hundreds of years, the production today exceeds that of former years. In fact the wheat production in England during the middle ages was not as good as it is in the northwest today. At present England produces more than twenty bushels of wheat to the acre, France twenty-two, Austria about eighteen, and the productivity of the fields of the Belgian and Dutch farmer are almost beyond belief. This has come about by giving back to the soil everything that could be fed it in the way of manurial value. In this respect American farmers have much yet to learn.—Journal of Agriculture and Star Farmer.

HOG PARALYSIS IS COMMON DISEASE

Trouble Is With Nervous System and Not With Kidneys as Generally Supposed.

(By L. L. LEWIS, Oklahoma Experiment Station.)

Paralysis is a very common disease among young sows after farrowing and in young rapidly growing shoats. The trouble is most commonly known as kidney worms, and is frequently referred to as some kind of kidney disease. The trouble is with the nervous system and not with the kidneys. Before farrowing the sow should be fed on ground oats, bran, milk, etc., with very little corn. Knuckling over in the hind legs is generally the first symptom. Should partial paralysis begin to appear the following treatment should be given: Five to fifteen grains of powdered nux vomica in feed twice a day, the dose depending upon the size of the animal; also give ten to fifteen grains of sulphate of lime in feed twice a day. This treatment should be continued for weeks if necessary, as nervous troubles of this character are not to be remedied by any treatment in a few days.

Best When Picked Green.

Pears and apples keep better if picked a little green. Some pears rot from the core outward if allowed to ripen on the tree.

PROTEIN IS NEEDED FOR WINTER FEED

Oats and Peas are Becoming More Popular Each Year—Easy to Cut and Handle.

(By W. M. KELLY.)

Every year I am coming to appreciate the value of oats and peas as a summer forage for the dairy cattle and as a source of protein for winter feeding. These crops are becoming more popular every year. They are very palatable and nourishing, easy to cut and handle, and come at a time when the pastures are short and dry.

A succession of sowings will afford green feed for a number of weeks. These crops should be sown as early as possible and the ideal way is to sow the peas broadcast and plow them in about four inches deep with a one-horse plow. After four or five days put in the oats about two inches deep. They will come up about the same time and the peas will fill better and stay green longer for being planted deep.

On account of the rush of work during the spring and uncertain weather conditions we usually mix the two kinds of seeds and compromise by drilling as deep as possible, putting in both kinds of seeds at one operation.

The ground should be rolled and planked so that the crops can be cut with a mowing machine or scythe. I prefer to use about two bushels of peas to one of oats, although I frequently vary the amounts according to the price of the pea seed.

For cutting green it is best to make a number of sowings about a week or ten days apart. Two or three acres of good land should furnish enough forage for twenty-five or thirty cows for a number of weeks during the summer.

For winter feed they will produce more tons of good feed than clover hay and will greatly reduce the bills for grain feed. They should be sown the same as for forage and cut when the oats are heading and the peas are well in bloom, then the stock will eat them more readily with no waste.

Do not wait until the oats are formed or there will be difficulty experienced in feeding the fodder. This mixture is worthy a place on every dairy farm.

Success of Any Job.

In farming, more than in almost any other profession, the greatest success of a job depends on its being properly done and just at the right time.

Recognized Principle.

It is a well-recognized principle that all grain crops thrive best in a fine, thoroughly worked seed bed underlaid by a solid substream.

Manner of Watering Horses.

Don't allow your horses to drink a large amount of water on coming into the stable very warm. Allow them to cool off a bit first.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH LIVER

No sick headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv.

A woman with big feet is partial to long skirts.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

The Condition.

"Do you like a good send-off?"

"Yes, if there's no come-back?"

WHEN RUBBERS BECOME NECESSARY And your shoes pinch, Allen's Foot-Ease, the Antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, is just the thing to use. Always use it for breaking in new shoes. Sold everywhere, 25c. Sample FREE. Address, A. S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y. Don't accept any substitute. Adv.

Willing to Oblige.

Lady of the House (to persistent peddler)—If you don't go away immediately, I shall whistle for the dog.

Peddler (calmly)—Then let me sell you a whistle, mum.—Lippincott's.

Treason.

"Why did Binhack leave California?"

"He was forced out because he wouldn't brag about the climate."—Indianapolis Star.

Survival of the Fittest.

Employer—Yes, I advertised for a strong boy. Do you think you can fill the bill?

Applicant—Well, I just finished lickin' fourteen other fellers that were waitin' out in de hall.—Boston Evening Transcript.

She Scored.

He was trying to make up their quarrel and came home with a package held behind him.

"Look here, dearest," he said, "I've got something here for some one I think more of than anyone else in the world."

"A box of cigars, I presume," she said sweetly.

Daylight at All Hours.

Dr. Herbert E. Ives of London has invented daylight, he says. Scientific men have worked for years trying to accomplish this task. Doctor Ives has been at work for at least a dozen, and he asserts he has finally produced a light which is in every way equal to sunshine. The scientist has designed a powerful incandescent lamp with a special mantle, which is so placed in a cabinet he has designed that its rays are immediately beneath a reflector. This is made of metal, and the light is forced downward through a series of delicately colored screens, so arranged that the average rays which are not found in the north light are eliminated, and the effect, it is said, is that of a perfect harmony of light similar in every way to the rays of the sun.

WORKS ALL DAY
And Studies at Night on Grape-Nuts Food.

Some of the world's great men have worked during the day and studied evenings to fit themselves for greater things. But it requires a good constitution generally to do this.

A Ga. man was able to keep it up with ease after he had learned the sustaining power of Grape-Nuts, although he had failed in health before he changed his food supply. He says:

"Three years ago I had a severe attack of stomach trouble which left me unable to eat anything but bread and water.

"The nervous strain at my office from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. and improper foods caused my health to fail rapidly. Cereal and so-called "Foods" were tried without benefit until I saw Grape-Nuts mentioned in the paper.

"In hopeless desperation I tried this food and at once gained strength, flesh and appetite. I am now able to work all day at the office and study at night, without the nervous exhaustion that was usual before I tried Grape-Nuts.

"It leaves me strengthened, refreshed, satisfied; nerves quieted and toned up, body and brain waste restored. I would have been a living skeleton, or more likely a dead one by this time, if it had not been for Grape-Nuts."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

M'DANIEL AS A SEER

Veteran Turfman Long Ago Predicted Lowering of Record.

Horsemen Laughed at Him When He Said Six Furlongs Would Be Run in Less Than 1:11—Dick Welles Did It in 1:10 4-5.

Leochares, pronounced Leo Cherries, according to the man who says he named the son of Broomstick—Leayonara, which holds the world's record along with Iron Mask, of 1:10 4-5 for six furlongs, was badly beaten at Churchill Downs in the running of the Falls City handicap. Weight of 124 pounds on the three-year-old anchored him in the mud and he disgraced his backers by failing to run inside the money in the race in which he was favorite.

Wilhite, a fairly good breadwinner belonging to W. G. Yanke, who is enjoying a great streak of luck, took down the purse of $2,101 to the winner. He is a four-year-old and was asked to carry only 109 pounds. He was the only four-year-old in the race, all the others being three-year-olds. The Widow Moon was second, with 103 up and Kleburne, third, with 110 on his back.

Horsemen a few years ago would have pronounced one crazy beyond medical aid had one predicted horses would run six furlongs in less than 1:11 before many years. When Dick Welles reeled off the six furlongs at Washington Park in 1:11 4-5 some years ago turfmen shook their heads and said "it could not be did."

When Henry McDaniel announced that Dick Welles had run the distance in less than 1:11 having been left at the post and then defeated Runnels, owned by John A. Drake, they met in groups around the stables and said it was too bad to see Henry go that way. He had always been looked upon as a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and now they pictured a terrible end for him.

McDaniel had clicked his watch at the moment Dick Welles broke, the colt having been turned the reverse way of the barrier when the word was given. Probably he was the only one who got the time correctly, and there never was a more accurate timer on any race track.

"Some day horses will be running selling races in less than 1:11 and then these old fogies won't laugh at 1:10 4-5," said McDaniel. "None of them ever owned a 'hoss' that could run a mile in 1:41, and so they cannot believe that other horses can reel off miles around 1:37, but the time is fast approaching when runners will beat all these standing marks and the trotters will beat 2:00."

McDaniel's prediction came true when Iron Mask, on September 23 at Douglas park, Louisville, ran six furlongs in 1:10 4-5. He was the first horse to run the distance under 1:11 and get a recognized record, although Dick Welles probably first turned the trick. Iron Mask took the mark away from three title holders. They were: Chapultepec, Prince Ahmed and Priscillian, all of which had turned the three-quarter distance in 1:11 flat. Iron Mask, a five-year-old son of Disguise-Royal Rose, packed 127 pounds in his record-breaking feat and beat Leochares a head.

LANGE OF WISCONSIN

One of the Badger Star End Players

Yale Star May Lose Sight

Perry T. W. Hale, a former Yale all-American fullback, may lose his eyesight as the result of an explosion the other night. He was experimenting with a "burglar alarm" he had devised, when crossed wires caused an explosion, filling his face with small pieces of copper wire. His brother, Kelly Hale, and Harry Dagnall also were cut and bruised by the explosion. Hale was graduated from Yale in 1900.

Collins Greatest Player.

As a result of his brilliant performance in the world's series, Eddie Collins has been picked as the greatest player in the game today by many experts and managers.

TWO STARS FEARED BY EASTERN TEAMS

Captain Patterson of Michigan. Captain Hogsett of Dartmouth.

The hardest proposition which the mighty quartette (Yale, Harvard, Cornell and Princeton) of eastern colleges have to contend with in the course of the football season is when the University of Michigan men come east to tackle their gridiron enemies, and when the men from Dartmouth come to assail the mighty players of the mighty schools of learning.

MAY REJECT OLYMPIC GAMES

Great Britain's Last Appearance in Great Contests May End With 1916 Meeting at Berlin.

If the wishes of the majority of British sportsmen is followed, Great Britain's last appearance in the Olympic games will be at Berlin in 1916. This sentiment is steadily growing, and public opinion would favor withdrawing from the Olympic games except for two reasons: First, the Germans might construe the withdrawal as due to anti-German prejudices, and second, other nations might think that, after the poor showing the team made at Stockholm, Great Britain was unable to hold its own against the teams of other countries.

The policy advocated by the most influential men in the English world of sport is to send a representative, well trained delegation to Berlin, and then withdraw gracefully. The reasons behind this policy lie in the belief that the Olympic games are becoming semi-professional contests, and that, instead of fulfilling the purpose of their founders, which was to create international friendships, they have had the opposite effect.

Theodore Cook, who is the most influential member of the British Olympic council, in discussing the matter, declares:

"Personally I am of the opinion that as soon as we have decided that a team can be sent to Berlin, we should also decide to withdraw from the games in the future, at a date previous to the choice of a city at which the games will be held in 1920. I saw this in spite of my belief that the preparations for the Olympic games and competition in them are of the greatest benefit to all forms of sport in this country, because we seem too much inclined to take things easy, to avoid all trouble and to play our games among ourselves, whether other people play them better or not."

ENGLISHMEN STILL SMARTING

Guy Nickalls Hears It Said That in Stockholm Elbows Won More Races Than Legs for Americans.

Answering a statement made in the London Morning Post by Guy Nickalls, the English oarsman, that he had heard it said: "In Stockholm, elbows won more races for the Americans than their legs," Robert M. Thompson, president of the American Olympic committee, declares in the same paper that the charges are grosly absurd.

Mr. Thompson flays Nickalls for not judging for himself, instead of accepting the opinion of some one "who, not satisfied with the results, had to invent reasons to soothe his wounded feelings."

In conclusion, Mr. Thompson writes: "I hope that your athletic world will be able to settle its own disputes without constant reference to what heretofore has been a friendly nation, for even the best of friends grow cold under unfounded insinuations such as those of Harrison and Nickalls."

To Trade Konetchy.

Ed Konetchy, the big first sacker of the Cards, is sure to be traded before the 1914 season begins. Koney says he will not play on the St. Louis team next season. McGraw is trying to land the tall first sacker to replace Merkle.

Prepared for Emergencies.

Connie Mack made a practice of being prepared for anything that might turn up. In close games, where there is a chance a relief twirler may be needed, he usually has four pitchers warming up, so as to be certain of plenty of help.

English Comb Earth for Polo Ponies

Devereaux Milburn, international poloist, returned from Europe the other day with the news that the best British polo team yet is likely to face the Americans, next year, in an effort to regain the international cup.

"Lord Ashby-St. Leger financed and is managing the organization of an English polo team which will come over here next year," said Milburn. "The English are combing the earth for good ponies and next year's team will be the best they have ever turned out."

NAVAL COACHES AND TRAINER

Sub-Coach James A. Reilly; Scotty McMasters, the Veteran Trainer of the Navy Athletes, and Head Coach Lieut. Douglas Howard.

"LONG-HAIRED FRATERNITY"

Ceases to Exist on Gridiron and Football Headgear Is Given as Reason for Disappearance.

It's no longer the "long-haired fraternity" on the gridiron. The chrysanthemum head has ceased to be the pride of the football lad and the cartoonist who draws him that way nowadays is out of date.

Football headgear is the answer. The football hero of olden days used to claim his heavy locks were a cushion to save his skull when he landed hard. Football helmets are now almost universally worn by college and high school footballists. Long hair and perspiration form a combination that makes helmets almost unendurable.

Either the helmets of the hair had to go and the gridiron lads had their locks shorn.

Barry Is a Polo Player.

Jack Barry of the Athletics is a roller polo player, as well as a baseball star. During the winter months Barry spends the greater part of the off season playing the roller skates game at Hartford, Conn. The professional league has reorganized and Barry has been engaged to handle the Meriden team this winter. Some of the players receive as high as $225 a week salary.

Yale Makes Many Points.

Yale has now scored 1,826 points to 12 for Wesleyan in the 41 games which the two Connecticut colleges have played.

ONE CURIOSITY OF TROPICS

Matapalo Can't Grow Without Aid of Another Tree, Then Chokes Out Life That Aided It.

New Orleans.—The matapalo tree is one of the curiosities of the tropics. This variety of tree never grows without the aid of another tree. It at first resembles a vine, and usually selects a young palm tree as its aid in its upward growth. In a few years' time it has grown until it has completely surrounded the palm and has choked out the life that aided it.

The accompanying photograph was taken near Bas Obispo, in the canal zone, in the dry season, when the tree sheds its leaves. It shows the palm still alive and sticking through the trunk. The name for these trees is probably a corruption of the two words, "mata arbol," meaning "kill tree," or "the tree that kills." The matapalo attains a diameter of from eight to ten feet.

Matapolo Tree.

LIONS LOOSE IN A CROWD

Two of Beasts Hold Leipsic Hotel All Night, While Guests Barricade Their Rooms.

Leipsic.—When a street car collided with a circus wagon at midnight it liberated one tiger and eight lions, and Leipsic was in an uproar until daylight.

The appearance of the wild animals in the center of the city created a panic among the thousands here to attend the celebration of the centennial of the "Battle of Nations."

The woman trainer of the animals recaptured the tiger, but the lions had a merry time until the police killed six and roped two. One lion leaped to the driver's seat of a motor bus and dispossessed the chauffeur, to the discomfiture of the passengers. A policeman shot the beast from his perch. Five other lions were shot down in the streets. Two more leaped through the plateglass front of the Blucher hotel and held high carnival in the corridors all night. The hotel was crowded with guests who had attended the military celebration.

The guests, screaming with terror, barricaded themselves in their rooms and distracted clerks with calls for help. Some were for escaping through windows, but quickly crawled back when they saw the turmoil in the streets below.

The police reserves, the fire department and the troops quartered without the town were called on to capture the lions and restore order. A thick fog added to the terror of the night, and the whole city was in a panic.

TO STOP COTTON WATERING

British Government Plan to Adopt Legislation Against Practice in India.

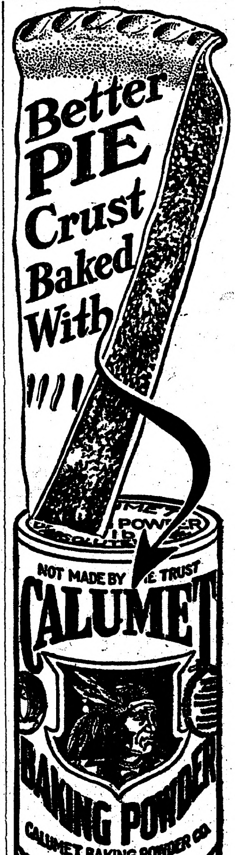
London.—Communications are now passing between the India office and the Indian government on the question of Lord Crewe's suggestion that legislation should be passed to prohibit the watering of cotton in India.

Up to the present the Indian government has steadily declined on various grounds to undertake legislation against adulteration in general, but the practice of watering cotton after ginning to increase its weight has assumed such proportions that the government now feels that some attempt must be made to stop it by executive action.

Although Indian cotton contains as a rule less water than American, Egyptian or Chinese, yet it is well known that in the cotton districts in India pumps and hose appliances are used, without any attempt at secrecy, to saturate the cotton with water, which is not always of the cleanest, the idea being to cheat the buyer by selling him water for cotton at so much a pound. Another form of adulteration is mixing. The ryot seems unable to resist the temptation to mix his damaged or discolored bolls with his sound ones, but even if he does the result is vitiated by the action of the middleman, who promptly mixes inferior cotton with the good.

Boy Has "Camera Vision."

Baltimore.—Dr. William H. Howell of the Johns Hopkins hospital, who, with other experts, is studying the case of Russell Baker, the Huntington, W. Va., schoolboy who reads, writes and sings upside down, declared that the boy as a "camera vision" and sees things not only reversed, but also backward.



Better PIE Crust Baked With

NOT MADE BY THE TRUST

CALUMET BAKING POWDER

CALUMET BAKING POWDER CO. CHICAGO

Better cookies, cake and biscuits, too. All as light, fluffy, tender and delicious as mother used to bake. And just as wholesome. For purer Baking Powder than Calumet cannot be had at any price.

Ask your grocer.

RECEIVED HIGHEST AWARDS
World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago, Ill.
Paris Exposition, France, March, 1912

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives best results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

Where He Was Lucky.

Two Little Rock negroes engaged in a quarrel, when one struck the other on the head with a wagon spoke. The negro that had received the blow rubbed his head for a moment and then said:

"Look yere, Stephen, dar's one thing dat is er powerful blessin' fur you."

"Whut's dat?"

"De fact dat my haid is ez thick ez it is. W'y, ef my haid wa'n't no thicker den de common run o' haids, dat lick would er killed me, an' den you would er been tuck befo' er jestice o' de peace an' fined mighty nigh $20. You'd better thank de Lawd dat I ain't got one dese yere aig shell haids."

During the Spat.

"John, there's just one thing I want to say to you!"

"What's the matter, M'ria? Aren't you feeling well?"—Puck.

Have You a Bad Back?

Whenever you use your back, does a sharp pain hit you? Does your back ache constantly, feel sore and lame?

It's a sign of sick kidneys, especially if the kidney action is disordered too, passages scanty or too frequent or off color.

In neglect there is danger of dropsy, gravel or Bright's disease. Use Doan's Kidney Pills which have cured thousands.

A COLORADO CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Mrs. Alvira Day, 327 S. Second St., Montrose, Colo., says: "I had much pain in my back and suffered from a swelling over my kidneys, especially in the morning when I first got up. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and the pain and swelling left and my kidneys were strengthened. I haven't needed Doan's Kidney Pills the past year, for I have been in the best of health."

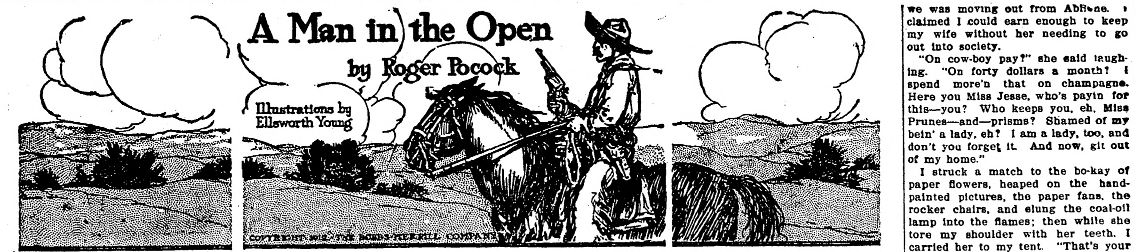
Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

HIDES AND FURS

We positively give more valuable illustrated information relative to Hides and Furs, than any other house in the world. We pay Highest Cash Prices for Hides, Furs, Pelts, etc., and make prompt returns for each shipment. We sell trappers' supplies very cheap. Write for circular, shipping tags, Illustrated Trap Book, Catalogue, etc. It's free. NORTHWESTERN HIDE & FUR CO., Established 1890, Minneapolis, Minn.



A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

COPYRIGHT 1912, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

Yes, when I looks back on them radium nights entertainments along with Bull Durham, I see now what a success they was in learning me to ride. "What you need," says he, "is confidence. Got to forget mere matters of habeas corpus, and how your toes point, and whether you're looking pretty. Just trust you' horse to pull through, so that you ain't caught in the flower of youthful innocence, and hung on the nearest telegraph pole."

Once I been to a theater, and seen a play. Thar's act one, with fifteen minutes hoping for act two. Thar's act after act till you just has to fill up the times between with injun war-whoops, until act five, when all the ladies and gents is shot or married. It just cayn't go on. So the aujience says, "Let's go'n have a drink," and the band goes off for a drink, and the lady with the programs tells you to get to hell out of that.

It's all over. The millionaire Lord Bishop of Durham is only Bull's father-in-law. Bull's not exactly a cow-boy yet—but assists his mother, Mrs. Brooke, who is chef at a ranch. Bull won't be quite popular with his mother for having gorgeous celebrations with the hundred dollars she'd give him to pay off a little debt. I'd better not come to the ranch after leading mummie's boy astray from the paths of virtue.

There's the dust of Bull's horses way off along the road, and me settin' down by the wayside. A dog sets down in his skin, tail handy for wagging, all his possessions around him. I ain't even got no tail.

CHAPTER IV.

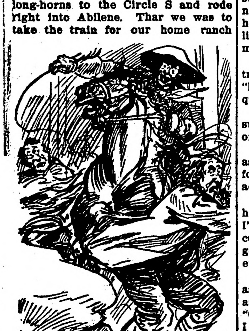
The Ordeal by Torture.

The Labrador was good to me, the sea was better, the stock range—wall, I'd four years punching cows, and I'm most surely grateful.

The world in them days was peopled with only two species, puncher an' tenderfoot, the last bein' made by mistake. Moreover, we cow-boys belonged to two sects, our outfit, and others of no account. And in our outfit, this Jesse person which is me, laid claims on being best man, having a pair of gold mounted spurs won at cyards from Pieface, our old foreman. I'd a rolled cantle, double-rig Cheyenne of carved leather, and silver horn—a dandy saddle that, first prize for "rope and tie down" again all comers.

Gun, belt, quirt, bridle, hat, gloves, everything, my whole kit was silver mounted and everything in it a trophy of trading, poker, or fighting. Besides my string of ponies I'd Tiger, an entire black colt I'd broke—though I own he was far from convinced. Add a good pay-day in my off hind pocket, and d'ye think I'd own up to them twelve apostles for uncles? D'ye know what glory is? Wall, I suppose it mostly consists of being young.

Time I speak of, our outfit had turned over three thousand head of long-horns to the Circle S and rode right into Abilene. Thar we was to take the train for our home ranch down south, and I hoped to get back to my dog pup Rockyfeller. And yet I'd never before been on a railroad, and dreaded the boys would find out how scared I was of trains.



Yelled "Injuns!" and Stampeded.

I lit in Abilene with a blush, and just stood rooted while a guy selling gold watches reads my name graved on the saddle, and then addresses me as Mister Smith. Old Pieface, scared for my morals, did kick this person sudden and severe, but all the same that Mister went to my head.

The smell of indoors made my stomach flop right over while we ranged up brave at the bar for a first drink. The raw rye felt like flames, though the preserved cherry afloat in it tasted familiar, like soap. At the same time the sight of a gambling lay-out made my pocket twitch, and I'd an inward conviction telling me this place ain't good for kids. It's the foreman sent me off with a message.

I rolled my tail, and curved off with Tiger to take in the sights of the town. He shied heaps, and it's curious to think why he objected to sign-boards, awnings, lamp-posts, even to a harmless person lying drunk. Then a railroad engine snorted in our face, so Tiger and me was plumb stampeded up a little side street. It's thar that he bucks, for all he's worth, because of a kneeling man with a straw hat and a punctured soul, praying abundant. Of course this penitent turned round to enjoy the bucking match—and sure reveals the face of my old friend, Bull Durham. We hadn't met for years, so as soon as Tiger was tired, Bull owned to finding the Lord, and being stony busted, ask if I was saved. I seen he'd got 'em bad, and shared my wad of money level with him. So we had cigars, a pound of chocolate creams, an oyster stew, and he bought a bottle of patent medicine for his liver. We shared that, and went on, he walking by my stirrup to the revival meetings.

This revival was happening at a barn, so I rode in. Tiger, you see, needed religion bad, and when people tried to turn him out, he kicked them. You should just have heard what the preacher told the Lord about me, and all the congregation groaned at me being so young and fair, with silver harness, and the hottest prospects—just as Pieface always said when I was late for breakfast.

They had a great big wooden cross upon the dais, and somehow, I dunno why, that made me feel ashamed. A girl in a white dress was singing "Rock of Ages"—oh, most beautiful, her arms thrown round the cross, the sun-bright hair about her like a glory.

The sight of girls went to my head like liquor, and this one was surely good with her sun-bright hair, her cheeks flushed 'cause I stared, her sulky lips rebuking when I throwed a kiss, her yellow-brown eyes—

Oh, had I really washed behind my ears? Suppose I'd got high-water marks! Was my hands—I whipped off my gloves to inquire. That's what's the matter, sure. Got to make good before bein' introduced. Got to get a move on Tiger. I swung, spurred with one spring through the doors, yelled "Injuns" and stampeded, scatterin' gravel and panic through Abilene. I just went like one man for our cook wagon down by the railroad corrals.

Now, for all the shaving-glass could see, I was nice an' clean, but then that mirror has small views, and I'm not taking risks, but stripped and scrubbed all over. The place was so durned public I blushed from nose to heels till I was dressed again, shining my hair and boots. Then I procured an extra special, cherry-red, silk scarf out of the wrangler's kit.

Some of our boys made friendly signs as I passed on my way back, and fired a few shots after me for luck, but I'd no time to play. I joined the revival meeting just as the hat came round, so penitent sinners making for the door, came back to stay and pay because of Tiger. I gave Bull ten dollars to hand to the hat, only he passed it into his own pocket. He seemed annoyed, too, saying, "Waste not, want not." Then he explained how the fire-escape only paid Miss Ellis fifty dollars a day, whereas he was making hundreds.

Just then she passed, and I got introduced. "Say, Polly," says Bull, "here's Sailor Jesse wants to get acquainted."

She stopped, sort of impatient for supper, and velvet-soft her voice, full of contempt.

"Another damned suppliant?" she asked, and Bull was holding a light for her cigarette. "Is it saved?" she added.

I couldn't speak. I wanted to tell her how I despised all the religion I'd seen, the bigots it made, an' the cowards. I'd rather burn with the goats than bleat among the sheep even now.

"Oh, that's all right, then," she said as though she answered me, and frank as a man she gave her hand to shake. "Good stunt of mine, eh?" Although I own I'd like to have that cross stage-managed."

She passed the weather, admired Tiger, talked Browns and Jones with Bull, turning her back on me, asked him to supper, walked off with him, an' that's all. Egg-shells throw'd in the ash-heap may feel like I did then.

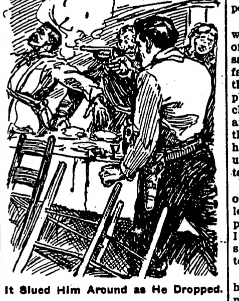
Nobody loved me, 'cept our pony herd, inquirin' piteous for food an' water. Our boys, of course, was drunk by then, just sleepin' whar they'd fell, so I was desolate as a moonlit dog-howl, ridin' herd with my night horse whar Polly's little home glowed lights across the prairie. I seen Bull and the preacher leave there toward midnight, walkin' sort of extravagant into town. The lights went out. Then times I'd take some sleep, or times ride herd guarding her little house, till the cold came, till the dawn broke, till the sun came up.

It was half past breakfast when I seen Bull again, on his knees like yesterday, a-puttin' up loud prayers, which made me sick. "Rehearsin'," says he, "'cause Polly's struck, and I'm to be chief mourner."

He was my only chance of meetin' Miss Polly, when a guy comes butting into our conversation. He'd puffed sleeves to his pants, and was all dressed saucy, standing straddle, aiming to impress. "Oh, whar's my gun?" says Bull.

This person owned to being a gentleman, with a strong English accent. He'd 'undreds of 'orses at 'ome in 'Ammersmith, but wanted to own an 'ack 'ere, don'tcherknow.

So Bull lifts up his eyes to Heaven, praying, "Oh, don't deliver us from temptation yet!" Whereas I confided with this person about Bull being far gone in religious mania. I owned Bull right though, about my bein' a sailor, timid with 'orses; and he seen for hisself the way I was riding my Sam 'orse somethin' dreadful. Told me I'd ought to 'old my 'ed 'igh instead of 'umping. It's in toes, down 'eels, young feller, an' don't be 'ard on the bally hanimal. He'd gimme lessons only I was frightened, but out aways from town the ground was softer for falling, an' I gained courage. Happens Miss Polly's house was opposite. I scrambled down ungainly, shoved a pebble in along Sam's withers, and let this gent explain just how to set an 'ard-mouthed 'unter. You 'olds 'is 'ed, placin' the 'and on the 'orn of the saddle, so. Then hup! That pebble done the rest.



It Slued Him Around as He Dropped.

Now, it's partly due to this 'ere entertainment, and the diamond ring I gave her, that Miss Polly began to perceive me with the naked eye, and said I might come to supper.

And that evening was most surely wonderful, in a parlor all antimacassars and rocker chairs with pink bows. There was champagne wine, the little cigarettes with dreams inside, and a bottle no bigger'n my thumb smellin' so fierce it well-nigh blew my head off. Oh, it was all so elegant and high-toned that I got proud of being allowed indoors.

Her people was real society, her poppa an army general, ruined by the war, her mother prime Virginian. But then she'd gone on the stage, so there was mean suspicions.

I hold suspicion to be a form of meanness when it touches women. My mother would have shied at naked ladies, and dad was powerful again cigarettes. As for the smell, so fierce it had to be bottled, I'll own up I was shocked. But then you see mother and dad, an' me being working people, was not supposed to feel the high-toned senses which belongs with wealth. It's not for grade stock like me to set up as judge on thoroughbreds, or call a lady immoral for using a spoon whar I should need a shovel.

So it happened that in them days, while I rode guard upon Miss Polly, no man in Abilene could speak to her, or mention her name to me until I give him leave. She got to be known as Sailor Jesse's kill, and any person touching on my kill was apt to require a funeral.

It was the seventh day she married me. I know, because Bull, acting as best man, claimed a kiss, which she gave him. "Bull,' says she, "didn't I bet you I'd marry Sailor Jesse within a week. You owe me twenty dollars." I saw the joke was on me.

I came to marriage pure as any bear, or wolf, or fox, expecting to find my mate the same as me, getter and giver of life, true to the earth, and fearless in doin' right.

Folks said I was young to marry at nineteen, but full nine years I'd earned my living, fought my way, and done my share of making happiness. I'd been served with a mouth full wide enough for laughin', a face which made folks smile when I was sad, eyes to see fun, the heart to take a joke if any offered, and when things hurt, I wasn't first to squeal. No: as long as the joke was on me I done my best to take it like a man.

But suppose—Well, I'd best explain that the English tenderfoot was at our wedding breakfast, and gettin' encouraged, he put up his best prize joke. He was all hoo, hoo, hoo at first, so funny he couldn't speak, the fellows waitin' each with his grin gettin' stale, and Polly laughing just to encourage him on. Then words got out which made the boys uneasy. Jake Haffering, the Bar T foreman, told the hog to shut up, while others moved to get clear. I was sort of stupid, wanting the point explained, couldn't believe it possible the joke was on my wife, although I'd rose by then, with gun hand free. Then I saw, but the room seemed dark, and the tenderfoot all indistinct, backing away, and reaching slovenly for weapons, while my bullet smashed in his shoulder. It slued him around as he dropped.

It was old Jake of the Bar T who spoke out then, and spoke straight.

"My boy," says he, "put up your gun. That's right. This here tenderfoot is bleedin' by spurts, arterial. Bull, see if Doc Stuart is sober." Bull ran for the doctor. "Only a tenderfoot," says Jake, "insults a cow-boy's wife—which is death from natural causes. Ma'am," he wagged his finger at Polly, "'tain't long since you come among us. 'Tain't more'n a day since you told me and others present that you was marryin' for fun. You laughed at warnings, and this here Jesse would have shot the man who warned him. You are a lady, and this boy you married for fun, is goin' to see you treated as a lady. I own he got rattled first shot, missing this tenderfoot's heart, which ain't up to average practice; but it's time you began to see the point of the joke."

They took the tenderfoot away, and we were alone, me watching the pool of red blood turning brown. Polly sat drumming tunes on the table, her face turned white, staring out through the window at the noon heat of the plains. I remember I took a bottle of champagne wine, filled a big goblet, and drank it off. It made me laugh to think she'd taught me drinking, so I had another. "I see," says Polly, "I understand now." At that she began to scream.

I should have told you, that after our boys of the Flying Zee quit Abilene, I pitched a little A tent on the prairie back of Polly's house. Thar I could see my ponies at grass, and snuff the air clear of that stinking town.

But from the time I moved into the house, thar was something disturbing my nose—something uneasy—oh, I don't know what it was, back of all house smells, which gave me a sense of evil, so I could hardly bear to stay indoors.

Comin' from town one night—she'd sent me there—I seen a man's shadow cross the parlor blind. I fired, missing, a fool's act, for it warned him, and gave him time. The lamp was out before I reached the house, and Polly with some hysterics getting in my way.

It wouldn't be sense to show a match guiding the stranger's aim, or to stand against a window, or make sounds. Rather I stood right still, and after a while Polly surprised herself into a dead silence. I couldn't hear that man, or feel, or see him. I sensed him. Can't explain that—no. You just feel if a man stares hard. I fired at that. Then Polly, of course, went off into all sorts of fits.

Next morning I tracked blood sign to the hospital. Seems a young person from the bank had took to conjuring and swallowed lead.

It was still before breakfast that I told Polly to pack her dunnage, 'cause we was moving out from Abilene. I claimed I could earn enough to keep my wife without her needing to go out into society.

"On cow-boy pay?" she said laughing. "On forty dollars a month? I spend more'n that on champagne. Here you Miss Jesse, who's payin for this—you? Who keeps you, eh, Miss Prunes—and—prisms? Shamed of my bein' a lady, eh? I am a lady, too, and don't you forget it. And now, git out of my home."

I struck a match to the bo-kay of paper flowers, heaped on the hand-painted pictures, the paper fans, the rocker chairs, and slung the coal-oil lamp into the flames; then while she tore my shoulder with her teeth, I carried her to my tent. "That's your home now," I said, "the home of an honest working-man," I said, "and if another tough defiles my home, I'll kill you."

The house-warming gathered the neighbors, but she had no use for neighbors. Only they seen the line I drew in the dust around that tent, the dead-line. Afterward if any man came near that line, she'd scream.

But she'd taught me to drink, an' I drank, day after day, night after night, while she sat frightened in the tent, moaning when I came. Only when she was cured could I get work, not while I had to watch all day, all night.

She swore she loved me, she vowed that she'd repented, and I believed until she claimed religion. I'd seen her breed of religion. I'd rather have her atheist than shamming. She would keep straight, and be my faithful wife if I'd quit drinking, if I'd only take her away. But she'd married me for a joke, and false as a cracked bell she'd chime out lines and lies, knowing as I knew that if she'd ever been the thing she claimed, I'd come into her life too late. How could she be the mother of my children, when—I drank, and sold my ponies to buy liquor, for there was no way out.

And by the time I'd only Tiger left, one night came Bull to find me just as dusk was falling. I was drunk, too, scarce knowing what he said, just telling him to shut up and have a drink. Polly's bin hurt? Well, that's all right—have rye—Polly's been shot? That's good, we'd all have drinks Was she dead?

She was dead.

And I was sober then as I am now.

"Murdered?" I asked.

"Jesse, she shot herself."

"Is that so?"

"Through the brow—above the eyes. Come, Jesse."

Next thing I was standing in the tent door, and it was so dark inside I had to strike a match. The sulphur tip burned blue, the wood flared, and for that moment, bending down, I seen the black dark hole between the eyes, the smear of drying blood. Then the match went out, and I—that was enough.

I gave Bull what I'd left, to pay for burial.

Then I was riding Tiger all alone, with my shadow drawin' slowly out ahead as the moon waned.

CHAPTER V.

The Burning Bush.

Among the Indians, before a boy gets rated warrior, he goes alone afoot, naked, starvin' thirsty, way off to the back side of the desert. Thar he just waits, suns, weeks, maybe a whole moon, till the Big Spirit happens to catch his eye. Then the Big Spirit shows him a stick, or a stone, or any sort of triflin' common thing, which is to be his medicine, his wampum, the charm which guards him, hunting, or in war.

Among them Bible Indians you'll remember a feller called Moses, out at the back side of the desert, seen the Big Spirit in a burning bush. Later his tribe set up a medicine lodge, and the hull story's mighty natural.

This Indian life explains a lot to men like me.

Many find peace in death, only a few in life, and I found peace thar in the wilderness, the very medicine of torn souls, fresh from the hand of the Almighty Father.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

LIGHT THAT PRODUCES SOUND

Statement Sounds Incredible, but Experiment Will Speedily Demonstrate It to Be a Fact.

It seems incredible that a beam of light should be made to produce sound, but such a thing can be done. A ray of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel containing lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or any like substance. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to "cut it up," thus causing alternate flashes of light and shadow. When one places his ear to the glass vessel he hears strange sounds so long as the flashing beam falls upon the vessel.

A still more extraordinary effect is produced when the beam of sunlight is made to pass through a prism, so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now, if the ear be placed to the vessel containing the silk or other material, as the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it, sounds will be given by the different parts of the spectrum and there will be silence in other parts.

For example, if the vessel contains red worsted and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be heard when the red and the blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel. Other colors produce no sounds at all.

Green silk gives out sound best in a red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors and no sound at all in others.—Harper's Weekly

La Grande Passion.

"Une grande passion est une grande folie. Mediocrity in all things is wisdom; mediocrity in sensations is superlative wisdom. . . . No young lady should fall in love till the offer has been made, accepted, the marriage ceremony performed, and the first half-year of married life has passed away. A woman may then begin to love, but with very great precaution—very coolly, very moderately, very rationally. If ever she loves so much that a harsh word or a cool look cuts her to the heart, she is a fool. If she ever loves so much that her husband's will is her law, and that she has got into the habit of watching his look in order that she may anticipate his wishes, she will soon be a neglected fool."—Charlotte Bronte.

Is Such Economy Unwise?

The low cost of living is dangerous. A fellow who boasted that he spent but two cents a day has been murdered by acquaintances who inferred he had money in his stocking.—Philadelphia Ledger.

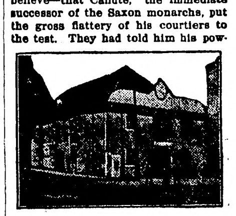
HISTORIC OLD TOWN

Port of Southampton Has Picturesque Attractions.

No Place on South Coast of England Situated so Beautifully as This Ancient City—Wool House on Quay One of the Sights.

London. — The fifty-third annual church congress, which opened on September 30, had for its place of meeting the historic town and port of Southampton; still, in spite of the vast developments of docks and shipping which render it a rival even of Liverpool, a town of much picturesque attraction. There is no place on the south coast of England situated so beautifully as this ancient port; and the voyage from it down Southampton water, displaying scenes of quiet woodlands, pastures and sunlit fairway, adds another pang of regret to the Englishman's departure from home, just as the passage past the Needles and Calshot Castle, between the Wight and the mainland, and up to Southampton heatens the wanderer's return from overseas.

This way came the Roman's voyaging to and from their port of Clausentum, identified now with Bitterne, some two miles higher up the estuary of the Itchen, a spot where the coins of the Caesars and the potsherds of a dead and gone civilization are yet plentifully found. The Saxons, following their usual custom, established themselves on a new site when they came here, and left the ruined and deserted Clausentum to the spirits of the dead and the evil things which they ardently believed inhabited the deserted homes of men. Thus Southampton arose where we now find it. We do not nowadays trace any Saxon remains here, although in those days this was a place of importance, and the building called "King's Canute's Palace" is later than his time. It was here—as that monkish chronicler, Henry of Huntingdon, would have us believe—that Canute, the immediate successor of the Saxon monarchs, put the gross flattery of his courtiers to the test. They had told him his power was so great that if he commanded the sea to retire it would obey. This appears to have been too much even for a Danish king of the tenth century to believe; and when he put it to the proof, and the sea continued to come on, we are to suppose that those courtiers experienced a bad time. It is a story which has been seized upon with enthusiasm alike by moralists and humorists; and it would be difficult to say which have had the best turn out of so promising a subject.



Old Wool House, Southampton.

We may readily trace the western defences of the town, made trebly strong after the French and other allied fleets had suddenly descended upon it, midway in the fourteenth century, burning and slaying until half Southampton lay in ruins. The curious deep-arcaded walls are relics of that time, in the determination of the townsfolk to build so strongly that no sudden foray should find them unprepared.

Here, also, is a very curious and archaeologically valuable old building: a roofless ruin, it is true, but with its external architectural features well preserved. This is the so-called "King John's Palace,' 'a Late Norman house. Modern times have, from the picturesque point of view, distressfully qualified the ancient picturesqueness of this western shore. In the days when Henry the Fifth's army of pikemen and bowmen embarked for France, for that campaign which gave the English the glorious victory of St. Crispin's Day, they went aboard directly out from under the arch of West Gate. That same veritable archway remains, but a roadway now runs along outside the walls—those walls whose feet once went sheer into the sea, and were washed by every tide.

This landmark brings us into the middle of the town, where the church of Holy Rood stands, with its lofty spire—one of the two old churches of Southampton. The other, St. Michael, is on the right, in St. Michael's Square, and is remarkable for its twelfth-century font, one of the only seven black marble Belgian fonts in England. The finest of these is in Winchester Cathedral. Among the remaining sights in Southampton are the so-called "Tudor house," near St. Michael's church, recently opened by the corporation as a museum; and the old Wool house on the Quay, well-known locally as the "Spanish prison" from its having been used to house the prisoners of war in the eighteenth century.

Pay Tax Collector in Pennies.

Oxford, Pa.—When the local tax collector refused to accept checks proffered to him, the taxpayers planned revenge and paid their obligations in pennies. Twelve thousand pennies poured in on the first day.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
Uuited states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

SEE THE POINT
LUMBER
SHINGLES LATHS
AND LAMBER

He Who Runs May Read

The character of the lumber that has been used in a building. A glance will show the big ugly knots, the split boards in one and the smooth unsplit surface of those in another. We sell the latter kind of lumber exclusively. Use our boards, shingles, laths, etc., and you'll more than make the cost when you come to sell the building. See the point?

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, Model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Mud Lake Murmurs.

Rudolph and Albin Dahl were callers at Middle River on Friday last.

Charlie Martell was to Holt on Wednesday marketing a load of flax.

Lars Sagstuen was calling on relatives and old friends at Holt a few days last week.

Gilbert and Martin Johnson of Ekvoll, passed through our township last Saturday on their way to Holt.

H. O. Kjomme of Thief River Falls spent from Thursday untill Saturday last week in our township, looking over some of our land.

John Mundhenke, Clyde Groner, Charlie Martell and Oscar Ostreng attended the Auction Sale last Saturday, at the A. W. Clark place in the Town of Rollis.

Melvin Olson was calling on relatives and friends near Middle River a few days this week and also attending to some neccessary business matters.

C. Groner, E. E. Pechie and John Mundhenke were among those from here who attended the Adolphson auction sale, in the town ot Agdar, on Monday. They report that most everything was sold at a good big price.

Hot Punches

When a farmer comes to town on a cold day it seems pretty nice to be gathered in by some red-nosed pretender of friendship and handed one or several hot alcohol punches to warm him up. If the farmer has a boy along, it seems to be the proper thing to hand the lad a few of the "hot ones" too. If the farmer's wife happens to be along, she spends the family money—if she has any to spend—buying family necessities from the fellow with the jug, but a certain portion of what she spends goes to buying the alcohol. Then before they start for home, there's more hot punch for the "men folks" and after they get home the poor women gets her "Hot Punches", and probably a lot of abusive language into the bargain.

The point is that the women are sometimes helping to buy the alcohol that destroys their husbands and children and ruins their own lives. Some of these unfortunate women have no choice, but some have a choice and they should try to protect thier homes and families.

NEWEST IDEA IN EDUCATION

Alabama School, Now Six Years Old, Chiefly Remarkable for What It Does Not Do.

Down in the little town of Fairhope, in southern Alabama, there is a new kind of public school, says the American Magazine. It is known as the School of Organic Education. During this, its sixth year, it numbers 150 pupils, two-thirds of the entire population. Upon first inspection the school is mainly remarkable for getting along without certain things which schools generally deem indispensable. During the first six years there are no promotions, no grades, no examinations, no marks either for conduct or for lessons, no home work and no requirements of any kind.

The principal, founder and moving spirit of the school is Mrs. Marietta L. Johnson. Mrs. Johnson explains the singular program, or lack of program, by stating that she is growing boys and girls as a farmer grows corn. A farmer collects all the available lore concerning corn growing and supplies what he believes to be the best conditions for growth. If the corn does not grow he does not blame it, nor scold it, nor give it a bad mark, nor call it stupid, but hastens to change conditions until his corn responds.

PUT MEN IN SECOND PLACE

Sociologist Found That the Girls Had a More Important Subject for Their Attention.

Five girls were waiting to board an eastbound car. Two men who had been discussing sociology in the usual impracticable manner saw them through a car window, according to the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Here's a chance for an illustration," said one of the men hastily. "The first subject that engrosses the minds of those five girls will be dress."

"It will be men," said the other man. In came the girls. It was a side-seat car and they sat together.

"Mary got a lovely waist at th' sale," said the first one.

"Did she?" said the second. "I couldn't afford anything after I got my silk skirt."

"Ain't it awful about the slashes?" giggled the third.

"How are you goin' to have your summer suit made up?" queried the fourth.

"I seen Charlie yesterday," said the fifth.

The second sociologist nudged the first one.

"I lose," he muttered. "Man isn't in the same class."

ORIGINALITY.

Mabel—Is she such an original girl?

Marie—Oh, very! She let the dressmaker write her graduation essay while she made the dress herself;"—Puck.

LIKE A WOMAN—AND A MAN.

Husband—My love, we must get rid of that cook. Did you ever see a worse-looking chop than the one I've just put on my plate?

Wife—Yes, dear; the one you've put on mine!—Judge.

Citation for Hearing on Petition for Determination of Descent of Land

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall, In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of Anders N. Gutterud, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Julia Isabella Gutterud, Carl Nikolai Gutterud, Alma Christine Gutterud, Ida Jonette Gutterud, Oscar Elvin Gutterud, Thea Elisa Gutterud, Arthur Gutterud, and Christi Gutterud, and all persons interested in the determination of the descent of the real estate of said decedent;

The petition of Christi Gutterud having been filed in this Court, representing that said decedent died more than five years prior to the filing thereof, leaving certain real estate in said petition described, and that no will of decedent has been proved nor administration of his estate granted in this State, and praying that the descent of said real estate be determined by this Court,

Therefore You and Each of You, Are hereby cited and required to show cause if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Room in the city of Warren, in the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota, on the 28th day of November, 1913 at 10 o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal thereof, this 24th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM
Probate Judge.

H. O. KJOMME,
Attorney for Petitioner,
Thief River Falls, Minn. (o31n14)

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
October 25, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that George Charlson of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on June 26th, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05350, for SE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make commutation proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 5th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christifferson, Gunder Sannes, Charlie Charlson, Andrew Charlson, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, of Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06904, for NW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses; John Knutson, Carl Sormo, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fosen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 20, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Thomas Knudtsen Sten, of Holt, Minn., who, on Oct. 18, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05688, SW¼ SW¼ Sec. 28, E½ SE¼, SW¼ SE¼ Section 29, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole B. Johnson, Ole O. Garthus, Emil Ostlund, Nels Lysne, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9383, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W. 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
October 10, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olina Knuts Bolingberg, of Golden Valley, Minn. who, on November 29, 1910, made Homestead entry, No. 6763, for NW¼, Section 33, Township 156, Range 41, 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Register and Receiver U. S. Land office at Crookston Minn, on the 18th day of November 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: George E. Olson, Engebret Moe, Peter Rosand, Alfred Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof mode according to law under which entry was made.

DEEPLY SMITTEN.

Knicker—Is he deeply in love?

Bocker—Yes, he thinks all the girls on the magazine covers look like Her.—New York Sun.

CORRECTION.

"Is your Jagsby really worth a million?"

"No. He has a million, but he isn't worth a cent."

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn

DR. J. T. TURLEY,
DENTIST,
Will be in Holt Friday and Saturday, November 14-15
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS $1.00 | GOLD CROWN $5 & $6
TREATMENTS 1.50 | PORCELAIN CROWN 5.00
PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

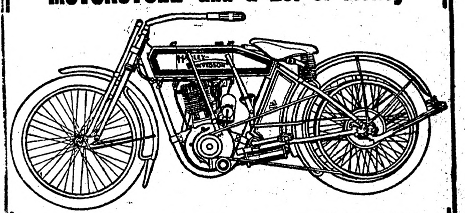
V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA
(North of the Minnesota River)
Is Going To Be Given This
HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money



YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.

A good hustler can make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.

It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $3.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name...

Post Office...

Rural Route.................... State....................

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

MINNESOTA
HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1913 NO. 17

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.

We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.24
Wheat	.75
Barley	.40
Oats	.29
Rye	.41
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring on the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Dec. 8 & 9. See his "ad."

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

A 9-pound baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. B. Docken on Monday morning and all is well.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls.)adv)

J. B. Grobey and Lars Sagstuen came in from the Mud Lake region Wednesday and went to Thief River Falls on business.

Little Francis Coppay has been on the sick list all week.

Axel Nelson and Bert Terwilliger spent Tuesday at Crookston.

A. G. Bell was in from Whiteford Wednesday to do some trading.

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (ad-tf)

Miss Alice Hanson is here from Thief River Falls visiting with her aunt, Mrs Coppay.

Find Huseth's place and you'll find the best values in candies, cigars and soft drinks.

Lars Backe was here from Thief River Falls on Tuesday looking over business at the new bank.

Phil VonWald and family returned last week from Tolley, N. D., where they have been during summer and fall.

WANTED—Some good farmer to deliver good butter and eggs at this office. Will pay highest market prices, cash.

Morris Jensen returned yesterday from Middle River where he spent the past few months working in the wire grass camp.

S. S. Koldon and B. L. Backe transacted business at Thief River Falls Tuesday afternoon, making the trip in the Backe car.

J. S. Semmingson returned to his Beltrami place on Tuesday after a while spent looking after his Green Stump Lake homestead.

August Hanson and Tony Dale arrived from Enderlin, N D., on Wednesday and remained until today as guests of the Frank Coppay home.

Next Thursday is Thanksgiving Day and a legal holiday, of course. You will find much to be thankful for if you look for the good things.

The time, the place and the girl. Take the girl to Huseth's place any time and buy her some high grade candies. You try this; she'll like it.

CHICKENS FOR SALE—About 200 Plymouth Rock and White Leghorns; all fine spring chickens. Price, 40cts per head. Martin O. Nelson, Holt.

Miss Oline Bolingberg went to Crookston Monday to make final proof on her claim in Mud Lake twp. George Olson and P. C. Rosand went along as her witnesses.

S. S. Kolden has purchased B. L. Backe's automobile, the deal being closed on Wednesday. We understand that Mr. Backe contemplates buying a lighter car in the spring.

OXEN FOR SALE—Yoke of red and white oxen, 5 years old, good and true workers, weight about 3,200 pounds. Swan Carlson, NW 1-4 section 28, East Valley township.

Henry Moberg, aged 81 years died at his home in Rollis on the 4th inst, after a short illness. His wife died just a few weeks ago and he collapsed speed'ly after the loss of his life companion.

Andrew Erickson, the boy who was so badly injured in a runaway about two weeks ago, is reported as improving slowly. His mother went to Crookston a few days ago to help care for him in the hospital there.

L. S. Kolden and little granddaughter came up from Nielsville the first of the week for an overnight visit with their relatives here. They went to Thief River Fall by auto next day and returned home.

Come in and pay your subscription for another year, if you have not already done so. We have arranged to give 'Farm, Stock and Home' for a year free for a little while longer, but the number of subscription we can give this way is limited. So call early if you want both popers for the price of one.

Alkenbrack-Culver

On Wednesday of this week at the home of the grooms parents, occurred the wedding of Miss Hallie Culver and John Alkenbrack, Rev. Smith, of Thief River Falls, officiating. The happy young couple will reside on the groom's farm east of Holt where they will be at home after December 1st.

All the world loves a lover, and here's to their lasting happiness.

By Way of Correction

"In a news item appearing in this paper on Nov. 7th inst. stating that Bank Examiner Brandvold had been here all week looking after business in the Holt State Bank, you were wrongfully informed. Mr. Brandvold was here, but not on business pertaing to the bank.

—B. Docken
Cashier."

The above item is published at Mr. Docken's request.

We are not quite sure of the precise reason why Mr. Docken is so anxious to have this item published. Our former item was according to Mr. Brandvold's own statement made in our office, on the day that issue of The Northern Light was published. In reply to a question as to what he was here for he simply remarked, "Just checking over business at the Bank." As there was only one bank in Holt at that time, it would be rather hard to think that Mr. Brandvold meant anything different from what he said. We don't think Mr. Docken has any proper ground to attempt a correction.

Holt School Notes

The primary and upper grades will have a short program on Tuesday Nov 25, 2 p. m., and would like to have all the parents come.

The pink eye seems to be the cause of many absences.

What's the matter with History? Harry and Fritjof prefer to study after school.

(Primary Department)

Oh, Johnny's the "man-in-the-moon!"

Our new seats are now in place and are greatly appreciated by the little tots.

The children are looking forward to next Tuesday, our "Parents Day" when they will go over to Miss Hanson's school where the Thanksgiving program will take place.

"I saw a ship a-sailing."

A shining new oil stove enhances the appearance of Miss Hanson's school room. Do you detect the delicious odor of vegetable soup?

Last week we omitted mentioning that Charles and John H. Smith had made final proof on their home steads in sections 11 and 12, of Agder township. Their claims were among the wettest in the country a short time ago, but these men will shortly develop them into first-class farms.

EXPERIENCED EFFORTS.

"So your friend who is such an accomplished fisherman, is going to move into the suburbs?"

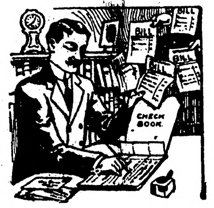
"Yes."

"Then he can put his skill to use catching trains."

RATHER MIXED.

Wifie—Hubby, how do you like my new trouserette costume?

Hubby—The taste that defends a style like that hasn't got a leg to stand on!



The Man Who Signs The Checks

Wants to know that the money to pay them will be ready when they are presented. Our methods are safe and conservative. The lure of large profits does not induce us to loan on or invest in doubtful securities. If you want to feel that your money is safe, we solicit your account.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

DR. J. T. TURLEY,
DENTIST,
Will be in Holt Monday p.m. & Tuesday a.m., Dec 8-9
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS $1.00 | GOLD CROWN $5 & $6
TREATMENTS 1.50 | PORCELAIN CROWN 5.00
PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sod in Hot
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 30th

HUSETH'S
New Confectionery and Cigar Emporium
Supplies the finest Candies, Cigars and Soft Drinks
In my Barber Shop you can get your whiskers trimmed in the popular Van Dyke, Pompadour or Storm Door styles. Call on me, anyway.
AL. HUSETH' Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

TRAGEDY OF LAKES IS NOT YET TOLD

EVERY HOUR ADDS TO TERRIBLE TALE OF FEARFUL STORM DISASTERS.

ANOTHER LARGE VESSEL LOST

600-Foot Freighter and Forty Men are Missing—Not Seen Since She Left Marquette Loaded With Iron Ore.

Marquette, Mich., Nov. 15.—There is great apprehension here that the six hundred foot steel freighter, Henry B. Smith, of Cleveland, may be added to the list of vessels which met disaster in the gale that swept the Great Lakes.

Had Crew of Forty.

There is fear that the Smith foundered in Lake Superior with her crew of probably forty men.

She was commanded by Captain James Owen.

With seas washing over the breakwater, the Smith loaded with 11,000 tons of iron ore, left Marquette shortly before six o'clock Sunday morning. That night and Monday morning the storm raged with exceptional violence.

No Word Has Come.

No word has come from the Smith since she left the shelter of this harbor four days ago.

Marine men here have little doubt that the vessel was lost with all hands. Wreckage washed ashore here has not been identified, but is believed by Captain Cleary of the life saving crew to be from the Waldo, wrecked on Manitou Island last Friday.

Total of Disasters Increases.

Port Huron, Mich.—Each hour adds to the total of disasters on Lake Huron during last Sunday's storm and the end is not in sight. Bodies of sailors of five and perhaps six vessels were found on the shore of the lake; wreckage from two other boats was cast up by the waves and no trace had been found of two vessels or their crews, totalling more than forty men.

Never in the history of Michigan's maritime existence has Lake Huron been the scene of such a succession of catastrophes.

Most Conservative Estimates.

Conservative estimates of the loss of life fix the loss at 150 at least, the damage to vessels and cargoes will be several millions of dollars.

Lying in morgues along the Canadian shore are bodies of sailors on the steamer James Carruthers, Regina, John A. McGean, Wexford and Charles S. Price. It is practically certain those vessels went down with all on board. There are also a number of bodies unidentified. Perhaps these were the sailors on the unidentified freighter which lies bottom side up in Lake Huron, 13 miles north of here. Many think she is the Regina; others still cling to the theory that she collided with the Regina and the latter sank. Wreckage of the steamers Argus and Hydrus has been cast ashore. Neither of these boats has been heard from since the storm swept the lakes. The freighter Isaac M. Scott also is missing. None of its wreckage has been washed ashore.

Word was received from Captain Ely of the Tug Sarbia City that he had sighted the wreck of an unidentified steamer while passing Port Austin. She is belived te be a total loss. She may be one of the boats already reported missing.

Fog and a heavy sea prevented searchers from making a fourth attempt to learn the name of the overturned freighter, which, tossing helplessly, has become a serious menace to navigation.

17 DOZEN EGGS PER PERSON

That Number Laid Each Year—Cold Storage Is Blamed for High Prices.

Washington, Nov. 17.—Production of eggs in the United States has increased steadily during the last 14 years. The price of eggs also has moved steadily upwards. Department of agriculture officials say that cold storage is responsible for the high price.

Figures issued by the census bureau show that in 1899 American hens laid 1,293,662,000 dozen eggs, which was 17 dozen for every man, woman and child in the country. Ten years later, in 1909, they produced 17.3 dozen per capita, while this year it is estimated they will produce 17.7 dozen per capita.

As to prices, the statistics show that in 1899 "average best fresh" eggs sold at wholesale in New York, highest price, at 36 cents; in 1904, at 47 cents; in 1908, 55 cents; in November, 1912, at 60 cents. Last month they were 55 cents.

Thirteen Honor Thirteenth Bride.

Washington, Nov. 15.—Miss Jessie Wilson, the White House brde-to-be, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Josephus Daniels, wife of the secretary of the navy, at her home, "Single Oak," in Woodley Lane. It marked the first of a series of similar functions to be given by the wives of cabinet officers in compliment to Miss Wilson. Thirteen guests sat down to the luncheon table and Miss Wilson is to be the thirteenth bride of the White House. This was not by design, however.

75,000 WILL DIE OF CANCER

THIS ESTIMATED AS 1913 TOLL OF DISEASE.

Surgeons Discuss Radium as Possible Cure—Scarcity of Element Hampers Tests.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—Scarcity of radium has prevented a thorough test of what its curative properties may be in cancer, according to the report made to the clinical congress of surgeons in session here, by the cancer campaign committee.

The committee organized to combat cancer by spreading information leading to early treament of the disease as soon as it manifests itself, reported on the educational campaign of the past year carried on by the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

"Only time will tell what percentage of the cases can be cured with radium," the report states. "The surgeons who have reported the best results from radium stil urge early operation whenever possible.

"Few surgeons in this country have enough radium to give it a thorough trial. It has appeared that extensive doses have sometimes cured when smaller amounts have little effect. It is suggested that radium should be standardized to eliminate variations in its strength."

Popular articles in magazines, publicity through newspapers, lectures before women's clubs, in factories and elsewhere, have been effective throughout the year in spreading information on cancer.

"Seventy-five thousand persons in the United States will die of cancer in 1913," said Mr. Hoffman. "The death rate is 8.6 per cent of the total mortality for persons over 45.

Importance of early diagnosis and surgical treatment was urged by the delegates in resolutions adopting the report. No other procedure offers hope at present, it was declared.

LAKE STORM KILLED 256

Property Loss Is Estimated at $5,000,000, and Many Steamers Were Lost.

Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 17.—Only one additional boat disaster has developed as a result of the terrible lake storms and that is the wrecking of the steamer Major off Whitefish point in Lake Superior. She was abandoned by her crew. The crew was picked up by a passing steamer.

The life loss among sailors is estimated at approximately 256 and the property loss is figured at more than $5,000,00. The property loss includes the score or more of vessels driven on the rocks or shore and partially or totally destroyed. One hundred and ninety-five lives were taken on Lake Huron, if the approximate figures are correct; 48 lives were lost in Lake Superior, seven on Lake Michigan, and six on Lake Erie.

WOMAN IS STORM HEROINE

Steward's Wife Feeds and Cheers Sailors While Wind and Waves Pound Vessel.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 17.—A woman, Mrs. Clarence Black, 1639 North Hancock street, Chicago, was the heroine of the wrecked steamer, Howard M. Hanna, Jr., of Port Austin, Mich., Lake Huron, during the storm which swept over the Great Lakes, according to Arthur Jacobs, boatswain of the craft, upon his arrival here.

Mrs. Black, the steward's wife, was the only cool one on the vessel after it went on the reef, said Jacobs. While all of the crew were huddled in the galley and mess room from Sunday night until Tuesday morning, Mrs. Black kept a fire going in the galley stove in spite of the water, which was waist deep. She fed the 25 sailors and cheered them while the wind and waves were sweeping over the vessel and pounding it to pieces.

All But Two Trains Annulled.

New Orleans, Nov. 17.—Except for two transcontinental passenger trains, one arriving and one leaving here, traffic on the Southern Pacific railway in Louisiana is tied up by the strike of engineers and trainmen. An embargo has been placed on freight. The road will not attempt to operate freight trains and all passenger trains but the two through trains have been annulled indefinitely. Business men have appealed to President Wilson to aid in settlement.

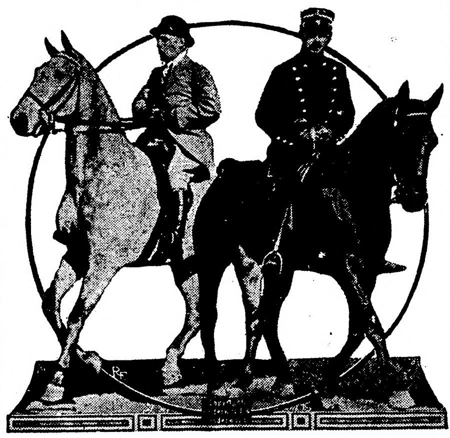
Silver Service for Jessie Wilson.

Washington, Nov. 15.—Miss Jessie Wilson's wedding gift from senators, a silver service, will include a tea service, coffee percolator, compote cases, candelabras, and trays, all fittingly inscribed and will cost a little more than $1,000. Senator Martine, who is looking after the gift for his colleagues, formally announced its character.

Mortars to Defend Canal.

Washington, Nov. 15.—With the great mortar batteries which will defend the Pacific entrance of the Panama Canal completed, Secretary Garrison, upon the recommendation of General Weaver, chief of coast artillery, is preparing to dispatch the eighty-first company of coast artillery, now at Fort Dupont, Del., to the canal zone to take permanent station in the new forts. The company will place the batteries in working order, after which they will be reinforced by several additional companies.

FOREIGNERS AT THE HORSE SHOW



Two of the foreign representatives who are exhibiting at the international horse show in Madison Square garden, New York. On the right is Lieut. N. K. Heiberg of the Akershus Dragoon regiment of Norway, and on the left Capt. H. P. Parker, one of a number of British army officers who are competing.

WHIPPING POST IS UPHELD BY MILLER

GOVERNOR OF DELAWARE DEFENDS STATE IN ITS RIGHT TO ADMINISTER LAW.

CRITICISES OUTSIDE PROTEST

Executive Says These Will Be Heeded—Persons of Criminal Instincts Who Oppose Statute Warned to Stay Out of State.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 18.—Governor Charles Miller has issued a statement in defense of the Delaware whipping post and declared that that method of punishment for criminals in Delaware would continue until the law providing for it is repealed, "regardless of any attempted interference by a member of congress or of individuals residing in other states."

Statement of Governor.

In his statement the governor says: "The courts and other legal authorities of Delaware will administer the internal affairs of the commonwealth, regardless of any attempted interference by a member of congress or of individuals residing in other states. They are ignorant of conditions and permit themselves to be misled by extravagant and highly colored newspaper articles.

Abusive Letters Received.

"The persons who have written me letters, some of them abusive and insulting to the citizenship of the state, should pause to consider that state government in America is based upon a statutory law by men elected by the people.

"I shall uphold the state's courts in the administration of the law and warn all evil-doers to give Delaware a wide berth if they wish to escape the whipping post."

INSANE DANCING THE TANGO

Latest Craze of Society May Be Cure for Demented in Hospitals of Country.

Sacramento, Cal., Nov. 17.—The rag dance which has become a craze in society is becoming a craze in all the madhouses of the state.

State Superintendent of Asylums Dr. F. W. Hatch says there is no reason why the patients should not dance the tango.

Dancing is considered by alienists to have a calming effect on the patients and to assist progress toward a cure. The effect of the rags and tangoes is being closely watched for the enlivening strains of the music and the swinging steps of the dances may hold the means of quickening the cure of many of the patients.

Weather Bureau Investigation.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 17.—Representative Cordon telegraphed President Wilson asking him to direct an investigation of the weather bureau to ascertain if it was responsible for the loss of 254 lives in the storm which broke over the Great Lakes last Sunday. The chief aim of the investigation, Mr. Gordon said, would be to learn if inadequate and improper signals were displayed.

Royal Estrangement Permanent.

Stockholm, Nov. 17.—An official news agency announces that the Princess Marie, wife of Prince William of Sweden, has declared her determination never to return to her husband and that all efforts to induce her to reconsider her decision have failed. Prince William and the princess, who was the grand duchess Pavlovana, daughter of the grand duke, Paul Alexandrovitch, were married in 1908. The princess left her husband recently on account of domestic troubles.

SPENCER WILL BE HANGED

SLAYER OF DANCING TEACHER IS FOUND GUILTY.

Confessed to Wholesale Murders, but Little of Story Was Credited—Curses and Reviles Court.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—Henry Spencer confessed slayer of Mrs. Mildred Allison Rexroat, a dancing teacher, was found guilty of murder by a jury at Wheaton, a suburb.

The death penalty was fixed by the jury, which returned a verdict after little more than two hours' deliberation. The first ballot was 11 to 1 for death penalty and the second ballot was unanimously in favor of sending Spencer to the gallows. Spencer was arrested on Oct. 5, charged with having lured Mrs. Rexroat to Wayne, Ill., and placing her body on the railroad track after he had shot her to death. Mrs. Rexroat's body was found early in the evening of Sept. 27.

Immediately after his arrest Spencer began a wholesale confession in which he asserted he had murdered 29 persons, most of them women, and nearly all for the purposes of robbery. Although the police proved that Spencer could not have committed many of these murders, they still maintain the belief that he killed at least one or two women in addition to the dancing teacher.

Since his arrest Spencer has insisted that he be given the death penalty When his trial began Monday, however, his attitude in the court room was one of such violence that Prosecutor Hadley saw in it a well defined attempt to establish the belief that the defendant was insane. The jury, however, refused to be moved by these efforts.

Spencer was the only witness to take the stand for the defense. He testified and for fifteen minutes held the attention of the court while he cursed and reviled his own counsel and the state's attorney.

REVISION OF BANKING LAWS

Question Comes to Front as Consequence of Proposed Currency Changes.

Washington, Nov. 17.—With the administration currency bill due to be reported to the senate this week after long delay, a plan to revise the national banking laws to meet the new currency system has made its appearance in legislative circles. It will include questions originally contemplated as a part of the currency bill, but set aside until the next session of congress, when a general revision of the banking laws has been promised by the administration.

In connection with this proposed revision, congress will take up the far-reaching questions of rural credits, the problem of providing cheaper money for the farmer who now mortgages his land at high rates of interest to obtain funds.

Great Banquet for Roosevelt.

Buenos Ayres, Nov. 14.—Coonlel Roosevelt was the guest of honor at a great banquet at the Conon theatre at which covers were laid for more than a thousand. Earlier he witnessed a review of the troops at Capo Mayo. He was also present at the military club on the occasion of the presentation of a statue of General Sheridan.

Women Have to Skip and Jump.

New York, Nov. 17.—A lady in a hobble skirt may hop, but you haven't any right to expect her to skip or jump. That's the decree of Police Captain George Cooley of Yonkers, N. Y., in consequence of which he gave orders to his policemen stationed along South Broadway, where the autocars whirl, to tighten their grip hard on the speed limit. Captain Cooley says he has been deluged by complaints from women that they do not have time to cross the streets.

BOTH HUERTA AND CARRANZA HOLD OUT

LATEST STATEMENT DESTROYS HOPE OF AMICABLE ADJUSTMENT.

ALL NEGOTIATIONS MAY STOP

U. S. May Cease Trying to Mediate—Juarez Falls Into Hands of Rebels After Clever Ruse of Crafty Generals.

Nogales, Sonora, Nov. 18.—As soon as the pending negotiations with Washington are complete, General Carranza, it is announced, will proceed south into Sinalola to reorganize the civil government of the state. Orders were issued to open the customs house at Juarez, the border city just captured, and minor ports of entry on the Chihuahua, Texas and New Mexico line, all of which are held by the constitutionalists.

Mexico City, Nov. 17.—"In view of Venustiano Carranza's repudiation of any form of mediation by or alliance with the United States, Provisional President Huerta can do no less than join him in his expression of patriotic sentiment and maintain unaltered his dignified attitude toward Washington." This statement was made at the national palace, and it casts extreme doubt on any renewal of negotiations between Mexico and the United States. It tends to substantiate the belief that no hope is left of an amicable adjustment.

Juarez Falls to Rebels.

El Paso, Texas.—Ciudad Juarez, the most important northern port of entry in Mexico, was captured by constitutionalists under General Pancho Villa and General Maclevio Herrera with small loss on either side.

The occupation of Juarez by rebels began Saturday after the men under Villa and Herrera had reached the town in trains thought to be carrying federal soldiers to the garrison.

Ruse Works Well.

The rebels detrained undiscovered, placed their artillery and had everything in readiness to battle before the word was given to fire on the federal garrison. At the first volley the astounded government troops were assembled and returned the fire, engaging in battle which lasted for two hours.

British Not Warned to Leave.

Mexico City, Nov. 17.—The British minister, Sir Lionel Carden, explained that his instructions to British residents in Mexico were not in the nature of an order to leave their places of residence, excepting in the case of those located in more inaccessible towns, but simply a precautionary measure, intended to prepare them in event circumstances should demand their removal. The French minister, Paul Lefaivre, said he had no intention of leaving the capital at this time.

Federals Executed at Jaurez.

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 17.—Two former federal officials of Juarez, who were taken prisoners by General Villa's rebel troops have been executed at Juarez. They were Pablo Ebave, an official in the Juarez police department, and Juan Cordova, chief of the Juarez secret police.

POLICE ROUT SUFFRAGETTES

Four Leaders Are Arrested in London for Refusing to Disperse.

London, Nov. 18.—A suffragette raid on Downing street led to disorders and the arrest of four leaders.

The Women's Freedom league held a meeting at Caxton hall and a delegation composed of the Misses Boyle, Murray and Boyleau, and Mrs. Kerr, all prominent members of the organization, proceeded to Premier Asquith's residence to present a resolution. Other suffragettes, with Mrs. Despard, started to hold a meeting on the steps leading from Downing street to St. James' park, where shortly they were joined by Miss Boyle and her companions.

The police interfered to prevent the obstruction of the steps, but the women refused to disperse and continued their speechmaking. Police reserves were summoned and after a scrimmage they cleared the steps and arrested the leaders.

Wire Tappers Make Confessions.

New York, Nov. 18.—Two wire tappers visited District Attorney Whitman at his home and made confessions that are expected to aid the prosecutor materially in his investigation of statements that high police officials have shared hundreds of thousands of dollars with swindlers who paid the police 10 per cent of their profits for protection.

May Head International Printers.

New York, Nov. 18.—At a meeting of printers, Marsden G. Scott, president of Typographical Union No. 6 ("Big Six"), was nominated for president of the International Typographical union to succeed James M. Lynch, who recently was appointed by Governor Glynn to be state commissioner of labor. There will be a referendum vote for president of the international union in May next. James M. Duncan, first vice president of the international union, will be acting president for Mr. Lynch.

GREAT COAL PROBE IS BEGUN BY U. S.

SWEEPING INVESTIGATION REGARDING RATES AND PRACTICES OF RAILROADS.

DISCRIMINATIONS SUSPECTED

Question Whether Roads Are Not Hauling Products of Own Mines and Overcharging Independent Companies.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18.—The interstate commerce commission began here today a sweeping investigation into the rates and practices of the anthracite coal roads. The inquiry is being undertaken with a view to determine whether there have been any violations by the carriers of the interstate commerce laws in connection with the transportation of coal, including the question as to whether the roads have observed the spirit of the recent "commodities clause" decision, which held that railroads could not transport commodities produced by themselves—in this case coal.

Question of Rates.

The question of reasonableness of the present freight rates on coal and whether the carriers discriminate against independent shippers will comprise an important part of the inquiry. This will involve an investigation into the relations between the road and whether any concerted policy exists among them.

Among the railroads chiefly concerned are the Reading, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, the Lehigh Valley, the Pennsylvania, the Erie, and the New York, Ontario & Western. High officials of the roads have been called to testify as well as officials in independent coal companies. The inquiry is expected to last at least three weeks.

Commissioner John H. Marble will preside and S. H. Smith and J. J. Hickey, attorneys for the commission, will conduct the examination.

Milwaukee Probe on.

Milwaukee. — District Attorney Yockey has begun John Doe proceedings here into what he says will be a most thorough and searching investigation into the price of coal in Milwaukee and the reasons for a set price being in vogue among Milwaukee dealers. Every coal dealer in Milwaukee will be put upon the witness stand.

Program Sent Out.

It is understood here that Mr. Yockey has sent his probe program to the county or district attorney in Minneapolis, Chicago and a number of other nearby cities, and most of them are said to have expressed great interest in the outcome of the probe.

In addition, the books of every fuel company will be ordered into court under a duces tecum process, by which the district attorney expects to discover whether or not a combine to effect a set price for fuel exists.

UNSETTLED WEATHER AHEAD

Forecast of National Bureau Predicts Much Rain and Snow.

Washington, Nov. 18.—A week of unsettled weather throughout pratically the entire country is predicted by the weather bureau.

"East of the Mississippi river the weather will be cloudy during the early part of the week," the weekly bulletin said, "but probably with little precipitation except on Monday along the Atlantic coast. After the middle of the week there will be rain with rising temperatures.

This rain will set in during Monday over the extreme Northwest, reaching the central portion of the country during Tuesday and Wednesday. Unsettled weather with occasional rain will also prevail in the South, while in the Southwest the weather will be generally fair except for some local rain early in the week.

"About the middle of the week a high area will appear in the Northwest with local snows and with much lower temperatures and the colder weather will extend eastward and southeastward, reaching the central portion of the country Thursday or Friday and the eastern portion at the end of the week."

Sulzer Ready for Lecture Tour.

New York, Nov. 18.—William Sulzer will start next Saturday on a lecture tour of some of the leading cities of the country, speaking on "The Treason of Tammany," and giving his version of the events leading up to his removal as governor. His itinerary will take him to the Pacific coast.

Young Men Are Asphyxiated.

Minneapolis, Nov. 18.—Gehart Gunderson, 22, and Theodore Neargy, 25, were found dead in their bed in their room here. Death resulted from gas poisoning. Gas fumes were discovered coming from the room by Edward Gunderson, brother of Gehart. Deputy Coroner Hobbs pronounced death accidental. The two young men had been in the city but two weeks, coming here from Little Falls, Minn., to find work. It is believed Neargy came home early Sunday morning and in some way left the gas jet partly open.

Chinese Artist.

In the fourth century A. D. there lived in China an artist, who was also a poet. His name was Ku K'ai-chih. In London there is a painting, a long scroll, which for at least a thousand years has been treasured as his work; and though that cannot be proved, it is in all probability a painting by his hand. One day, we are told, he intrusted to a friend a chest full of paintings which he had collected. For better security he fastened the lid of the chest and sealed the fastening with a seal. The friend, however, coveted the paintings, and hit on the simple expedient of removing the bottom of the box and so abstracting them. When the box was restored to Ku K'ai-chih, he broke the seal and found it empty. But he suspected no theft and expressed no surprise. Beautiful paintings, he said, communicate with supernatural beings; they have changed their form and flown away, like men when they join the immortals.—Laurence Binyon, in the Atlantic.

The greater the cost of living, the cheaper it is to remain single.

A GOOD REMEDY FOR THE GRIP.

PE-RU-NA
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

35 Bushels Per Acre

Was the yield of wheat on many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as fifty bushels per acre.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

As high as one hundred bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, fifty bushels for barley, and from ten to twenty bushels for flax.

J Keys arrived in the country five years ago from Denmark, with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about four thousand dollars. His wheat weighed 63 pounds to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

Ask for descriptive literature and reduced railway rates of Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.

The Wretchedness of Constipation

Can quickly be overcome by CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

Purely vegetable—act surely and gently on the liver. Cure Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness, and Indigestion. They do their duty.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

$35 to $75 WEEKLY IN A BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN

We need a man—Farmer's son preferred—to handle household necessities always in use, territory is free—work profitable, steady and healthful.

No Experience Necessary
WE TEACH YOU FREE

If you are ambitious for a business all your own, write for our plan—we will explain everything in detail, many are making big money every week under our direction and plans of Modern Merchandising. You can do the same—this is your opportunity—take advantage of it—write today.

OUR SALESMAN WAGON

KOCH V. T. CO
BOX M
Winona, Minn.

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

HIDES AND FURS

We positively give more valuable illustrated information relative to Hides and Furs, than any other house in the world. We pay Highest Cash Prices for Hides, Furs, Pelts, etc., and make prompt returns for each shipment. We sell trappers' supplies very cheap. Write for circular, shipping tags, Illustrated Trap Book, Catalogue, etc. It's free. NORTHWESTERN HIDE & FUR CO., Established 1890, Minneapolis, Minn.

O. M. ROBINSON

Exclusive Violin Maker and Repairer. Write for prices. SEVEN CORNERS, ST. PAUL, MINN.

Up the Coast from Panama

SCENE IN GAUTEMALA CITY

TRAVELERS from this country cross continents and seas to find nothing more curious or picturesque than may be found on the west coasts of Central America and Mexico, comparatively close at hand. To be sure, accommodations for tourists are few. There is nothing luxurious about the hotels at all, but the traveler sees a land of quaint customs and interesting people and sees it just as it is, writes G. R. King in Grit.

Within the next few years there will certainly be a wonderful change in conditions along this coast. With the opening of the canal will come new steamship lines, lower freight rates and increased travel. Probably the cities along the coast will lose some of their picturesque characteristics.

Travelers sailing through the canal in the days to come will see but little of the real Panama. The trip across the isthmus by train allows opportunity for seeing the sights at each end. It is a surprise to most passengers who sail from Panama for California ports to find that the boat does not start west but south. It is commonly supposed that the isthmus has a western and an eastern coast. As a matter of fact, it has a northern and a southern coast. "Why, see that sun," cried one of the passengers on my boat, "it is coming up on the wrong side." It was difficult to realize that we were sailing due south to round a huge boot top.

I had taken a slow boat instead of an express steamer, because I wanted to stop at the various ports along the coast. The republics, big and little, strung along in this order—Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico. Honduras has only a few miles on the Pacific shore, and Salvador no Atlantic coast line at all. Most of the republics have been torn by revolutions, beggared by graft and kept back by lack of education to an extent which can scarcely be realized in this country, near neighbors of ours though they are. There is a tribe of Indians in Panama which has never been conquered and which is quite independent of the government, boasting that no woman in the tribe has ever borne a child to a white man, and obeying laws of their own making.

Immense Tracts of Fertile Land.

Much of Honduras is a wilderness. In Nicaragua and Guatemala are immense tracts of land of the most fertile character and in the finest climates simply waiting the development which shall come with peace and prosperity. Slavery is an actual if not an admitted fact in many of these republics. The law says that a peon shall remain in the service of his master so long as he is in his debt, which is all the time. Further, the law says that the debt is inherited by the man's descendants and kinsmen. Peonage is really slavery.

The fault of the system lies, however, in the fact that a few men own all the land and that the peon sees nothing ahead but a continual round of labor. When, as in Mexico, all the land is in the hands of 6,000 individuals, while the total population is 15,000,000, there is little future for a poor man.

Costa Rica is the one country in Central America which seems to have solved the land problem. There the government is the supreme landlord and the land is parceled out in small lots to families who will actually work it. As a result Costa Rica is made up of small farmers and is prosperous and happy, the serenity of its affairs being disturbed only by an occasional revolution engineered by an ambitious politician.

Conditions in Nicaragua, next door to Costa Rica, are about as different as can well be imagined. Nicaragua is a land of revolutions, bloodshed and bad debts. Yet its natural resources are beyond estimate. Its climate is delightful. It has a coast line on two oceans and good steamship connections. Some day it may prove an El Dorado. Already the need of progress is felt and the government has signed a contract with an American company for more than half a million dollars to pave the streets of Managua, the capital city.

Houses of Adobe.

Managua is a typical city of Central America and is built almost entirely of adobe, the native mud, similar to that used all through Mexico and parts of the United States. The walls are thick and keep out the heat. Roofed with tile, these houses are attractive to the eye, especially at a distance, but cover them with corrugated iron and they have little beauty.

Nicaragua is a land of fruit and birds and flowers. Nature evidently meant it to be a paradise, but permitted it to fall into bad hands. Alligator pears, a costly luxury in New York, are cheap enough for beggars in Managua—and there are plenty of beggars to eat them. Oranges and pineapples are at their best there, and very plentiful, and the natives make free use of what they term the chocolate tree, because a beverage made from the seeds of the flowers is as delicate and palatable as chocolate.

Salvador is an independent little country just above Nicaragua and overshadowed by Honduras and Guatemala, but next to Haiti it is the most densely populated of all the American republics. The steamers stop at La Union and La Libertad, both small places, where conditions are exceedingly primitive. At La Libertad I saw a woman grinding corn and she was doing it by means of two stones, the lower stone, which was somewhat hollowed, resting on the wide tongue of a huge oxcart.

Always does Salvador keep a sharp eye on her northern neighbor, turbulent Guatemala, but of late years that country has been occupied with its own affairs. Nominally a republic, Guatemala is actually governed by a despot.

Our stops at the towns of San Blas and Acapulco on the west coast of Mexico were full of interest. Acapulco has a natural harbor, said to be the best with one exception in the whole world, being surpassed only by that at Sidney, Australia.

San Blas is very different in its characteristics, most of the houses being thatched. This is an important port and a favorable fishing place. And a Mexican fisherman is an interesting individual to look at. On his head he wears a hat of gigantic proportions, but his feet are bare, except, perhaps, for rough sandals. Their hats are the chief concern of the Mexicans, and they treasure them as carefully as an American woman her Easter bonnet. Western Mexico is filled with opportunities for development and with the opening of the canal there doubtless would dawn a new era were it not for the internal dissensions which keep out foreign capital and stand as a constant bar to progress.

Game to the End.

The late Timothy D. Sullivan had a great fondness for the Bowery boy, and used to tell a story to illustrate the Bowery boy's gameness.

"A newsboy"—so he would begin—"lay bedridden in the hospital. A friend of his, a bootblack, called:

"'How be ye, Jimmy?' asked the visitor.

"'I'm mighty sick,' groaned the newsboy. "Mighty sick, I tell ye; I got to lay flat on me back. The doc says if I turn over on me side I'll kick the bucket.'

"'Oh, rats!'

"'That's wot he says. If I turn on me side I'll kick the bucket straight off.'

"'I'll bet ye $2 ye won't. Try it and see.'

"'I'll take that bet,' groaned the sick newsboy.

"Wincing, he turned upon his side and, sure enough, it killed him instantly.

"His friend, the bootblack, laid $2 on the small corpse's chest and departed solemnly on tiptoe."

Cheap Filler.

How do these poets make a living anyhow?"

"Oh, there is always a market for magazines to fill in with."

"CASCARETS" FOR A BILIOUS LIVER

For sick headache, bad breath, Sour Stomach and constipation.

Get a 10-cent box now.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable and uncomfortable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get the desired results with Cascarets.

Don't let your stomach, liver and bowels make you miserable. Take Cascarets to-night; put an end to the headache, biliousness, dizziness, nervousness, sick, sour, gassy stomach, backache and all other distress; cleanse your inside organs of all the bile, gases and constipated matter which is producing the misery.

A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. No more days of gloom and distress if you will take a Cascaret now and then. All stores sell Cascarets. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a cleansing, too. Adv.

ALL LOOK FOR GRATITUDE

Nothing That Can Be Bestowed Is Able to Take Its Place in the Human Heart.

Gratitude given or received is one of the best things in the world. We need far more of it and far better quality. Yet I have never read any satisfactory account of what it so gloriously means. Its value begins just where the value of pay ends. Thanks are personal, an attempt to fit an adequate response to the particular service performed. Pay is an impersonal coin which has been handed out to many before it reaches you, and will go to many others when it leaves you. It is your right and you are not grateful for it. But thanks are a free gift and enrich the giver. There is no nobler art than the art of expressing one's gratitude in fresh, unhackneyed, unexaggerated terms which answer devotion with fresh devotion, fancy with new fancy, charity with sincerity. Artists who get their reward only in money and in the stale plaudits of clapping hands are restless for something more individual. They want to be intimately understood and beautifully answered. For such gratitude they look to brother artists, to the few who really understand. There they find their best rewards—but even this leaves something wanting.—The Atlantic.

HAIR CAME OUT IN HANDFULS

Hughson, Cal.—"Last winter my hair began to fall out and later my scalp began to itch terribly and my hair was full of dandruff. There were pimples broke out on my scalp, especially around the edge of my hair. Sometimes I would wake up at night and lie awake an hour or so with the itching. My hair came out in handfuls when I combed it. It was dry and lifeless and the dandruff was so thick it could be plainly seen.

"I used several different kinds of shampoo and soap but it got worse all the time for five or six months. When I had lost about half of my hair I started using Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In about six weeks my scalp stopped itching and in two or three months my hair began to come in new. My head is clear of dandruff now and new hair is coming in all the time." (Signed) Mrs. W. R. Candlish, Dec. 10, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Their Mission.

A large crowd had gathered at the station to receive the famous statesman. The reporter indicated a group in the foreground. "They are personal friends, gathered to see him about speaking here," he explained.

"Is it necessary to use persuasion to induce him to speak?"

"Not at all; they are going to try to prevent him."—Judge.

ASK FOR ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, the Antiseptic powder to shake into your shoes. Relieves Corns, Bunions, Ingrowing Nails, Swollen and Sweating feet, Blisters and Callous spots. Sold everywhere, 25c. Don't accept any substitute. Sample FREE. Address, A. S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y. Adv.

Comparisons.

"The mothers' club is making a great hit in our times."

"Not so much of one as the mothers' slipper did in mine."

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

It is proposed to harness the Ohio river near Louisville to generate electrical power.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

Domestic economy goes lame when a woman buys eggs at a bargain sale.

ANOTHER GOOD YEAR IN WESTERN CANADA

MANITOBA, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA HAVE SPLENDID CROPS.

The results of the threshing throughout Western Canada shows a more wonderful yield than usual of wheat, oats, barley and flax, all of which was harvested and threshed in perfect order. Not only was the average yield excellent over the entire country, but the quality was of the highest standard. Without going into figures, it is sufficient to say that wheat graded almost universally very near the top. Reports are to hand showing yields of wheat from many fields which averaged forty bushels per acre, and weighing 65 pounds to the measured bushel. Oats were very heavy, running from fifty to one hundred and fifteen bushels to the acre. Barley also was a very heavy yielder and kept up the reputation of Western Canada as a producer of that cereal. In many parts of the country the yield of flax exceeded the earlier expectations, but in other parts, there was some loss on account of winds blowing off the boll. Hundreds of farmers who have only been in the country three or four years, with but little means when they arrived, will, out of the crop of this year, clean up all their indebtedness, and be able to put something aside for further improvements on their farms and homes which are now freed of incumbrance. The writer has just heard of the experience of a man in the Battleford district that is worth repeating. He went to the district seven or eight years ago, with no money, worked for a time, got a team of horses, did some freighting and homesteaded a quarter section of land. He now owns 480 acres of land, clear of all incumbrances, and has wheat, oats, barley and hay, as well as a good number of horses, cattle and hogs, feeding rough grain to the stock. He is a firm believer in mixed farming. The fifty dollars that he first earned in the country has now increased to $25,000. He has never had a crop failure. Instances of this kind could be repeated over and over again.

There is a Dane, named Key, east of Saskatoon, whose oats this year went 110 bushels to the acre, and his wheat 40 bushels. He has paid off the mortgage on his farm, and now contemplates a trip to Denmark, to visit his old home. He has no more cares or worries, but is anxious to have more of his people settle in that part. It is not only the farmer with limited means and small area of land who is doing well, and has done wonderfully in Western Canada this year, but the man with means, the man who is able to conduct successful farming on a large scale and many opportunities offer for such in Western Canada, also has increased his bank account handsomely. A farmer in Southern Alberta raised 350,000 bushels of grain in 1913, and made almost a fortune out of it. In Saskatchewan and in Manitoba is to be heard the same story of what has been done by the farmer working a large area, which he is able to do successfully, by the use of improved farm machinery, enabling him to cut hundreds of acres a day, and plow the land immediately with large traction outfits. No better recommendation could be given the country than the fact that during the past year, upwards of 400,000 settlers arrived in Canada, the greater number of whom went to the farm. There are still many thousands of homesteads still available, capable of producing such crops and maintaining such herds as has made rich men out of the thousands whose experiences could be reproduced were it necessary.—Advertisement.

His Fault.

"Ellie's young man is one of the best fellows going."

"Yes, but he never goes."

The longest word in the English language is antitransubstantiationalism.

Is Your Body Poisoned?

Well kidneys keep the blood free of uric acid, a deadly poison that is constantly forming inside the body.

Sluggish kidneys allow the uric acid to accumulate, causing rheumatic attacks, headache, dizziness, gravel, urinary troubles, weak eyes, dropsy, and heart disease.

Doan's Kidney Pills restore the normal blood-filtering action of the kidneys. This drives out uric acid and ends uric acid poisoning.

AN IDAHO CASE

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

Samuel D. Ingham, 202 S. Main st., Lewiston, Idaho, says: "I was so crippled with rheumatic pains that I hobbled around on crutches for two years. I couldn't work and I often prayed for death. My back ached constantly and I had terrible pains throughout my body. My kidneys didn't work right and I had given up hope of recovery when I heard about Doan's Kidney Pills. After I had used one box, I threw away my crutches and before long I was cured. I haven't suffered since."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N.Y.

Lameness

Sloan's Liniment is a speedy, reliable remedy for lameness in horses and farm stock. Here's proof.

Lameness Gone

"I had a horse sprain his shoulder by pulling, and he was so lame he could not carry foot at all. I got a bottle of your Liniment and put it on four times, and in three days he showed no lameness at all, and made a thirty mile trip besides."—Walter B. Alonford, La Salle, Col.

For Splint and Thrush

"I have used Sloan's Liniment on a fine mare for splint and cured her. This makes the third horse I've cured. Have recommended it to my neighbors for thrush and they say it is fine. I find it the best Liniment I ever used. I keep on hand your Sure Colic Cure for myself and neighbors, and I can certainly recommend it for Colic."—S. E. Smith, McDonough, Ga.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

is a quick, safe remedy for poultry roup, canker and bumble-foot. Try it.

For Roup and Canker

"Sloan's Liniment is the speediest and surest remedy for poultry roup and canker in all its forms, especially for canker in the windpipe."—E. P. Spaulding, Jaffrey, N. H.

At all Dealers. 25c., 50c. & $1.00

Read Sloan's Book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry; sent free.

Address

DR. EARL S. SLOAN, Inc., Boston, Mass.

W.L.DOUGLAS SHOES

Men's $2.00 $2.50 $3.00 $3.50 & $4.50
Women's $2 $2.50 $3 $3.50 & $4
Misses, Boys, Children $1.50 $1.75 $2 $2.50 $3

Began business in 1876; now the largest maker of $3, $3.50 and $4 shoes in the world.

Over 150 styles, kinds and shapes in all leathers, sizes and widths.

W. L. Douglas shoes are famous everywhere. Why not give them a trial? The value you will receive for your money will astonish you.

If you would visit our factory, the largest in the world under one roof, and see how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would understand why they are warranted to look better, fit better, hold their shape and wear longer than other makes for the price.

Your dealer should supply you with them. Don't take a substitute. None genuine without W. L. Douglas name stamped on bottom. Shoes sent everywhere, direct from factory, by Parcel Post, postage free. Now is the time to begin to save money on your footwear. Write today for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail. W. L. DOUGLAS, 210 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. No1. No2. No3.
THERAPION Used in French Hospitals with great success, cures chronic weakness, lost vigor & vim, kidney, bladder, diseases, blood poison, piles. Either No. Druggists or mail $1. Post 4 cts Fougera Co. 90, Beekman St. New York or Lyman Bros Toronto. Write for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co. Haverstock Rd. Hampstead, London, Eng. Try new dragee (tasteless) form of THERAPION easy to take safe and lasting cure.
See that trade marked word 'THERAPION' is on Brit. Govt. stamp affixed to all genuine packets.

POULTRY WANTED

All kinds, both live and dressed. Top market prices. No commission. Write for guaranteed prices. We also handle on commission country veal and other country produce generally. References—The American Exchange National Bank, Duluth, Dun's or Bradstreet's.

THE VICTOR COMPANY, 202-204 WEST MICHIGAN STREET, DULUTH, MINNESOTA

VINELAND in Southern New Jersey. The California of the East. A country of thriving hustling towns, beautiful, suburban homes and happy, prosperous farmers, fruit growers and poultry raisers. With a world-wide reputation for its moderate and healthy climate, fertile soil, excellent schools and churches, with the New York and Philadelphia markets almost at your door, it is the ideal spot for the homeseeker. For full particulars regarding climate, business opportunities, farm and town properties, write DeWitt & Bellis, Real Estate Brokers, Park House, Vineland, N. J.

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

THOMPSON'S EYE WATER Quickly relieves eye irritation caused by dust, sun or wind. Booklet free.
JOHN L. THOMPSON SONS & CO., Troy, N.Y.

Fargo Directory

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

EARN 25 TO 100 A WEEK
Young Men Wanted to fill the demand of Automobile and Gas Traction Engineers. "Now is the time to act." Write for free information
Fargo School of Automobile & Gas Engineering
1018 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakot

Fargo Tannery
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakot

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 47-1913.

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dy
You can dye any garment without ripping apart. WRITE FOR FREE booklet, calendar, blotters, etc. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Il

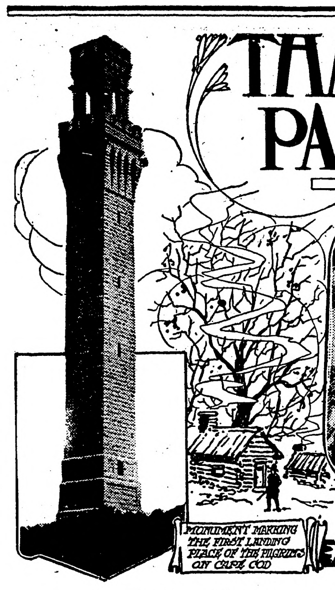
25 CTS. PISO'S REMEDY 25 CTS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

OVER 100 YEARS OLD Pettits Eye Salve

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

THANKSGIVING DAYS—PAST and PRESENT



MONUMENT MARKING THE FIRST LANDING PLACE OF THE PILGRIMS ON CAPE COD

PILGRIMS GOING TO CHURCH

THANKSGIVING DAY has a long and curious history and did not originate entirely with the Pilgrims at Plymouth, for Thanksgiving days are mentioned in the Bible—days set apart for giving thanks to God for some special mercy. These days of fast and prayer were customary in England before the Reformation, and later the Protestants appointed certain days of praise and thanks for various blessings. The discovery of the Gunpowder Plot in 1605 in London brought the common sentiment of Thanksgiving. A scheme had been formed to blow up parliament house on the 5th of November, the first day of the session. Great quantities of gunpowder and inflammable material were found concealed in the vaults underneath the building. The plot was discovered and the traitors were executed. In consequence of this deliverance the day was ordered to be kept as "a public thanksgiving to Almighty God" every year that "unfeigned thankfulness may never be forgotten, and that all ages to come may yield praises to God's divine majesty for the same." All ministers were ordered to say prepers thereon, for which special forms were provided. This annual thanksgiving, together with one established later on May 29, was abolished in 1833 in England, for both had fallen into disuse. For several years afterwards, however, these days were recognized in New England by the Episcopal church on account of its place in their church calendars. England continued to have special days appointed for giving thanks, and as recently as 1872 there was a day selected for the public to offer prayers of thanksgiving for the recovery of the late King Edward, then prince of Wales, from typhoid fever.

The first thanksgiving on the American continent was held by an English minister named Wolfall, and was celebrated off the coast of Newfoundland. This pious man accompanied the Frobisher expedition which brought the first English colony to North America. The log of the ship gives the record of the day's observances and tells how on Monday, May 28, 1578, aboard the Ayde, the men received communion, and how Minister Wolfall in a sermon gave humble and hearty thanks to God for his miraculous deliverance in these dangerous places. This was the first Christian sermon preached in North American waters. Again in 1607 there was a similar service held at Sagadahoc—a little village on the coast of Maine. There is little record of this thanksgiving except that it consumed only a few hours of the day, after which the people returned to their labors.

The great American Thanksgiving day had its origin in the Massachusetts colony in 1621, and Gov. William Bradford, the first governor of that little band of sturdy pilgrims, sent out the first Thanksgiving proclamation, setting apart a day for prayer and rejoicing over the plenteous harvest of that year. The Englishmen recalled their Guy Fawkes thanksgiving, and the Dutch remembered hearing their ancestors speak of the great day of praise and prayer held at Leyden, Holland, in 1578, when that city was delivered from a siege. So, the entire colony began their pious preparation for what proved to be the gayest Thanksgiving the colony ever knew, for after the first one, which lasted several days, the Puritan Thanksgiving meant long sermons, long prayers and long faces. Governor Bradford determined that the initial Thanksgiving should be celebrated with no little ceremony and that feasting should play a part in the occasion. History tells us that he sent out four men, who were to search for game for the feast. Many fowls were shot—in fact, enough to meet the wants of the colony for a week. Wild turkeys predominated, so it seems that the turkey made its appearance early in the history of Thanksgiving. The day selected was December 13 (old style). At the dawn of that day a small cannon was fired from the hill and a procession was formed near the beach, close to where the Plymouth Rock now rests. Elder Brewster, wearing his ministerial garb and carrying the Bible, led the procession as it moved solemnly along the street. The men walked three abreast, with Governor Bradford in the rear. There was a long service in the meeting house, and after it was over there was a dinner—and such a dinner had never been known in the colony, for, apart from the savory turkey and other wild fowl, the women had done their share in providing good things from the limited supply at their command. The most dramatic incident occurred when the dinner was in progress, for as if by magic 90 friendly red men, under King Massasoit, appeared, carrying haunches of venison as an addition to the feast. Thanksgiving day soon lengthened into days, for the psalm-singing and feasting, interspersed with war dances, were continued several days.

After that Thanksgiving days took on a different aspect, and occurred at any season; sometimes twice a year, or sometimes a year or two were skipped, just as it pleased the governor of the colony, until 1664, when the day became a formal one in Massachusetts. Other colonies followed the example, and pretty soon all New England joined in giving thanks on the same day.

During the Revolutionary war Thanksgiving days became a fashion, and the continental congress set apart at least eight days during one year for that purpose. On December 18, 1777, General Washington issued a proclamation for a general Thanksgiving to be celebrated by the soldiers of the Continental army. In 1789 congress decided to ask the president to issue a proclamation asking the people to suspend work and give thanks on a certain day of the year. There had been considerable opposition to the passage of the bill, some of the reasons given being more humorous than serious. President Washington acquiesced in the wishes of congress and issued a proclamation appointing November 26 of that year as the day for the American people to join in thanksgiving to God for the care and protection he had given them in their plentiful harvest and freedom from epidemics.

From time to time our presidents issued proclamations, but it was generally left to the governors of the states to determine on what day it should occur. Under the administration of John Adams two national fast days were observed, but no real Thanksgiving. It was not until 1815, after three national fasts on account of the war, that another national Thanksgiving was appointed by the president, James Madison. This was due to peace with Great Britain. After this there was another lull in proclamations as far as presidents were concerned until 1849, when President Taylor set a day of fast on August the third on account of the cholera. Meanwhile the national Thanksgiving day seemed to be dying out, except in the New England states. Then came the Civil war, and the nation was again summoned to fasting, and two such days were kept in 1861—January 4 and September 26—but it was not until 1863 that the horizon had so brightened as to warrant the appointment of a national Thanksgiving. Immediately after the Battle of Gettysburg Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, a Boston woman, wrote to President Lincoln suggesting a national thanksgiving, and following her advice, the president set apart Thursday, August 6, as a day of "praise and prayer." On November 26 of the same year another Thanksgiving was kept, and this was really a great festival and observed in every northern state. In 1864 the 24th of November was kept. After this, with one exception, our great national day of thanks has been celebrated on the last Thursday in November.

The presidential proclamations contain very little that is new or original and usually take the form of an essay. In 1898, after the Spanish-American war, President McKinley had a chance to vary the conventional form by "giving special thanks for the restoration of peace." This was just 100 years after Washington's proclamation. President Roosevelt, who always did original things, declared "that a Thanksgiving proclamation could not be made a brilliant epigrammatical paper." The proclamation of the president stamps the feast with a sort of official character—something possessed by no other holiday. This proclamation does not make it a legal holiday—it merely recommends that the people suspend business for the day. A special statute in each state is required to make the day a legal holiday, and this has not been enacted in every state.

The day was originally set apart for thanksgiving, fasting, prayer and religious devotions, but the modern Thanksgiving has become a day of feasting and jollity, and is made the occasion of all sorts of sports and festivities. The craze for outdoor life keeps many from the churches, although the places of worship continue to be filled with "a goodly company," who gather to give thanks to him "from whom cometh every good and every perfect gift."

The turkey is still king of the Thanksgiving feast and as an addition the good things of the field and vineyard have been added. The famous pigeon pie, which was a popular Thanksgiving dish in the early part of the nineteenth century, is rarely seen in these days. The wild pigeons, which alighted in great numbers on the buckwheat fields, were enticed by a decoy duck within a spring net and caught by the hundred. They were kept alive and fattened on grain until the day before Thanksgiving, when they were killed and made into a pie for the Thanksgiving table.

Most of the old customs of the day have passed out of existence. The turkey raffle with dice is still a custom in some parts of the country. Usually the turkey is a tough bird, which was purchased cheap by the proprietor of the saloon (for the raffle usually takes place there). The raffle, of course, draws a crowd of men, who incidentally patronize the bar during the proceedings. Another sportive feature of Thanksgiving no longer in vogue was the shooting match, where live turkeys tied to sticks were used. This cruel practice was abandoned because the New England clergy objected, not on account of its cruelty, but because it kept the men away from the church service. This reason seems to fit in with the idea of the men back in the seventeenth century who, while they were eating a Thanksgiving dinner of venison, discovered that the deer had been killed on Sunday. They at once sent for the Indian and had him publicly whipped, and also compelled him to return the money which he had been paid for the deer. This being done, they at once resumed their dinner and finished up the venison.

New York city is responsible for the strangest of all Thanksgiving customs, and one which has only recently died out. Young men and boys used to dress themselves in fantastic garb and parade the streets—hundreds of the boys wearing their sisters' old clothes, their faces smeared with paint and their heads covered with wigs. As late as 1885 they held parades and made the street hideous with their thumping drums and blaring trumpets. In 1870 this queer performance took on the dignity of a political parade and prizes were distributed to the companies wearing the most unique clothing. Senator William M. Tweed, the famous political boss of that period, was the donor of a prize of $500 in gold. This custom was undoubtedly a survival of Guy Fawkes days, carried out on a later day in the year; for some unknown reason it was practiced only in New York city.

Thanksgiving has always been a day of charity, and in the old days it was considered bad luck to turn even a tramp from the door, and today our friendly inns, almshouses and charitable institutions have their turkey dinners, usually gifts from charitable people. Our prisons, too, serve their inmates with a hearty meal and have some sort of service of praise. The customs of the great national holiday may have changed somewhat, yet the spirit of the first Thanksgiving, which was held at Plymouth, in 1621, still hovers about the national day of prayer and praise of the twentieth century—a spirit of thankfulness to God for his mercy and kindness to the people of our great American republic.

PILGRIMS' HALL, PLYMOUTH

PILGRIM EXILES.

FOR ARRIVING COOKS.

"How will I find the house?" asked the cook, who had booked for Lonelyville.

"Can't go wrong," said her employer. "Our suburb maintains a reception committee at the depot."

OBTAINING MULES FROM LIGHT HORSES

A Pair of Farm Mules That Are Worth Upward of $600.

It is foolhardy to use the best mares for raising mules. There are too few of them to keep up the horse supply. There are plenty of poor or unsound mares that will rear good mules, said W. A. Cochel, head of the department of animal husbandry at the Kansas Agricultural college, to a class in horse production, recently.

The best mule is produced from a light type of horse, Professor Cochel said. A good mule-producing mare has a big head; is rugged, roomy, comparatively heavy bone, a good big foot, and is upstanding. The jack should be as high as possible, have a Roman nose, coarse bone, a big foot, and long ears.

A mule eats in an irregular manner, and it is almost impossible to founder him. They do better if fed in a lot than in a stall. On farms where it is necessary to have hired men it is best to let them work mules, because of the smaller danger of injury or loss due to bad driving or feeding. Mules are easily fattened in a small lot, and do not fight, but they do not fatten in a large lot because they are too restless.

A careless or ignorant man can be successful in breeding mules, but he would fail with horses. But a careful man will be more successful with horses than with mules. A Kansas farmer cannot afford to work good draft geldings, but should work draft mares, mules or geldings that are still increasing in value.

The average value of mules in all states except one is from one to eight dollars more than the average value of horses in the same states. The exception is Rhode Island. There is always a good market for mules. They are freer from blemishes and unsoundnesses and less susceptible to disease. They live longer than horses at heavy labor and can be driven by ignorant help with less danger of loss. They can be sold at any age, and can take better care of themselves than horses.

EXCELLENT NOTES OF THE SHEEPFOLD

Weed Out Every Individual Animal That Is Not Young, Thrifty and of Good Build.

(By E. L. VINCENT.)

Look round for a better head for your flock of sheep than you ever had before. Be willing to pay the cost. It will all come back.

Let your breeding stock be the best on the farm. Weed out every individual that is not thrifty, well built and young.

I was talking the other day with a man who has a special arrangement with a butcher downtown to take so many lambs every week at a certain specified price per pound. That man has no trouble to dispose of his surplus stock. He takes the matter by the right handle. Get your market, then work for the lambs.

Never buy a ewe with great long hoofs. The longer her hoofs the fewer teeth she is apt to have, and toothless sheep are the poorest property a man can have on his farm.

In picking out lambs for the home flock, select those that have short legs and stocky bodies, with good straight backs. A good backbone is a great thing, in any creature, even a man.

You will have plenty of offers for the best lambs; but if you are smart, you will keep enough of them to make your flock good and growing better every year. Prices do not count when it comes to building up a flock.

The best flock master is the kindest man.

Long-legged sheep never ought to be used as breeders.

Sell your wool on a rising market. It is when the tide goes out that we drop our bundle.

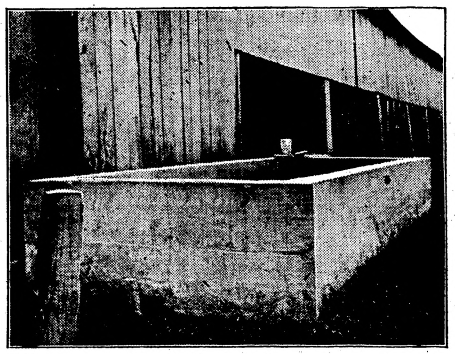
Mutton and meat of lambs advances in price about forty per cent., usually, between the farm and the man who eats it. If you can get a bit nearer to the last man, you can save him some money and yourself a good lot. Can't you do it?

The public market is the best way so far devised for cutting out the long string of middlemen that are eating the people up alive. More and more cities and large towns are adopting that plan. More should do so, and do it soon.

Egyptian Incubators.

It is not generally known that the old stoves called "mammals" that the Egyptians used as incubators, date back to remote antiquity. Even before the French Revolution the Paris markets had incubator chickens, thanks to an apparatus which was invented in France in 1777.

USING COMMON SENSE IN THE HOG LOT



Cement Drinking Trough for Live Stock.

Do you know of anything on the farm that will run into money faster than hogs when around 6 or 7 cents per pound?

It increases the feeding value of corn to soak it from 24 to 47 hours, but the hogs will relish an occasional feed of dry grain.

An armful of green cornstalks will add relish to the hog's ration, but it should not be fed regularly until the corn in the ear has hardened beyond the possibility of frost.

Some farmers cut off the tails of their pigs because they claim that it takes ten ears of corn to raise one tail, there, they amupate in the interest of economy.

The man who breeds hogs with high ideals of perfection cannot succeed unless he keeps an active record of his breeding operations. He needs a blank book for the purpose and must pay the most careful attention to entries.

The sprayer and a good solution of lice-killer is just as essential in hog-raising as houses and fences.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Prisoner of Hofberg

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

ROSNY, the western secretary of the League of Lost Causes, was not in Paris. Paul Lane could not find him. The League's offices were closed and abandoned, while on the window was displayed a sign advertising that they were for rental. The landlord could give no information as to Rosny's whereabouts. He had paid his rent and departed five or six days before; more than that he did not know.

After a maddening search through Paris for nearly a week Paul saw a paragraph in a newspaper which threw a flood of light on his perplexity.

"It is rumored," said the writer, "that the Princess Clothilde will shortly be married to His Highness Archduke Stepan. The match, which is much liked by the Emperor Franz Joseph, was, it will be remembered, postponed some time ago on account of her highness' predilection for what may be called, without lese majeste, foreign travel. It is said by the scandalously inclined, in fact, that her highness has been the heroine of more than one runaway escapade, involving America, the Tripolitaine—where, it is stated, she was present at the Italian army maneuvers—and India."

Paul's heart leaped when he read this paragraph, obscurely tucked away in a column of society gossip. How little that meant to the writer or the casual reader! To him it was everything. For it was at her petition that he had left America to place his fortune and his services at the league's disposal. He loved her, and knew that his love was returned, though a world of tradition kept them asunder. He must find her.

She came to him with a suddenness that was startling. For that same afternoon, lingering as he had become accustomed to do, in the vicinity of the abandoned league offices, in the hope that Rosny would return, he was suddenly aware of a woman, heavily veiled, who stood beside him and whispered his name. Paul started and fell to trembling. He could not form the words that rushed to his lips.

"It is still closed!" she said with a gasp. "And I have traveled here at such risk and all in vain.. I must see Rosny, for events of the utmost importance are transpiring at home. The league is divided; all are afraid; the kaiser himself is afraid, and Spain is too far away for help to come from that quarter. You must help me, monsieur," she said, turning suddenly upon him. "Where can we speak?"

Paul led the way to a little cafe not fifty feet distant.

"I must tell you something about myself," she said. "I am, as you know, one of his majesty, the Austrian emperor's, many nieces. I was brought up in the stifling atmosphere of the most ceremonial court in Europe. I was betrothed to the Archduke Stepan. I had never even seen him; I hated him; I ran away and entered Prague University, where I came under the influence of Dvornak, the real founder and inspirer of the League. I went to America to solicit your aid—and the rest is known to you. Von Holzrath is the emperor's trusted adviser. He found me in Tripoli, where the interests of the league had called me. He carried me back to Vienna, whence I escaped three days ago at imminent peril, to summon the League to fight for the sacred principle of monarchy. If Austria becomes republican—"

Paul leaned forward and took her hand in his.

"I love you, Clothilde," he said. "And you love me. That much I have from your own lips, and a princess of the house of Hapsburg does not deny her word. Leave these affairs to older and more intriguing minds; come back to America with me tonight."

She gasped and looked at him in something like admiration for his audacity. Her face softened. Then she answered frankly.

"My feelings Paul Lane, count with me for nothing at all. Whether I love or hate you, whether my word was truly spoken or nothing more than pity for you when you lay dying in the hot sands of Tripoli—all that is nothing to me now. I will never go back upon our cause nor seek for selfish happiness by such an act of self-abnegation. There is great work to be done; will you help me, Monsieur Lane, in a spirit of complete self-forgetfulness, for the sake of the League? Either pledge yourself to this or leave me and never see me again."

Paul knew then that he had met his master; a cooler, yet more ardent spirit than his own. He bowed his head in token of agreement, and the next moment a startling change came over her face and she began speaking eagerly and intently.

"The emperor has not seen me since my return from Tripoli," she said. "They told me—those who guarded me—that he was resolved never to see me till my marriage had taken place with the Archduke Stepan. But I was not deceived. My uncle is in his dotage now; he is almost an automaton—just a weak old man dozing away the last hours of his life by his fireside and dreaming of ancient triumphs, and men and events that have long since been translated into history. He lives at Hofberg, at his hunting lodge, perpetually; he has to all intents and purposes abdicated, and all that you read of his activities is fiction. Nevertheless, he is the most important factor and the most venerated figure in Austria today.

"But the movement of democracy, that fatal error of our times, has enveloped Austria in its octopus-like tentacles. Socialism and the spirit of national separation have infected the soldiers—even the officers of the Vienna garrison. They plan to split up Austria into her original provinces. Think what that means, Paul Lane! Austria wiped off the map, a series of republican states in place of her, and monarchy will have received a wound at its heart. This must not be. The League has said it shall not be. But the League has been proscribed in many countries; it cannot meet as an entity again; none dares interfere. And four nights from tonight, on St. Bartholomew's eve, the coup will take place.

"Stepan and his aides, the officers of the Vienna garrison, who have been selected from among the Croats, Serbs, Ruthenians and other non-German elements of the empire, have planned, fifty of them, to seize his majesty in his castle at Hofberg on that evening. There are none there but the Imperial Guard and a host of timorous flunkeys. My uncle will be compelled to sign his abdication, and a republic will be declared under the presidency of Stepan. There will be none to offer resistance. There seems nothing to hinder the carrying out of the plan. I learned this from the lips of Stepan himself when he came to me in my prison to offer me his hand again, bragging of his approaching greatness."

"What are we to do?" asked Paul.

"I shall seek out the emperor, stop his carriage and throw myself upon his mercy," said the princess. "Once in his castle, I can make arrangements, summon the loyal element to his aid, bring home to him the meaning of the conspiracy. But had I attempted to reach him when flying from my prison I should have been captured and detained. I want merely one who will defend me, Monsieur Lane, till I can see my uncle and throw myself into his arms. We must intercept him as he is driving in his park, and make ourselves known to him."

In ten minutes she had elaborated her scheme. They set out for Vienna on the next day, traveling as a lady and her groom. On the third morning they descended from the train at the central station of Vienna, and that afternoon saw them in the vicinity of the castle of Hofberg.

"He takes his drive at four, after the heat of the day is over," said Paul's companion. "See, they are bringing up his barouche to the castle gate. Only two outriders and one of his six attendant officers will accompany him. He drives round the park; we can intercept him at the Faun's bridge. Come!"

Hand in hand they struck out through the undergrowth of the leafy forest, running like two children.

At last they emerged upon a rustic bridge, built of hewn trunks, just as a little cloud of white in the distance betrayed the approach of the emperor's carriage. The princess motioned Paul back into the undergrowth.

"Come when I call, whether for aid or to present you to his majesty," she said, and stepped forward into the middle of the road. The carriage rolled slowly on., In it, as it rounded a bend in the forest path, Paul could see a young officer, seated bolt upright, with folded arms, and at his side the aged emperor, his white beard sunk on his breast, his head bent forward. He was nodding, dreaming his old life away. Suddenly the coachman saw the princess, the horses swerved, stopped, snorting; the outriders sprang to the ground, the young officer stood up, hand upon holster.

But Princess Clothilde was already within the carriage and at the emperor's knees.

"Uncle! Uncle Franz!" she cried, embracing him in tears.

The old man stirred, and the dreams of his half-forgotten youth vanished as his eyes opened. He started slightly, for he had thought himself back upon the battlefields of sixty years ago, fighting the rebel Magyars, a young man, full of the pride of life; and here he was a greybeard, nodding in the carriage within his park of Hofberg.

His eyes fell upon the princess, whom the young officer, recognizing, had discreetly abstained from ordering away. The old man raised her in his arms.

"Why, it's little Clothilde, and grown to be a woman," he said, looking at her in wonder. "I thought you were still a little girl, my dear. What have you come to see your old uncle about? What, crying?"

"Yes, I am very unhappy, uncle, and I have come to stay with you," sobbed the princess. "And I have my aide with me." She looked back. "Paul!" she called. And Paul came forward blithely with his finger upon the brim of his hat.

"Sit up by the coachman, Paul!" said the princess.

It was less than an hour after Paul's installment in the castle when the princess' bell rang, and, passing through the swing door, he emerged upon a magnificent hall of marble, with a richly carpeted grand stairway descending toward the splendid entrance way and state banqueting rooms on the ground floor. At the head of the stairway, in the wide hall, was the emperor's suite, and at the door stood the princess. When Paul came up to her she clasped his hands warmly.

"Henceforward you are groom no longer," she said, with a rather anxious smile. "Come in, Monsieur Paul. My uncle is in a good condition now, and understands something of the plot against him. Two of his gentlemen are here, also. Come in."

"This is the gentleman, uncle, of whom I spoke to you," said the princess. "I can vouch for his honor and devotion."

The old man nodded and smiled graciously.

"Excellent! Excellent!" he mumbled in French. "What does he want then—a commission in the Guards? How many quarterings are on his shield?"

"No, uncle, you have forgotten," said Clothilde fretfully. "You want a gentleman whom you can rely upon to convey a summons to the loyal regiment at Frieburg to hasten hither."

"It is on this paper, sir. It is only necessary to sign it," said one of the aides.

Wearily the old man signed the much coveted order; then sank back in his chair, exhausted, and presently nodded into slumber.

"Gentlemen, let me introduce you to Monsieur Lane," said the princess hastily. "Monsieur Lane—Count Von Arnim, Captain Zeller von Thurn. Monsieur Lane is fully acquainted with the desperate situation and guarantees to reach Freiburg before midnight and have the troops brought here at once."

"Or else," said Von Thurn pessimistically, "there will be another tragedy of St. Bartholomew's day."

"Does Monsieur Lane comprehend fully how desperate the situation really is?" broke in Von Arnim. "Here we are, six loyal gentlemen, the sole bulwark of Austria against destruction. Even the flunkeys know what is to take place and are impudent to us. We can rely on none of them; we must be satisfied that the servility of their natures forbids them to offer active aid to our enemies. Well, here are we, six, the emperor's sole friends, and our enemies are so sure of success that they can calmly wait till tomorrow night to make sure of their enterprise. We are beleaguered here, Monsieur Lane; news has just come that guards have been posted outside the castle since the early afternoon, with instructions to let none in or out. The telephone wires have been cut; we have no loyal regiment that can be reached except at Frieburg. So you must leave at once, Monsieur. You know the way?"

Five minutes later, accompanied by Von Arnim, Paul was threading a byway through the forest which emerged upon an unfrequented road in a suburban district upon the way to Freiburg. At this point the great wall which surrounded the castle was broken by a swift stream, fringed with thick reeds and undergrowth. Von Arnim pressed Paul's hand.

"Once safe beyond the river," he said, "you will come upon the Freiburg road. Horses and automobiles pass continually. I leave the rest to you. Watch for the sentries! Good luck!" He pressed his hand and was gone.

Paul crouched among the reeds, entered the stream noiselessly, and struck out toward the opposite shore. Five minutes later, under cover of twilight, he had passed the besieging outposts and gained the Freiburg road. He waited, dripping with water, shivering in the cool of the evening. Presently a slowly trotting pair of horses came along, drawing a barouche in which a stout elderly lady was seated. On the box was an apoplectic coachman. Paul drew a pistol from his pocket, walked up, and extended his hand. The man reined in.

"Well, what now? What now?" he commanded. "This is the carriage of the Baroness Blankenburg. What do you want?"

"Your horses," answered Paul, and shoved the pistol under his nose. "Run for your life, my good fellow, or—"

But the coachman needed no second invitation. As he leaped to the ground and began running away, Paul cut the traces and selected the better and swifter of the two fat beasts. From it he removed the harness; he sprang on the animal's bare back and drew it out from the wreckage of the equipment just as the Baroness awoke from her nap.

"Home, Friedrich!" she said crossly. "I shall be late, you good-for-nothing—"

Her remarks ended in a shrill scream as she grasped the situation. But Paul was already cantering away through the darkness in the direction of Freiburg. At ten o'clock, and without further incident, he rode into the military cantonment and demanded immediate audience with the commander.

A display of the order, a hurried explanation, and Colonel Heller proved equal to the emergency.

"My men shall start in an hour," he answered. "We can reach Hofberg at eight in the morning. You will accompany us?"

"No," answered Paul. "I am needed by his majesty."

The return ride seemed endless, the road deserted save for an occasional wayfarer or a belated automobile, appeared to stretch itself out eternally. Yet the stars were still bright in the sky when the black bulk of the castle suddenly loomed out from among the foliage of the encompassing trees. Paul drew rein; he was trying to locate the position of the stream which he had formed; he was uncertain, too, whether he should turn his horse loose or ride boldly through the besiegers. Upon his meditation fell the sharp challenge of a sentry.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

"The man sprang up almost from beneath his feet. Paul had presence of mind to reply:

"Captain Von Houzrath!"

"But you must give the countersign, sir," the man protested, his bayonet lowered indecisively. Paul mumbled something and spurred his horse, leaped past the soldier, saw the gate open, and galloped madly along the drive and into the main entrance of the castle. He heard shots fired behind him; then followed silence. No one was in pursuit of him. Doubtless the besiegers felt sure enough of their prey.

But in that hasty flight Paul had noticed that there was an ominous bustle and stir in the camp.

At the gate of the castle two of the officers, to whom Paul had been introduced, came running forward. When they saw who their visitor was, they clasped his hands eagerly.

"They attack at morning!" one of them exclaimed. "Stepan has become alarmed, and will postpone it no longer. The servants have deserted us—this piece of news came from a loyal stable boy. Come with us quickly!"

They entered the fine, spacious marble hallway of Hofberg. A single electric light burned dimly at the top of the stairway, and Paul saw, to his astonishment, dim figures moving here and there, pulling great trunks of trees across the entrance to the main corridor, while Clothilde directed them. As Paul and the officers approached all ceased their labors for a moment, and the princess uttered a little cry of joy which set Paul's heart beating wildly. The barrier was already four feet high. The three climbed over, and took their stations among the defenders.

"What time does the loyal regiment arrive?" asked Captain Von Thurn; and the rest gathered round Paul in wistful expectation.

"At eight."

"It is now five. But they attack at dawn."

"They will be ready to attack in half an hour," said Paul. "We must hold the stairway for two hours and a half."

No more was said, but they continued to work feverishly upon the defences.

Outside it was growing light. The trees showed green against the wide windows, and birds were singing. Presently a tramping, mingled with distant cries, was heard in the courtyard.

"To your places!" exclaimed Von Arnim, and they ran back and scrambled over the barricades again, where they stood grimly waiting. The sounds grew louder, hoarse shouts broke the silence; suddenly a mob of men rushed into the courtyard and hammered upon the gates.

"Silence, gentlemen!" Von Arnim said.

The hammering grew louder until the din was tremendous. Evidently oak beams were being brought into play. Presently the sounds ceased; then two minutes later, there was the roar of dynamite. The gates rocked and fell inward, and through the cloud of mortar and marble dust figures of men emerged. It was quite light now.

They rushed up the stairway, and suddenly perceiving the barricade and the defenders and stood still. But one man ran to the barricade, and hoarse with passion, shouted and shook his fists. It was Stepan.

"Surrender!" he cried. "Our terms: your lives are spared. We demand his majesty and her highness the princess!"

"In ten seconds," responded Van Arnim, "we open fire."

Twelve abreast they bounded up the marble stairs, in ranks four deep, brandishing their swords and shouting the name of Stepan, who, Paul noticed with a grim smile, remained in the rearmost rank. That was his last conscious observation for some time, for, an instant later, sword was crashing on sword—point, thrust, thrust, point.

"Now, Paul, fight bravely for—for me," he heard a voice in his ear. He turned, to look into the face of the princess, who, apparently devoid of fear, stood at his side. His hopes revived. As the assailants, reforming, charged bravely up the stairs, he singled out Von Holzrath and shouted a challenge at him. He saw the captain's eyes flash their answer, and, sword in hand, waited.

Von Holzrath came toward him, brandishing his sword. It clashed on Paul's. One moment they fought fiercely; the next the rush of the combatants separated them. Driven back with the defenders, Paul saw Von Holzrath spit Van Arnim through the body and twist loose his sword, as one pulls a skewer from a joint. Then they were together again. Swifter and more fierce grew the movements of his enemy's blade, outmatching his own, till it flashed before Paul's eyes like a sphere of living light. It pointed, threatened, now here, now there, Paul's arm grew weary. A dozen times he laid bare his guard. Still Von Holzrath forbore to strike, but there was a sneering smile on his lips. Paul felt his strength leaving him, he thrust with all his force, he saw Von Holzrath's blade meet his and parry it, point itself for the final blow, and then—

Out of the emperor's apartments, where, fighting desperately for their lives, the four men stood, backs against the wall, there tottered a frail old man with pale, blue troubled eyes. And, as he emerged, suddenly the din grew quiet, and, where there had been murderous shouts and clashing blades, there might have been a tableau in marble. The old man came into the passage and his eyes fell on the assailants, who stood before him with lowered swords. Then instinctively Franz Joseph straightened himself, his form became erect and his voice grew strong.

"Officers of the Guards!" he shouted. "The Magyars are at our gates! Follow me! Courage!"

He stooped and took a sword from the clutch of a dying man, and stood feebly wielding it, calling on the names of his great captains, dead fifty years before. The last survivor of all those stirring years, he seemed like one re-arisen from the grave. A superstitious fear fell on all present. The assailants retreated toward the head of the stairway, and, gathering there in little knots, looked with troubled eyes upon the pathetic figure of their once mighty emperor.

Suddenly without there came a trumpet call. It echoed through the halls, electrifying all into life.

"The regiment from Freiburg!" shouted the princess, and her face took on the aspect of an amazon. "You are trapped, dogs! You shall swing high for this! Ha! Freiburg! Austria! Succor!"

Into the hall below burst a detachment of the loyal regiment, their bayonets set, their fingers on the triggers of their rifles. One moment, and the assailants fled down the stairs and broke into the midst of the newcomers. They clove their way into the heart of them, a struggling wave amid the white-coated veterans of the emperor; in a moment the hall was filled with the tumult of the new battle.

Princess Clothilde took Paul by the arm.

"You must go now, Paul," she said. "You have saved Austria and me. Your deed shall never be forgotten. Go, and I shall summon you when I need you."

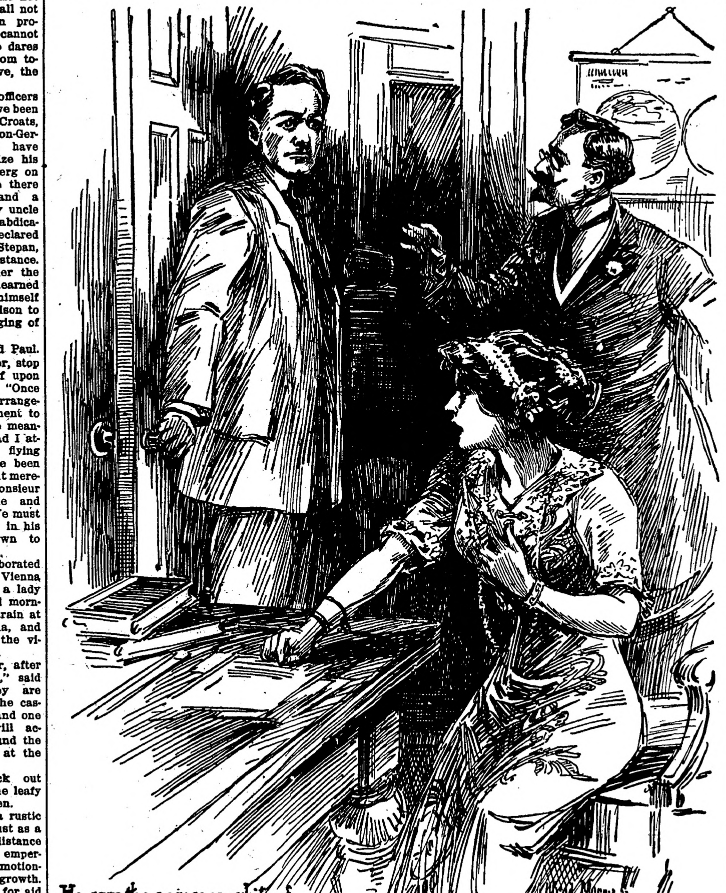
"Now!" shouted Paul. "Do you think I will leave you now, to lose you when—"

He saw her eyes harden like points of steel, and bowed his head humbly to hear her answer.

"I thank you from the bottom of my heart for what you have done," she said. "Remember, Paul, your pledge to me, the pledge you gave when first I enlisted in your service. It was to obey unquestioningly. My duty now is with my uncle. Later we shall meet again, when the work of the League is ended and all things come to their accomplishment. Go to the Paris office of the League and wait till you hear from me."

"One word," said Paul. "A princess' word is sacred and unchanging?"

"Always," said Clothilde, and for the moment her voice was tremulous. Then a great gladness came into Paul's heart. He lifted her hand to his lips and passed out through the abandoned quarters of the palace servants.

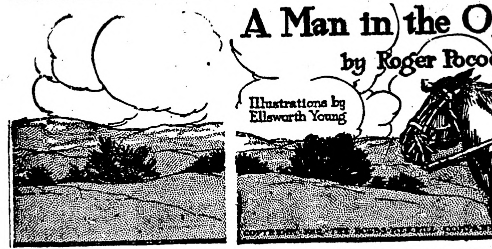


He saw the princess, white of face, tremulous, broken.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young



SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide.

CHAPTER V.—Continued.

And I found wealth. Seems there's many persons mistaking dollars for some sort of wealth. I've had a few at times by way of samples, the things which you're apt to be selfish with, or give away to buy self-righteousness. Reckoning with them projuces the feeling called poverty. They're the very stuff and substance of meanness, and no man walks straight-loaded. Dollars gets lost, or throwed away, or left to your next of kin, but they're not a good and lasting possession. I like 'em, too.

I found peace, I found wealth, yes, and found something more thar in the wilderness. Sweet as the cactus forest in blossom down Salt River is that big memory.

It was after I'd found the things of happy solitude. I'd gone to work then for the Bar Y outfit, breaking the Lightning colts. We was out a few weeks from home, taking an outfit of ponies as far as the Mesa Abaho, and one night camped at the very rimrock of the Grand Canyon. The Navajo Indians was peevish, the camp dry, grass scant, herd in a raffish mood, and night come sudden.

I'd just relieved a man to get his supper, and rode herd wide alert. I scented the camp smoke, saw the spark of fire glow on the boys at rest, and heard their peaceful talk hushed in the big night. They seemed such triflin' critters full of fuss since dawn, so small as insects at the edge of nothin', while for miles beneath us that old, old wolfy Colorado River was playing the Grand Canyon like a fiddler. But the river in the canyon seemed no more than trickle in a crack, hushed by the night, while overhead the mighty blazing stars—point, swing, and drive, rode herd on the milky way. And that seemed no more than cow-boys driving stock. Would God turn His head to see His star herds pass, or notice our earth like some lame calf halting in the rear?

And what am I, then?

That was my great lesson, more gain to me than peace and wealth of mind, for I was humbled to the dust of earth, below that dust of stars. So a very humble thing, not worth praying for, at least I could be master of myself. I rode no more for wages, but cut out my ponies from the Lightning herd, mounted my stud horse William, told the boys goodby at Montecello, and then rode slowly north into the British possessions. So I come at last to this place, an old abandoned ranch. There's none so poor in dollars as to envy ragged Jesse, or rich enough to want to rob my home. They say there's hidden wealth whar the rainbow goes to earth—that's whar I live.

PART TWO

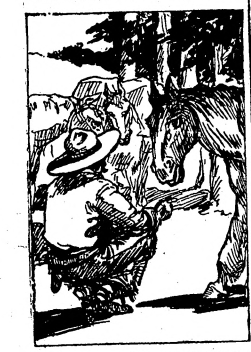
CHAPTER I.

Two Ships at Anchor.

Kate's Narrative.

My horse was hungry, and wanted to get back to the ranch. I was hungry too, but dared not go. I had left my husband lying drunk on the kitchen floor, and when he woke up it would be worse than that.

For miles I had followed the edge of the bench lands, searching for the place, for the right place, some point where the rocks went sheer, twelve hundred feet into the river. There must be nothing to break the fall, no risk of being alive, of being taken back there, of seeing him again. But the edge was never sheer, and perhaps, after all, the place by the Soda Spring was best. There the trail from the ranch goes at a sharp turn, over the edge of the cliffs and down to the ferry. Beyond there are three great pines on a headland, and the cliff is sheer for at least five hundred feet. That should be far enough.



"Sugar, Is It? Why Didn't Ye Say So Before?"

I let my horse have a drink at the spring, then we went slowly on over the soundless carpet of pine needles. I would leave my horse at the pines.

Somebody was there. Four laden pack-ponies stood in the shade of the trees, switching their tails to drive away the flies. A fifth, a buckskin mare, unloaded, with a bandaged leg, stood in the sunlight. Behind the nearest tree a man was speaking. I reined my horse. "Now you, Jones," he was saying to the injured beast, "you take yo'self too serious. You ain't goin' to Heaven? No! Then why pack yo' bag? Why fuss?"

I had some silly idea that the man if he discovered me, would know what business brought me to this headland. I held my breath.

His slow, delicious, Texan drawl made me smile. I did not want to smile. The mare, a very picture of misery, lifted her bandaged, frightfully swollen leg, and hobbled into the shade. I did not want to laugh, but why was she called Jones? She looked just like a Jones.

"The inquirin' mind," said the man behind the tree, "has gawn surely astray from business, or you'd have know'd that rattlers smells of snake. Then I asks—why paw?"

The mare, with her legs all astraddle, snorted in his face.

"Sugar is it? Why didn't you say so befo'?"

Jones turned her good eye on the man as though she had just discovered his existence, hobbled briskly after him while he dug in his kitchen boxes, made first grab at the sugar bag, and got her face slapped. The man, always with his eye upon the mare, returned to his place, and sat on his heel as before. "Three lumps," he said, holding them one by one to be snatched. "You're acting sort of convalescent, Jones. No more sugar. And don't be a hawg!"

The mare was kissing his face.

"Back of all! Back water! Thar now, thank the lady behind me!"

And I had imagined my presence still unknown.

"How on earth," I gasped, "did you know I was here?"

The man's eyes were still intent upon the wounded mare. "Wall, Mrs. Trevor," he drawled.

"You know my name? Your back has been turned the whole time! You've never seen me in your life—at least I've never seen you!"

"That's so," he answered thoughtfully. "I don't need tellin' the sound of that colt yo' husband bought from me. As to the squeak of a lady's pigskin saddle, thar ain't no other lady rider short of a hundred and eighty-three and a half miles."

What manner of man could this be? My colt was drawing toward him all the time as though a magnet pulled.

He stood facing me, the bag still in his hand, and my colt asking pointedly for sugar. Very tall, gaunt, deeply tanned, perhaps twenty-five years of age, he seemed to me immeasurably old, so deeply lined was his face. And yet it was the face of one at peace. I had been away since daybreak, and now the sun was entering the west. As to my purpose, that I felt could wait.

So I sat under the pines, pretending to nurse Jones while the shadows lengthened over the tawny grass, and orange needles flecked fields of rock, out to the edge of the headland.

The man unsaddled my horse, unloaded his ponies, fetched water from the spring of natural Apollinaris, but when, coming back, he found me lighting a fire, he begged me to desist, to rest while he made dinner. And I was glad to rest, thinking about the peace beyond the edge of the headland. Yet it was interesting to see how a man keeps house in the wilderness, and how different are his ways from those of a woman. No housewife could have been more daintily clean, or shown a swifter skill, or half the silent ease with which this woodsman made the table-ware for one, enough to serve two people. But a woman would not clean a frying-pan by burning it and throwing on cold water. He sprinkled flour on a ground sheet, and made dough without wetting the canvas. Would I like bread, or slapjacks, or a pie? He made a loaf of bread, in a frying pan set on edge among glowing coals, and, wondering how a pie could possibly happen without the assistance of an oven, I forgot all about that cliff.

The thing I had intended was a crime, and conscience-stricken, I dreaded lest he should speak. I could not bear that. Already his camp was cleaned and in order, his pipe filled and alight, at any moment he might break the restful silence. That's why I spoke, and at random, asking if he were not from the United States.

His eyes said plainly, "So that's the game, eh?" His broad smile said, "Well, we'll play." He sat down cross-legged. "Yes," he answered, "I'm an American citizen, except," he added softly, "on election days, and then," he cocked up one shrewd eye, "I'm sort of British. Canadian? No, I cayn't claim that either, coming from the Labrador, for that's Newf'nland, a day's march nearer home.

"Say, Mrs. Trevor, you don't know my name yet. It's Smith, and with my friends I'm mostly Jesse."

"If you please, may I be one of your friends?"

"If I behave good, you may. No harm in my trying."

The moment Jesse Smith had given me his name, I knew him well by reputation. Comments by Surly Brown, the ferryman, and my husband's bitter hatred had outlined a dangerous character. Nobody else lived within a day's journey.

"That's my home," said Jesse. "D'ye see a dim trail jags down that upper cliff? That's whar I drifted my ponies down when I came from the States. I didn't know of the wagon road from Hundred Mile House to the ferry, which runs by the north end of my ranch."

"And the tremendous grandeur of the place?"

"Hum. I don't claim to have been knocked all in a heap with the scenery. No. What took holt of me good and hard was the company—a silver top b'ar and his missus, both thousand pounders, with their three young ladies, now mar'ied and settled beyond the sky-line. There's two couples of prime eagles still camps along thar by South Cave. The timber wolf I trimmed out because he wasted around like a remittance man. Thar was a stallion and his harem, this yere fool Jones bein' one of his young mares. Besides that, there was heaps of lil' friendly folks in fur, hair, and feathers. Yes, I have been right to home since I located."

"But grizzly bears? How frightful!"

"Yes. They was frightened at first. The coarse treatment they gets from hunters, makes them sort of bashful with any stranger."

"But the greatest hunters are afraid of them."

"The biggest criminals has got most scare at police. B'ars has no use for sportsmen, nor me neither. My rifle's heaps fiercer than any b'ar, and I've chased more sportsmen than I has grizzlies."

"Wasn't Mr. Trevor one of them?" Jesse grinned.

"Tell me," I said, for the other side of the story must be worth hearing.

"Wall, Mr. Trevor took out a summins agin me for chasing him off my ranch. He got fined for having no gun license, and no dawg license, and not paying his poll-tax, and Cap Taylor bound him over to keep the peace. I ain't popular now with Mr. Trevor, whereas he got off cheap. Now, if them b'ars could shoot—"

I hadn't thought of that. "Can they be tamed?" I asked.

"Men can be gentled, and they needs taming most. Thar was three grizzlies sort of adopted a party by the name of Capen Adams, and camped and traveled with him most familiar. Once them four vagrants promenaded on Market Street in 'Frisco. Not that I holds with this Adams in misleading his b'ars among man-smell so strong and distrackful to their peace of mind. But still I reckon Capen Adams and me sort of takes after each other. I'm only attractive to animals."

"Oh, surely!" I laughed.

But Jesse became quite dismal. "I'm not reckoned," he bemoaned himself, "among the popular attractions. The neighbors shies at coming near my ranch."

"Well, if you protect grizzlies and hunt sportsmen, surely it's not surprising."

"Can't please all parties, eh? Wall, perhaps that's how the herd is grazing. Yes. Come to think of it, I remember oncet a Smithsonian grave robber comes to inspeck South Cave. He said I'd got a bone yard of ancient people, and he'd rob graves to find out all about them olden times. He wanted to catch the atmosphere of them days, so I sort of helped. Robbing graves ain't exactly a holy vocation, the party had a mean eye, a German name, and a sort of patronizing manner, but still I helped around to get him atmosphere, me and Eph."

"Who's Eph?"

"Oh, he's just a silver-tip, what scientific parties calls ursus horribilis ord. You just cast your eye whar the trickle stream falls below my cabin. D'ye see them sarvis berry bushes down below the spray?"

"Where the bushes are waving? Oh, look, there's a gigantic grizzly standing up, and pulling the branches!"

"Yes, that's Eph."

"Well, as I was tellin' you, Eph and me is helping this scientific person to get the atmosphere of them ancient times."

"But the poor man would die of fright!"

"Too busy running. When he reached Vancouver, he was surely a cripple though, and no more use to science. Shall I call Eph?"

"I think not to-day," said I, hurriedly rising, "for indeed I should be getting home at once."

Without ever touching the wound, he had given me the courage to live. had made my behavior of the morning seem that of a silly schoolgirl; but still I did not feel quite up to a social introduction. I said I was sure that Eph and I would have no interests in common.

"So you'll go home and face the music?" said Jesse's wise old eyes.

"My husband," said I, "will be getting quite anxious about me."

Without a word he brought my horse and saddled him.

And I, with a sinking heart, contrasted the loneliness and the horror which was called my "home" with all the glamour of this man's happy solitude.

He held the stirrup for me to mount, offered his hand.

"Do you never get hungry," I asked, "for what's beyond the horizon?"

He sighed with sheer relief, then turned, his eyes seeing infinite distances. "Why, yes! That country beyond the sky-line's always calling. Thar's something I want away off, and I don't know what I want."

"That land beyond the sky-line's called romance."

He clenched his teeth. "What does a ship want when she strains at anchor? What she wants is drift. And I'm at anchor because I've sworn off drift."

At that we parted, and I went slowly homeward, up to my anchor. Dear God! If I might drift!

CHAPTER II.

The Trevor Accident.

N. B.—Mr. Smith, while living alone, had a habit of writing long letters to his mother. After his mother's death the habit continued, but as the letters could not be sent by mail, and to post them in the stove seemed to suggest unpleasant ideas, they were stowed in his saddle wallets.

Dear Mother in Heaven:

There's been good money in this here packing contract, and the wad in my belt-pouch has been growing till Doctor McGee suspecks a tumor. He thinks I'll let him operate, and sure enough that would reduce the swelling.

Once a week I take my little pack outfit up to the Sky-line claim for a load of peacock copper. It runs three hundred dollars to the ton in horn silver, and looks more like jewels than mineral. Iron Dale's cook, Mrs. Jubbin, runs to more species of pies and cake than even Hundred Mile house, and after dinner I get a rim-fire cigar which pops like a cracker, while I sit in front of the scenery and taste the breath of the snow mountains. Then I load the ponies, collects Mick out of the cook house, which he's partial to for bones, Iron slings me the mail-pouch, and I hits the trail. I aim to make good bush grass in the yellow pines by dusk, and the second day brings me down to Brown's Ferry, three miles short of my home. From the ferry there's a good road in winter to Hundred Mile House, so I tote the cargoes over there by sleigh. There my contract ends, because Tearful George takes on with his string team down to the railroad. I'd have that contract, too, only Tearful is a low-lived sort of a person, which can feed for a dollar a week, whereas when I get down to the railroad I'm more expensive.

Your affectionate son, JESSE.

Rain-storm coming.

P. S.—Yes, it's a good life, and I don't envy no man. Still it made me sort of thoughtful last time as I swung along with that Jones mare snuggling at my wrist, little Mick snapping rear heels astern, and the sun just scorching down among the pines. Women is infrequent, and spite of all my experiences with the late Mrs. Smith—most fortunate deceased, life ain't all complete without a mate. It ain't no harm to any woman, mother, if I just varies off my trail to survey the surrounding stock.

Mrs. Jubbin passes herself off for a widow, and all the boys at the mine take notice that she can cook. Apart from that, she's homely as a barb-wire fence, and Bubbly Jock, her husband, ain't deceased to any great extent, being due to finish his sentence along in October, and handy besides with a rifle.

Then of the three young ladies at Eighty Mile, Sally is a sound proposition, but numerously engaged to the stage drivers and teamsters along the Cariboo Road. Miss Wilth, the school-ma'am, keeps a widow mother with tongue and teeth, so them as smells the bait is ware of the trap. That's why Miss Wilth stays single. The other girl is a no-account young person. Not that I'm the sort to shy at a woman for squinting, the same being quite persistent with sound morals, but I hold that a person who scratches herself at meals ain't never quite the lady. She should do it private.

There's the Widow O'Flynn on the trail to Hundred Mile,—she's harsh, with a wooden limb. Besides she wants to talk old times in Abilene. I don't.

While I've mostly kep' away from the married ladies, and said "deliver us from temptation" regular every night, there was no harm as I came along down, in being sorry for Mrs. Trevor. Women are reckoned mighty cute at reading men, but I've noticed when I've struck the complete polecat, that he's usually married. So long as a woman keeps her head she's wiser than a man, but when she gets rattled she's a sure fool. She'll keep her head with the common run of men, but when she strikes the all-round stinker, like a horse runs into a fire, she ups and marries him. Anyway, Mrs. Trevor had got there.

Said to be Tuesday.

Trip before last was the first time I seen this lady. Happens Jones reckoned she'd been appointed inspector of snakes, so I'd had to lay off at the spring, and Mrs. Trevor comes along to get shut of her trouble. She's hungry; she ain't had anything but her prize hawg to speak to for weeks, and she's as curious as Mother Eve anyway.

Surely my meat's transparent by the way her voice struck through among my bones. If angels speak like her I'd die to hear. She told me nothin', not one word about the trouble that's killing her, but her voice made me want to cry. If you'd spoke like that when I was your puppy, you'd a had no need of that old slipper, mother.

'Cause I couldn't tear him away from the beef bones, I'd left Mick up at the Sky-line, or I'd ast that lady to accept my dog. You see, he'd bite Trevor all-right, wharas I has to diet myself, and my menu is sort of complete. Still by the time she stayed in camp, my talk may have done some comfort to that poor woman. She didn't know then that her trouble was only goin' to last another week.

You'd have laughed if you'd seen Jones after she drank her fill of water out of the bubbly spring, crowded with soda bubbles. She just goes hic, tittup, hic, down the trail, changing steps as the hiccups jolted her poor old ribs. The mare looked so blamed funny that at first I didn't notice the tracks along the road.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

GOT HIS "THINK-TANK" GOING

Mexican Farmer Proved He Was Capable of Invention When Object Was to Save Labor.

That the Mexican farmer is not the slow-thinking, lazy person the average stranger imagines is illustrated by an ingeniously devised well constructed by a farmer living near a little town just across the boundary line. The natives seldom go far away from their homes and they have very primitive ideas and customs. This well is about 50 feet deep and the owner has built a curious device for hauling water from it. If this Mexican had been an educated man he might have been an inventor.

A tree flourished near the well which had two branches growing out of the trunk. These boughs separated into four branches higher up. The Mexican cut the branches in such a way that they formed a perfect rest for a long well sweep. He fastened the sweep to a crossbar laid across the two upper branches in the middle, using stout thongs for the purpose.

Then he fastened a weight on one end of the sweep and a long rope to the other end. The bucket is fastened to the end of this long rope, and all he has to do is to lower the buckets into the well. The weight of the stone pulls it up again, brimming full.

Children of Palestine at Play.

In Palestine, as always, children's play is mostly "making believe" that they are grown up. You may see a mite of five or six paying a visit of ceremony to a pasha or equally tender years, exchanging such compliments with him as "Rest, I pray you!" "Nay, he who sees you is rested," and finally backing out of his presence while he gathers up handfuls of dust and sprinkles it on his head. Holding a law court, with melon seeds to represent the bribes, is a popular game, and so is a raid of fierce men from the desert. The selling of Joseph and his subsequent interviews with his brethren are rendered with much dramatic action; also the afflictions of the men of Uz, with new details, such as Job's wife cutting off her hair and selling it for bread. "Doing bride" is naturally the chief amusement of the Moslem girl, as it is the one great event of her later life.

Got the Wrong Dish.

Jones seldom gets home in time to eat dinner with his family because the press of his work keeps him at his desk until long after everybody else has left the building. Mrs. Jones always puts his dinner in the oven, where he finds it when he arrives.

One night he reached home after the family had gone to bed, and found his dinner on top of the stove. Next morning his wife opened the oven and discovered that the food she had left for him had not been touched.

"Why, John! Didn't you eat your dinner last night?" she asked.

"My dear," he replied, "I did, and enjoyed it very much, but you made a mistake and left it on top of the stove."

"Good heavens!" she cried. "That was the dog's supper!"

Oysters in Motion Pictures.

One thousand feet of film, showing the pictures of the oyster industry of Maryland from the "catching" of the bivalves by means of tongs, scrapes and dredges to shucking, packing and shipping, will be taken by Swepson Earle of Baltimore, secretary of the National Association of Shellfish Commissioners, to the annual convention of that organization, which meets in Norfolk. After the Norfolk convention they will be exhibited in duplicate in cities throughout the United States

Occasionally we meet people who are almost as smart as we are.

Coughs come from inflamed Bronchial Tubes. Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops heal the irritation—5c at all Drug Stores.

An Inspiration.

"Good gracious, Bill, why did you start those girls going? Now they're all excited and all talking at once."

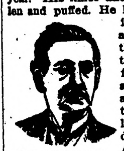
"That's what I did it for. I've got to invent a new class yell."

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas H. Fletcher
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

A Lot of Racket.

Howard Elliott, the new president of the New Haven & Hartford railroad, was talking at a luncheon in New York, about a millionaire who had been boasting overmuch—boasting about his Raphaels, his Louis Seize furniture, his Gobelins and his Aubussons.

"Of course, he's a self-made man," said Mr. Elliott. "I'm very fond of self-made men. The only objection to them is that sometimes they've failed to put themselves together so as to work noiselessly."



A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

Rev. E. Heslop.

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from Dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart fluttering, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that it was difficult to move. After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.

Dodds Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodds Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free. Adv.

Poet's License.

Robert W. Chambers, the popular novelist, was talking about a New York poet.

"His poetry is always awkward," Mr. Chambers said. 'He drags in words that you can see are there solely for the sake of rhyme. In fact, he reminds me of a Lake Sunapee epitaph.

"In a little churchyard overlooking Lake Sunapee a gray, mossy stone bears this inscription:

"'As sinks the sun with lengthened shadows,
So sank and died the good George
Meadows.'

"N. B.—Deceased's name was Fields, but Meadows is substituted for the sake of rhyme.'"

No Change.

The prince of Monaco said of marriage at a dinner in New York:

"Through marriage a French woman gains her liberty, an English woman loses hers and an American woman—"

The prince paused and looked quizzically about him.

"Yes? The American woman?" said the debutante.

"The American yoman," ended the prince, "continues to do as she likes."

All Trials.

He—What do you think of all this talk about trial marriages?

She—Why, is there any other kind?

Sounded Like It.

"Mr. Wombar says he is an enthusiastic disciple of Isaac Walton."

"Some new freak cure, I s'pose."

FAMILY OF FIVE

All Drank Coffee From Infancy.

It is a common thing in this country to see whole families growing up with nervous systems weakened by coffee drinking.

That is because many parents do not realize that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which causes the trouble. (The same drug is found in tea.)

"There are five children in my family," writes an Iowa mother, "all of whom drank coffee from infancy up to two years ago.

"My husband and I had heart trouble and were advised to quit coffee. We did so and began to use Postum. We now are doing without medicine and are entirely relieved of heart trouble. (Caffeine causes heart trouble when continually used as in coffee drinking.)

"Our eleven-year-old boy had a weak digestion from birth, and yet always craved and was given coffee. When we changed to Postum he liked it and we gave him all he wanted. He has been restored to health by Postum and still likes it."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

State News of General Interest

GIRL BATTLES WITH INTRUDER

ENTERS FARMER'S HOME IN MIDNIGHT ATTACK.

Daughter of Douglas County Citizen Twice Wounded and Beaten With Gas Pipe.

Alexandria.—An assault, evidently with murderous intent, was made upon Miss Tina Peterson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Peterson, residing two miles north of Brandon. Miss Peterson escaped with two wounds, each from a revolver shot, one a scalp wound and the other a flesh wound in her side. Neither is considered serious.

Awakened by Noise.

Miss Peterson, who is 22 years of age, was awakened by a noise in the lower part of the house. She arose to investigate, and was part way down the stairs when she met a young man. She ran back, but was followed by her assailant, who carried a piece of gas pipe and a revolver. A scuffle ensued, the girl receiving a blow from the gas pipe and two shots.

The father was awakened and attacked the midnight visitor, striking him with a piece of furniture, but the man made his escape.

A young man in the neighborhood is under suspicion, but no arrest has as yet been made.

GRAND FORKS WITHDRAWS BID

Tri-State Postmasters to Meet in St. Paul in Conjunction With National Gathering.

St. Paul.—Grand Forks has withdrawn its invitation in favor of St. Paul for the 1914 convention of the Tri-State Postmasters' league. This action was taken in view of the fact that the National Postmasters' association meeting will be in this city next year, and it was the desire of the Tri-State organization that their members meet here at the same time.

The Tri-State league embraces Minnesota, North and South Dakota. Since Grand Forks was selected at the 1913 convention for the 1914 meeting, the national meeting in Denver, chose St. Paul for its 1914 convention.

President Plumley and other officers of the Tri-State have promised to use their good offices in bringing the 1915 gathering of the association to Grand Forks, so that city will lose nothing by the change, though it will materially aid the district association, as it will mean a larger attendance.

The North Dakota League of Postmasters, which also selected Grand Forks for its 1914 gathering, will not change its plans. The session will be held in Grand Forks about two months previous to the national in St. Paul.

LAWLER OUT FOR GOVERNOR

Files as Candidate in 1914 for Democratic Gubernatorial Race.

St. Paul.—Daniel William Lawler, former mayor of St. Paul, who was a candidate for United States senator in 1912 and for governor of Minnesota in 1892, has filed with the secretary of state as a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor in 1914.

Mr. Lawler sets forth in his declaration that he is a citizen and freeholder; a democrat and a fighting one, 55 years old, and with a statement of principles so exhaustive that it will take until January 1 to prepare, at which time it will be given to the public and nation. Mr. Lawler since the last senatorial campaign, has been practising law in St. Paul.

HOBO KING MAKES ADDRESS

Jeff Davis Talks to Purity Congress On His Way to Seattle.

Minneapolis. — Jeff Davis, "King," or as he usually prefers to be called, president of the Hoboes, arrived here and took the Purity Congress, now in session, by storm. Jeff admits that he was a hobo at the age of 13 and claims to have beaten his way 100,000 miles.

"I am on my way to Seattle, beating my way," he said, "in one of the greatest fights a man ever engaged in—a fight against the vagrancy law by which thousands are imprisoned every year because they are poor and out of work. I represent an army 800,000 strong. I am going before the American Federation of Labor and try to get it to take up the fight against vagrancy laws."

Course for School Superintendents.

Minneapolis.—A week's course for superintendents of schools will be offered at the University of Minnesota during the last week of next January under the auspices of the college of education. Superintendents and principals of graded schools will be invited to the conference, and President Vincent and the members of the faculty senate committee on education will take advantage of their presence to discuss university admission requirements. Educational experts will attend the sessions.

M. E. HARRISON.

Mr. Harrison is the newly elected secretary of the west-central Minnesota Development Association. In planning and arranging for the corn and alfalfa exposition which the association is to feature this season, Mr. Harrison has been the guiding genius.

INDIAN CONSPIRACY CASES

One Hundred and Seventy-five Witnesses, Mostly Red Men, Are Summoned to Testify.

Fergus Falls.—The fall term of the United States court opened in this city with Judge Amidon occupying the bench.

The cases against M. J. Kolb, J. E. Perrault, William Uran, L. S. Waller, Lewis D. Davis and Andrew Venoss, who are accused of conspiring to induce United States officials to grant land patents to Indians contrary to law, will be called early in the term. One hundred and seventy-five witnesses, mostly Indians, have been subpoenaed to appear and the city is full of Indians. The government is planning a vigorous fight.

An effort is being made to induce Judge Amidon to adjourn court to Crookston for the trial of the $175,000 damage suit against the Canadian Northern Railway company, resulting from the burning of Beaudette. The witnesses will all come from along the northern border of the state.

TRYING VIRGENS MURDER CASE

Prisoner Pleads Not Guilty at Fairmont and Moves for a Change of Venue.

Fairmont.—Chris Virgens, a farmer, arraigned here for the murder last May of John Steen, his neighbor, pleaded not guilty and through his attorney, A. R. Allen, asked for a change of venue to another county, asserting that public opinion is so strongly against him in this county that a fair and impartial trial is impossible here. It is predicted the motion will be denied.

Steen was found dead in a hog-house, having been shot while doing chores. After an investigation by Sheriff Carver and a detective, Virgens was arrested on a warrant charging murder in the first degree.

Virgens has been a model prisoner, spending his time largely in reading the Bible and a few newspapers. This is the first murder case Martin county has had in years.

Chief of Police Removed.

St. Paul.—Martin J. Flanagan, acting chief of police, has been removed from office by the police board. His removal was caused by his absence from his office last Friday and Saturday. Three of his subordinate officers went with him. Mayor Keller stated that dissatisfaction of the public with the chief's absence made his removal imperative. Michael Gebhart, who has been assistant to Flanagan, was appointed chief and is succeeded as assistant chief by Lieutenant John Rowan, who has had charge of a substation.

Hunters Evidently Lost.

Duluth, Nov. 14.—Captain Edward Smith of the steamer America, which has reached Duluth, reports finding a rowboat adrift at Washington harbor, Isle Royal. The boat came drifting in from the open lake and was picked up there. It contained three oars, a United States packsack, a common packsack such as is used by hunters; two front quarters and a hind quarter of a moose. There was no sign of the hunters.

Another Overturned Vessel.

Duluth.—Another large lake boat floating with its bottom up was sighted on Lake Huron by Captain W. Rouvel of the steamer W. H. Granwick, which arrived in the Duluth harbor. There is no possibility of the boat being the supposed wreck of the Regina, according to Captain Rouvel, as the vessel had a red bottom, while the bottom of the other derelict is painted black. The Granwick crew reported that they sighted several other boats in distress.

BEILIS ON WAY TO SAINT PAUL

SISTER-IN-LAW OF RUSSIAN TRIAL-FIGURE TALKS.

Says "Ritual" Murder Charge Was Trumped Up by Government.

St. Paul.—Mendel Beiliss, who was the central figure in the recent "ritual" murder trial in Kiev, Russia, is on his way to St. Paul to make his home, according to a statement made by Mrs. Sara Dannovski, 113 Minnetonka Street, a sister-in-law of Beiliss.

Realizing that to stay in Russia would only mean that in a short while he would be imprisoned or assassinated, Beiliss is fleeing to the land where so many of his countrymen also have found new homes.

"For God's sake, don't let them arrest me," screamed Mrs. Dannovski in fear when the interpreter translated the reporter's qqustion as to whether she was a relative of Mendel Beiliss. Mrs. Dannovski, between sobs, declared that she knew nothing of the crime of which Beiliss was charged. For weeks she had guarded the secret of her relationship, fearing arrest by the local authorities. The fear of government had seized her although she is no longer in danger of the Russian government who ruined her little home in Russia.

When Mrs. Dannovski became convinced that she was in no danger of arrest, she quieted down and discussed quite freely the subject of her relative's arrest and trial. She says that he is making his way carefully to America and will not arrive at St. Paul till about January 1.

She has received news of him at broken intervals through letters from her sister at Kiev which were entrusted to immigrants. She says that until three years ago when she came to America she lived next door to Beiliss. He was constantly watched. The government suspected him of anarchistic tendencies, she says, and when unable to fasten that charge, one of murder was trumped up and he was brought to trial and finally acquitted.

Mrs. Dasnovski says the charge that he was guilty of "ritual" murder was absurd. "Mendel was never a religious man," she said through an interpreter. "He did not even attend church. But he was respected alike by Jews and Gentiles. He worked as foreman in the brickyard for years. He and my husband, Isaac, were both watched by spies. My husband escaped and came to America three years ago."

PLAN DEVELOPMENT MEETING

Northern Association Announces Tentative Program for December Gathering.

Bemidji.—The Northern Minnesota Development association have just announced the tentative program for their coming meeting here Thursday and Friday, December 4 and 5.

The meeting will be in charge of the Beltrami County Development association and the Bemidji Commercial club. These two organizations are arranging all of the entertainment features and will act as hosts to the many visitors.

The president of the Northern association, Mr. Cyrus M. King, of Deer River, will call the meeting to order and make the committee appointments. Then will follow a long list of interesting and instructive addresses. Among those to speak will be the following: F. T. Wilson, Stillwater, of the state agricultural extension department; C. F. Scheers, editor Akeley Herald-Tribune; C. G. Schultz, superintendent of public instruction; Dean A. F. Woods, of the state agricultural school; Fred D. Sherman, state immigration commissioner, and many others.

The problems of 1914 will be the subject most discussed on Friday and it is the hope of the program committee that with the aid of the scientific farming experts that will be on hand, much good may be accomplished. The meeting will end with a smoker Friday night.

St. Cloud Holds County Seat.

St. Cloud.—That Albany has lost in its fight to remove the Stearns county seat from St. Cloud is the belief here from the proceedings of the board of county commissioners. The board voted to put aside all technical questions and canvass the petitioners and the St. Cloud revocations. It was found that Albany had secured 4,715 signatures, 721 more than necessary. St. Cloud filed 1,196 revocations and Albany reinstated 421 of these, making their petition lack 54 names. The auditor and commissioners are making a recount.

Short Winona Court Calendar.

Winona.—The calendar for the November term of the United States court shows only three cases listed for trial. One is a $30,000 personal injury suit against the Milwaukee company by Albert Olkon, who was hurt near Mendota on Nov. 21, 1911. A fresh trial is to be given the $20,000 damage suit of the Multiscope & Film company vs. the Conley Camers company. The third case is that of A. W. Stinchfield vs. G. W. McWilliams, to collect a promissory note of $2,000.

SAMPLE OF YOST'S BRISTLING ORATORY.

Sincerely
Fielding H. Yost
Fielding H. Yost, Coach of Michigan.

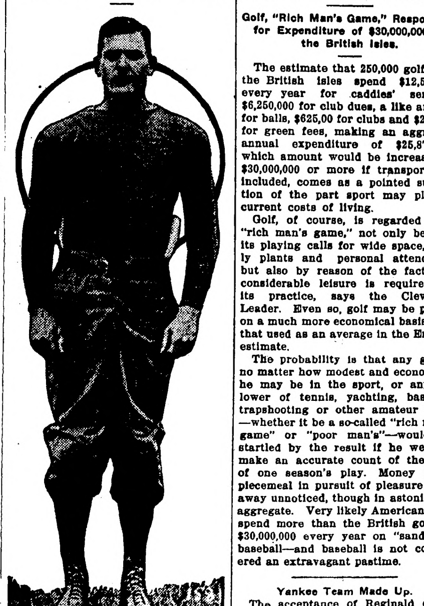
If we were promoting a Chautauqua ensemble of oratory and such, we'd make an attempt to grab the address which Hurry-Up Yost delivered to his conquered Wolverines, says the Detroit Journal.

Just as the tip was spreading, or at least trickling, to the effect that Michigan had her greatest eleven since Heston's day, the Michigan Aggies tear Ann Arbor wide open. But being beaten by the Aggies is nothing to what the Wolverine squad drew when Yost arose to deliver a few brief and impromptu remarks. Uniforms of asbestos would be the only guard against having at least eleven human hides scorched to a dry crisp.

Here's an example, with Yost on the rostrum: "Jenkins, I want to congratulate you on the way you played left end. It was better than anything Niel Snow ever showed. I'm glad you remembered my instructions to always jump to one side when the run swung around your way. If you hadn't, the runner with the ball might have bumped into you and been jolted a bit. And then, too, you might have gotten your handkerchief dusty or broken the crystal of your wrist watch. Stick to that system and never get in the runner's way. When the co-eds get up a bean-bag team you ought to make a good substitute.

"And say, Smith, your work at tackle was great. They only walked through you eighteen out of nineteen starts. I like to see a man jump out of the way of a play, for it shows he is thinking of his family. You're a wonder. As a tackle, you're the best delicatessen clerk that ever sold a pound of cheese."

CAPTAIN OF WEST POINTERS



Captain Hoge of West Point, Who Has the Soldiers in Prime Form and Condition.

Reception to Joe Bush.

With automobile horns, factory whistles, fire bells and all other niose-making devices doing their utmost, with the city streets and station platform blocked by thousands of fans and a band to welcome himl, Leslie (Joe) Bush, Philadelphia Athletic's pitcher, reached his home at Brainerd, Minn., from his world series triumph.

Women Tennis.

Mrs. G. W. Whiteman of Brookline, Mass., defeated Evelyn Sears of Boston in the final tennis play for the Longmont woman's cup at Boston.

Uhlan Will Go to the Stud.

This is to be Uhlan's last year on the turf, the famous race horse going to the stud.

COST OF SPORT IS IMMENSE

Golf, "Rich Man's Game," Responsible for Expenditure of $30,000,000 in the British Isles.

The estimate that 250,000 golfers in the British isles spend $12,500,000 every year for caddies' services, $6,250,000 for club dues, a like amount for balls, $625,00 for clubs and $250,000 for green fees, making an aggregate annual expenditure of $25,875,000, which amount would be increased to $30,000,000 or more if transportation included, comes as a pointed suggestion of the part sport may play in current costs of living.

Golf, of course, is regarded as a "rich man's game," not only because its playing calls for wide space, costly plants and personal attendance, but also by reason of the fact that considerable leisure is required for its practice, says the Cleveland Leader. Even so, golf may be played on a much more economical basis than that used as an average in the English estimate.

The probability is that any golfer, no matter how modest and economical he may be in the sport, or any follower of tennis, yachting, baseball, trapshooting or other amateur game—whether it be a so-called "rich man's game" or "poor man's"—would be startled by the result if he were to make an accurate count of the cost of one season's play. Money spent piecemeal in pursuit of pleasure slips away unnoticed, though in astonishing aggregate. Very likely American boys spend more than the British golfers' $30,000,000 every year on "sand lot" baseball—and baseball is not considered an extravagant pastime.

Yankee Team Made Up.

The acceptance of Reginald Caughey, a Ukiah (Cal.) High school boy of the invitation of the Amateur Athletic union to join the all-American track and field team which will leave San Francisco for the Antipodes on November 12, completes the organization. Caughey is a shot-putter. James Rosenberger of the New York Irish-Americans will be the sprinter on the team; R. R. Templeton of Sanford university will do the hurdles, high jump, broad jump and polo vault, and James Power, the American and Canadian mile champion, will go that distance.

Use for Columbia.

The old cup defender Columbia probably will be requisitioned for a third time as a trial boat for the American cup defender or defenders next year. There is a possibility that Rear Commodore J. P. Morgan may be at its wheel.

Carey, Theft Artist.

Max Carey of Pittsburgh leads the National league in stolen bases and runs scored.

NEW COACHES PROVE BENEFIT

College Conference Football Teams Show Improvement in Game—Three Striking Successes.

The old adage of the cleaning properties of a new broom has been strikingly illustrated thus far in the 1913 football season. With four of the nine conference colleges guided by new coaches and one of the two "big" outsiders in the same position, there have been three striking successes and two ordinary showings. Illinois, Purdue and Notre Dame all have strengthened their coaching departments, while Northwestern and Ohio State do not seem to have suffered in the slightest from the changes made. At Wisconsin, Bill Juneau, who may be classed as a newcomer, is as successful as the men at any of the schools mentioned.

When the season opened Robert C. Zuppke at Illinois, Andy Smith at Purdue, Dennis Grady at Northwestern, Jack Wilce at Ohio and Jesse Harper at Notre Dame were the center of attraction. Each had his admirers and his critics, but all have succeeded beyond the hopes even of their greatest friends.

Even Grady, although his team has been beaten in nearly every contest it has played, can be classed as successful, for Northwestern has learned more football than in several years. The inability of his men to carry out his instructions does not detract from the credit due to the Purple tutor.

Perhaps the most striking success of the year is the work done by "Happy" Andy Smith at Purdue. Smith succeeded in raising a second-rate team into the top ranks and made the Boilermakers contenders for the conference championship for the first time in years. It has been directly due to Smith's work, for the material at his disposal was no better than last season, when the Lafayette team was an easy victim for any high class machine that happened to oppose it.

Results of the World's Series to Date

Year.	Winners.	Games Won.
1884	Providence (N. L.)	3
1885	Chicago (N. L.)	3
1886	St. Louis (A. A.)	4
1887	Detroit (N. L.)	10
1888	New York (N. L.)	10
1889	New York (N. L.)	6
1890	Louisville (N. L.)	3
1892	Boston (N. L.)	5
1894	New York (N. L.)	4
1895	Cleveland (N. L.)	4
1896	Baltimore (N. L.)	4
1897	Baltimore (N. L.)	4
1903	Boston (A. L.)	5
1905	New York (N. L.)	4
1906	Chicago (A. L.)	4
1907	Chicago (N. L.)	4
1908	Chicago (N. L.)	4
1909	Pittsburgh (N. L.)	4
1910	Philadelphia (A. L.)	4
1911	Philadelphia (A. L.)	4
1912	Boston (A. L.)	4
1913	Philadelphia (A. L.)	4

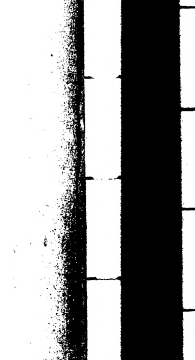
Year.	Losers.	Games Won.
1884	Metropolitans (A. A.)	0
1885	St. Louis (A. A.)	3
1886	Chicago (N. L.)	2
1887	St. Louis (A. A.)	4
1888	St. Louis (A. A.)	4
1889	Brooklyn (A. A.)	3
1890	Brooklyn (A. A.)	3
1892	Cleveland (N. L.)	0
1894	Baltimore (N. L.)	0
1895	Baltimore (N. L.)	1
1896	Cleveland (N. L.)	0
1897	Boston (N. L.)	1
1903	Pittsburgh (N. L.)	3
1905	Philadelphia (A. L.)	1
1906	Chicago (N. L.)	2
1907	Detroit (A. L.)	0
1908	Detroit (A. L.)	1
1909	Detroit (A. L.)	3
1910	Chicago (N. L.)	1
1911	New York (N. L.)	2
1912	New York (N. L.)	3
1913	New York (N. L.)	1

No series 1891, 1893, 1898 to 1902, 1904. From 1884 to 1890 National League versus American Association. 1894 to 1897, Temple Cup series.

Boston to Enlarge Grounds.

The Boston Nationals have bought more space near their park and are going to have the grounds enlarged. They are going to have a longer left field foul line and a much longer right field foul line.

KEELER OF WISCONSIN.



One of the Most Clever Players on the Badger Team. Keeler's Regular Position Is at Right Guard.

Matty in Checker Game.

Fielder Jones wants to play Christy Mathewson a series of games of checkers for the championship. Matty claims the title and Jones disputes it.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Notice For Publication.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olof Kristofferson Viken, of Germantown, Minn., who, on April 8, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07664, for SE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn, on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 12, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Clyde C. Groner, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on Sept. 6, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05585, for SE¼ Section 11, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn., on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tollefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Building A House

With the best of lumber is really the cheapest. The use of green or low grade lumber means a lot of waste. Seasoned lumber of high grade can always be had here. You don't have to be an expert to get it either. You get a square deal if you never saw a board in your life before.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model [illegible], is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; its solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the [illegible] breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, [illegible].

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Notice for Publication

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Gunder Thompson Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., who, on Nov. 18, 1911 made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06875, for Lots 1, 2, S 1-2 NE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olof K. Viken, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9993, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 20, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Thomas Knudtsen Sten, of Holt, Minn., who, on Oct. 18, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05688, SW¼ SW¼ Sec. 28, E½ SE¼, SW¼ SE¼ Section 29, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole B. Johnson, Ole O. Garthus, Emil Ostlund, Nels Lysne, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, of Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06964, for NW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Knutson, Carl Sormo, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fosen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
October 25, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that George Charlson of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on June 28th, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06350, for SE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make commutation proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 5th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christifferson, Gunder Sannes, Charlie Charlson, Andrew Charlson, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Citation for Hearing on Petition for Determination of Descent of Land.

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall, In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of Anders S. Gutterud, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Julia Isabelle Gutterud, Carl Nikolai Gutterud, Alma Christine Gutterud, Ida Josette Gutterud, Oscar Elvin Gutterud, Thea Elisa Gutterud, Arthur Gutterud, and Christi Gutterud, and all persons interested in the determination of the descent of the real estate of said decedent:

The petition of Christi Gutterud having been filed in this Court, representing that said decedent died more than five years prior to the filing thereof, leaving certain real estate in said petition described, and that no will of decedent has been proved, nor administration of his estate granted in this state, and praying that the descent of said real estate be determined by this Court.

Therefore You and Each of You, Are hereby cited and required to show cause if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Room in the city of Warren, in the County of Marshall, state of Minnesota, on the 28th day of November, 1913 at 10 o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal thereof, this 24th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM
Probate Judge.

H. O. KJOMME.
Attorney for Petitioner,
Thief River Falls, Minn. (63in14)

Fitted For It.

"Mrs. Meddle makes much trouble in this town." "Yes; she has such a fine sense of rumor!"—Life.

A Neat Frame-up

The fall term of District Court will convene at Warren on Monday and, according to gossip here, the grand jury will be asked to do some investigating of people in Holt. According to information at hand a couple of affidavits have been secured to be used in securing an indictment of one special person.

Why affidavits? Why not take the witnesses who could furnish a higher grade of evidence? Here's our guess, watch how the deal turns out.

We figure that the grand jury will be asked to return an indictment on affidavits, because the jurors are sworn to secrecy and the names of those making the affidavits can be kept secret. If the indictment can be secured on this kind of evidence, the sheriff will be sent here to make an imposing arrest. Then the parties who are trying to have the indictment returned will try and bring "influence" to bear to have the indictment quashed so that no trial may be had, and the victim thus be given no chance to clear away the smirch on his character created by the indictment and arrest, and he will have no other redress because the proceedings had before the grand jury are secret, as we have stated, and such affidavits used there could not be secured by the accused afterwards. The County Attorney and Sheriff have not been taken into full confidence of the schemers; the parts they play will be in good faith as public officials. After the arrest, of course, they are not expected to say or do anything that would indicate that they had been made tools of.

Affidavits are evidence, not conclusive of course, as they are sometimes secured by misrepresentation or fraud, but they are often used to make some showing in weak cases. By the affidavit plan names of the affiants and the parties behind them can be kept from the public, but if a fair trial was to be had, the parties could not keep under cover, but would have to appear in court for examination and cross-examination. The secret could not be kept secret.

If a crime has been commited we want to see the criminal punished; but he should be given a full, fair and square deal. If a man is to be indicted by a grand jury, the County Attorney should see that evidence submitted should be only the best and sufficient to convict on trial.

The grand jury should do its duty and criminals should be punished.

HOW HE SAVED THE COIN.

Speaking of mail matters the other evening, Daniel C. Roper, the new first assistant postmaster general, told of the mistake little Willie recently made in his eagerness to have money for his mother.

Having a letter that she wished mailed, mother gave Willie two cents, telling him to buy a stamp at the drug store and place the envelope in the mail box on the corner. It was an hour later when Willie returned.

"Didn't you mail my letter, Willie?" was mother's first question.

"Yes, mother," was the proud response of Willie. "And here's yer two cents."

"Two cents!" cried mother wonderingly. "How in the world did you mail it without money?"

"That's an easy one," smiled Willie. "I sneaked it in the box when nobody was lookin'."

NOBODY TO HEAR IT.

"I see that a western judge has decided that a tenant can make as much noise in his flat as he likes."

"Going to take advantage of it?"

"What's the use? All the suites around ours are empty."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

AS TO MESSES.

Newcome—We had a fine mess of fish for dinner, last night.

Subley—I haven't the slightest doubt, old man—your cook once worked for us!—Puck.

TYPICAL.

"What an open countenance that woman has."

"Yes, and there's a part of it that never shuts up."

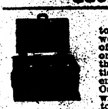
Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

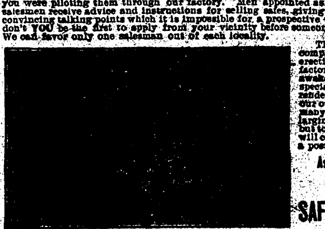
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day



Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 26th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 16 T.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.

Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

SOMEONE IN MINNESOTA
(North of the Minnesota River)
Is Going To Be Given This
HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTORCYCLE and a Lot of Money

YOU may be the one to GET IT

There is no question as to the value and usefulness of the Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the value of a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle. There is no question as to the squareness and fair dealing of the Farm, Stock and Home Co. who is making this offer.

Fill Out This Coupon Today.

Get full particulars of this offer. Learn about the liberal cash commissions you can earn in addition to the motor cycle.
A good hustler can make from $5.00 to $10.00 a day.
Do not wait a minute before filling out this coupon.
It will give you a credit of 10,000 points toward the Harley Davidson Motor Cycle.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
829 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.
Gentlemen:—Please send me full particulars of how I can get a Harley-Davidson Motor Cycle and make from $5.00 to $10.00 a day.

Name.....
Post Office.....
Rural Route..... State.....

This coupon counts for 10,000 points. Additional coupons from same individual will not count anything.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1913 NO. 18

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.
We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.26
Wheat	.75
Barley	.35
Oats	.28
Rye	.40
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Dec. 8 & 9. See his "ad."

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Few people have any respect for a man who has not the courage to do right and tell the truth.

For anything in the Drug line, go to Bjerkbøel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

A marriage license was issued a few days ago to Ole Saastad and Jennie Benson. We have not been informed concerning the wedding.

When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sod in Hot
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

FREE

One Year's Subscription to the great farm paper, "Farm, Stock and Home," will be given to anyone paying a year's subscription to The Northern Light BEFORE NOVEMBER 30th

The New Electric Line

We have before us a map showing the proposed location of the new railroad lines to be installed by the Minnesota Northwestern Electric Railway Company.

Thief River Falls is the central point from which the system radiates. The main line, on which construction has already been commenced, follows the section line due east for about twenty miles and then runs northeast for a long distance by way of Grygla and Malcolm. Another line runs east to the north shore of Upper Red Lake, and one south through Pennington and into eastern Polk county by way of Highlanding. Then another branch leaves the main line about 10 miles east of Thief River Falls and runs north and east through Grand Plain and Mud Lake townships to Gatzke and the Moose River country. The very evident benefits to be derived from the construction of the system show the wisdom of the promoters, and are clearly sufficient to indicate that the undertaking is in every way bona fide and reliable.

Let's take a square look at the proposition.

The incorporators and officers of the company are well known reliable parties. The president, Daniel Shaw of Thief River Falls, is known personally to practically every [illegible] in the country served, and his record for square dealing and progressiveness is unsurpassed. No man knows better the general character and wonderful resources of the country to be traversed and developed by the electric railway [illegible] putting [illegible] and his time into the project, seems to us a sufficient guarantee of the genuineness and good faith of the project.

Dr. Brandenburg, vice-president, is a heavy owner of real estate in eastern Marshall Country, among other tracts being a section of land just south of Holt. He has had considerable experience in the electric railway business and well knows the benefits to the community from the establishment of this system, to say nothing of the benefits to the lands which he owns.

Mr. Protzeller, general manager, hails from St. Paul. He has been in this line of business for many years. His associates and the community are fortunate in getting him into the company, as his actual practical experience insures thoroughness and efficiency in the installation of the service.

Thief River Falls is already an important railroad center. It has the natural location to be such and enough progressive citizens to insure its continued growth and prosperity. The neighboring towns have no reason to be jealous. Thief River Falls is bound to grow according to the development of the country surrounding it and as it grows its power of consuming farm products must grow so that every farm in touch with the railroads centering in that city simply has to be benefited and increased in value accordingly. That result is obvious and admits of no argument, and, as we see it, every farmer in the territory to be benefited should promptly become a good booster for the electric railway project. The fact that it centers in a city like Thief River Falls, instead of a smaller town, merely means that the development and advance in values of lands will be hastened.

This article is not an advertisement. We don't get a cent for it. We have taken our time to study up the situation and get an understanding of the project. The Northern Light is here to boost for its home territory, and we are sincere in the belief that this railway project will be of the greatest good to the territory we serve. We are satisfied that the benefits can be greatly hastened if the people generally will come forward and join hands with the promoters in pushing the establishment of the new railroad. Work of actual construction has been commenced, and even part of the necessary rolling stock has been ordered. The evidence is all in favor of the project. Then why should the public withold their support, when they can so easily help themselves to quicker benefits?

In District Court

District Court convened at Warren on Monday. The grand jury got busy at once, while the petit jury was excused until January 12th. Only one indictment was returned by the grand jury and that was against Frank Stanley, who is confined in the county jail on a charge of grand larceny.

The first civil case to be tried was the divorce suit between Lars Hellesylt and wife, and this was taken under advisement by Judge Grindeland. Several other civil cases from this part of the County are on the calendar and some of them are set for next week.

Andrew Bjerk made a business trip to Thief River Falls Tuesday.

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (ad-tf)

Albert Mattison got his feed mill started working a week ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Ellingson were [illegible] Gatzke Wednesday and returned [illegible].

The Ladies Aid will meet with Mrs. S. S. Kolden next Wednesday. Everybody welcome.

T. A. Tobiason, Julius Olson and Bert Terwilliger attended court at Warren on Tuesday.

Find Huseth's place and you'll find the best values in candies, cigars and soft drinks.

E. A. Eastman arrived today from Portland N. D. to spend a few days visiting with A. C. Jahr

G. K. Westboe arrived from Elbow Lake on Wednesday for a visit with his daughter, Mrs. A. J. Nelson

Dick Mattison returned home to McIntosh Wednesday after several days visiting with his brother Albert

WANTED—Some good farmer to deliver good butter and eggs at this office. Will pay highest market prices, cash.

S. S. Kolden went to Crookston Tuesnay on a business mission. His son Peter, who is attending high school there, returned with him next day to spend Thanksgiving at home.

B. L. Backe and Chas. W. Latta spent Tuesday at the county seat. Mr. Backe went on to Grand Forks and drove home a new Buick auto on Wednesday.

At the Alkenbrack home on Wednesday evening a reception was given in honor of John Alkenbrack and his bride of a week. There was a large number of guests in attendance and a most enjoyable evening was spent by all.

At Thief River Falls on Wednesday occurred the wedding of Albert Hagen and Ida Heinze. They came up yesterday for a visit with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Heinze, and are receiving best wishes of a host of friends.

The gang weakened after their little game was exposed last week in these columns, and they put in no appearance before the grand jury. This simply shows that their talk and threatening of the past few months were merely founded on falsehood.

The Man Who Signs The Checks

Wants to know that the money to pay them will be ready when they are presented. Our methods are safe and conservative. The lure of large profits does not induce us to loan on or invest in doubtful securities. If you want to feel that your money is safe, we solicit your account.

Holt State Bank
General Banking & Insurance. Lowest Rates on Farm Loans

DR. J. T. TURLEY,
DENTIST,
Will be in Holt Monday p.m. & Tuesday a.m., Dec 8-9
Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS $1.00 | GOLD CROWN $5 & $6
TREATMENTS 1.50 | PORCELAIN CROWN 5.00
PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with [illegible] you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

HUSETH'S
New Confectionery and Cigar Emporium
Supplies the finest Candies, Cigars and Soft Drinks
In my Barber Shop you can get your whiskers trimmed in the popular Van Dyke, Pompadour or Storm Door styles. Call on me, anyway.
AL. HUSETH' Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

MEXICAN REPORTS VERY CONFLICTING

LITTLE DEFINITE CAN BE TOLD FROM DISPATCHES BEING RECEIVED.

VARIOUS INTERPRETATIONS

Mexican Papers Express Opinion That U. S. Will Recognize Provisional President—Huerta Reported Intemperate.

El Paso, Texas, Nov. 25.—General Francisco Villa has just departed from Juarez on a special train to join his troops, which are below Tierra Blanca, 26 miles south of Juarez and will, on arrival, give the order for the march against the federals under Generals Salazer, Carvareo, Rojas and Landa, which is at Samalayuca, six miles south of the rebel positions.

Battle Upon Arrival.

The rebel commander stated to reporters that he expects battle between his troops and the federals will begin soon after his arrival.

On the train which carries General Villa and his staff to the front there are ten cars loaded with provisions and supplies for the rebel soldiers and horses and several thousand rounds of ammunition.

British Ship to Mexico.

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 25.—The British gunboat Shearwater left Esquimault harbor for Mexican waters where, with the British sloop of war Algerine, she will be able to give protection to British subjects.

Huerta Sees a Bull Fight.

Mexico City, Nov. 24. — General Huerta attended the bull fight Sunday. Accompanied by only two members of his staff, but guarded by a score of detectives, the president entered the bull ring, where 20,000 persons had gathered to see Gaona, Mexico's greatest matador, inaugurate the season.

Mexico City, Nov. 24.—Mexican newspapers under government domination published on their front pages long articles declaring it the intention of the United States government to recognize Provisional President Huerta in the near future.

Foundation for Reports.

The foundation for this optimism appears to be cablegrams received here by foreign business men describing the horror felt by President Wilson at the killing of federal prisoners when the rebels took Juarez. These cablegrams were at first erroneously translated as referring to the killing of American army men there.

Huerta Reported Intemperate.

Vera Cruz.—An explanation of the complacency of President Wilson and the American state department in connection with the Mexican situation was furnished here by an authority that could not be questioned. It is simply that for several weeks Huerta has been drinking heavily. On a number of occasions he has, according to reports made to Washington, been entirely irresponsible.

Federals Near Juarez.

El Paso, Texas, Nov. 24.—Federals are within thirty-two miles of Juarez, according to the rebels now holding the border Mexican town, and Pancho Villa and 1,000 men have gone out to meet and fight them.

CAVALRY MARCHES ON REDS

General Scott and Four Troops on Way to Quell Indian Uprising.

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 24.—Traveling in two special trains, four troops of the Twelfth U. S. cavalry, accompanied by a detachment of the hospital corps and a commissary wagon train, detrained at Gallup and will march 100 miles overland to Shiprock agency, on the Navajo reservation, to quell an incipient uprising among the Indians there.

The troops are equipped to spend the entire winter on the reservation if necessary. It is believed, however, that peace will quickly be restored on the arrival of the cavalry.

General Hugh L. Scott, ordered to the reservation by the war department, was joined at Gallup by Deputy United States Marshal J. R. Galusha, and the two went overland by automobile to Shiprock, where General Scott will confer with Agent W. T. Shelton and map out a campaign for subduing the renegade band of Navajos encamped on Beautiful mountain.

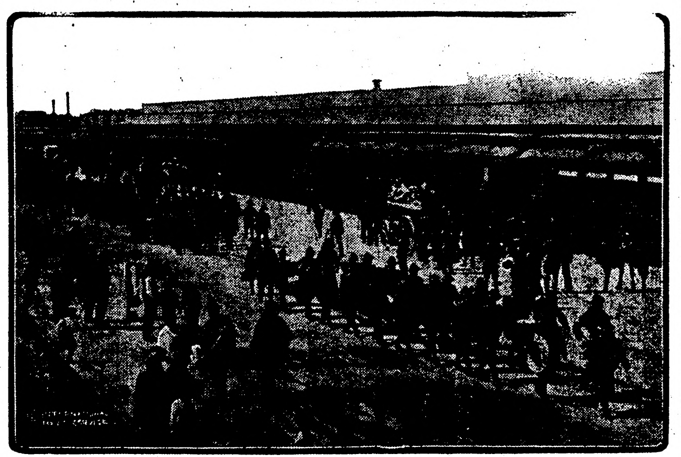
Invests $1,696,000 in Stamps.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The postmaster at Philadelphia is taking no chances of running short of postage stamps for Christmas business. He has ordered 90,230,000 stamps, valued at $1,696,000, the largest single order ever made by a postmaster.

Make-Believe Bomb Hits Warship.

San Francisco, Nov. 24.—As the United States cruiser South Dakota steamed in through the Golden Gate, Christofferson, in a bi-plane, swept over the warship and dropped a sand "bomb" that struck the vessel squarely amidship. This was a feature of an aviation meet at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition grounds that was not on the program. It happened that the cruiser entered the bay at the time the aviators were preparing to take part in a bomb dropping contest at a target in the water.

AMERICAN TROOPS ARRIVING AT MEXICAN BORDER



Owing to the critical state of the relations between our government and General Huerta, many additional American troops have been hurried to the towns along the Mexican border. The photograph shows the arrival of one regiment.

MORE PHONE MERGER NEWS

TESTIMONY IN GOVERNMENT SUIT SHOWS MOTIVES.

Cheaper Service Said to Have Been Secondary to Greater Economy of Management.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—Further information on the activities in 1912 of the American Telephone and Telegraph company to absorb 20,000 independent concerns was given by B. G. Hubbell, of Buffalo, government witness in a hearing in connection with the prosecution of the American company for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

In the cross examination of Mr. Hubbell, who is president of the Federal Telephone and Telegraph company, counsel sought to show that the proposed consolidation was for the purpose of saving expense and would result in lowering the cost of service to the public. Mr. Hubbell thought the motive of the American company was to eliminate costly competition.

The witness also told of an effort by the American company to obtain control of the Stromberg-Carlson company of Rochester, N. Y., said to be the second largest manufacturer of telephone supplies in the country. Mr. Hubbell said if the negotiations had been successful the independents expected to pay more for their supplies.

Mr. Hubbell said there was no objection among the independents when Theodore N. Vail suggested a plan for a division of territory, the plan ultimately to result in consolidation.

"If Mr. Vail had submitted anything unfair or unlawful, or what you would have considered contrary to the interests of the public would you have gone farther with the proposition?"

"I thought he was acting in good faith," Mr. Hubbell replied. "I think he did not present anything dishonest, but I did think what he suggested was unfair and unlawful."

Mr. Hubbell said the independents went ahead with the plan because it had many good features and he thought a more fair adjustment of matters for the public might be worked out.

The witness was asked if the plan had not been to effect a saving in operating the telephone system of the nation.

"partly," he said. "But lack of the idea I think there was no particular intention of reducing the telephone cost to the public. There was no discussion of cheapening service to the public. In a word, Mr. Vail's point was that competition in some districts was too severe, and he was desirous of eliminating that competition."

Wedding Party Entertained.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The president and Mrs. Wilson entertained at dinner at the White House in honor of their daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson, and Francis B. Sayre, who are to be married Tuesday. It was the first White House function given for the young people.

Senator Stephenson Is Sued.

Washington, Nov. 24. — Senator Isaac Stephenson of Wisconsin has been sued for $49,000 in the district court here by Rodney Sackett, a former executive clerk of the senate, who alleges Stephenson employed him to settle claims arising from his campaign of 1908.

Lilac Buds Bursting in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—Balmy weather accompanied by a southwest wind which reached a velocity of 40 miles an hour, continues in the lake region. The thermometer here registered 72, the warmest the weather has ever been at this time of year. Lilac buds are bursting. The highest temperature reported in the central division of the weather bureau was at Springfield, Ill., where it was 76. It was 70 at Milwaukee, 60 at Kansas City and 62 at Omaha.

REPUBLICANS WILL BE 1916 OPPONENTS

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN SEES PROGRESSIVE ABSORPTION.

OLD PARTIES WILL SURVIVE

McCombs Calls on President and Again Declares He Does Not Want Office but Will Continue Active.

Washington, Nov. 24.—William F. McCombs, chairman of the Democratic national committee, after a conference with President Wilson, announced that he believed the Republican party would be the chief contender with the Democratic party for the presidency in 1916.

Source of Conviction.

"The recent elections," said Mr. McCombs, "have served to strengthen a conviction I have had since the last national election, that much of the Progressive party would be absorbed either by the Democratic or Republican parties, and that the next national political conflict would find the Republican party the principal opponent of the Democracy."

Mr. McCombs and the president discussed the general political situation for more than an hour, but the New York situation, the national chairman said, was not brought up in any way. Before calling on the president, Mr. McCombs conferred with Mr. Doremus of Michigan, chairman of the national campaign committee, regarding plans for more co-operation between the congressional and national committees.

Mr. McCombs reiterated his oft-repeated declaration that he sought no public office and that he would not be the ambassador to France.

"I expect to be as active in politics as will be consistent with my business affairs," he said.

Later, the national chairman talked with Attorney General McReynolds and met other members of the cabinet. He will go to New York but will return to Washington for the White House wedding.

Panama Canal Annual Report.

Washington, Nov. 24.—The annual report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, compiled by Colonel Goethals, chairman and chief engineer, was made public today. Having been written previous to the blowing up of the Gamboa dike, it contains little of general public interest that was not printed at the time of that event. In closing the colonel says the passage of commercial vessels through the canal is dependent upon the time when proper channels can be dredged through the slides.

Makes Meal of Meal Checks.

Montclair, N. J., Nov. 22.—When Thomas Canley stepped up to the cashier's desk in the Brunner restaurant, on Bloomfield avenue, the young woman in charge took his money and check and turned to the cash register. She gave a scream as a mouse popped out of the drawer on to Canley's arm and leaped to the floor. The mouse had been in the cash register for some time and had destroyed a large number of checks.

Judge Denounces Pardon System.

Pontiac, Mich., Nov. 22.—Ralph E. Jossman, former cashier of the E. Jossman State bank of Clarkston, was sentenced to serve from seven to twenty years in state prison. He misappropriated more than $100,000 of the bank's money. The bank is in charge of a receiver. In sentencing Jossman the court told him not to worry, as no Michigan prison could hold a convicted banker for long, and went on to denounce the granting of pardons in the past.

FREIGHT RATE HEARING BEGINS

INTERSTATE BOARD CONSIDERS PLAN FOR FREIGHT INCREASE.

Railroads East of Mississippi Ask for Five Per Cent Raise in Rates.

Washington, Nov. 25.—The interstate commerce commission has just begun a hearing which probably will extend over several months on the proposed freight rate increases of approximately five per cent filed Oct. 15, last, by railroads in the territory east of the Mississippi river and north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers.

Although only the railroads in the classification territory included within the boundaries specified are directly involved in the hearing, actually every railroad in the country is concerned. Should the commission permit the roads applying to increase rates, the same authority might be extended to other carriers to increase rates on all classes of freight on an average of 5 per cent.

The railroads asked two years ago for an increase of about 10 per cent. After an inquiry of several months, the commission refused the request. When the tariffs providing for the present proposed increases were filed, to become effective Nov. 15, they were suspended by the commission, pending investigation until March 12, 1914.

In May, 1913, the railroads involved filed a petition for a rehearing of the former freight rate case, and the commission on June 21, last, issued an order directing that inquiry be instituted as to whether the present rates of transportation yield adequate revenues to common carriers by railroads operating in official classification territory and if not, what general course carriers might pursue to meet the situation. It was ordered that opportunity be afforded to interested carriers and the public generally to present facts and arguments, as they might desire.

MURDER MYSTERY SUSPECTED

Chicago, Nov. 24.—Workmen unloading lumber from a car at Aurora found a woman's bloodstained underskirt, a school reader, with the inscription "Elsie Helba Day, Springfield, Oregon," and an empty revolver. Blood was spattered about the car. The school book also bore the name Dr. H. A. Day, Colville, Wash.

The car was shipped from South Bend, Wash., Sept. 25. It passed through Springfield, Ore., a day or two later. The Aurora police telegraphed the chief of police of Colville Wash., and Springfield, Ore.

Charged With Chalking Sidewalk.

Washington, Nov. 22.—A policeman in plain clothes called at the national suffragette headquarters and introduced himself to Miss Lucy Burns. They shook hands and the officer politely invited the suffrage leader to appear in police court to answer a charge of violating a district ordinance by chalking the sidewalk in front of the White House to advertise a woman suffrage meeting. Miss Burns smilingly promised to be there.

Labor Host Leaves Coast.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 24.—Desire to be home for Thanksgiving dinner has caused most of the American Federation of Labor delegates to leave Seattle.

Installment Plan for Bonds.

Chicago, Nov. 22.—The attempt of the city controller to dispose of $1,000,000 in municipal bonds "over the counter" not having met with conspicuous success, the installment plan of selling has been adopted. Ten dollars down and the balance in sixty days is the new method of salesmanship. In the past week, during which the sale has been in progress, only $86,000 worth of bonds have been sold, but by the new method the controller hopes for better success.

LABOR FEDERATION TO TRUST WILSON

A. F. OF L. CONVENTION REFUSES TO CONDEMN ARMED INTERVENTION.

STEP MIGHT BE JUSTIFIABLE

Leaders Argue That at Times War May Be Necessary and There is No Desire On Their Part Hamper President.

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 24.—The American Federation of Labor refused to adopt a resolution condemning armed intervention in Mexico, on the ground that such intervention might be justifiable and desirable. The convention unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolution Adopted.

"The American Federation of Labor condemns attempts being made by American and foreign corporations and certain jingo newspapers to force armed intervention by the United States government in Mexico and urges upon the president of the United States the continuance of a policy looking to a peaceful adjustment of the conflict among the Mexican people, and that the president and secretary of the American Federation of Labor be instructed to transmit the position of the federation upon that matter to the president of the United States."

John Mitchell begged the convention not to hamper President Wilson. While he was a peace advocate, he believed there were conditions that sometimes justified war within a nation and between nations.

Subject Much Discussed.

President Gompers said the subject had taken much time of the executive council, which had listened to representations of both Mexican factions and had received much correspondence on the subject.

"President Wilson has approached this subject in a statesmanlike way," Mr. Gompers said. "We ought to strengthen his hands in trying to find a peaceful solution of the problem; but I think we ought not to enable Huerta to say organized labor will not permit intervention and that he may go on with his bloody record."

All the other speakers denounced Huerta and praised Madero. Some said intervention by the United States would never be necessary; that the insurgents would win if given a chance. All the speakers thought the trouble in Mexico could not be settled until the land problem was solved.

Convention Favors Peace.

The question was brought up after the convention had adopted a strong declaration in favor of international peace, in part as follows:

"It is not lack of love of country which prompts the toilers to protest against international fratricide, but they are unwilling to be exploited or killed for the promotion of private or selfish ends.

"The constantly growing system of the international acceptance and recognition of trade union cards is another influence that is quietly and surely creating a fraternal spirit among workers of all lands.

"Labor organizations the world over have committed themselves to the policy of international peace—peace with justice and honor in international politics, as well as industry."

PARIS CLOCK TICKS HEARD

Transmitted by Radio Signals From Eiffel Tower to Station in This Country.

Washington, Nov. 24.—Three weeks of patient experimentation culminated in success when the United States naval observatory here heard the beats of the Paris observatory clock as transmitted by radio signals from the Eiffel tower to the great naval radio station at Arlington. The "beats" were compared with those of the Washington clock for some minutes by the method of "coincidence."

The American and French commissioners who are conducting these experiments to determine the difference in longitude between Paris and Washington and the velocity of propagation of radio signals through space, were greatly encouraged by their success. They announced that the season of the year when atmospheric conditions are best for work is now coming on and that their work will proceed as planned.

Road Will Reorganize.

Boston, Nov. 24.—Reorganization of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company to meet the requirements of the Sherman anti-trust law was discussed by the directors of the road at their monthly meeting.

Needed British Warships.

London, Nov. 24.—Lord Cowdray who has large oil, railway and other concessions in Mexico, said in an interview that he had learned with great interest from the newspapers that a British warship had been ordered to the Puerto, Mexico, terminus of Tehauntepec railway, which he owns, because that line is running. The Mexican government lines which join it have been cut and therefore several thousands of employes for whom he is responsible could only be aided by a warship.

SPECIAL SESSION IS NEARING CLOSE

WILL MERGE WITH REGULAR CONGRESS EARLY NEXT WEEK.

MONEY BILL DEBATES BEGIN

Only Brief Consideration of Currency Measure Expected This Year, However—Vacation Planned.

Washington, Nov. 25.—One of the most remarkable and longest special sessions of the American congress on record promises to merge into the regular session next week with scarcely a ripple of special interest in Washington.

Plans of President.

There has been a re-arranging of plans on the part of President Wilson and the congressional leaders since it became apparent that consideration of the currency bill would continue into the regular session, and the promised activities along new lines, such as anti-trust and railroad legislation, probably will not manifest themselves until early next year.

Congress already is looking forward to its first chance in a long time to get a recess from work. The currency debate just opened in the senate and all of the legislative work that comes with a new regular session will be laid aside Dec. 20, for a full two weeks' vacation, the first since the extra session began last April. President Wilson's determination to drop official duties during that period will insure a complete cessation of work at the capitol.

Currency to Come First.

Details of the anti-trust program, and the steps to be taken to strengthen the laws controlling railroads and railroad rates, will not be pressed until after the success of the currency bill has become assured. President Wilson's chief advisers in the senate are confident that a compromise will be reached in that body insuring support of a currency bill that can be accepted by the house and by the president.

The long special session which will close at noon next Monday, has accomplished the passage of but one big piece of legislation, the tariff revision bill. The thorough consideration that has been given to currency reform, however, and the scope of the "educational campaign" waged in behalf of the American bill has made the Democratic leaders hopeful that the currency bill can be passed in January, after a few weeks of open discussion.

The public debate which opened with Senator Owen's speech, will continue but three days this week; and will be interrupted the following week for consideration of the Hetch-Hetchy bill and later for the Christmas recess. When the consideration of currency legislation is resumed January 5, it is the plan of Democratic leaders to bring the senate as rapidly as possible to a decision upon the vital principles at issue between the various factions.

Anti-Trust Law.

The president's keen interest in the next enactment of new anti-trust legislation has manifested itself through his conferences recently with house and senate lawyers who have made a special study of the Sherman law and its limitations. He has not gone to the length of attempting to discuss definite legislative plans, however, and it is understood by leaders of both houses that the work during the early weeks of the new session is to be of a preliminary character, designed to bring congress and the president to an understanding of what is needed.

The annual appropriation bills, which will hold much of the attention of congress after the regular session begins, are now in course of preparation.

RULES FOR A LONG LIFE.

Hetty Green Gives Her Recipe on 78th Birthday.

New York, Nov. 24.—"Eat onions and don't worry." That is the recipe for health and longevity handed out by Mrs. Hetty Green, millionaire woman financier, on her seventy-eighth birthday. "If more people ate onions, there would be less sickness," she said. Asked what other rules she observed to be so young looking and active at 78, the famous woman said:

"Have a clear conscience. Fear God. Do justice to everybody. Avoid intoxicants and do not force food on yourself. Get 100 cents worth out of every dollar you spend."

Alberta Town Loss $130,000.

Pincher Creek, Alta., Nov. 25.—Fire which started in the Hudson Bay company's store here gutted that structure and nearly wiped out the business section of the town with a total loss of $130,000, which is said to be covered by insurance.

Unknown Hunter Wounds Child.

Floodwood, Minn., Nov. 25.—While playing near his home, Harold Hintsa, the 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hintsa was shot and seriously wounded by an unknown hunter.

THREE WOMEN TESTIFY

To the Merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during Change of Life.

Streator, Ill.—"I shall always praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound wherever I go. It has done me so much good at Change of Life, and it has also helped my daughter. It is one of the grandest medicines for women that can be bought. I shall try to induce others to try it."—Mrs. J. H. CAMPBELL, 206 N. Second St., W. S., Streator, Illinois.

Philadelphia, Pa. —"It was at the 'Change of Life' that I turned to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, using it as a tonic to build up my system, with beneficial results."—Mrs. SARA HAYWARD, 1825 W. Venango St., (Tioga) Phila., Pa.

San Francisco, Cal.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for many years whenever I would feel bad. I have gone through the Change of Life without any troubles and thank the Compound for it. I recommend it to young girls and to women of all ages."—Mrs. C. BARRIE, 3052 25th St., San Francisco, Cal.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalelled.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Fargo Directory

Fargo Tannery

Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

TRUTH FROM YOUTHFUL LIPS

Not Exactly the Answer Spinster Expected, but It Came From the Heart.

A middle-aged spinster who lived in the suburbs had a fine orchard. She likewise had a heap of trouble with a lot of youngsters, who looked on the orchard as something placed there for their especial benefit.

Finally the spinster decided that she could do more with kindness than with a fence rail, so she prepared a feast of apples and other dainties and invited every small boy in the burg to join the jubilee.

"Now, tell me, boys," said the hostess at the conclusion of the feast, "would the apples you have just eaten tasted so good had you stolen them?"

"No, ma'am," answered little Willie Smith, with surprising frankness.

"I am certainly glad to hear you say that, little man," responded the spinster, with a glow of pleasure. "Why wouldn't they have tasted so good?"

"Because," came the equally frank reply of Willie, "we wouldn't have had no ice cream and cake with them."

Cautious Porter.

"So you gave up your job at the depot?"

"Yes, suh. I ain' liftin' no mo' suit cases. When dem militant suffragettes is so busy dar ain' no tellin' which of 'em is kerryin' wardrobe an' which is kerryin' dynamite."

What are Post Toasties?

Thin wafery bits of choice Indian Corn—perfectly cooked; delicately flavoured; then toasted to an appetizing golden brown, and packed in tightly sealed packages without being touched by hand.

"Toasties" are for breakfast or any other meal—served direct from package with cream or milk, and a sprinkling of sugar.

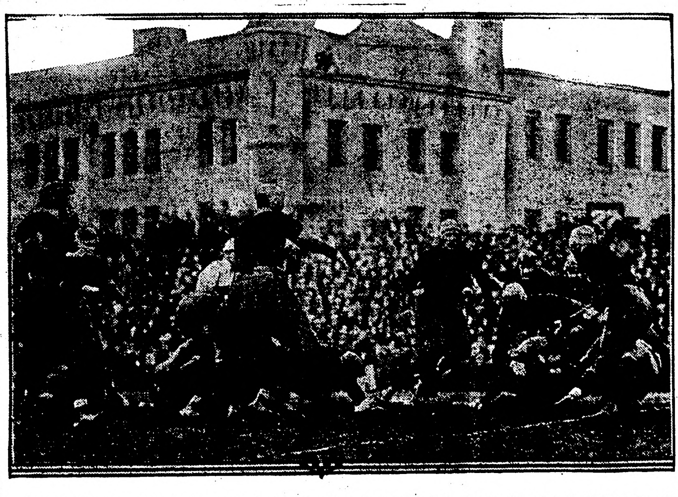
Post Toasties are convenient, save a lot of time and please the palate immensely!

But after all, a trial is the best answer.

Grocers everywhere sell

Post Toasties

EXCITING MOMENT AT THE MINNESOTA-CHICAGO FOOTBALL GAME.



The above snapshot shows one of the exciting plays that thrilled the twenty thousand spectators who witnessed the annual gridiron struggle between the University of Minnesota and the University of Chicago, at Minneapolis recently. Shaugnessy, of the Gopher eleven, has the ball and is being downed by several Chicago men. The final score was 13 to 7, in favor of Chicago, and the outcome of the struggle practically decided the conference championship.

FARMER IS CLEVERLY DUPED

CATTLE SWINDLE NETS CROOKS JUST $3,000 CLEAR.

One Man Sells Herd He Does Not Own—Confederate Buys Same Stock.

Crookston.—Ole Nelson of Mapleton, North Dakota, has purchased fifty-five head of cattle from one man for $3,000 and sold them to another man for $4,000, receiving a check on a Euclid, Minn., bank.

Nelson finds now that he had purchased cattle that the first seller did not own, and that he had sold cattle to the first man's confederate, with the result that instead of being $1,000 ahead he is out just $3,000, and two clever crooks are missing.

Nelson fell in with the first man while considering a purchase of cattle. The man showed Nelson a fine herd in a Crookston corrall, owned by Walker Bros., local meat dealers. While Nelson was considering the matter, the second swindler approached with an offer of $4,000 for the cattle, stating that he understood he had purchased them.

Then Nelson lost no time in clinching both deals. He received a $4,000 check from the second man, who gave his name as Fred L. Tanner, being assured by the Euclid bank cashier, as he supposed, that Tanner had $8,000 on deposit there. In reality, Nelson had talked with Tanner's confederate over the telephone instead of to the Euclid banker.

When Nelson deposited the $4,000 check in the Cass County National bank in Casselton, inquiry was made at Euclid, with the result that the swindle was uncovered.

TO FINISH GATES' MANSION

Was Feared That Death of Young Millionaire Would Stop Work.

Minneapolis.—The Charles G. Gates' mansion, in course of construction on Lake of the Isles boulevard, is to be completed and will be the future home of the widow of the millionaire.

This is practically assured by reports given young Mrs. Gates by representatives who came from the East to inspect the structure, estimate the cost of completion, and its probable cost of upkeep.

Contractors have been given orders to proceed with the work so that the magnificent dwelling on the lake shore may withstand the winter months without damage and so that it may be completed next year.

The city wants the home completed as just one more addition to the many beauty spots in Minneapolis, and great fear was expressed when Mr. Gates died that it never would be completed.

Warden Arrests Own Son.

St. Paul.—C. V. Smith, game warden at Balsam, Minn., reported to the state game and fish commission that he had arrested his own son, Fred Smith, on a charge of using a dog in hunting deer. The son was fined $12.50 by a justice of the peace. Smith is on a salary basis and received no part of the fine.

Warm Weather Not Uncommon.

Moorhead.—Although the temperature ranged about 60 degrees, as the maximum, last week, it has not been a record-breaker for this part of the Red river valley. On Nov. 1, 1887, the maximum was 72 degrees, and again Nov. 2, 1903, the same was reported, and on Nov. 19, 1897, the maximum was 55 degrees. Bricklayers and stone masons here have been working in their shirt sleeves and with bare hands. A feature of the weather was the gorgeous sunsets and the wealth of sunshine.

FARIBAULT VICE CRUSADE ON

Fines of $2,200 Collected Against Liquor Dealers and Poolroom Proprietors.

Faribault.—The grand jury investigation of illegal selling of liquor to minors and the admission of minors to pool rooms resulted in indictments against eleven of the fifteen saloons of the city. All the pool room proprietors were also indicted and there are several indictments against merchants for selling cigarettes.

All but three originally pleaded not guilty. The next day they appeared again, except one or two, and changed their pleas to guilty. The proprietors of the saloons were each fined from $150 to $300. Fines for the proprietors of the pool rooms ranged from $25 to $50 for each indictment. The fines for the violations of the cigarette law were $50 for each indictment.

The fines were all paid and amount to about $2,200. The cost of the investigation was about $500. Over a hundred high school students were subpoenaed as witnesses.

Mayor Smith has issued notices that all gambling, such as dice throwing, card games, slot machines, etc., must be stopped.

GOV. EBERHART IS SCORED

D. M. Neill, in Address Before G. A. R., Condemns Officials for Speaking Tours.

Red Wing.—D. M. Neill, in an address here, at the annual camp fire of A. E. Welch post, G. A. R., scored Governor Eberhart and President George E. Vincent of the University of Minnesota for traveling about the country, giving public addresses. He declared the people have the right to demand that public servants devote all their time to the duties of their offices.

He referred to Governor Eberhart and his appointment of an economic commission, and asked what the state's chief executive was doing to bring about a better government.

"Is the governor studying the needs of the people or is he more intent on making trips to conventions and other gatherings?" he asked.

"The president of our university has no right to go about the country during the school term, delivering lectures. He is being paid for being president of the university."

State Normal Board Holds Conference.

Winona.—The state normal board met and matters relating to all normal schools and particularly Winona, were considered. State Superintendent Schulz plans to call an early meeting of the normal board representatives with the Minnesota educational commission to discuss teacher training. The board members and normal school presidents were entertained at lunch at Morey hall.

Forty-three Plead Not Guilty.

Minneapolis.—Forty-three pleas of "not guilty" were entered by forty-three persons arrested Wednesday night in the raids on alleged disorderly houses ordered by the grand jury. Each case was continued. The women charged with keeping disorderly houses were allowed freedom on $200 bail and men and women found in the places $20. All but three of the former furnished bail and all of the latter.

East Grand Forks After School

East Grand Forks.—More than fifty farmers of the East Grand Forks district have signed for the university agricultural school, and H. L. Hauter, director of the agricultural department of the local high school, believes sufficient signers will be secured to result in placing one of the schools here. The East Grand Forks high school is affiliated with four rural schools near the city, and that fact lends importance to the local field for a university school.

TO BREED BLOODED CATTLE

Farmers of Hubbard County Decide to Import Some of the Best Stock Procurable.

Park Rapids.—At a largely attended meeting of farmers and business men it was decided to have Professor Kiger of the agriculture department of the public schools, purchase a car of blooded cattle for distribution among the farmers of this community. W. M. Taber, president of the First National bank, will finance the transaction to the extent of several cars if the farmers will take an active interest in bettering their herds.

At a meeting of the village council an ordinance was passed compelling sellers of milk to have their cows listed for tuberculosis. A state veterinarian is here, and finds some six or seven cows in the village affected. In tracing these cows it was found they came from two herds.

The C. E. Bradt herd of seventeen full bloods was tested and eight of them condemned. The Reece herd of twenty-seven was found to be in a tubercular state.

Bradt and Reece had requested the expert to examine their cows, and are generally commended for their forethought.

Audience and Judges Differ.

Hutchinson.—Public utilities was a question debated here by a team of orators sent out by the state university extension division. They were Edward H. Chapman and C. W. Pfeiffer, affirmative, and Howard L. Hall and J. Jacob Hadler, negative. The judges decided, four to one, against the affirmative, but the vote of the audience stood 156 to 53 in favor. Intense interest was aroused by the discussion locally.

Alleged Murderer Not Convicted.

Bemidji.—Judge C. W. Stanton returned to Bemidji after having presided over the fall term of court for Cass county. The jury in the case of John Lloyd, who shot and killed Dan Lilly at Cass Lake, a few months ago, failed to agree and was discharged by Judge Stanton, who adjourned court to Dec. 16, when the case will again be tried.

Hartland Man Mysteriously Shot.

Albert Lea.—Nicholl Nelson, a farmer living a mile from Hartland, who had been in this city on business was found lying beside the road between Albert Lea and Hartland with a bullet hole through his forehead. Beside him was a revolver with four blank cartridges and one loaded shell in the chambers. Physicians entertain no hope of his recovery. Whether it is a case of murder or suicide has not been determined.

Train Kills Shakopee Physician.

Shakopee.—Dr. Gustave Seidler stepped in front of the Omaha flyer and had both legs severed and his skull crushed, being killed instantly. The funeral was held under the auspices of Rescue lodge, A. F. & A. M., of which he was a member.

Boy Hit By Train; Unhurt.

Minneapolis.—After being tossed fifteen feet by a flying train, Hugh Donohue, a messenger boy, picked himself up and was calmly brushing the dust off his clothes when witnesses, who expected to find a corpse, had reached him.

Miners Killed by Fall.

Tower.—While they were making the descent at the Vermillion Consolidated mine, Oscar Franzke and Mike Randa were killed. The reports as to how it happened conflict. One is that the skip in some manner was overturned and that the men were precipitated to the bottom and killed. Another is that some object fell from the top of the shaft and struck them. The bodies were brought to an undertaker here. Franzke leaves a widow and three children. Randa was single.

What is Woman's Beauty but Health?

And the Basis of Her Health and Vigor Lies in the Careful Regulation of the Bowels.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics, every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly, among them Mrs. C. S. Vance, of 511 S. Ray St., New Castle, Pa. At times she had spells of indigestion so severe that she thought she would die. Syrup Pepsin regulated her stomach and bowels, and she attributes her excellent health today to this remedy.

MRS. C. S. VANCE

All the family can use Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact to all who by reason of age or infirmity cannot stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for at best their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America today and thousands of families are now never without it.

Families wishing to try a free sample bottle can obtain it postpaid by addressing Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 Washington St., Monticello, Ill. A postal card with your name and address on it will do.

WORMS.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

"Wormy", that's what's the matter of 'em. Stomach and intestinal worms. Nearly as bad as distemper. Cost you too much to feed 'em. Look bad—are bad. Don't physic 'em to death. Spohn's Cure will remove the worms, improve the appetite, and tone 'em up all round, and don't "physic." Acts on glands and blood. Full directions with each bottle, and sold by all druggists.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists. Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.

For best results use Perfection Oil

Rayo Lamps in 3,000,000 Homes

Our eyes are certainly entitled to the best attention and treatment. They are one's most faithful servants.

Kerosene lamps give the best light for reading and studying. All authorities agree on this. But not any kind of kerosene lamp will do.

A Rayo Lamp will cost you very little—if any more—than an ordinary lamp. But it is the most satisfactory that money affords. This is proved by its great universal use. Three million families—over ten million men, women and children—live and work and read and study by its clear, mellow glow. A host like this can't be mistaken in their judgment.

No glare or flicker to contend with, when you get the genuine Rayo. Just good, reliable, eye-restful light—and plenty of it. Ask your dealer for demonstration. Illustrated booklet on request.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, Chicago, Ill. (156)
(AN INDIANA CORPORATION)

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

The Army of Constipation

Is Growing Smaller Every Day.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are responsible — they not only give relief — they permanently cure Constipation. Millions use them for Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Sallow Skin.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

$35 to $75 WEEKLY IN A BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN

We need a man—Farmer's son preferred—to handle household necessities always in use, territory is free—work profitable, steady and healthful.

No Experience Necessary WE TEACH YOU FREE

If you are ambitious for a business all your own, write for our plan—we will explain everything in detail, many are making big money every week under our direction and plans of Modern Merchandising. You can do the same—this is your opportunity—take advantage of it—write today.

KOCH V. T. CO
BOX M
Winona, Minn.

HIDES AND FURS

We positively give more valuable illustrated information relative to Hides and Furs, than any other house in the world. We pay Highest Cash Prices for Hides, Furs, Pelts, etc., and make prompt returns for each shipment. We sell trappers' supplies very cheap. Write for circular, shipping tags, Illustrated Trap Book, Catalogue, etc. It's free. NORTHWESTERN HIDE & FUR CO., Established 1890. Minneapolis, Minn.

O. M. ROBINSON

Exclusive Violin Maker and Repairer. Write for prices. SEVEN CORNERS, ST. PAUL, MINN.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 48–1913.

PISO'S REMEDY

Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.

FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

GO NOW TO WESTERN CANADA

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The opportunity of securing free homesteads of 160 acres each, and the low priced lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, will soon have passed.

Canada offers a hearty welcome to the Settler, to the man with a family looking for a home; to the farmer's son, to the Renter, to all who wish to live under better conditions.

CANADA'S GRAIN YIELD in 1913 is the talk of the world.

Luxuriant Grasses give cheap fodder for large herds; cost of raising and fattening for market is a trifle.

The sum realized for Beef, Butter, Milk and Cheese will pay fifty per cent on the investment.

Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.

The Typewriter for the Rural Business Man

Ball Bearing Long Wearing

Whether you are a small town merchant or a farmer, you need a typewriter.

If you are writing your letters and bills by hand, you are not getting full efficiency.

It doesn't require an expert operator to run the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter. It is simple, compact, complete, durable.

Send in the attached coupon and we will give especial attention to your typewriter needs.

L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co.,
Syracuse, N.Y.
Please send me your free book about typewriters.
Name..............................
P. O..............................
State..............................

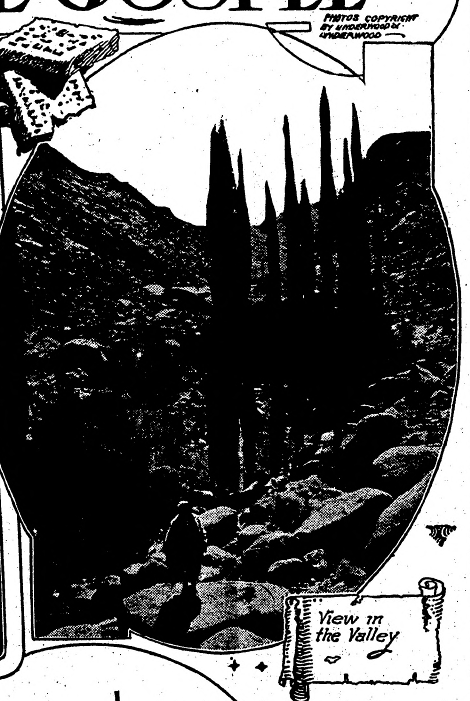
Pettit's FOR SORE Eye RED EYES Salve

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

To SEARCH MT. SINAI for ORIGINAL GOSPEL

PHOTOS COPYRIGHT BY UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

Monastery of St. Catherine



View in the Valley

Spot on Which Moses Read Ten Commandments

NEXT to the Holy Land the most interesting region in the world to Biblical scholars is the Sinaitic peninsula. In one respect it is even more interesting than the Holy Land, for the wealth of relics and manuscripts which it contains has hardly been touched by modern investigators.

An important movement has now been started by the universities, scholars and religious leaders of England to conduct a thorough search of the Monastery of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai, where it is believed that the oldest existing Bible manuscripts are to be found.

Discoveries already made indicate with practical certainty that these manuscripts must be there, but for peculiar reasons very little progress has been made in searching for them. During the years 1844, 1853 and 1859 the German scholar Tischendorf spent much time exploring the monastery library.

The monks were then very simple and hospitable and quite unfamiliar with the ways of the outside world. They allowed Tischendorf to do as he pleased in the library. He used this liberty with stupendously profitable results to himself. He discovered the oldest known Greek manuscript of the Bible, now known as the "Codex Sinaiticus." By some scholars it is dated as early as the fourth century, and in that case it is the oldest practically complete manuscript of the Bible. It consists of most of the Old Testament, all the New Testament and "the Epistle of Barnabas."

This wonderful collection of manuscripts Tischendorf carried away without saying a word to the monks. There are doubtless collectors today who would give $1,000,000 for these manuscripts. When the monks slowly realized that they had been robbed of one of the most precious possessions in the religious world, they became very angry, and their anger lasted a long time.

For years travelers who visited the out-of-the-world monastery reported that the monks were surly and inhospitable, and would not afford a reasonable opportunity for an examination of their treasures. Many of these visitors reported that the monks were ill-using their manuscripts in a deplorable manner, using them as stands for cooking utensils and flower pots.

Finally, in 1894, two brilliant Englishwomen—Mrs. Smith Lewis and Mrs. Gibson—succeeded in winning the confidence of the monks and secured permission to make an examination of the library. Their search was richly rewarded, for they discovered a fourth century palimpsest manuscript of St. Paul's Gospel in Syriac. This is probably the oldest known Bible manuscript, for the Tischendorf Codex, even allowing it the oldest date mentioned, would barely equal it.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson found that in order to put the library in thorough order and reveal even superficially all that it contained would require the labors of a considerable staff of trained workers. Although the monks gave facilities to the two women, they were not willing to admit any considerable body of investigators to the monastery, in view of their bitter experience of earlier years.

The present movement aims to overcome the objections of the monks in a friendly manner. The Sinaitic Peninsula is now in Egyptian territory. When the necessary funds have been collected the assistance of the Egyptian authorities will be sought in carrying on negotiations with the monks.

Among the most precious manuscripts believed to be in the monastery is the original of the Gospel of St. Luke in the handwriting of the apostle himself. This would be incomparably the most important Bible manuscript ever discovered. The Syriac copy of St. Luke's gospel found by the two English women and at present constituting the oldest known Bible manuscript contains evidence that it was translated from a Greek original in the library.

Scholars hold that the original Gospel of St. Luke was in Greek. The apostle was a physician of Greek descent, and his gospel gives evidence of scholarly attainments. Early chronicles state that the manuscripts of St. Luke's gospel was one of the treasures given to the monastery by the Emperor Justinian in 527 A. D. The building contains numerous representations of the apostle writing his gospel, and these appear to have a close association with the foundation of the establishment.

The library is known to contain about 500 ancient volumes filled with manuscripts in Greek, Arabic, Syriac and other languages. As one of these great volumes may contain hundreds of manuscripts, the wealth of the library can only be guessed at. Among its curiosities is a very ancient complete manuscript of the Psalms, written on its leaves in microscopic writing.

This monastery is the oldest continuously inhabited building in the world. It was founded by Justinian in about 527 A. D., and has been occupied ever since. It is surrounded by walls 30 feet high, and defended by cannon, for it was cut off from the civilized world for centuries. Until recently everybody who entered was hoisted by a rope over these walls.

The earth on which the vegetables of the monastery are grown was brought from the Holy Land, for there is no soil in the vicinity. In the first few centuries of the Christian church the Sinaitic Peninsula was the refuge of many Christians fleeing from the Roman persecution. Then the church triumphed and for centuries after the founding of the monastery it was honored by gifts from emperors and kings.

Then came the Mohammedan outbreak. During the centuries when the followers of the Prophet overran the eastern world this little spot held out for Christianity.

The convent stands at the foot of the mountain called Jabal Musa, which, according to many authorities, is the actual mountain where the Ten Commandments were committed to Moses by the Lord. The site of the monastery, according to this theory, is the spot where Moses delivered the Commandments to the children of Israel. This is a disputed question, but there is little doubt that it is an important site, for the natives in all ages have revered it.

Here passed the children of Israel during their 40 years' wandering on their way from Egypt to the Holy Land. Here occurred the many miracles and wonderful events of the Exodus—the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, the feeding of the people with manna, the miraculous production of water by Moses, the battle with the Amalekites, the appearance of the Lord on the mount, the building of the Ark, the worshipping of the golden calf, the budding of Aaron's rod, the raising of the brazen serpent by Moses and finally the death of Moses.

The Sinaitic Peninsula covers about 10,000 square miles, and there was plenty of room for the 40 years' wandering. The traveler who sees the land today can easily understand why miracles were necessary to keep the children of Israel alive. It is an exceedingly barren wilderness, largely composed of rocks. It only maintains a handful of natives, and it is believed that the number has hardly changed since prehistoric times. Though barren, the land is very picturesque, and the red mountains rising abruptly into the clear sky are wonderful.

Nearly all the sites mentioned in Exodus and the other books of the Old Testament are identified by the monks and by local traditions. There is a peak called Jabal Ras-es-Safsaf, which is said to be the exact spot from which Moses witnessed the worshipping of the golden calf by the children of Israel. It is a small peak, giving an excellent view of a large plain, which might very well have been the place where the Israelites indulged in their idolatrous festivities, as described in Exodus:

"And it came to pass as soon as he came nigh unto the camp that he saw the calf and the dancing; and Moses's anger waxed hot, and he cast the the tables out of his hands and brake them beneath the mount.

"And he took the calf which they had made and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it."

The peak where Moses is reputed to have witnessed this scene is part of the same group where the leader of the chosen people received the Ten Commandments from heaven. The local traditions assigning sites for all these ancient occurrences seem very reasonable.

DOUBLE VISION.

Police Magistrate—Hovn't Oi seen yez here twict befure?

Prisoner—Only onct, yer ahner, an' that was last Patrick's day.

Police Magistrate—St. Patrick's day, was ut? Wull, thot ixplains ut. Oi must av seen two of yes.—Puck.

UNPROFESSIONAL.

Powers—I'm sorry you lost your lawsuit.

Bowers—Well, I ought to have known that my attorney was no good.

Powers—Why?

Bowers—The very first time the case was called he told the judge he was ready to go on.—Puck.

ALL AT WORK.

"All of a sudden you don't seem to hear anything more about futurists. I wonder what has happened?"

"Wait till the whitewashing season is over. Take it from me, they'll bob up into prominence again."

A LADIES' MAN.

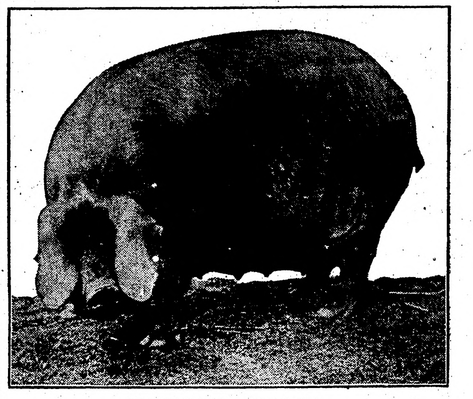
"A bomb."

"Put it in water," said the chief of police.

"A suffragette bomb."

"Put it in Florida water. Ah, the dear girls."

COMMON SENSE HINTS FOR THE HOG LOT



Right Kind of Sow for Breeding.

The hog lot has much to do about determining the lot of hogs.

Long legs in a hog ought to bar him as a breeder. Porkers, not racers, are what most of us are after.

Meat, and lots of it, in now and then a mess of boiled and mashed potatoes.

Little soft new corn at first. It's hot stuff. May give the porkers the stomach ache.

I doubt if any man ever had to fight hog cholera who kept his premises clean and fed right up to the mark.

Work off some of the shoats and stop the cost of feeding.

Get just as near to the man who eats your meat as you can when it comes to selling time.

A few sweet apples now and then are fine for an appetizer. Not much meat in them, but they help to keep the system in good order, and so are of value as an article of diet.

Hogs do not need much salt. A little goes a good ways. But be sure they have that little.

Throw now and then a charred stick of wood over in the yard for the hogs to work at. A good tonic. Keeps the stomach in good order.

If you feed sour milk, stick to sour milk, not change back and forth from sweet to sour.

Somehow it seems to most of us that it is a big waste of time to do much thinking about the food we give a hog. Anything will go. That is one reason why we never have anything to brag of in the way of hogs. To win, we must do some thinking, some planning and some putting into effect.

There will be better hogs a few years hence than there are now. Before that day comes, there will have to be better men.

Breed to the best male you can find. It may cost a little more. You will get it all back in the better pigs you get.

Keep your hogs cool, but don't cool them in a mudhole.

Turn off some of the shoats while the price is booming, which is most likely just now. Stop the cost of production as soon as you can. That's the way to make money.

Better than a ring in the nose for the hog that loves to root is a good chance to root and have a good time. Hogs are making money for you when they are rooting good and lively.

Wheat feed, that is not too coarse, is a fine feed for hogs this time of the year.

Hog cholera rarely strikes the pen of the man who keeps his hogs clean. The disease is a filth trouble.

If your hogs are shut up so they have no chance to root, dig a load of sods for them now and then and throw them over into the yard. It helps to keep the porkers busy, and when they are busy they are looking out for your interests all right.

A poor fence is an invitation to get out. You haven't time to look after that sort of a thing. Make the fence good on the start.

DECIDEDLY POOR FARM COMBINATION

Dogs Have More Demoralizing Effect on Sheep Industry Than Cholera on Swine.

Sheep and dogs make a decidedly poor combination on a farm. The farmer is inclined to be friendly toward the farm dog, for there is a big place for him to fill, but, after all, a dog is a dog, and the whole family must be held responsible for the mischief done by a few. From one township the report comes that the dogs there killed $118 worth of sheep during the past year, says a writer in an exchange. We doubt if all the dogs in that county are worth that much, but there seems to be little that can be done to relieve the situation.

Yet one thing is certain: So long as the dogs are allowed to roam over the country in their murderous quest there will be small chance for sheep industry to grow. This seems to have an even more demoralizing effect on sheep industry than hog cholera does on the swine industry.

Removing Large Limbs.

In removing large limbs, a good plan is to saw them off about three feet from the trunk to prevent splitting. Then saw again close to the trunk, so as not to leave a projecting stub.

PAYS TO MASTER THE YOUNG COLTS

Easier to Keep Youngsters From Learning Bad Tricks Than to Break Them of Them.

The earlier a colt is accustomed to harness the better broken the animal will be after it comes time for him to do some light work. It is easier to keep colts from learning bad tricks than to break them of them. For this reason have every strap and rope used by the colt so strong that there is no danger of a break. Once a colt finds out that he can get away from the halter or other part of the harness, there will be trouble, perhaps for all time.

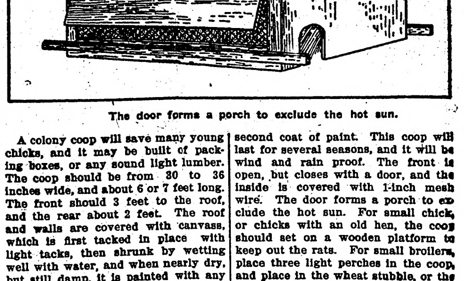
It is not necessary to make idle pets of young foals, but they should be taught to lead at the halter, stand tied in their stalls, as well as display manners in the stable, wisely suggests a horse trainer, and he adds:

"A wild, tricky foal, unbroken when young, makes a double task when subjected to the break harness as a three-year-old. Their first lessons are never forgotten, and it pays to master them when young.

Too Much Risk.

The man who keeps high-class draft mares to perform his farm work cannot afford to put them into the hands of an incompetent hired man.

COLONY COOP DESIRABLE FOR THE CHICKS



The door forms a porch to exclude the hot sun.

A colony coop will save many young chicks, and it may be built of packing boxes, or any sound light lumber. The coop should be from 30 to 36 inches wide, and about 6 or 7 feet long. The front should 3 feet to the roof, and the rear about 2 feet. The roof and walls are covered with canvass, which is first tacked in place with light tacks, then shrunk by wetting well with water, and when nearly dry, but still damp, it is painted with any good oil paint. When dry, give it a second coat of paint. This coop will last for several seasons, and it will be wind and rain proof. The front is open, but closes with a door, and the inside is covered with 1-inch mesh wire. The door forms a porch to exclude the hot sun. For small chicks, or chicks with an old hen, the coop should set on a wooden platform to keep out the rats. For small broilers, place three light perches in the coop, and place in the wheat stubble, or the clover field.—H. F. G.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Pilot of the Fleet

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

ROSNY, western secretary to the League of Lost Causes, was back in Paris. He had been compelled to close the offices of the organization owing to a little matter of politics, but the difficulty had soon been adjusted. It was not hard for the League to settle its disagreements with governments, for it numbered kings and chancellors among its adherents, and, being devoted to the maintenance of the principle of monarchy, it found disciples and friends even in republics.

Rosny was as imperturbable as ever when Paul Lane reported to him, by appointment. The young American noticed that the "To Let" sign, which he had seen in the window on the occasion of his last visit to headquarters, had been taken down, the furniture was back again, and Rosny had just been writing on the identical piece of torn blotting paper which Paul had seen when he was there before.

The Frenchman rose and gripped Paul's hand warmly.

"I congratulate you with all my heart," he said. "So you have at last succeeded in discovering the identity of the mysterious lady who brought you from New York and induced you to place your services and your millions at our disposal!"

He spoke in accents of light irony, but watching Paul keenly and with wrinkled brows meanwhile. In truth he was at his wits' end. He could not afford to lose Paul and his millions; yet Rosny was shrewd enough to realize that the American would not consent to play the part of a tool much longer without being taken into the League's confidence. And that was just what Rosny was himself unable to effect. Kings do not meet on terms of equality, even with American millionaires. His trump card he was holding back—not up his sleeve, but in the anteroom.

Then Paul, clearing his throat nervously, settled down to say exactly what Rosny had anticipated, and said it with as much emphasis as courtesy would allow, so that his meaning was altogether unmistakable.

"Now, my dear Paul," said Rosny, when he had concluded, laying his hand affectionately upon his shoulder, "in what have we played you false? I assured you that you should meet the lady in question and you did meet her—"

"Yes, and lost her for the third time," Paul cried. "No more, Rosny. I realize that you cannot well be held responsible for the treatment which has been meted out to me; nevertheless, I have been duped to the limit and my ultimatum is—"

"One moment," said Rosny blandly. "I have a friend in the next room. If you will pardon me—"

He opened the door and disappeared for a moment, to emerge bearing the princess Clothilde upon his arm. At the sight of her Paul staggered back, every nerve in his body tingling. For the time he could not find speech.

"Now, Paul," said Rosny, "suppose that you talk over your troubles with her highness herself. I am sure you will reach a satisfactory adjustment." He departed, smiling, and, entering the anteroom, closed the door softly upon them.

Paul was silent through shame, but in every nerve he felt the thrill of indignation. Again he had been fooled, and in that melodramatic way which had characterized all his dealings with the League. Yet, when, with her arms extended, the princess came softly to his side, clasped his hands, and held them, he knew to his dishonor that his unhappy love for her was weaving the old magical spells round him again.

"How very tragical you seem, monsieur!" said the princess archly. "And is it all on my account?"

"No," muttered Paul. "I feel that I—that I have not been fairly treated. You—"

"We take your money and—"

"It is not my money," he answered. "You are welcome to that. But I came here to serve you, and I am used and flung aside. What do I know of the League? I demand to be told who are its leaders, what it is accomplishing, where are its headquarters."

"Rosny himself does not know that," answered the princess. "But, Paul, let me satisfy you as far as I may. The League is not the outcome of any one man's brain. It was imagined first by Dvornak, of Prague university, who conceived of allying the rulers and ruling classes of all countries against the mobs that now control all modern states. He converted me and others, and through our influence half the rulers of Europe became converts to the idea. But, once started, an idea cannot be checked. The movement speedily became one for the restoration of broken dynasties: Bourbons, Bonapartes, Vasas—all joined in it to aid their own causes. Consequently we have wheels within wheels, and innumerable divergent and often opposing societies, yet all professing allegiance to Dvornak's theories and claiming affiliation with the League. And against us, standing solidly for the preservation of the existing order, lest their fate become worse, are the conservative rulers of all western countries. Now, monsieur, you ask to be initiated into the councils of the League. There is no League, or, rather, there are many leagues. Rosny here knows only the French branch; I am affiliated with that of Eastern Europe. There is but one man who has his hand on all the plums in the pie, and that is the kaiser. And where he stands nobody knows. Are you satisfied, Monsieur Lane?"

If Paul did understand he cared nothing for it all. The blood was boiling in his temples. He caught the princess in his arms and drew her into his embrace.

"Princess, I pledged my allegiance to you," he said, triumphantly. "I will obey no league but yours. I love you. Answer me, as you love truth—do you love me, or was your pledge upon the sands of Tripoli but a jest?"

She did not resist him. She dropped her head, with its wealth of heavy hair, upon his shoulder. He bent over her and their lips met.

"I love you only, Paul," she whispered. "Do not think me untrue. But just now I dare not think of love, there is so much to be done. Paul, will you trust me a little longer, and wait?"

"A thousand years!" he cried exultantly—and just then Rosny came in. Paul discerned a meaning glance which the Frenchman shot at Clothilde. It puzzled him; but still his mind was dormant under the force of the mighty passion in his heart.

"Paul," said the princess calmly, "will you undertake another mission for the League?"

"For your League," answered Paul.

"Yes, and it will be the strongest test of your devotion," she answered with intense seriousness. "We mean to strike a blow at the heart of democracy—can you guess where? In your own country.

"Listen, Paul. America is ripe for monarchy. That great people, groaning under the corruption of her government, has come to understand that a king is necessary to a nation, if it is to prosper and be honored. But the democracy controls the state. It must be broken. Only after a defeat in war can America be liberated and come into her own.

"Listen again, Paul. His majesty, the emperor of Japan, is planning to strike home at the republic. That is well known to your president and public men. It is admitted that a hundred and fifty thousand Japanese could seize California, Washington, Oregon, all the Pacific coast states, and hold them forever; no force of equal strength could ever be transported, without bases of supplies, over the deserts of the west. Japan is now threatening Magdalena bay in Lower California. That is a feint. She aims really at Alaska. But first the American navy must be destroyed, and that is the only obstacle which lies between Japan's aspirations and their accomplishment. Do you follow me, Paul?"

He nodded, for he could not speak. He saw her through a red cloud, and a thousand tumultuous passions hammered upon his heart. She stood quite close to him, her breath was warm against his cheek; she was almost shamelessly oblivious of the presence of Rosny, who watched cynically from the opposite corner of the office.

"Then, Paul, you are to be the means whereby this blow shall be delivered. You are an expert yachtsman. You have summered, you told me once, off the Alaskan coast in your own yacht, in those days when your father controlled the corporation and you looked forward to a life of leisure and plenty.

"Next month the American fleet engages in target practice off the Alaskan coast. We have secured the information of the exact locality. The fleet will put in at the roadstead between the newly formed volcanic islands called the Pyloffs, thrown up last year, and as yet hardly charted. The pilot, one of their most trusted men, whose duty it is to lead the flagship through the narrow pass, is in our pay. It is your money that has paid him, Paul; you are deeply implicated in the affair already, you see. You shall take his place, lead the flagship to ruin upon the rocks—we have a chart of them—and all the following vessels will be swept to destruction likewise. Thus Japan will obtain her opportunity. And in the confusion you will easily escape. There will be little loss of life. Then, your reward, the reward for which you have asked—"

She could say no more. The agitation which possessed her was greater than Paul's. It was her most desperate cast for victory. And Paul, staring at her eyes, the only thing now visible through the thick, blood-like haze that floated before his face, understood that she was offering herself as the price for his treachery.

He clenched his fists until the nails of his fingers pierced the flesh. All that he valued most, all that made life tolerable, his love, was balanced against his duty; and the scales swung low. They hesitated, trembled—and suddenly the mist cleared away. One does not barter principle so easily as that—not one trained as Paul had been. That is the mistake made by all who would corrupt their fellowmen. He saw the princess' face clearly again, and for the first time he realized that his was the stronger will.

He laughed into her face.

"This is my answer," he cried, drawing himself up until he towered over her, a menacing figure of righteous anger. "I will never betray my country for such a reward as you offer me. I would not take the reward you offer even without the deed. You have duped me too long, Princess Clothilde. I loathe and despise you—and I never wish to see you or your League again."

"Paul! You are mad!" cried Rosny, hurrying toward him.

Paul pushed past him toward the door. He turned there and looked back. He saw the princess, white of face, tremulous, broken. Her hopes, her dearest hopes, all she had staked, forgetful of her pride, were shattered. He saw Rosny agitated, stretching forth his hands in a vain plea for a hearing. Then, laughing savagely, Paul slammed the door in their faces and walked quietly down the stairs.

On the next day he caught a boat at Havre for New York, arrived a week later, and hastened to Washington. He proceeded to the White House immediately after his arrival and demanded an audience with the president. His name secured this with the briefest formality and after only a few minutes' delay.

The president was standing in the middle of the floor in his working room; he was alone, for at that time of the day he elected to read the documents laid before him for signing. Without any introduction Paul entered upon his story.

When, flushed with anxiety, he faltered toward the close of it, he perceived that the president was still standing in exactly the same position, apparently immovable, and dangling his eyeglasses in a meditative manner. He watched the younger man for a full half minute without speaking.

"Mr. Lane," he said at last, "your father was known to me very well. He was regarded as one of the most patriotic Americans of his day, in that, without flamboyancy, without partisanship, he made his duty the conduct of his vast business enterprises. He thought of nothing else, he cared for nothing else. Three of my predecessors in office consulted him upon important affairs of state and without hesitation laid bare important secrets, confident that his patriotism would rise superior to all thought of personal gain and that he had the interests of the nation at heart. You, I believe, do not interest yourself in such affairs at all?"

"I have been living abroad, Mr. President," stammered Paul. "I—"

"Precisely, Mr. Lane," replied the president, with great dignity. "You are content to spend the proceeds of the enterprises which your father established with so much labor and integrity. And now you, sir, an expatriated American, come to me and ask me to believe that you are in possession of some cock-and-bull secret involving the destruction of our navy, and that motives of patriotism have impelled you to hurry here from Europe to save the nation. Mr. Lane, I decline absolutely to place the slightest credence in your tale."

Paul flushed hotly. In his native land something of the glamor of his adventures had departed; even to him the story seemed more like a dime novel record than a matter of sober fact. But, remembering all that he had undergone he could not but believe that the League was powerful enough to attempt, at least, to carry out its purpose.

"This chart of the Pyloffs—of course you took the precaution to secure it," the president went on, watching the young man in some amusement.

"No, Mr. President," responded Paul. "I did not."

"Good day, sir," said the president.

"One moment, Mr. President," cried Paul, vehemently. "You, as commander-in-chief of all the forces, by land and sea, are at least able to engage recruits. Will you give me a letter to Admiral Blake authorizing him to engage me as a special seaman—I mean to enlist as a seaman—whenever I present it?"

"I will do that very gladly, Mr. Lane," the president answered. "To serve your country in any capacity will do you a world of good, Mr. Lane. I will write the letter at once and you may present it as soon as you are able."

He sat down at his desk and wrote a short letter to Admiral Blake, sealed it, and, rising, gave it to Paul with a slight bow which signified that the interview was at an end. Paul walked out into the street feeling as though he had been whipped.

For a while he almost abandoned his enterprise. He had offered his services to his country and they had been rejected. He had done all that duty required. Suppose he did no more! Suppose he let the fleet go to its destruction and found his own vindication thereby! Unconscious of his surroundings, he tramped through the streets of the capital, fiercely debating. The sacrifice that he had made of all he held most dear had thrilled him to a finer sense of patriotism than he had ever attained—and to this end! And in his mind's eye he saw all the while the face of his false love, she who had betrayed him, she whose dupe he had been. Had there been no atom of love in those words whispered to him on the hot sands of Tripoli?

Suddenly the impact of a pedestrian caused him to reel and clutch for support at a street lamp post. A man was leaving a house to enter a taxicab which stood waiting for him, and Paul, rushing squarely across his path, had run right into him. Paul looked up with a scowl—to encounter the angry visage of Captain Von Holzrath.

It was their fourth encounter. The last had been upon the staircase of the emperor's palace at Hofberg, where, sword in hand, Paul had matched himself against his enemy and found that he was his inferior. Twice Von Holzrath had spared his life when he held it in the hollow of his hand. Now, at that memory, a blind fury seized on him, and he felt his hands ache to strangle his foe. He rushed forward, his fists clenched, but clutched only emptiness, for Von Holzrath had adroitly eluded him and leaped into the cab. The last that Paul saw of him was his ironical smile as the vehicle whirled away.

That it was that decided him. Paul felt that Von Holzrath's presence in Washington boded ill for his country. For Von Holzrath was a stormy petrel of politics; and where the petrel flies the hurricane follows.

What part, then, did Von Holzrath play in this sinister scheme, he wondered. The princess' revelations as to the nature of the League had convinced Paul that many interests, often opposing, sheltered themselves behind it. Von Holzrath had been the Austrian emperor's confidant; he had been entrusted with the duty of bringing back Clothilde when she started on her mission to America. Afterward his support of Stepan's abortive insurrection had no doubt brought about his proscription at the Austrian court. If Von Holzrath had joined the League, which would gladly have welcomed so illustrious a recruit, his presence in Washington was easily explained. Then he and the captain had changed sides and were destined to continue their duel still until one or the other won a final triumph.

Paul took train the same evening for Seattle, where he found a ship upon the point of sailing for Sitka. He arrived at that Alaskan port worn out with apprehension and anxiety. How soon the attempt was to be made he could not know; but he knew enough of the resolute characters that dominated the League to be assured that, since he had kept his destination no secret, the blow would fall as soon as possible.

The Pyloff islands, which had risen in a week from the depths of the sea, forming a little new territory of the United States, lie five hundred miles northwest of Sitka, over a stormy sea. A barren tract of lava and scoriae, washed by the eternal waves, they would have been wholly valueless but for the deep-water harbor that afforded anchorage to warships. When Paul inquired for a vessel thither he encountered much quiet amusement on the part of ship captains. The single vessel which sometimes made the trip into those waters—a whaler—had departed the day before, they told him, bearing a passenger. Paul surmised that this was Von Holzrath, who had thus gained a day's start on him. Doubtless he had been on his way to the station at the moment of their encounter in Washington. Two days more passed before Paul, chafing at the delay, discovered a captain willing to attempt the journey, but finally he was able to set forth in a small yacht, with a scratch crew, after paying an enormous sum in insurance. The yacht, though small, was built for ocean voyaging; rough weather was happily not encountered; in the end, after many an alternation between hope and despair, he saw the gaunt shores of the Pyloffs break upon his view of the gray waste of waters. And there, riding at ease upon the face of the waters, were the battleships and cruisers of the Pacific squadron.

No, they were not riding at ease. For, as his yacht drew nearer, Paul saw, through his glasses, that they were forming in line, the flagship ahead. He knew what that maneuver meant. The vessels were about to enter the pass. He was too late.

Still he would not abandon hope. The captain drove the yacht forward, heading her, at Paul's instructions, straight toward the flagship. The race was a close one, for there was the chance of cutting under the vessel's bows before she turned her nose inward. But the chance did not depend upon speed. The flagship halted, a warning gun rang out; the yacht put about at the signal, and presently a cutter from the admiral's vessel came skimming through the waves. In a few minutes Paul had stepped into her, and, ten minutes later, he was in the presence of Admiral Blake upon the quarterdeck of the Virginia.

"Your business?" demanded the admiral sternly.

"You are about to proceed into the new roadstead," said Paul, casting a look toward the line of warships, waiting upon the signal of their leader.

"Well, sir?"

"Your pilot is in the pay of a hostile power. If you proceed you will be broken upon the rocks."

"Who are you? Have you credentials?"

Paul handed the admiral the president's letter. He read it with an ironical smile and handed it back to Paul.

"You are undoubtedly acquainted with the contents of this," he said. "Pray read it."

Paul read mechanically:

"My Dear Admiral: Here is a young man, the son of a distinguished father, who is in need of a few months of hard work to tone up his nerves after a course of dissipation in Europe. At present he is under the belief that the Pacific squadron is in danger at the hands of enemies. His name is Paul Lane, and he is titular head of the house of Lane, Erbfurth & Co. Please enlist him immediately at a seaman's wages and put him to work for the sake of his father."

Paul handed back the letter quietly. He had not expected this reception, but he was in a measure prepared, since, apparently, no one would take him seriously. Then the Pacific squadron must rush to her undoing.

"One word," he said. "You do not believe my story, Admiral Blake?"

"I believe you believe it," the admiral answered.

"Your pilot," pursued Paul, desperately, "is a man named Von Holzrath—an Austrian, aged thirty-five or so, blonde—"

"A tissue of nonsense," exclaimed the admiral impatiently. "My pilot is Mr. Brinn, for forty years one of the most trusted men in the service."

The words recalled the words of the princess. She, too, had spoken of the pilot in that identical way. Paul had gathered that, though willing to accept a bribe in order to relinquish his trust, Brinn would have no share in the destruction of his nation's ships. So he had proved more amenable than had been anticipated.

"And now, Mr. Lane, if you are satisfied with having held up the Pacific squadron," said the admiral ironically, "I shall obey the president's instructions. You may employ the remainder of the day in familiarizing yourself with the ship."

He called the quartermaster and introduced Paul to him, instructing him to give him the freedom of the vessel for the day. Evidently Admiral Blake interpreted the president's words liberally; he intended to treat the young man, whose eccentricities he condoned out of the memory of his own youth, more as a guest than as an enlisted sailor. So Paul left him, and, leaning over the taffrail of the deck below, he presently felt the flagship begin to thrill as her engines started, and saw the gaunt shore of the Pyloffs widen, bend and converge into a reef-strewn, bottle-necked passage beyond which gleamed the calm waters of a magnificent roadstead.

They followed in line like stately swans, the vessels of the fleet, their white sides cleaving the opaque waters, the smoke belching from their funnels. Ship after ship followed the Virginia, with not the smallest deviation from her course. The flagship crossed the entrance, leaping beyond the white foam blown back from the jagged rocks on either side of her—crossed safely and threaded her way slowly up the narrow strait.

Paul estimated that at the slow speed which the flagship set it would take about twenty minutes before she reached the critical point, two and a half miles ahead, where a series of swirling eddies indicated the presence of a barrier of submerged reefs. Looking back he saw that the last ship was entering the passage. She would be well within the strait when the disaster happened; bereft of the flagship's guidance, even the hindmost could not hope to thread the route to safety again. And a shudder that he could not suppress passed over him as he realized the fate of all those men, tossed into the icy, rock-strewn currents of the Pyloff shores. If any escaped it would be but to die of exposure on those inhospitable shores.

He, too, was fated to die. But he thought little of his own imminent danger. Life had no further charm for him. He could perhaps have lived without Clothilde, had be been parted by insurmountable reasons of state, or even by the fact of her fickleness. It was the revelation of her nature that had appalled him; the treachery with which she sought to bind him to play a traitor's part by a promise made only to be forgotten.

The ship was almost among the rapids now; he could tell, expert sailor that he was, how narrow was the course, from the constant oscillations as the pilot strove with the vessel, making it answer his lightest movement of the wheel. An inch—an inch—now to port, now to starboard; the danger was almost past. Was it not here? He braced himself to meet it. His senses warned him of it an instant before it came.

Then, with a mighty roar, the waters seemed to be rent asunder. Paul looked down through the brown depths that opened, down through the swirling whirlpools, through the foam-tipped rapids to the bare ground that seemed to be displayed. Where there had been water there was dry land; then a mighty flood swept forward, a tidal bore, dissolving land and rocks, and the ship leaped and rolled and spun dizzily, careening now with her bows submerged, so that the water washed the bridge, now stern uppermost; now she was half under, toppling as though she would never emerge; now she had righted again and spun like a top through the surges. A wave dashed him from the taffrail and smothered him with its wash; he struggled and choked and gasped, and found himself huddled against the base of a funnel; another wave caught him and swept him along with all the human flotsam aboard. He had a vision of twenty ships spinning like tops upon the surface of the sea. Then slowly things were righted; the vessel resumed her poise and rode the seas triumphantly.

Paul opened his swimming eyes in amazement. Far-flung across a waste of waters rode the ships of the fleet, unscathed. But where the Pyloff islands had been there were now but a few bare peaks, emerging out of the face of the deep. The islands had disappeared; all vestige of the strait was gone. Nothing but the unbroken sea surrounded the ships of the Pacific squadron.

Nature, as if in ridicule of man, had intervened to thwart his petty plans. The mighty force which had plucked the Pyloffs from the depths of the ocean had drawn them down, and treachery was discomfited and a nation's base designs frustrated. Paul felt for the first time in all his adventures the sense of an overshadowing presence which directed the scheme of human affairs; and, feeling this, he never wholly lost it again.

RAY OF SUNSHINE

"You poor dear! I'm so glad to see you that I'd like to kiss you, but I suppose I'd better not. Of course you've got nothing contagious; still, it's best to be on one's guard.

"The nurse didn't want me to come in for fear company might make you more nervous. 'Company!' I said. 'Why, that's ridiculous. I'm not company, I'm her very best and most intimate friend.' So she made me promise to stay only ten minutes by the clock. She was on her way out for a constitutional, you say? Most likely to meet some man or other. What's that? A settled woman? My dear, these trained nurses are never settled. You may be sure that when you're not looking she's making eyes at your Frank. Nurses! Why, all they really do is eat three meals a day and draw their pay. Oh, I know 'em!

"Well, anyhow, I'm in here and she won't be back in an hour's time, I'm sure, so I won't worry about watching the clock. Besides, what you need more than anything else is cheering up. That's why I came over.

"Shall I plump your pillow up a little for you? There! That's better, isn't it? I can see now how thin you've grown. Positively, dear, as you're lying in that position you have the same look that your sister did in her last illness. Hasn't Frank noticed it? But then, men are unobservant creatures in anything that concerns their wives.

"You liked the flowers I sent? I'm so glad. Do you know, I thought they were rather pretty, to. I ordered the same kind made up in a floral design for Aunt Georgiana's funeral. Isn't it odd, come to think of it, that her trouble was exactly like yours, only in a more advanced stage? Frank was telling me your symptoms the other day when I met him downtown, and it's just the way Aunt Georgiana's illness started off.

"How's little Frank's throat? What? You didn't know there was anything the matter with it? My goodness! Now, I've let the cat out of the bag, I suppose. It just occurs to me that Frank told me not to mention it to you. Promise me that you won't tell him I told you. Yes, I do remember now, he said the boy is staying with his aunt while you're laid up. I'm dreadfully sorry I told you. How perfectly stupid of me!

"Try to be calm. That's what I always say to myself when anything happens. You'll get well much quicker and that's what you want, particularly if the boy's throat trouble develops into diphtheria as you'd want to nurse him.

"Now, don't try to talk. It's very exhausting and you must save all your strength. You'll need it when you get well, in any event, I said to myself as I came up the stairs, 'Any one can tell by the way things look that Bess is sick.' But don't worry on that account. Servants are servants. What do they care if the dust is an inch thick and the house looking as if a cyclone had struck it?

"The time I had appendicitis my house looked almost as bad as yours does now. I nearly had another attack getting it into order again. You say that your maid has always been dependable? Well, I'm glad of that. I was wondering what kind of person she is. She was talking to a very suspicious looking character at the side entrance as I came in. He looked like a burglar to me.

"Hand you your drops? They're on the table? now, let me give the stuff to you. There! How clumsy of me! I've spilled some on your lovely bed cover. I can't imagine how I happened to do that—I never did such a thing before. I think the air in here has made me a little dizzy, it's so close. I can be so handy, with things that I really believe I've missed my vocation in not being a trained nurse. Besides, Tom says I'm a perfect ray of sunshine in the sick room.

"You're not taking all this stuff on the table, are you? It looks like a regular drug store. That reminds me. Coming over on the car I read such a dreadful thing in the newspaper. A green drug clerk put up an overdose of something or other for headache and the woman died ten minutes after she took the stuff. Yes, here in town—Smeek — Brundly's. Gracious! That's where this stuff is from, isn't it? But, then, there's no need to worry now, because if any of the prescriptions were wrong you'd have known it by this time. Besides, the clerk has been discharged.

"Well! Here's the nurse. Twenty minutes? It doesn't seem possible." (In a whisper.) "Such impertinence! Did you see the way she looked at me? If I were you, dear, I'd discharge that sour faced thing at once. She's enough to make you a chronic invalid! (Aloud.) "Well, good-by. Be a good girl and don't worry about anything. I am coming over when you're on the mend and stay a whole afternoon. You need some one to keep you cheered up. God-by, dear." (Exit, glaring at nurse.)

Much Malaria in Jerusalem.

When active sanitation work was commenced in Jerusalem last year, it was found that every fifth person in the city had malaria germs in his system. The chief causes of the malaria were found to be the open cisterns and the pools that abounded in the city and around about. For the first time in centuries there is a real checking of the mosquito plague.

CANADA WINS AGAIN

This Time at the International Soil Products in Oklahoma.

Last year and the year before, and the year before that, the farm products of Western Canada carried off first premiums, championships and honours, together with medals and diplomas, feats that were likely to give a swelled head to any other people than those who had so much more behind. At Columbus, Ohio, and then again at Columbia, North Carolina, a farmer of Saskatchewan carried off the highest prize for oats, and in another year, will become the possessor of the $1,500 Colorado Trophy; another farmer made two successful exhibits of wheat at the biggest shows in the United States; another farmer of Manitoba won championships and sweepstake at the live stock show in Chicago, and this year expects to duplicate his successes of last year. These winnings are the more creditable as none of the cattle were ever fed any corn, but raised and fattened on nature grasses and small grains.

At the Dry Farming Congress held at Lethbridge in 1912, Alberta and Saskatchewan, farmers carried off the principal prizes competing with the world. The most recent winnings of Canada have been made at Tulsa, Oklahoma, where seven of the eighteen sweepstakes rewards at the International Soil Products Exposition were taken by Canada in competition with eleven states.

The chief prize, a thrashing machine, valued at $1,200 for the best bushel of hard wheat, went to Peter Gerlack of Allan, Saskatchewan. Montana took four of the sweepstakes, Oklahoma four, and Nebraska two.

Russia sent one delegate, Spain had two, Belgium three, China four, Canada fifty, Mexico five, Norway one, Brazil three.

In the district in which the wheat was grown that won this prize, there were thousands of acres this year that would have done as well. Mr. Gerlack is to be congratulated as well as the Province of Saskatchewan, and Western Canada as a whole, for the great success that has been achieved in both grain and cattle.—Advertisement.

A soft answer doesn't turn away the young man who is in love.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

Mixed Information.

"Asteroids? What are asteroids?"

"They're the things doctors take out of children's noses."—Baltimore American.

Have to Make More Waits.

"I see by the papers," said Peerkins "that a fellow swam to Boston in eight hours."

"Aha," said Gherkins, "I wonder how long it would take him to swim there loaded?"

His Specialty.

"What does your member of congress think of these questions?"

"He don't pay no 'tention to queestions," replied Farmer Corntossel. "He's the man that knows what all the answers are, without botherin' 'bout the questions."

Too Successful.

Quizzer—What's the matter, old man? You look worried.

Sizzer—I have cause to. I hired a man to trace my pedigree.

Quizzer—Well, what's the trouble? Hasn't he been successful?

Sizzer—Successful! I should say he has! I'm paying him hush money!

Had to Be Careful.

An old man who had led a sinful life was dying, and his wife sent for a nearby preacher to pray with him.

The preacher spent some time praying and talking, and finally the old man said: "What do you want me to do, parson?"

"Renounce the devil! Renounce the devil!" replied the preacher.

"Well, but, parson," protested the dying man, "I ain't in position to make any enemies."

FULLY NOURISHED

Grape-Nuts a Perfectly Balanced Food.

No chemist's analysis of Grape-Nuts can begin to show the real value of the food—the practical value as shown by personal experience.

It is a food that is perfectly balanced, supplies the needed elements for both brain and body in all stages of life from the infant, through the strenuous times of active middle life, and is a comfort and support in old age.

"For two years I have used Grape-Nuts with milk and a little cream, for breakfast. I am comfortably hungry for my dinner at noon.

"I use little meat, plenty of vegetables and fruit, in season, for the noon meal, and if tired at tea time, take Grape-Nuts alone and feel perfectly nourished.

"Nerve and brain power and memory are much improved since using Grape-Nuts. I am over sixty and weigh 155 lbs. My son and husband seeing how I had improved are now using Grape-Nuts.

"My son, who is a traveling man, eats nothing for breakfast but Grape-Nuts and a glass of milk. An aunt, over 70, seems fully nourished on Grape-Nuts and cream." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Jessie Woodrow Wilson Becomes Bride of Francis Bowes Sayre

Francis B. Sayre. Future Home of the Sayres. East Room of White House. Mrs. F. B. Sayre.

Washington, Nov. 25.—In the beautiful east room of the White House at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second daughter of the president, was made the wife of Francis Bowes Sayre. Rev. Sylvester Beach of Princeton, N. J., performed the ceremony.

The entire affair was very simple, as had been requested by the bride, and the number of guests was rather small—distressingly so to many persons in official and social circles of Washington who had expected to receive invitations but were disappointed.

Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, eldest of the three daughters, acted as maid of honor to her sister, and Miss Eleanor Randolph Wilson, the youngest, was one of the bridesmaids. The three other bridesmaids were Miss Adeline Mitchell Scott of Princeton, daughter of Prof. William B. Scott; Miss Marjorie Brown of Atlanta, Pa., daughter of Mrs. Wilson's cousin, Col. E. T. Brown, and Miss Mary G. White of Baltimore, a college friend of the bride.

Dr. Grenfell Is Best Man.

Mr. Sayre was attended by his best man, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary to the fishermen of the Labrador coast. The two men have long been fast friends and Mr. Sayre spent two summers helping Dr. Grenfell with his work.

The ushers were Charles E. Hughes, Jr., son of Justice Hughes of the Supreme court and a classmate of Mr. Sayre in the Harvard law school; Dr. Gilbert Horax of Montclair, N. J., who was a classmate at Williams college in 1909 and now at Johns Hopkins university; Benjamin Burton of New York city, and Dr. Scoville Clark of Salem, Mass., who was Mr. Sayre's companion in Labrador and Newfoundland.

Wedding Gown of Ivory Satin.

The bride's gown was of satin, of a soft ivory tint, trimmed with beautiful lace, both old and rare. It was made in New York and the women connoisseurs declared that it was a masterpiece. The lingerie in the trousseau is of the most dainty material and is all hand made. The maid of honor and bridesmaids were beautifully gowned and all looked their best.

Coming right in the midst of the chrysanthemum season, this was made a chrysanthemum wedding and that flower was used most profusely in adorning the White House. As the bride's favorite color is mauve, that was made the prevailing color in the decorations. The east room, and indeed all the rooms in the president's mansion, were beautiful indeed.

Depart on Their Honeymoon.

After the ceremony was completed and the couple had received the congratulations of the guests, refreshments were served, and then Mr. and Mrs. Sayre departed for their honeymoon. Their plans include a visit to the home of Miss Nevin, Mr. Sayre's aunt, at Windsor Forges, near Churchtown, Pa., where they first met. After January 1 they will live in Williamstown, Mass., for Mr. Sayre is to sever his connection with the office of District Attorney Whitman in New York and become assistant to Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college.

JESSIE'S WEDDING CAKE.

Jessie Wilson's wedding cake was a triumph of the pastry cook's art. It was two and a half feet tall, counting the white orchids that were placed on top of it, and weighed 135 pounds. The first layer was four inches thick and 22 inches across. The cake contained 19 ingredients and its cost was about $500. Over the body of the cake was molded a thick white icing scroll work, on its top was a design for the initials of the bride and groom, done in silver, and around the sides were lilies of the valley in white sugar. This delicious confection was distributed in 2,000 dainty white boxes tied with satin ribbon and each of the proper size to go under the pollow of the recipient to bring dreams.

There was one disappointment for those who attended the wedding, for the gifts were not put on display. It is known that these included many beautiful and valuable articles sent by relatives and personal friends of the bride and groom and of their families and by admirers of President Wilson. Handsome presents were sent by both the senate and the house, that of the latter being a diamond lavalliere which Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of the speaker, bought for the representatives in New York.

Guests Limited to 400.

Those who were invited to witness the wedding were mostly personal friends and the number was kept down close to four hundred. The list was pared and revised several times, and as has been said, the operation resulted in many heartburnings. From the house of representatives' circle, for instance, the only guests were Speaker Champ Clark, Mrs. Clark and Miss Genevieve Clark, Marjory Leader Underwood and Mrs. Underwood, and Minority Leader Mann and Mrs. Mann.

As might be expected, the streets outside the White House were as crowded as the police would permit with curious persons eager to watch the arrival and departure of the guests and trying to obtain through the windows a glimpse of the doings within. The police arrangements were admirable and nothing happened, in the White House or outside, to mar the happy occasion.

The wedding of Mr. Sayre and Miss Wilson was the thirteenth to be celebrated in the White House, but the bride has always considered 13 her lucky number instead of a hoodoo. There have been more than twenty weddings in which either the bride or groom resided in the White House, and the last wedding ceremony performed there was the one which united Alice Roosevelt and Nicholas Longworth. Today's event was much quieter than that one, and the guests not nearly so numerous.

Mrs. Sayre a Social Worker.

Mrs. Sayre was born in Gainsville, Pa., twenty-five years ago. She attended the Women's college at Baltimore and was an honor member of the class of 1908, being also elected a member of Phi Beta Kappa. For two years after her graduation she engaged in settlement work in Kensington, Pa., and she is a member of the executive board of the National Young Woman's Christian association. She has delivered several excellent addresses in public.

In appearance she does not resemble her father as much as do her sisters, having rather the features of her mother's family, the Axsons. She is an accomplished swimmer, rider and tennis player and also something of an actress.

Something About the Groom.

Francis Bowes Sayre is twenty-eight years old, and was born at South Bethlehem, Pa., a son of the late Robert Heysham Sayre, who built the Lehigh Valley railroad and at one time was assistant to the president of the Bethlehem iron works, since known as the Bethlehem steel works. He was also once president of the board of trustees of the Lehigh university.

Francis Bowes Sayre graduated from Lawrenceville school, Lawrenceville, N. J., in 1904, and from Williams college in 1909. He entered Harvard law school and graduated "cum laude." He was a member of the Sigma Phi fraternity, Gargoyle society and the Phi Beta Kappa at Williams. For the past year he has been working in the office of District Attorney Whitman of New York. During the summer he was admitted to the bar of New York state.

Mr. Sayre's mother is Mrs. Martha Finlay Sayre, daughter of the late William Nevin, who was president of Franklin and Marshal college at Lancaster, Pa. She is a descendant of Hugh Williamson of North Carolina, one of the framers of the Constitution of the United States, and is a sister of the late Robert Nevin, head of the American church at Rome, and a cousin of Ethelbert Nevin, the composer.

Other White House Weddings.

The wedding of Jessie Wilson and Francis Sayre was the thirteenth to be solemnized in the White House. The first was that of Anna Todd, a niece of Dolly Madison's first husband, and John G. Jackson. Then Mrs. Madison's sister, Lucy, was married to Judge Todd of Kentucky. The third wedding, that of Maria Monroe, daughter of President Monroe, to Samuel Lawrence Gouverneur in 1820 marked the first social use of the east room. Eight years later John, the second son of President John Quincy Adams, married his cousin, Mary Hellen, in the blue room. While General Jackson was president there were three weddings in the White House, those of Delia Lewis to Alphonse Joseph Yver Pageot of the French legation; Mary Eaton to Lucien B. Polk, and Emily Martin to Louis Randolph. Many years passed before there was another marriage ceremony in the president's mansion, the next being of Nellie, the only daughter of General Grant, and Algernon C. F. Sartoris. In 1876 Emily Platt, a niece of Mrs. Hayes, was married in the blue room to Gen. Russell Hastings. The eleventh of this series of weddings was that of President Cleveland to Frances Folsom, and the twelfth that of President Roosevelt's daughter Alice, to Nicholas Longworth.

Real Test of Sympathy.

Anybody can sympathise with the sufferings of a friend, but it requires a very fine nature—it requires, in fact, the nature of a true individualist—to sympathise with a friend's success.—Oscar Wilde.

Musical Item.

An "efficiency" expert without music in his soul is figuring out how many nails a bass drummer could drive with the same expenditure of energy.

When Mending Umbrellas.

Take a small piece of black sticking plaster and soak it until it is quite soft; place it carefully under the hole inside and let it dry. This is better than darning, as it closes the hole neater without stitching.

Women as a Power.

"If ever the time comes when women shall come together simply and purely for the benefit of mankind, it will be a power such as the world has never dreamed of."—Matthew Arnold.

Mizpah.

The word Mizpah or Mizpeh, is Hebrew, and means "Watch Tower." For example, see Genesis 31:49, where we read, "And Mizpah, for he said, the Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from another." For additional light on the subject you may look at Judges 10:17; 11,11; 20:1. Also I. Samuel, 7:5; 10:17.

Longest British Tunnel.

The Severn tunnel, seven miles long, is the greatest in Britain.

CITIES ON BAGDAD RAILWAY

Line Will Enable One to Journey by Rail From Any European Center to Damascus.

London.—Although much has been written upon the political significance of the great Bagdad railway, little or nothing has been said about those old historical or sacred cities it will be the means of linking up with Europe by an iron road. Indeed, within the next two years one ought to be able to journey from any of the great railway centers of Europe, such as Paris, Berlin, or Vienna, to Damascus, the oldest city in the world, by rail over the Bagdad line, and also to the sacred cities of Palestine, to say nothing of taking a peep at the Euphrates valley, the alleged site of the Garden of Eden, and then on to Mosul, that flourishing little village that has sprung up upon the ruins of ancient Nineveh, while Bagdad, the engineers tell us, will be reached within three years, near which lie the remains of Babylon, that mighty city reared amid such splendor by Nebuchadnezzar. This linking up of Syria, Palestine, and Mesopotamia with all their sacred and historical cities with Europe is one of the most interesting features of this great undertaking.

In the Damascus Country.

Before describing the progress which has been made during the past few years, some reference to the history of the undertaking is essential. Indeed, it is safe to say that no enterprise has caused European statesmen so much anxiety as the Bagdad project. Here it should be explained that the railway is being built by the Germans, with German material, and by German engineers on Turkish territory, with the full sanction and approval of the Ottoman government. The money to carry on the work has been advanced by German banks upon guarantees being given by the Turkish government. So far about £10,000,000 has been sunk in the enterprise; but it is clear that another £10,000,000 will be needed to carry the rails into Bagdad, which, if the present rate of progress is maintained, should be reached within the next three years.

RATS FOOL VICTIM BY RUSE

One Leers at Engineer Until He Chases It, Then Companions Seize Food.

Cleveland.—Three big wharf rats, grown gray in iniquity, stole John Gibbons' lunch from him in the basement at police headquarters after fooling their victim by a clever ruse. Each leered at Gibbons and deftly wiped the evidences of the repast from his white whiskers before disappearing into into a hole.

Gibbons is night engineer at headquarters, and when he opened his midnight lunch he saw a gray, dissipated appearing old rat looking at him.

"Git out," yelled Gibbons, but the rat only looked malignantly toward him and shuffled toward the lunch.

Catching up a stick Gibbons started after the rat. He was not five feet away from his lunch when two more pests popped out of holes. While Gibbons was chasing one, the other two ate, and by the time he had convinced himself that he is not a rat catcher all the food was gone. The three rats seemed to bow a mocking farewell as they slipped back into their hiding places.

SEEKS $2,925 FOR BOARD

New Yorker Sues Lodger in State Supreme Court to Recover in All $4,009.55.

New York.—Joseph James Hughes has brought suit in the Supreme court for the recovery of $4,009.55 from George H. Robinson. A big board bill figures in the action. The complainant says that Robinson agreed on August 23, 1909, to board with him in an apartment on Central Park West and to pay him $25 a week. His board bill now amounts to $2,929, according to Hughes.

In addition Robinson, Hughes says, became dissatisfied with life in New York and persuaded him to move to South Orange, agreeing to pay for the unexpired lease. This, he says, adds $600 to the bill. Then Hughes also wants to recover for a loan of $484.55, which makes the grand total sued for.

Says Woman's Dress Is Pretty

Washington.—"Women's clothes were never so pretty and sensible as they are today," said Mrs. David Houston, wife of the secretary of agriculture, when asked for her opinion of modern dress for women. Mrs. Houston also defended the tango and other modern dances, saying: "The tango is one of the most beautiful dances I ever saw."

DIZZY, HEADACHY, SICK, "CASCARETS"

Gently cleanse your liver and sluggish bowels while you sleep.

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, dizziness, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath—always trace them to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months. Adv.

Poor Charities.

There are charity societies, as all the world knows, that only give to the poor a quarter or a half cent of every dollar they take in, most of their subscriptions going for salaries to officers and investigators, for expensive rentals, etc.

Richard March, the charity expert of Denver, Colo., was condemning these charities. He said:

"A man's wife shouted up to him the other day:

"'Don't you think this blue overcoat with the strapped-in back is too new and fashionable, George, to give away?'

"'It's the agent of the Alphia Incorporated Charities that's at the door, isn't it?'

"'Yes, dear.'

"'Then let the coat go,' said George. 'It'll be old enough and old-fashioned enough before it gets to the poor dub that is shivering for it now.'"

ERUPTION SPREAD ON FACE

310 East Elm St., Streator, Ill.—"A running sore broke out above my right eye, which spread over my entire face. It started as a small pimple. I scratched it open and the contents of this small pimple ran down my face. Wherever this ran a new sore appeared. They itched and burned terribly; I couldn't touch my face it burned so. It disfigured my face terribly and I couldn't be seen for everyone was afraid of it. It looked like a disease of some kind; it was all red and a heavy white crust on it. Everybody kept out of my way, afraid it would spread. I lost rest at night and I couldn't bear to have anything touch my face, not even the pillow. I had to lie on the back of the head. I was always glad when morning came so I could get up. It was extremely painful.

"At last I thought of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and I commenced using them. It took three weeks to complete the cure." (Signed) Miss Caroline Miller, Apr. 30, 1913.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Didn't Impress Farmer.

An altercation arose between a farmer and a so-called expert in agriculture.

"Sir," said the expert, "do you realize that I have been at two universities, one in this country and one in Germany?"

"What of that?" demanded the farmer, with a faint smile. "I had a calf nursed by two cows, and the more he was nursed the greater calf he grew."

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Cruel Fate.

Visitor to Jail—And how did you get here?

Confidence Man—They gave me five years just for attending to my business.—Puck.

SHAKE INTO YOUR SHOES

Allen's Foot-Ease, the Antiseptic powder for Tired, Tender, swollen, nervous feet. Gives rest and comfort. Makes walking a delight. Sold everywhere, 25c. Don't accept any substitute. For FREE sample, address Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y. Adv.

The Correct Term.

Tom—So you've been on an outing, eh?

Dick—That's a good name for it. I am "out" just $35.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Illustrative.

"The Comeups want a good shover."

"Well, they always were a pushing sort."

Stubborn Colds and irritated Bronchial Tubes are easily relieved by Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops—5c at Druggists.

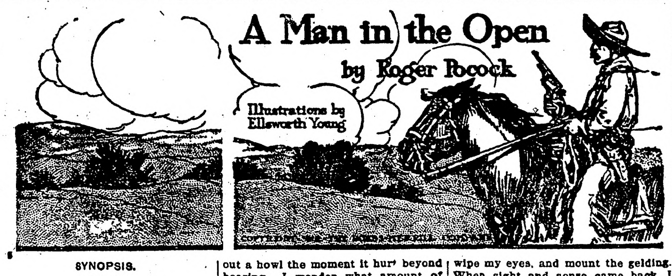
The man who is handy around the house usually isn't much good anywhere else

---

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young



SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse.

CHAPTER II.—Continued.

To judge by the hind shoes, Mrs. Trevor's mean colt had gone down toward the river not more'n ten minutes ago, on the dead run, then back up the road at a racking out-of-breath trot. Something must have gone wrong, and sure enough as I neared a point of rocks which hid the trail ahead, Jones suddenly shied hard in the midst of a hiccup. There was the Widow Bear's track right across the road, and Mick had to yell blue blazes to get the other ponies past the smell. Ahead of me the tracks of the Trevor colt were dancing the width of the road, bucking good and hard at the stink of bear. Then I rounded the point of rocks.

There lay Mrs. Trevor in a heap. Since Jones would have shied over the tree-tops at a corpse or a whiff of blood, I knew she'd only fainted, but felt at her breast to make sure. I tell you it felt like an outrage to lay my paw on a sleeping lady, and still worse I'd only my dirty old hat to carry water from a seepage in the cliff. My heart thumped when I knelt to sprinkle the water, and when that blamed humming-bird came whirring past my ear, I jumped as though the devil had got me, splashing the hatful over Mrs. Trevor. At that her eyes opened, staring straight at my face, but she made out a sort of smile when she saw it was only me.

"Jesse!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Seen my husband?"

"No, ma'am."

"I don't know what's come over him," she moaned, clenching her teeth; "he fired at me."

"That gun I traded him?"

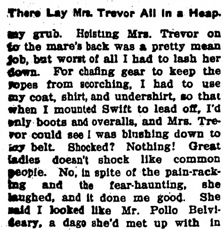
"Four shots."

"You was running away when your colt shied at the bear?"

"My Ankle! Jesse, it hurts so dreadfully. Yes, the left."

My knife ripped her riding-boot clear. The old red bandana from my neck made her a wet bandage, and the boot top served for a splint. There was no call to tell her the foot was broken, and the fainting fits eased my job. Between whiles she would tell me to hurry, knowing that the return of that damned colt would show Trevor which way she'd run. I had no weapon, so if Trevor happened along with the .45 revolver it wouldn't be healthy.

I couldn't leave the loads of ore on my ponies, and if I got Mrs. Trevor mounted with her foot hanging down, she'd lose time swooning. So I unloaded all the ponies except Jones and Swift, who has a big heart for travel. Next I filled one of the rawhide panniers with brush, and lashed it across Jones' neck for a back rest. A wad of pine brush made a seat between Jones' panniers where I mostly carry my grub. Hoisting Mrs. Trevor on to the mare's back was a pretty mean job, but worst of all I had to lash her down. For chafing gear to keep the ropes from scorching, I had to use my coat, shirt, and undershirt, so that when I mounted Swift to lead off, I'd only boots and overalls, and Mrs. Trevor could see I was blushing down to my belt. Shocked? Nothing! Great ladies doesn't shock like common people. No, in spite of the pain-racking and the fear-haunting, she laughed, and it done me good. She said I looked like Mr. Pollo Belvideary, a dago she'd met up with in Italy. Dagos are swine, but the way she spoke made me proud.



There Lay Mrs. Trevor All in a Heap.

Washing day after supper.

We weren't more than half-way down to the river when we heard Trevor surging and yelling astern, somewheres up on the bench. At that I broke to a trot, telling the lady to let out a howl the moment it hurt beyond bearing. I wonder what amount of pain is beyond the bearing of real thoroughbreds? That lady would burn before she'd ever whimper.

Nearing the ferry my innards went sick, for the punt was on the far bank, the man was out of sight, and even Jones wouldn't propose to swim a river with a cargo of mineral and a deck load. As we got to the door of Brown's cabin, Trevor hove in sight. I lep' to the ground, giving Jones a hearty slap on the off quarter, which would steer her behind Brown's cabin; then with one jump I grabbed old man Brown's Winchester rifle from its slings above the hearth, shoved home two cartridges from the mantel, rammed the muzzle through the window-pane, which commands a view up the trail, and proceeded to take stock of Mr. Trevor.

The man's eyes being stark staring mad, it was a sure fact he'd never listen to argument. I waited, following with the rifle until the horse's shoulder widened out, giving me a clear aim at the heart.

The horse finished his stride, but while I was running to the door he crumpled and went down dead, the carcass sliding three yards before it stopped. As to the man, he shot a long curve down on his back in a splash of dust, which looked like a brown explosion. His revolver went further on whirling, until a stump touched off the trigger, and its bullet whined over my head.

Next thing I heard was the rapids, like a church organ finishing a hymn, and Mrs. Trevor's call.

"You've killed him?"

"No, ma'am, but he's had an accident. I'll take him to the cabin for first aid."

Trevor was sitting up by the time I reached him. He looked sort of sick.

"Get up," said I, remembering to be polite in the presence of a lady. "Get up, you cherub."

Instead of rising, he reached out a flask from his pocket, and uncorked to take a little nourishment. I flicked the bottle into the river, and assisted him to rise with my foot. "My poor erring brother," said I, "please step this way, or I'll kick your tail through your hat."

He said he wasn't feeling very well, so when I got him into the cabin, I let him lie on Brown's bed, lashing him down good and hard. I gave him a stick to bite instead of my fingers, which is private. "Now," said I, "your name is Polecat. You're due to rest right there, Mr. Polecat, until I get the provincial constable." I gathered from his expression that he'd sort of taken a dislike to me.

Swift and the mare were grazing on pine chips beside the cabin, and Mrs. Trevor looked wonderfully peaceful.

"Your husband," said I, "is resting."

She gave me a wry laugh, and seeing she was in pain, I poured water over her foot.

"That's better," said she, "how good you are to me!"

Old man Brown was coming across with a punt, mighty peevish because I'd dropped a horse carcass to rot at his cabin door, and still worse when he seen I had a lunatic roped in his bunk. I gave him his Winchester, which he set down by his door, also a dollar bill, but he was still crowded full of peevishness, wasting a lady's time. At last I hustled the ponies aboard the punt, and set the guide lines so that we started out along the cable, leaving the old man to come or stay as he pleased. He came. Fact is, I remembered that while I took Mrs. Trevor to my home, I'd need a messenger to ride for doctor, nurse, groceries, and constable. I'm afraid old man Brown was torn some, catching on a nail while I lifted him into the punt. His language was plentiful.

Now I thought I'd arranged Mrs. Trevor and Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brown, and added up the sum so that old Geometry himself couldn't have figured it better. Whereas I'd left out the fact that Brown's bunk was nailed careless to the wall of his cabin. As Trevor struggled, the pegs came adrift, the bed capsized, the rope slacked, and the polecat, breaking loose, found Brown's rifle. I'd led the ponies out of the punt, and was instructing Brown, when the polecat let drive at me from across the river. With all his faults he could shoot good, for his first grazed my scalp, half blinding me. At that the lady attracted attention by screaming, so the third shot stampeded poor Jones.

I ain't religious, being only thirty, and not due to reform this side of rheumatism, but all the sins I've enjoyed was punished sudden and complete in that one minute. Blind with blood, half stunned, and reeling sick, I heard the mare as she plunged along the bank dispensing boulders. No top-heavy cargo was going to stand that strain without coming over, so the woman I loved—yes, I knew that now for a fact—was going to be dragged until her brains were kicked out by the mare. It seemed to me ages before I could rouse my senses, wipe my eyes, and mount the gelding. When sight and sense came back, I was riding as I had never dared to ride in all my life, galloped Mr. Swift on rolling boulders steep as a roof and all a-slither. I got Swift sidewise up the bank to grass, raced past the mare, then threw Swift in front of Jones. Down went the mare just as her load capsized, so that she and the lady, Swift and I, were all mixed up in a heap.

My little dog Mick was licking my scalp when I woke, and it seemed to me at first that something must have gone wrong. My head was between two boulders, with the mare's shoulder pressing my nose, my legs were under water, and somewhere close around were roaring rapids. Swift was scrambling for a foothold, and Mrs. Trevor shouting for all she was worth. I waited till Swift cleared out, and the lady quit for breath.

"Yes, ma'am," says I.

"Oh, say you're not dead, Jesse!"

"Only in parts," said I, "and how are you?"

"I'm cutting the ropes, but oh, this knife's so blunt!"

"Don't spoil your knife. Will you do what I say?"

"Of course I will."

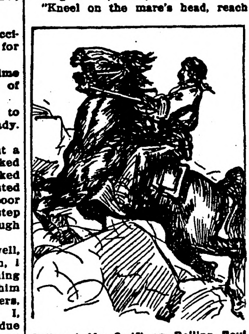
"Reach out then on the off side of the load. The end of that lashing's fast to the after-basket line."

When I'd explained that two or three times, "I have it," she answered. "Loose!"

"Pull on the fore line of the diamond."

"Right. Oh, Jesse, I'm free!"

"Kneel on the mare's head, reach under the pannier, find the latego, and cast off."



Galloped Mr. Swift on Rolling Boulders Steep as a Roof.

She fumbled awhile, and then reported all clear.

"Get off the mare."

In another moment Jones was standing up to shake herself, knee deep in the river, and with a slap I sent her off to join Swift at the top of the bank. Mrs. Trevor was sitting on a boulder, staring out over the rapids, her eyes set on something coming down mid-stream. Her face was all gray, and she clutched my hand, holding like grim death. As for me, I'd never reckoned that even a madman would try to swim the Fraser in clothes and boots.

"I can't bear it!" she cried, turning her face away. "Tell me—"

"I guess," said I, feeling mighty grave, "you're due to become a widow."

The rapids got Trevor, and I watched.

"You are a widow," says I, at last.

She fainted.

There, I'm dead sick of writing this letter, and my wrist is all toothache.

JESSE

CHAPTER III.

Love.

Kate's Narrative.

I married Lionel Trevor in the days when he looked like a god as Parsifal, sang like an angel, had Europe at his feet. "Something wrong with Europe," is Jesse's comment. "West of the Rockies we don't use such, except to sell their skins."

When Lionel lost his voice—more to him than are horse and gun to Jesse—he would not ask me to follow him into the wilderness but tried to persuade me to stay on in London. I was singing "Eurydice" in "Orfeo," my feet, thanks to Lionel, were at last on the great ladder, and if I was ambitious, who shall blame me? Yet for better, for worse, we were married, and here among the pines, in this celestial air, a year or two at the most would give him back his voice. My place was at his side, for better or worse, and when he drank, when day by day I watched the light of reason give place in his eyes to bestial vice, until at last I found myself chained to a maniac—till death do us part—it was then I first saw Jesse, the one man whose eyes showed understanding.

I can't write about that day when Lionel, a thing possessed of devils, hunted me through the woods like a bear. I doubt if I remember all that happened. I must have been crazed with pain and fear until suddenly I woke up on a boulder by that awful river, and saw him drift past me, caught in the rapids, drowning. I would have shouted I was so glad, until he saw me, and dying as he was, looked at me with Lionel's clear sane eyes.

I fainted, and when I awoke again in the dusk, Jesse bent over me.

That night and for three weeks afterward, I lay delirious. At the ferryman's cabin he made me a bed of pine boughs, until my household stuff and the Chinese servant could be brought down from the ranch. He sent Surly Brown to bring Doctor McGee, and the Widow O'Flynn as my nurse, while her son Billy was hired to do his pack-train work. From that time onward the pack outfit carried cargoes of ore from the mine, and loads from Hundred Mile House, of every comfort and luxury which money could buy for me. When I got well, I found that Jesse had spent the savings of years, and had not a dollar left.

When at last I crept out of doors to bask in the autumn sunlight, the cottonwoods and aspens were changed to lemon, the sumac to crimson, the fallen needles of the pines clothed the slopes with orange, and a mist of milky blue lay in the canon.

Jesse had arranged with lawyers for the probate of Lionel's will, and settlement of his debts, which would leave me nothing. As far as Jesse knew, I was penniless, and to this day I have never dared acknowledge that, secured from the extravagance of my late husband, I have capital bringing in some seven thousand five hundred dollars a year. Jesse supposed me to be destitute, and when I spoke of returning to my work in Europe, offered to raise the money for my passage. Knowing his ranch to be mortgaged already to its full value, I wondered what limit there was to this poor man's valor. Yes, I would accept, assuring him of swift repayment, yet dared not tell him the wages offered me at Covent Garden. It seemed indecent that a woman's voice should be valued at more per week than his heroic earnings for a year.

I sang to him, simple emotional music: Orfeo's lament, the finale of "Il Trovatore," the angel song from Chopin's "Marche Funebre."

I wonder why women make it so important that a man should propose? It needed no telling that Jesse and I were in love. It seemed only natural that we should marry, and any pretense of mourning for the late Mr. Trevor would have been distasteful.

Although born in the Labrador, Jesse had been a cow-boy in Texas for half his working life. As a stockman, he was to wed a rancher's widow. Was he ashamed of his business? No, proud as Lucifer! Was he ashamed of the dress of his trade? Not by a damned sight! Soldiers and sailors are proud to wear the dress of their trade when they marry. "So are cow punchers," said he, with his head in the air. "S'pose we ride to Cariboo City, and get married in that little old log church."

He managed to persuade me; and I consented also to a hunting trip, instead of the usual honeymoon.

When I was well enough for the journey, I rode my colt, and Jesse his demon mare—Jones—my sole rival, I think except that dreadful bear, in his affections. Two pack-ponies carried our camp and baggage, and each night he would set up a little tent for me, bedding himself down beside the fire. At the end of five days' journey, we rode at dusk into Cariboo.

Captain Taylor, of Hundred Mile House, and Pete Mathson, the cargador of the Star Pack-train, two old stanch friends of Jesse, witnessed our marriage in the quaint log building which served as church and schoolhouse.

Captain Taylor is a retired naval officer, a pioneer of the gold mines, a magistrate, a man to trust, and when he gave me his heartfelt congratulations, it was not without knowledge of Jesse's character. He and Pete, the cargador, rode with us to the camp of his Star Pack-train, and it was there in the forest that we ate our wedding-breakfast. We drank the healths in champagne from tin cups, and then, saddling up, Jesse and I rode away alone into the solitudes.

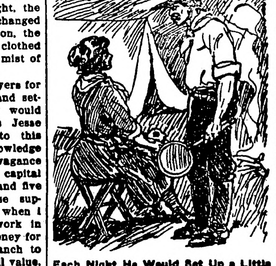
CHAPTER IV.

The Landlord.

Kate's Narrative.

Of his life before he reached this province Jesse will so far tell me nothing, yet his speech betrays him, for under the vivid dialect of the stock range, there is a streak of sailor, and beneath that I detect traces of brogue which may be native perhaps to Labrador. Out of a chaos of books he has pecked words which pleased him, pronounced, of course, to suit himself, and used in some sense which would shock any dictionary.

His manners and customs, too, are a field for research. Of course one expects him to be professional with rope, gun, and ax, but how did he learn the rest? I wanted a lantern—he made one; my boot was torn—he made one; my water-proof coat was ruined—he made one; and if I asked for a sewing-machine, he would refuse to move camp until he had one finished. If his name were not Smith I could prove him directly descended from the Swiss family Robinson. If a project sounds risky, I have to assume that it is something unusually safe, as the only way to keep him out of danger. If I should ever wish to be a widow, I have only to doubt his power to fly without wings.



Each Night He Would Set Up a Little Tent for Me.

Guided by his uncanny woodcraft, I began to meet the parishioners, mountain sheep and goats, the elk and caribou, eagles, bears, wolverines, and certainly I shared something of Jesse's untiring delight in all wild creatures. Even when we needed meat in camp, and some plump goose or mallard was at the mercy of his gun, Jesse would sometimes beg the victim off, and catch more trout. "So long as they don't hunt us," he would say, "I'd rather tote your camera than my gun. But thar's that dog-gone beaver down the crick, he tried to bite me yesterday again. If he don't tame himself, I'll slap his face. Thinks he's editor."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

His Skill a Natural Gift.

James Cran, who astonished the world by his reproduction of flowers in his Belgian blacksmith shop, works at a forge in Cranfield, N. J. Not long ago he was doing common blacksmithing work. Art critics say that he has gone much closer to nature in his work than Van Boeckel. He uses no models, and works with only the simplest tools. He began his apprenticeship as a blacksmith in Scotland at the age of eighteen, but since 1896 has lived in this country, where he was one of the first men to make an iron golf club.

Enormous Irrigation Profits.

The Assouan dam and other irrigation works in Egypt have cost about $53,000,000; but the increase in value of land in middle and lower Egypt and the Fayoum provinces has been from $955,000,000 to $2,440,000,000. The total rent of this land has risen from $82,000,000 to $190,000,000.

CONDUCTRESSES ON BUS LINE

Brooklyn Suggestion Stirs the Imagination of Possible Passengers, Anyhow.

Conductresses are to ring up the fares on one of the new Brooklyn bus lines which are to supplement our transportation facilities—if the board of estimate consents.

One of the lines seeking a franchise announces that to do the conducting only girls need apply. They didn't say pretty girls, but let us hope that pretty girls are meant. If she should step on our toes while reaching for the bell rope, her light weight and gracious apoligies will make us happy to have been in the way.

For she must be thin waisted in order to squeeze by comfortably. And we shall insist that she set a common sense fashion in the matter of hatpins. Nor can she be permitted to knot her small change in a handkerchief or to carry her bills in the unconventional manner favored by some women shoppers. Moreover, the company must insist that no stops shall be made in front of candy stores. It is bad enough to wait while the conductor gulps a beer. No passenger should be expected to bide the conductress' consumption of an ice cream soda.

No Judge of Scenery.

The late Bishop Doane of Albany hated socialism, and at a dinner in Albany he once said:

"The Socialist, who abhors aristocracy and superiority and elegance, is as misguided and wrong-headed as the miner who went through Hell's Glen.

"Hell's Glen, between Glasgow and Invegary, is one of the most picturesque and rugged pieces of scenery in all Scotland.

"Well, a miner once drove through the glen in a coach, and, while his companions went into raptures over the wild, weird, awe-inspiring features of the place, the miner yawned over his cigar and newspaper.

"'Don't you like Hell's Glen, sir?' the driver asked, at a particularly precipitous and striking spot.

"'Why,' grunted the miner, 'I guess it's all right, but I can't seen none of the scenery for these darned hills.'"

TO MAKE SEA SAFE

Remarkable New Invention Is Wireless Long Distance Mirror.

Its Purpose Is to Convey an Image in the Same Manner That Sounds Are Now Communicated to Distant Points.

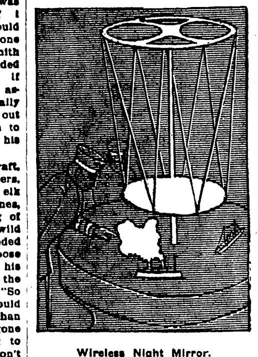
New York.—A remarkable invention pregnant with useful possibilities is the wireless long-distance mirror. Its purpose, in brief, is to convey an image in the same manner that sounds are now communicated.

It is a radical improvement on the old-time camera obscura, a structure in which the real image of an object is projected upon a white table or other plane surface. Not only does the new apparatus reflect on a mirror all objects located and all happenings occurring within a much greater area than the camera obscura, but it operates at night.

Just how the machine works has not yet been revealed, but the machine is known to consist of a web of wires attached to a tall mast, and it is this web of wires which receives the impressions and projects them on the mirror located at the base of the mast.

The principal value of the new apparatus will be in its application to ships. It is expected to prevent collisions with other ships, icebergs or derelicts by disclosing the whereabouts of such dangers to the look-out long before the vessel comes within striking distance. The image of every object within a radius of two or three miles is thrown on the mirror, and at night or in fog the value of such an apparatus to the mariner could hardly be overestimated.

It is claimed, too, that the long-distance mirror would prove a valuable aid to armies in time of war, revealing the whereabouts and movements of the eenmy in a manner which would make all other forms of reconnoitering seem entirely inadequate.



Wireless Night Mirror.

A test was recently made at Vallejo, Cal., and the instrument was said to have accomplished all that had been claimed for it. The night was dark, but a perfect picture of the district within a radius of two miles was clearly shown on the mirror. All the activities of the Mare Island navy yard, railway trains passing up and down the valley, and pedestrians in the city streets were clearly shown.

BECAME "ROUNDER" AT FIFTY

Sunday School Head Stole $40,000 From Cemetery for Journey on White Way.

New York.—Trusted for more than 30 years by his employers, and given an increase in pay and a vacation to celebrate his fiftieth anniversary, Nathaniel Laird, Sunday school superintendent, and for 30 years bookkeeper for the Kensico Cemetery company, reaped a sentence to Sing Sing prison. He was sentenced by Judge Crain, in the court of general sessions, to not less than one year, nor more than two.

Laird lived at 304 West 123d street with his wife and four grown children. He was in charge of the Sunday school of the St. Nicholas Avenue Presbyterian church. Two years ago he received the increase in pay and the vacation. His vacation he spent among the "white lights," and he learned to like them.

The cemetery company found that he had spent in two years $40,000 of their money, and he was convicted of grand larceny.

Bears Fight, Farmer Gets Honey.

Sheffield, Pa.—W. W. Williams, a farmer, saw two big black bears in a death battle over a hollow tree trunk full of honey. Both animals died as a result of the fight and Williams got the two carcasses and four hundred pounds of honey from the tree.

Thieves Steal Copper Wire.

Boonton, N. J.—Working in the dead of night, thieves stole nine hundred feet of copper wire between this town and Bertrands Island, Hopatcong. The trolley cars had stopped running shortly after midnight.

Presented With Big Potato.

Washington.—Congressman Ninkead of New Jersey was presented with a sweet potato twenty-four inches long, weighting 4½ pounds grown in his home state.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Notice For Publication.

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Olof Kristoffersen Viken, of Germantown, Minn., who, on April 8, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 07664, for SE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn, on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 12, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Clyde C. Groner, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on Sept. 6, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05585, for SE¼ Section 11, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn., on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tollefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

A Load of Our Lumber

Is worth a load and a half of the common kind. The reason is because we season it thoroughly and naturally before we let it go out. Then we grade it so carefully our best is as absolutely perfect as lumber can be. You can use a load of it to the last inch. There is no waste and that means less lumber and smaller bills.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, [illegible].

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Notice for Publication

Department of the Interior, U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., Oct. 27, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Gunder Thompson Sannes, of Germantown, Minn., who, on Nov. 13, 1911 made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06875, for Lots 1, 2, S 1-2 NE 1-4, Section 6, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th prin. meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olof K. Viken, of Germantown, Minn., Marshall Gehrke, James Smith, Allan Adolphson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9383, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Pesten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. Ose, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. 9570, Serial No. 03897, for Lot 2, Section 9, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tollef Brokke, German Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Oct. 14, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Swan Carlson, o' Holt, Minn., who, on Dec. 1st, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 03064, for NW¼ Section 23, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 25th day of November, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Knutson, Carl Sorum, Clarence Knutson, Nels Fossen, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
October 25, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that George Charlson of Germantown, Minnesota, who, on June 28th, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06350, for SE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make commutation proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 5th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christianson, Gunder Sannes, Charlie Charlson, Andrew Charlson, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Citation for Hearing on Petition for Determination of Descent of Land

State of Minnesota, County of Marshall, In Probate Court.

In the Matter of the Estate of Anders W. Gutterud, Decedent:

The State of Minnesota to Julia Isabella Gutterud, Carl Nikolai Gutterud, Alma Christine Gutterud, Ida Jonette Gutterud, Oscar Elvin Gutterud, Thea Elisa Gutterud, Arthur Gutterud, and Christi Gutterud, and all persons interested in the determination of the descent of the real estate of said decedent:

The petition of Christi Gutterud having been filed in this Court, representing that said decedent died more than five years prior to the filing thereof, leaving certain real estate in said petition described, and that no will of decedent has been proved nor administration of his estate granted in this State, and praying that the descent of said real estate be determined by this Court.

Therefore You and Each of You, Are hereby cited and required to show cause, if any you have, before this Court, at the Probate Court Room in the city of Warren, in the County of Marshall, state of Minnesota, on the 28th day of November, 1913 at 10 o'clock A. M., why said petition should not be granted.

Witness, the Judge of said Court, and the seal thereof, this 24th day of October, 1913.

[Court Seal] PETER H. HOLM
Probate Judge.

H. O. Krogh
Attorney for Petitioner,
Thief River Falls, Minn. (o31n14)

Fitted For It.

"Mrs. Meddle makes much trouble in this town." "Yes; she has such a fine sense of rumor!"—Life.

Mud Lake Murmurs.

John Mundhenke made a business trip to Holt on Thursday last week and returned next day.

Clyde Groner and Gilbert Johnson were attending to business matters at Holt on Saturday.

Ole Tromsdahl returned home on Saturday after a few days spent at Thief River Falls.

As we expect the H. C. of L., will be somewhat reduced in January, we are anxiously awaiting its arrival.

School commenced in the Johnson district a week ago last Monday, with Miss Olga Larson as teacher.

Miss Clara Moe, of Thorwick, spent a few days here last week visiting with her sister, Mrs. Clarence Larson.

Elmer Odie moved the house, which he had recently bought from Oscar Ostreng, onto his own place last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Bernstein made a combined business and pleasure trip to Rollis on Monday.

Charles Martell marketed a load of grain and also attended to some important business matters at Middle River last Friday.

School Notes

(From east half of Dist. No. 59)

School opened here October 27th with Miss Tvede as teacher.

Those who were neither absent nor tardy during the first month of school ending Nov. 21st are: Evelyn, Raymond and Edgar Wegge, Marwel and Pearl Grever, and Alice Sorum.

The children's pastime now during recesses and noon hours are playing "War."

Esther Sorum was absent for a while on account of sickness, but is now back to school.

Tilla and Maynard Knutson were absent on a Friday.

We had a review in History last Friday.

What's the matter with Maynard? He's all right.

Gladys Sorum returned from Hilsboro, N. D., last Wednesday, and commenced school next day. How do you like the Dakota prairies, kid?

Vernon Grover entered school the first of the month.

"Little bluebird in the tree,
Sing a song to me."

IN PRAISE OF ART SARTORIAL

Writer Claims Place in Ranks of Genius for the Designer and Cutter of Clothing.

Art, music and poetry have in all ages been considered the polite arts, but what is art without the proper portrayal of the dress of the age that it seeks to represent? What is music that does not bring inspiration from the masters of the past who were clothed in the power to give us glimpses of men and ideals of whom the only lasting impression can be gained by the form our imaginations give them, and our imaginations clothe them in robes in which their creators sent them out on their errands of giving the world higher ideals. Then what is poetry but thought cloted in words? No matter from what side viewed, the figure of speech of clothing is the symbolic key that gives entrance to these higher realms, and therefore why should not clothes themselves touch the hem of the garments of the arts, with which they are so closely in touch?—American Tailor and Cutter.

WE DON'T DOUBT IT.

"Why have you saved these Christmas cigars so long?"

"Mother wants them to sprinkle among the clothes. She says they are better than camphor for keeping away moths."

ON THE LINKS.

Sympathetic Voice (in the distance)—How are you getting on, old man?

Sanguine Beginner—First rate. Just made three perfect putts on the last green.—London Punch.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.

Makers of the Celebrated

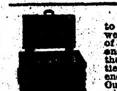
Mascot Flour

and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN

Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.

H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day



Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.

Our New Home: Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 18T.

THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O

The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON

General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.

Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL

THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
I Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to

Name..

Postoffice..

Route............ State..............

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1913 NO. 19

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.

We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt

LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier

Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

When You Want Flour....
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sod in Hot
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

Local Items

Bring us the news,

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140, (ad-tf)

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE,

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Dochen, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Dr. J. T. Turley, Dentist, will make his next visit to Holt Dec. 8 & 9, See his "ad."

A new baby boy arrived at Nels Gudvangens home in Agder township on Monday. All well.

For good Coffee for the holidays go to Holt Merc. Co. and get the Quality Steel Cut Coffee. (adv)

The Golden Valley Ladies Aid will meet with Mrs. Tony Anderson next Wednesday afternoon.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Meginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Mayor Lars Backe and Ole Torrison were prominent visitors here on Monday from Thief River Falls.

Next week the Holt Mercantile Co. will receive Lindeke, Warner & Son's sample stockings. (adv)

Al Huseth spent the first part of the week attending to business matters in the vicinity of Thief River Falls.

The Young People's Society will meet at Ole Reierson's at 8 o'clock Sunday evening. All members should be present as business of importance will come up.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.28
Wheat	.76
Barley d	.39
Oats	.30
Rye	.40
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

Holt School Notes

Amanda Mickelson has been sick this week and has not attended school.

Those who have not been absent this month are: Mildred Anderson, Gladys Hagen, Frank and Harry Heinze.

Ernest Silbaugh started school on Monday.

Someone wanted to stand in front of the room and chew gum?

The highest average in each class this month are: A class, Nellie Saastad 98; B class Merrill Latta, 92; C class, Kenneth Latta 99; Ida Hagglund and Olive Mickelson 98.

(Primary Department)

Those who attended every day this month are: Vernon Huseth, Geraldine Nelson, Pirl Reierson.

Ruth Tobiason has had perfect spelling since starting school.

The pupils are busily preparing for the Christmas program.

Dr. Mellbye was up from Thief River Falls Monday to see Miss Emma Olson who is ill with typhoid.

"I never saw better bargains in Shirts and Sweaters than those the Holt Merc. Co. are now giving."(ad)

Every man should go to the Holt Merc. Co's store and purchase five to ten shirts at the price they are selling them now. (adv)

Miss Christine Saastad came up from Thief River Falls on Wednesday of last week and spent Thanksgiving with the home folks.

John Mundhenke and Chas. Martell came in from Golden Valley last evening. They took time to call at the printshop and boost their subscriptions ahead for next year.

Services will be held at the Holt church at 10:45 a. m. next Sunday by Rev. T. L. Gryting, of St Hilaire. A mission offering will be taken up. Mr. Gryting will conduct services at Ringbo at 3:30 in the afternoon of the same day.

T. Kolden and daughter Laura, of Durand, Wis., arrived here Saturday, for a visit with his brother S. S. Kolden and other relatives. They came here from Nielsville and left on Tuesday for Gully, to visit his sister Mrs. Olo Hoven.

The Nazareth Ladies Aid had a most successful Thanksgiving dinner and Sale at Sam Mickelson's last Thursday. We are not informed as to the amount of money taken in. The Ringbo Ladies Aid had a supper and sale the same evening which netted $86.

At Warren on Weduesnay E. Ray Waller and Miss Lillian Knutson were married by Rev. N. G. W. Knudtson. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Erick Knutson, of Thief Lake, and has a host of friends who will wish the young couple lasting happiness.

"Our Awful Aunt," a really funny farce, will be presented at the Manor school, four miles southeast of Holt on Saturday evening, Dec. 18th, at 8 o'clock, and a shadow social will be given after the show. Every body come.

—Hildur Carlson, Teacher.

While returning home after the concert last Friday night, Hjalmer Peterson had a lively runaway. The Misses Lillie Peterson and Olga Saastad were in the rig and were thrown out, but nobody was hurt. The horse returned safely to livery barn here but pieces of the buggy were distributed along the road.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

... Pay ...
All Bills
By Check

And there will never be any disputes. The Holt State Bank Invites household as well as business accounts. Most women know how difficult it is to make their cash balance when they pay in cash. You can avoid all the trouble and worry by opening an account at the Holt State Bank. Then you'll know where every cent of your money goes.

Holt State Bank
Make your FARM LOAN with us

DR. J. T. TURLEY,

DENTIST,

Will be in Holt Monday p.m. & Tuesday a.m., Dec 8-9

Over Holt Mercantile Co's Store.

I will visit Holt about every month or six weeks from now on, and this will give you an opportunity to get your dental work done at a saving of time and expense to yourself. My prices are:

ALLOY FILLINGS	$1.00	GOLD CROWN	$5 & $6
TREATMENTS	1.50	PORCELAIN CROWN	5.00

PLATES, $10 and up.

Compare these prices with those you have been paying and you will see the advantage of coming to me.

Every piece of work fully guaranteed and repaired or made over without expense to you when found faulty. PAINLESS EXTRACTION of teeth FREE when plates are ordered.

You can always find the date of my visits in The Northern Light.

HUSETH's

New Confectionery and Cigar Emporium

Supplies the finest Candies, Cigars and Soft Drinks

In my Barber Shop you can get your whiskers trimmed in the popular Van Dyke, Pompadour or Storm Door styles. Call on me, anyway.

AL. HUSETH' Holt, Minn.

300 Shirts and Sweaters 300

AT LESS THAN MANUFACTTRER'S PRICES

We have just bought out Lindeke, Warner & Sons' sample line of Men's and Boys' Shirts and Sweaters and have decided to put them out on our bargain table at prices that will put you to thinking how we can sell so cheap

Come in and look them over and we know you will buy a big supply. This sample line is sold for CASH ONLY, as we had to pay cash in advance in order to secure these goods.

Holt Mercantile Co.
THE BIG NEW STORE

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HUERTA'S POWER FAST CRUMBLING

No Peace In Mexico Until Dictator Is Eliminated, Says President's Message.

MONEY BILL HELPS FARMER

Need of Legislation That Will Facilitate Getting of Capital for Agricultural Purposes—Would Choose Presidential Candidates by Primary—Declares Himself for Philippine Independence—Should Let Anti-Trust Law Stand.

Washington, Dec. 2.—President Wilson appeared before the joint session of the two houses of congress today and delivered his annual message as follows:

In pursuance of my constitutional duty to "give to the congress information of the state of the Union," I take the liberty of addressing you on several matters which ought, as it seems to me, particularly to engage the attention of your honorable bodies, as of all who study the welfare of the nation.

Departs From Custom.

I shall ask your indulgence if I venture to depart in some degree from the usual custom of setting before you in formal review the many matters which have engaged the attention and called for the action of the several departments of the government or which look to them for early treatment in the future, because the list is long, very long, and would suffer in the abbreviation to which I should have to subject it. I shall submit to you the reports of the heads of the several departments, in which these subjects are set forth in careful detail, and beg that they may receive the thoughtful attention of your committees and of all members of the congress who may have the leisure to study them. Their obvious importance, as constituting the very substance of the business of the government, makes comment and emphasis on my part unnecessary.

The country, I am thankful to say, is at peace with all the world, and many happy manifestations multiply about us of a growing cordiality and sense of community of interest among the nations, foreshadowing an age of settled peace and good will. More and more readily each decade do the nations manifest their willingness to bind themselves by solemn treaty to the processes of peace, the processes of frankness and fair concession. So far the United States has stood at the front of such negotiations. She will, I earnestly hope and confidently believe, give fresh proof of her sincere adherence to the cause of international friendship by ratifying the several treaties of arbitration awaiting renewal by the senate. In addition to these, it has been the privilege of the department of state to gain the assent, in principle, of no less than 31 nations, representing four-fifths of the population of the world, to the negotiations of treaties by which it shall be agreed that whenever differences of interest or of policy arise which cannot be resolved by the ordinary processes of diplomacy they shall be publicly analyzed, discussed, and reported upon by a tribunal chosen by the parties before either nation determines its course of action.

There is only one possible standard by which to determine controversies between the United States and other nations, and that is compounded of these two elements: Our own honor and our obligations to the peace of the world. A test so compounded ought easily to be made to govern both the establishment of new treaty obligations and the interpretation of those already assumed.

Mexico Has No Government.

There is but one cloud upon our horizon. That has shown itself to the south of us, and hangs over Mexico. There can be no certain prospect of peace in America until General Huerta has surrendered his usurped authority in Mexico; until it is understood on all hands, indeed, that such pretended governments will not be countenanced or dealt with by the government of the United States. We are the friends of constitutional government in America; we are more than its friends, we are its champions; because in no other way can our neighbors, to whom we would wish in every way to make proof of our friendship, work out their own development in peace and liberty. Mexico has no government. The attempt to maintain one at the City of Mexico has broken down, and a mere military despotism has been set up which has hardly more than the semblance of national authority. It originated in the usurpation of Victoriano Huerta, who, after a brief attempt to play the part of constitutional president, has at last cast aside even the pretense of legal right and declared himself dictator. As a consequence, a condition of affairs now exists in Mexico which has made it doubtful whether even the most elementary and fundamental rights either of her own people or of the citizens of other countries resident within her territory can long be successfully safeguarded, and which threatens, if long continued, to imperil the interests of peace, order and tolerable life in the lands immediately to the south of us. Even if the usurper had succeeded in his purposes, in despite of the constitution of the republic and the rights of its people, he would have set up nothing but a precarious and hateful power, which could have lasted but a little while, and whose eventful downfall would have left the country in a more deplorable condition than ever. But he has not succeeded. He has forfeited the respect and the moral support even of those who were at one time willing to see him succeed. Little by little he has been completely isolated. By a little every day his power and prestige are crumbling and the collapse is not far away. We shall not, I believe, be obliged to alter our policy of watchful waiting. And then, when the end comes, we shall hope to see constitutional order restored in distressed Mexico by the concert and energy of such of her leaders as prefer the liberty of their people to their own ambitions.

Rush Currency Bill.

I turn to matters of domestic concern. You already have under consideration a bill for the reform of our system of banking and currency, for which the country waits with impatience, as for something fundamental to its whole business life and necessary to set credit free from arbitrary and artificial restraints. I need not say how earnestly I hope for its early enactment into law. I take leave to beg that the whole energy and attention of the senate be concentrated upon it till the matter is successfully disposed of. And yet I feel that the request is not needed—that the members of that great house need no urging in this service to the country.

I present to you, in addition, the urgent necessity that special provision be made, also for facilitating the credits needed by the farmers of the country. The pending currency bill does the farmers a great service. It puts them upon an equal footing with other business men and masters of enterprise, as it should; and upon its passage they will find themselves quit of many of the difficulties which now hamper them in the field of credit. The farmers, of course, ask and should be given no special privilege, such as extending to them the credit of the government itself. What they need and should obtain is legislation which will make their own abundant and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint, concerted local action in their own behalf in getting the capital they must use. It is to this we should now address ourselves.

It has, singularly enough, come to pass that we have allowed the industry of our farms to lag behind the other activities of the country in its development. I need not stop to tell you how fundamental to the life of the Nation is the production of its food. Our thoughts may ordinarily be concentrated upon the cities and the hives of industry, upon the cries of the crowded market place and the clangor of the factory, but it is from the quiet interspaces of the open valleys and the free hillsides that we draw the sources of life and of prosperity, from the farm and the ranch, from the forest and the mine. Without these every street would be silent, every office deserted, every factory fallen into disrepair. And yet the farmer does not stand upon the same footing with the forester and the miner in the market of credit. He is the servant of the seasons. Nature determines how long he must wait for his crops, and will not be hurried in her processes. He may give his note, but the season of its maturity depends upon the season when his crop matures, lies at the gates of the market where his products are sold. And the security he gives is of a character not known in the broker's office or as familiarly as it might be on the counter of the banker.

The Farming Interests.

The agricultural department of the government is seeking to assist as never before to make farming an efficient business, of wide co-operative effort, in quick touch with the markets for foodstuffs. The farmers and the government will henceforth work together as real partners in this field, where we now begin to see our way very clearly and where many intelligent plans are already being put into execution. The treasury of the United States has, by a timely and well-considered distribution of its deposits, facilitated the moving of the crops in the present season and prevented the scarcity of available funds too often experienced at such times. But we must not allow ourselves to depend upon extraordinary expedients. We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit constantly and easily available and command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credit have been studied and developed on the other side of the water while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the result, the handicap and embarrassment which have been put upon those who produce our food.

Conscious of this backwardness and neglect on our part, the congress recently authorized the creation of a special commission to study the various systems of rural credit which have been put into operation in Europe, and this commission is already prepared to report. Its report ought to make it easier for us to determine what methods will be best suited to our own farmers. I hope and believe that the committees of the senate and house will address themselves to this matter with the most fruitful results, and I believe that the studies and recently formed plans of the department of agriculture may be made to serve them very greatly in their work of framing appropriate and adequate legislation. It would be indiscreet and presumptuous in anyone to dogmatize upon so great and many-sided a question, but I feel confident that common counsel will produce the results we must all desire.

Stop Private Monopoly.

Turn from the farm to the world of business which centers in the city and in the factory, and I think that all thoughtful observers will agree that the immediate service we owe the business communities of the country is to prevent private monopoly more effectually than it has yet been prevented. I think it will be easily agreed that we should let the Sherman anti-trust law stand, unaltered, as it is, but that we should as much as possible reduce the area of that debatable ground by further and more explicit legislation; and should also supplement that great act by legislation which will not only clarify it but also facilitate its administration and make it fairer to all concerned. No doubt we shall all wish, and the country will expect, this to be the central subject of our deliberations during the present session; but it is a subject so many-sided and so deserving of careful and discriminating discussion that I shall take the liberty of addressing you upon it in a special message at a later date than this. It is of capital importance that the business men of this country should be relieved of all uncertainties of law with regard to their enterprises and investments and a clear path indicated which they can travel without anxiety. It is as important that they should be relieved of embarrassment and set free to prosper as that private monopoly should be destroyed. The ways of action should be thrown wide open.

I turn to a subject which I hope can be handled promptly and without serious controversy of any kind. I mean the method of selecting nominees for the presidency of the United States I feel confident that I do not misinterpret the wishes or the expecetations of the country when I urge the prompt enactment of legislation which will provide for primary elections throughout the country at which the voters of the several parties may choose their nominees for the presidency without the intervention of nominating conventions. I venture the suggestion that this legislation should provide for the retention of party conventions, but only for the purpose of declaring and accepting the verdict of the primaries and formulating the platforms of the parties; and I suggest that these conventions should consist not of delegates chosen for the single purpose, but of the nominees for congress, the nominees for vacant seats in the senate of the United States, the senators whose terms have not yet closed, the national committees, and the candidates for the presidency themselves, in order that platforms may be framed by those responsible to the people for carrying them into effect.

Obligations to Territories.

These are all matters of vital domestic concern, and besides them, outside the charmed circle of our own national life in which our affections command us, as well as our consciences, there stand out our obligations toward our territories over sea. Here we are trustees. Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, are ours, once regarded as mere possessions, are no longer to be selfishly exploited; they are part of the domain of public conscience and of serviceable and enlightened statesmanship. We must administer them for the people who live in them and with the same sense of responsibility to them as toward our own people in our domestic affairs. No doubt we shall successfully enough bind Porto Rico and the Hawaiian islands to ourselves by ties of justice and affection, but the performance of our duty toward the Philippines is a more difficult and debatable matter. We can satisfy the obligations of generous justice toward the people of Porto Rico by giving them the ample and familiar rights and privileges accorded our own citizens in our own territory and our obligations toward the people of Hawaii by perfecting the provisions of self-government already granted them, but in the Philippines we must go further. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way can be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid.

Acting under the authority conferred upon the president by congress, I have already accorded the people of the islands a majority in both houses of their legislative body by appointing five instead of four native citizens to the membership of the commission. I believe that in this way we shall make proof of their capacity in counsel and their sense of the responsibility in the exercise of political power, and that the success of this step will be sure to clear our view for the steps which are to follow. Step by step we should extend and perfect the system of self-government in the islands, making test of them and modifying them as experience discloses their successes and their failures; that we should more and more put under the control of the native citizens of the archipelago the essential instruments of their life, their local instrumentalities of government, their schools, all the common interests of their communities, and so by counsel and experience set up a government which all the world will see to be suitable to a people whose affairs are under their own control.

Territorial Rights for Alaska.

A duty faces us with regard to Alaska which seems to me very pressing and very imperative; perhaps I should say a double duty, for it concerns both the political and the material development of the territory. The people of Alaska should be given the full territorial form of government, and Alaska, as a storehouse, should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of railways. These the government should itself build and administer, and the ports and terminals it should itself control in the interest of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people.

But the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting in the key to the storehouse and throwing back the lock and opening the door. How the tempting resources of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of from time to time calling your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out by well-considered states, not upon theory, but upon lines of practical expediency. It is part of our general problem of conservation. We have a freer hand in working out the problem in Alaska than in the states of the Union; and yet the principle and object are the same, wherever we touch it. We must use the resources of the country, not lock them up. There need be no conflict or jealousy as between state and federal authorities, for there can be no essential difference of purpose between them. The resources in question must be used, but not destroyed or wasted; used, but not monopolized upon any narrow idea of individual rights as against the abiding interests of communities. That a policy can be worked out by conference and concession which will release these resources and yet not jeopard or dissipate them, I for one have no doubt; and it can be done on lines of regulation which need be no less acceptable to the people and governments of the states concerned than to the people and government of the nation at large, whose heritage these resources are. We must bend our counsels to this end. A common purpose ought to make agreement easy.

Three or four matters of special importance and significance I beg that you will permit me to mention in closing.

Our bureau of mines ought to be equipped and empowered to render even more effectual service than it renders now in improving the conditions of mine labor and making the mines more economically productive as well as more safe. This is an all-important part of the work of conservation; and the conservation of human life and energy lies even nearer to our interest than the preservation from waste of our material resources.

Employers' Liability.

We owe it, in mere justice to the railway employes of the country, to provide for them a fair and effective employers' liability act; and a law that we can stand by in this matter will be no less to the advantage of those who administer the railroads of the country than to the advantage of those whom they employ

We ought to devote ourselves to meeting pressing demands of plain justice like this as earnestly as to the accomplishment of political and economic reforms. Social justice comes first. Law is the machinery for its realization and is vital only as it expresses and embodies it.

CONGRESS OPENS REGULAR SESSION

CLARK AND MARSHALL CALL THE HOUSE AND SENATE TO ORDER.

MANY MEMBERS ARE ABSENT

Ambitious Program Is Laid Out for the Nation's Lawmakers, and They May Be Busy Most of Next Year.

Washington, Dec. 1.—At the stroke of noon today gavels sounded in senate and house signalizing the opening of the second, or first regular, session of the Sixty-Third congress.

The familiar figure of Speaker Champ Clark was seen in the house chamber. In the senate Vice-President Marshall called the senators to order. This was the first regular session of congress in many years which was ushered in under entirely Democratic auspices—with Democrats in control of the house and senate and a Democratic executive in the White House.

Galleries Well Filled.

As is usual on such occasions, the galleries were filled, there being a brilliant display of millinery and winter fashions by women spectators. The diplomatic galleries in both houses were well filled, diplomats of South America and Central America predominating in the attendance.

In the house the blind chaplain of that body, Rev. Henry N. Couden, delivered the invocation, after which a few new members were escorted to the speaker's desk to take the oath of office. This ceremony over the house proceeded to uninteresting routine business. Routine business and preliminary skirmishing over the currency bill occupied the attention of the senate.

Subjects They Will Take Up.

Many members, who were detained here during the summer and autumn months, have not returned yet, some declaring they would remain away until after January 1, so as to be at home for the holiday season. They think little important business will be transacted until after the beginning of the new year.

Although the program had not been definitely formulated, members look forward to tackling one of the most ambitious legislative tasks that congress in a long time has attempted. Here are some of the subjects of legislation that the new congress will take up:

Final action on the currency bill.
Anti-trust legislation.
Rural credits.
Naval program.
Passage of a dozen appropriation bills.
Train safety and safety on the ocean.
Regulation of the shipping trust.
Final action on the reports of lobby investigating committees.
The cost of living problem.
Legislation to protect women workers.
River and harbor budget.
Legislation looking to the building of a government railroad in Alaska.

May Have to oCnsider Mexico.

Another important matter which it is believed will engage the attention of congress, is discussion of the Mexican problem. However, this depends on the action of President Wilson. There will be no action relative to Mexico, most members think, unless the president gives it his approval.

TRY TO SAVE CHIEF PRIEST

Fight on to Keep Head of Sun Cult Worshippers Out of Jail.

Chicago, Dec. 2.—In the United States court here is being staged the fight to keep out of the penitentiary the head of one of the oldest religions now maintaining temples of worship. Their chief priest, convicted of sending obscene literature by express and their book of inner secrets branded as unfit for circulation, the followers of Zoroaster in this country, Europe and the Orient are facing the heaviest blow ever dealt them since the Mohammedans drove the Parsees out of Persia.

According to the researches of the United States district attorney's office here Otoman Zar Adusht Hanish, convicted Friday and now awaiting the result of his attorney's motion to appeal, is the successor of Zarathushtra and the recognized high priest of every temple of the Zoroastrian religion.

Buffalo for South Dakota.

New York, Dec. 2.—To repopulate the west as much as possible with the great animals that once abounded there by the thousands, fourteen American bison have been shipped from Bronx Park here where they were born, to Hot Springs, S. D., where they will be turned out on the Wind Cave National park.

"Back to Africa" Invitation.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 2.—A formal invitation from a royal chieftan of Ashantee, West Africa, to the negroes of Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri, to locate in that country, is to be delivered soon to Boley, Okla., a negro town. Notice that Chief Albert Sam of Akim, tribe Ashantee, would start for America with the invitation, was received by those in charge of the "back to Africa movement." Sixty-four acres of land have been promised the American negroes by each of the 12 tribes on which to build modern cities.

SAMUEL L. SHANK

Threats of impeachment forced Mayor Shank of Indianapolis to resign. The mayor has been severely criticised for his orders to the police not to ride on street cars during the recent strike. Now a teamster's strike is about to be called in Indianapolis, and Shank, unable to head off the strike, resigned rather than face the trouble the newest strike would bring him.

TRY TO ASPHYXIATE FUGITIVE

SHERIFFS CLOSE EXITS TO MINE AND TURN ON GAS.

Murderer of Six Men Has Held Them at Bay, So Far—Victims' Bodies Recovered.

Bingham, Utah., Dec. 2.—While Ralph Lopez, the slayer of six men, was attempting to batter down a bulkhead at the entrance of the tunnel in the Utah Apex mine, a posse penetrated an incline and brought out the bodies of Deputy Sheriffs Douglass Halsey and Tom Mandrich, the victims of the desperado in a subterranean gun fight Saturday. A development was the report that Mike Cranovich, who shot and seriously wounded his wife several days ago, also is a fugitive in the mine and is co-operating with Lopez.

Two deputies on guard at the mouth of the mine opened fire with revolvers when Lopez began breaking down the bulkhead and he retreated after prying away one board. That he is suffering from hunger is the belief of the officers, as he has been in the mine with only a small supply of food since Thursday.

Hundreds of Americans and foreigners begged for the opportunity to search the mine for the murdered deputy.

Only five, led by F. E. Strauper, mayor-elect of Bingham, were allowed to penetrate the workings. After two attempts, they brought out the bodies, which had been dragged by Lopez a considerable distance up an incline. Outwitted repeatedly since Lopez began his career of bloodshed, on Nov. 21, the pursuing sheriffs of seven counties, in council, decided to batten up the mine and attempt to asphyxiate the fugitive with poisonous gases.

Accordingly, fourteen of the fifteen exits were stopped with bulkheads. The work of filling the mine with gas is under way.

WEATHER OF ENSUING WEEK

Cold Wave Due Thursday—Eastern Part of Nation to Have Bad Week, Says Forecast.

Washington, Dec. 2.—Another week of bad weather is ahead for the eastern part of the country, according to the weather bureau.

"The eastward movement of a disturbance now over the lower Arkansas valley," the weekly bulletin sets forth, "will result in a continuance of the unsettled, rainy weather during the early days of the week over the eastern half of the country, with possibly some snow over the extreme northern districts.

"Generally fair weather will follow for a day or so after, but the eastward movement of another marked disturbance now over Arizona probably will be attended by rains over the southern districts from the Rocky mountains eastward.

"This disturbance will be followed by fair and colder weather that will reach the central valleys after the middle of the week and the eastern states by the end of the week. Temperatures, however, will not be unusually low."

"Back to Africa" Invitation.

Guthrie, Okla., Dec. 2.—A formal invitation from a royal chieftan of Ashantee, West Africa, to the negroes of Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri, to locate in that country, is to be delivered soon to Boley, Okla., a negro town. Notice that Chief Albert Sam of Akim, tribe Ashantee, would start for America with the invitation, was received by those in charge of the "back to Africa movement." Sixty-four acres of land have been promised the American negroes by each of the 12 tribes on which to build modern cities.

Sabbath Reading.

"Louise, I really cannot permit you to read novels on Sunday."

"But grandmamma, this novel is all right; it tells about a girl who was engaged to three Episcopal clergymen, all at once."—Life.

Where Found.

"I notice that you quote the classics quite often."

"Yes. I don't know what I would do if it were not for the back part of my dictionery"

The Cause.

"I am afraid the young doctor who is courting our daughter may send in a bill about it."

"How can he?"

"For visits connected with a heart affection."

The Difference.

"What is the difference between a political gathering and one of a hunt club?"

"I know. One is a mass meeting and the other is a meet massing."

He Explains.

"Is this milk pasteurized?" asked the city lady.

"From the start," said the old farmer. "Instead of grazing our cows in a meadow, as many do, we graze them in a pasture."

Sensible Girl.

"How about being an old man's darling?"

"There's no necessity for it. I've found a young man with the price of a bungalow."

An Ingenuous Answer.

Clergyman—Do you remember me, my dear?

Little Girl—I don't 'member your name, but you're the gen'leman mother makes me stay awake an' listen to in church.—Life.

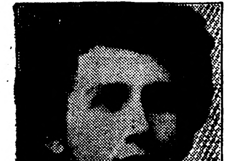
Wearisome.

"Botts tells me he took a long trip this morning."

"Where'd he go?"

"He rode two blocks on a street car with Biffels."

"I BELIEVE PE-RU-NA SAVED MY LIFE."



Mrs. Charles Anspaugh

Mrs. Charles Anspaugh, R. R. 1, Kimmell, Noble Co., Indiana, writes: "Peruna has been a godsend to me. I can feel safe in saying that it saved my life, as I was all run down and was just miserable when I commenced taking your Peruna, but am on the road to recovery now. I cannot thank you too much."

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets.

Ask Your Druggist for Free Peruna Lucky Day Almanac for 1914.

Neuralgia

sufferers find instant relief in Sloan's Liniment. It penetrates to the painful part—soothes and quiets the nerves. No rubbing—merely lay it on.

SLOAN'S LINIMENT Kills Pain

For Neuralgia

"I would not be without your Liniment and praise it to all who suffer with neuralgia or rheumatism or pain of any kind."—Mrs. Henry Bishop, Helena, Missouri.

Pain All Gone

"I suffered with quite a severe neuralgic headache for 4 months without any relief. I used your Liniment for two or three nights and I haven't suffered with my head since."—Mr. J. R. Swinger, Louisville, Ky.

Treatments for Cold and Croup

"My little girl, twelve years old, caught a severe cold, and I gave her three drops of Sloan's Liniment on sugar on going to bed, and she got up in the morning with no signs of a cold. A little boy next door had croup and I gave the mother the Liniment. She gave him three drops on going to bed, and he got up without the croup in the morning."—Mr. W. H. Strange, Chicago, Ill.

At all Dealers. Price 25c., 50c. and $1.00

Sloan's Book on Horses sent free. Address

DR. EARL S. SLOAN, Inc., Boston, Mass.

The Typewriter for the Rural Business Man

Whether you are a small town merchant or a farmer, you need a typewriter.

Ball Bearing Long Wearing

If you are writing your letters and bills by hand, you are not getting full efficiency.

It doesn't require an expert operator to run the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter. It is simple, compact, complete, durable.

Send in the attached coupon and we will give especial attention to your typewriter needs.

L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co., Syracuse, N.Y.
Please send me your free book about typewriters.
Name..
P. O...
State..

$35 to $75 WEEKLY IN A BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN

We need a man—Farmer's son preferred—to handle household necessities always in use, territory is free—work profitable, steady and healthful.

No Experience Necessary WE TEACH YOU FREE

If you are ambitious for a business all your own, write for our plan—we will explain everything in detail, many are making big money every week under our direction and plans of Modern Merchandising. You can do the same—this is your opportunity—take advantage of it—write today.

OUR SALESMAN WAGON

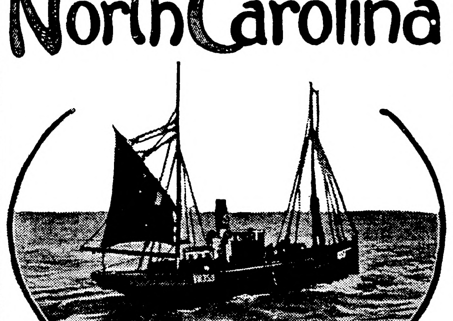
KOCH V. T. CO
BOX M
Winona, Minn.

Pain in Back and Rheumatism

are the daily torment of thousands. To effectually cure these troubles you must remove the cause. Foley Kidney Pills begin to work for you from the first dose, and exert so direct and beneficial an action in the kidneys and bladder that the pain and torment of kidney trouble soon disappears.

25 CTS. PISO'S REMEDY 25 CTS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

Inlets of Old North Carolina



TYPE OF FISHING BOAT

THE North Carolina coast is a paradise for fishermen, and the past season has proven no exception to the rule. October and November are the banner months for the sportsmen, but there is good fishing at practically all times. In October and November continuous north and east winds cause the fish to leave the bays, creeks and rivers and seek the warmer waters of the ocean, "schooling up," preparatory to migrating south. The waters around Beaufort, N. C., seem to have an especial attraction for a great variety of fish, much to the surprise and delight of visiting sportsmen. Among the many kinds caught with hook and line, are blue fish, sea trout, (squeteague) Spanish mackerel, sheepshead, black fish spot, flounders, sea bass, butterfish, croakers, drum, king fish, cero with an occasional tarpon and cabio. The individual weight of the last three mentioned, being anywhere from 10 to 70 pounds.

Some Big Catches.

Along Bogue, and Core sounds, around Harker's island, in the straits, and along the sandy shores, from Beaufort inlet to Cape Lookout Point, (a distance of ten miles), netters are continuously on the watch for mullet during the fall months. The fish, at this time are large and fat, often weighing from two to three pounds. When a catch is made they are sold to the fish houses in the town, and immediately dressed, cleaned and salted down in barrels of about 100 pounds each, shipped throughout the state and to northern markets. The seine fishing is done by the larger boats, outside the three-mile limit. Often large catches are made in this way. The record catch of the season was made by the schooner "George B. Balstor," consisted of 66,000 pounds, selling on the wharf for $1,600, being about two and one-half cents per pound. This catch was exceeded a year ago by the schooner "Dewey," when 90,000 pounds were taken at one haul. This lot was sold for $2,250 spot cash. Some 12 or 15 men constitute the crew, and in the case of the latter no man aboard received less than $80 for his share. The owners of the boat, captain and mate, of course, receiving much more.

Shrimp are also caught along shore in great quantities during August, September and October. These are brought to the fish houses, dumped on the floor, and every boy, white or colored, who wants a job, and can get a box to sit on, is set to work "heading" the shrimp, as shown in the illustration. Both hands are employed in this work. The beheaded shrimp are thrown into a bucket in front of each boy. The full bucket is taken to the floor boss, who gives each boy credit. The shrimp are then packed in boxes with cracked ice, layer for layer, and immediately shipped north. Great hauls of shrimp have recently been made, the largest consisted of 82 boxes (about one and one-half bushels to a box), they were sold on the wharf at $7 per box; $574 in all. The waters outside of the inlet were alive last fall with edible fish, and the "hook and liners" are having great sport, many declaring that the fish were so plentiful they could feel the sinker striking against their backs as it went down.

One seine fishing boat brought to the fish house recently 10,000 pounds of trout (weak fish), as three other boats brought in 5,000, 3,000 and 2,000 pounds, respectively.

Odor Only Waste.

Greatest in point of value are the menhaden, often called bunkers, or fatbacks. These fish are very rich in oil, and millions of them are taken, to one of the edible variety. Twenty auxiliary schooners, with capacity of 200,000 to 300,000 are employed during the season from May to December in catching these fish. Six factories, in the vicinity, receive these fish from the boats, paying at the rate of $1 per 1,000 for them. The fish are "tried out" for the oil, and the remainder, called "scrap," is dried and sold for fertilizer. Nothing is lost or wasted, except the odor, which permeates the air for miles to leeward of the factories. The fish are hoisted from the hold of the vessel by means of an endless chain of buckets, emptied into cars at the top of the hoist, and so carried on the railway to the factory.

Some ten miles from Beaufort inlet, the coast makes a sharp right-angled bend, with Cape Lookout at the apex. From the end of the cape, a narrow line of shoals, of coral formation, extends much farther out. The cape, and its submerged continuation forms a wall, as it were, reaching seaward 15 miles or more. Cape Lookout is so shaped as to embrace a bay, a quiet and beautiful sheet of water, called "Lookout Bight." The coast configuration thus forms a remarkable natural trap into which fall the fish, migrating northward.

HISTORIANS AND THEIR WORK

American Authors Occupy Foremost Places in the Ranks of Those Whom the World Honors.

Views of what is the distinctive historical faculty, whether breadth of vision, power or organization, philosophical insight, or narrative talent, must vary as widely as historical styles and aims; but upon one requirement, skill and patience in research, all agree. Even the impressionistic author of the "French Revolution" had to bewail in his "Frederick the Great" "the mountains of dust and ashes to be tumbled down to disengage the truly memorable." It is in this light that one notes with especial pleasure the remarks of James Ford Rhodes about the preeminent advantages of America in her historical depositories. Even foreign detractors, he told the American Antiquarian society, must admire "the easy and methodical arrangement of our historical materials, the accessibility of our libraries, and the various helps" connected with them; particularly since their own scholars still had "to pore over books without indexes, and delve among manuscripts in dusty archives." The justice of his statement needs no comment. A remarkable historical zeal has long been manifested in America. Every state and nearly every large city has its historical library; colleges and universities are jealous of their collections; the veriest hamlets, in our older localities, have their historical and genealogical societies; and private accumulations are innumerable—all freely at the service of the investigator. The organization before which Mr. Rhodes spoke has itself closed a century in gathering a specialized accumulation of almost unique fullness. Only the federal government may be accused of lagging behind.—New York Evening Post.

Real "Deserted Village."

A "deserted village" which contains only one single soul, a woman, is that of Woolstein, a hamlet near Cassel, in Prussia. It has been abandoned by its inhabitants on the ground that life there is hopeless. The soil is sterile, and the authorities refused to link the village to the outer world by rail. About a hundred of the inhabitants left in a body for America a few weeks ago, and since then those who were left behind have been moving daily to neighboring villages and towns The village school was closed not many days ago because there were no more pupils, and on the following Sunday service was held for the last time in the village church. The houses are empty, and the village looks as if it had been swept by the plague. Only one inhabitant remains, Frau Hoeft, a shepherdess, who is eighty years old, and declares that she will die in the village where she was born.

Benevolent Earthquake.

Earthquakes, as a general rule, are disturbances not greatly desired, but one occurred at Piru, Ventura county, a few days ago that proved a money maker for the Diamond Valley Oil company—most of the stockholders of which are Anaheim parties. The Diamond Valley company had been having lots of trouble with No 1 well, which ceased to be a producer on account of water. The trembler came along when the well was about to be abandoned, and completely shut off the water and started a fine flow of 32-gravity oil. The well is expected to continue as a steady producer, notwithstanding the queer way in which it was brought in.—Anaheim (Cal.) Correspondent Plain Dealer.

MANITOBA CROP YIELDS

Gladstone, Man., reports that the wheat crop of 1913 exceeded all expectations, 30 bushels per acre was the general yield. The grade was never better. One farmer had 400 acres in wheat, which weighed 66 pounds to the bushel.

On Portage Plains, Manitoba, there were some remarkable yields. Noah Elgert had 61 bushels of wheat per acre; the government farm, 61 bushels; Geo. E. Stacey, 54; T. J. Hall, John Ross and D. W. McCuaig, 50; W. Richardson, 51; M. Owens, 61½; Anderson and Turnbull, 60; J. Lloyd, 48½; Jas. Bell and Robt. Brown, 48; R. S. Tully, 52; J. Wishart, 49¼; Philip Page, 47; J. Stewart, 45; J. W. Brown, 30; Chester Johnson, 44; E. H. Muir, 42; L. A. Bradley, 43; W. Boddy, 40; Albert Davis, 43; E. McLenaghen, 37; farming the same land for 40 years, J. Wishart secured a crop of 49½ bushels to the acre, the best he ever had, and the yield of Mr. Bradley's was on land plowed this spring.

Marquette, Man., Sept. 21.—Splendid weather has enabled the farmers of this section to make good progress with the cutting and harvesting of this season's crop. Wheat is averaging twenty bushels to the acre, with barley forty-five and oats going seventy. There has been no damage of any description.

Binscarth, Man., says: Good reports are coming from the machines of high yields and good sample. The elevators are busy shipping cars every day.

Dauphin, Man., Sept. 13.—Threshing is general the grain is in good shape and the weather is ideal. The samples are best ever grown here, grading No. 1 Northern. The returns are larger than expected in nearly every case. E. B. Armstrong's wheat went thirty-four bushels to the acre, others twenty-five to twenty-seven.

Binscarth, Man., Sept. 3.—Cutting is finished here and threshing is in full swing. This part of the province is keeping up its record, wheat averaging twenty-five bushels to the acre.—Advertisement.

Agricultural Fact.

Poisons excreted by past crops and left behind in the soil depress the growth of succeeding crops of the same kind have been reported, and believed in, by agricultural experts. Their theory is disproved by work conducted by the great Rothamsted experimental station in England, and presented in the transactions of the Royal society of London by Alfred D. Hall, F. R. S., and his assistants, Winifred E. Brenchley and Lilian Marion Underwood. Their research yielded "no evidence of the existence in soils on which a particular plant had been growing for sixty years and upward of a soluble 'toxin' having a depressing effect upon the growth of that plant."

Hitting Two Birds.

"So my former henchman refuses to obey me!" exclaimed the boss. "Bring me my trusty whitewash brush!"

"Surely you are not going to give him the benefit of it!"

"No. I'll let the whitewash splash my way while I use the reverse end as a club."—Washington Star.

USE ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, the Antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes for Tender, aching feet. It takes the sting out of corns and bunions and makes walking a delight. Sold everywhere, 25c. Refuse substitutes. For FREE trial package, address A. S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y. Adv.

The Menu.

"Did you have a homily when your minister came to dinner?"

"No, we had fried chicken."

This Is Vital to Every Owner OF A Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Car

Made at Tarrytown, N. Y. and New Castle, Ind., 1905 to 1913

Also to all Owners of Stoddard-Dayton, 1905 to 1914; Columbia Gasoline and Electrics, 1906 to 1914; Everitt Cars of Any Model; Brush, Sampson and Courier Cars

THERE ARE THREE GOOD REASONS why you should have your car overhauled now and worn parts replaced.

FIRST: The garage man can give you better service—and you can spare the car better now than later. No matter whether you are going to keep the car, or sell or trade it in on a new one—it will pay you well to have it thoroughly overhauled, worn parts replaced by new ones and body repainted.

SECOND: We are able to furnish replacement parts for all models of above makes of cars within 48 hours from receipt of order. Have concentrated this branch of the business at Newcastle, Ind. (center of population of the U. S.) Here we have a $1,750,000 investment in plant and stock. 45,000 separate bins of parts.

THIRD: And perhaps the best reason why you should secure your requirements now—we must increase prices 20% January 1st, when the new parts price lists will be off the presses.

NOW NOTE THIS—Never before in the history of this industry has a new concern, having bought the plants and assets of a bankrupt one, taken upon itself the obligation of furnishing replacement parts for the cars it never made.

THE MAXWELL MOTOR COMPANY DID. We considered it good business, even if not a moral or legal obligation.

WE FOUND 122,000 owners out in the cold, as it were—pleading for parts. Their cars laid up and useless in most cases.

WE'VE INVESTED about one and three-quarters millions ($1,750,000) dollars in a plant and stock of parts, for over 150 different models, made by the concerns that comprised the United States Motor Company, whose assets we purchased from the Receiver thru the U. S. Courts.

WE TOOK THE NAME MAXWELL solely for the protection of 60,000 persons who had bought cars under that name.

HAD WE CHOSEN ANOTHER NAME those 60,000 cars would have had almost no value in the second-hand market. As it is, they have a definite value. And by the replacement of the worn parts your car will be good for a long time to come.

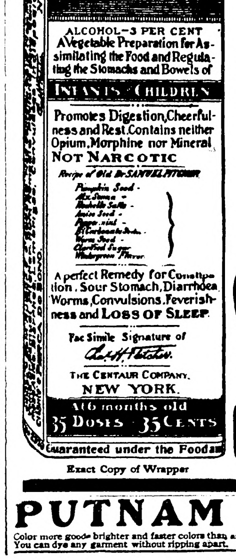
ANY RECOGNIZED DEALER or repair man—whether he handles the present Maxwell line or not—can procure these parts for you. Or you can order direct. Shipment will be made within 24 to 48 hours after receipt of the order at Newcastle.

Write for our booklet, "How to Make Your Car Live Twice As Long." In which we set forth the Maxwell policy toward owners of the above mentioned cars. Address

Maxwell Motor Co., Inc.
1003 Woodward Avenue
DETROIT, MICH.

Note: For quicker service those living East of the Alleghenies can order from Maxwell Motor New York Co., 13th & East Ave., Long Island City. From the Alleghenies to the Rockies, order direct from Maxwell Motor Newcastle Co., Newcastle, Ind. West of the Rockies, order from Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation, 675 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE
A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year.
Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking.
Next term opens soon. For full information address F. L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota



900 DROPS
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral
NOT NARCOTIC
Recipe of Old Dr SAMUEL PITCHER
Pumpkin Seed -
Alx. Senna -
Rochelle Salts -
Anise Seed -
Peppermint -
Bi Carbonate Soda -
Worm Seed -
Clarified Sugar -
Wintergreen Flavor.
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP.
Fac Simile Signature of
THE CENTAUR COMPANY.
NEW YORK.
At 6 months old
35 DOSES - 35 CENTS
Guaranteed under the Food

Exact Copy of Wrapper

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children.
The Kind You Have Always Bought
Bears the Signature of
Chas. H. Fletcher
In Use For Over Thirty Years
CASTORIA
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

Fargo Directory

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.

EARN 25 TO 100 A WEEK
Young Men Wanted to fill the demand of Automobile and Gas Traction Engineers. "Now is the time to act." Write for free information. Fargo School of Automobile & Gas Engineering, 1018 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakota

Fargo Tannery
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

JOSEPH & HOENCK
Manufacturing furriers Wholesale and retail. Repairing, remodeling and redyeing. Furs stored and insured during summer months. Raw Furs Bought.
JOSEPH & HOENCK
59 Broadway Fargo, N. D.

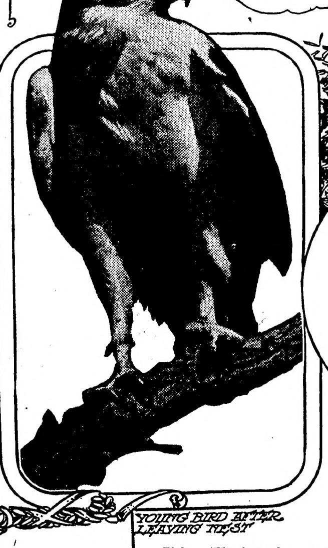
W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 49-1913.

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. WRITE FOR FREE booklet, calendar, blotters, etc. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

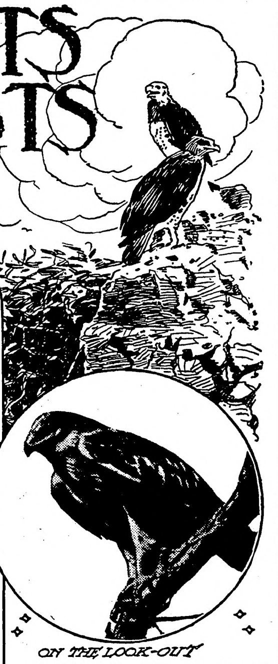
BIRD THAT FIGHTS BURROWING PESTS

THIS splendid bird is undoubtedly the most powerful hawk met with in Montana, where it is usually called eagle, and its carrying power is remarkable, as the sequel will show. It does no harm, but, on the contrary, wages unceasing warfare against such pests as prairie dogs, gophers and meadow mice, and should, therefore, be universally protected; nevertheless it has unfortunately become very scarce, excepting in one or two favored localities, where it is strictly preserved. Although a good deal has been written about the ferruginous rough-leg (Archibuteo ferrugineus), I am not aware that it has, hitherto, been studied or photographed at the nest. Last summer Mr. W. R. Felton kept four nests of this hawk under observation for me, and visited them whenever his work allowed him time, writes E. S. Cameron in Country Life. These four nests were within a radius of four miles from Mr. Felton's headquarters at the Square Butte ranch in Chouteau county, and others were reported seven miles away. Besides the above, Mr. Felton found four disused, but well preserved, eyries—two of them within a quarter of a mile of an occupied nest. All eight nests were placed upon rocky ledges or points. They were constructed of the same materials, which consisted of sage brush and greasewood sticks, with some soapweed intermixed, and lined with dry cow dung. As will be seen from the measurements, the loose pile of sticks made the new nests remarkably high, but they settled considerably before the young had flown. A brief history of one of these nests condensed from Mr. Felton's notes is as follows: The nest was only two miles north of the Square Butte ranch, easily visible from there through powerful binoculars, and was visited almost every day. This particular nest was picturesquely situated on a rocky point of the "Chalk Cliffs" northeast of the geologically famous "Square Butte," which, despite its modest name, is an immense rock constituting an isolated spur of the Highwood mountains, 2,600 feet above the prairie. In reality the so-called "Chalk Cliffs" consist of an outcrop of white sandstone, chiefly in the center of a range of grass-covered hills whose green summits rise in strong contrast above the white corrugated rocks. This sandstone stratum has been worn into a series of perpendicular cliffs, pure white above, but stained light brown below by lignitic matter, and projecting spurs are carved into fantastic pinnacles and mounds. One promontory in particular is a regular saw-tooth ridge. The nest here shown is poised upon the apex of a pillar which terminates a knife-blade projection 3,575 feet high, and suggests in some photographs the prow of a ship. As there is a sheer vertical descent on three sides, and the surface of the connecting ridge suddenly breaks off, leaving a wide fissure in the rock between it and the nest, it is a task of no small difficulty to reach the latter and one best suited to a sailor or a cat. It can only be accomplished by approaching the eyrie from above, and then crawling along the ledge, when, by dropping into and crossing the gap (which is well shown in the photograph), the nest can be attained. Mr. Felton, making light of the danger, climbed frequently to the nest, and made numerous exposures with a small camera at the range of a few feet. The nest was four feet in height and three and a half feet in diameter, and was higher than any Montana eyries of the golden eagle known to me, which species has also nested in the "Chalk Cliffs." (In his recently published "History of the Birds of Colorado," Mr. W. L. Sclater mentions a golden eagle's nest which measured "six feet in diameter and nine feet high.") The hawks carried green alfalfa to the nest for decorative purposes, and Mr. Felton noticed a fresh supply there on three separate occasions. When found on May 18 the eyrie contained three newly hatched young, but only two reached maturity, as one of the nestlings disappeared on July 9 when fifty-two days old. Mr. Felton conjectured that it had been blown out of the nest by a violent thunderstorm, but the two stronger birds might have ejected their weaker brother. In any event, the outcast would soon have been picked up by some four-footed or winged marauder. The two remaining fledglings permanently left their nest on July 25, when about nine weeks old. While watching at this nest, at two o'clock one afternoon, Mr. Felton observed a great horned owl flying along the cliff face in an easterly direction. The owl passed close to the nestlings, when one of the soaring hawks, presumably the female, was seen to swoop at and strike the interloper, which thereupon dived obliquely to the ground. The hawk made two more dashes at the sitting owl, and a short squabble ensued each time between the birds; but when Mr. Felton reached the place, the owl was nowhere to be seen, and the hawk had returned to her nestlings. As the great horned owl is a powerful and ferocious bird, which even attacks and eats large hawks (see Fisher, "Hawks and Owls of the United States," page 175), it undoubtedly beat off its assailant without difficulty. So far as I have observed in eastern Montana, the ferruginous rough-leg feeds chiefly upon prairie dogs and meadow mice, though not averse to snakes. In my opinion it never takes frogs. Like golden eagles, these hawks often hunt amicably in pairs, and then appear to be more courageous, attacking mammals as large as jackrabbits. Mr. Felton made many valuable observations on the food habits of these hawks during the nesting season, and discovered the fact, new to science, that they prey upon birds as well as on mammals. Over the whole course of his observations until the young birds had flown, prairie dogs were found largely to exceed all other diet; but until the nestlings were about two weeks old, their food consisted partly of meadowlarks (Sturnella neglecta). While very little food was found in the nest, taking into consideration the frequent visits paid to it, there were seen altogether nine prairie dogs, one cotton-tail rabbit, two bull snakes (one 31 inches long) and some remains of sharp-tailed grouse and meadowlarks. On two separate occasions, while Mr. Felton kept watch near the eyrie, the wary female frequently passed and repassed overhead with a meadowlark in her talons, as subsequently identified. The bill of fare at all four eyries was similar, and meadowlarks, as demonstrated by their down and feathers, were provided for the nestlings. The following interesting collection of remnants was seen at one nest: Four prairie dog skulls, the skeletons of two bull snakes (one of them being very large), the leg of a sharp-tailed grouse, the wing and scapulars of a magpie and the primaries of a meadowlark. Grouse and magpie remains were not found until July 17 and 21, and were proved by the feathers to belong to young birds. To the best of my knowledge, this species never attempts to take poultry of any kind, and my own observations are strongly confirmed by Mr. W. P. Sullivan, for 16 years manager of Mr. Milner's beautiful Square Butte ranch, where these hawks have always been protected on account of the numerous gophers (Thomomys) which they destroy. As above narrated, several pair breed annually upon the ranch, and are constantly flying around the buildings, yet no chickens have ever been molested. Mr. Sullivan, who is a close observer of nature, considers that, after the young can fly in the fall, these hawks subsist chiefly upon gophers, and he has described to me their methods of capturing them as follows: "I have watched the hawks often through glasses in our alfalfa field after the first crop has been taken off. The pocket gophers get pretty busy tunneling, and pushing all the loose damp earth up in piles on the surface. The hawks fly slowly over the field until they discover a fresh pile of damp earth. Here they will alight softly, and wait for the gopher to push close to the surface. They will then spread their wings and, rising a few feet in the air, come down stiff-legged into the loose earth, when the gopher is transfixed and brought out. I have seen them eat the gopher where caught, and at other times carry it away."

In the summer of 1903 about an acre of ground at the Square Butte ranch was covered with piles of building material, such as lumber, posts and heavy shed timbers, which had been collected there the previous year. Numbers of cotton-tail rabbits lived under these piles, and provided an occasional meal, both for the hawks and for the ranch cat, which was a female tabby. On a certain day Mr. Milner (owner of the ranch) happened to be engaged in conversation with Mr. Sullivan near a pile of posts, upon which the cat was basking in the sun with one eye open for a chance rabbit, as usual. A ferruginous rough-leg, with nestlings in the white cliffs, was gyrating low over the buildings, but neither the gentlemen nor the cat took particular notice of this familiar sight. Both men were, however, suddenly startled by a loud whirring noise, when to their intense surprise they saw that the hawk had lifted the now bewildered and struggling cat from her couch on the posts and was slowly bearing her aloft. It seemed at first to the astonished spectators as though the hawk would actually succeed in disposing of this troublesome quarry, since it continued to rise easily with its burden to a height of about 25 feet. By this time, however, the fully-aroused victim was stirred to a desperate effort, and it became clear that the audacious hawk had "bitten off more than it could chew." In Mr. Sullivan's words, the tabby "twisted round, gave a terrible splutter and scream, and clawed the hawk with a vengeance." The latter, flapping wildly, at once relaxed its grip, while pussy, nothing loth, withdrew her claws, fell to the ground and dashed under the posts. Numerous downy feathers floating gently to the ground convinced the onlookers that the chagrined hawk had none the best of the encounter. Temporarily tired of cats, it now soared to a great height, and returned with empty talons to the "chalk cliffs." The cat in question was a very small one, and Montana cats are notably thin in summer; but, allowing for these facts, the victim must have weighed six pounds at least. Nevertheless, Mr. Sullivan feels sure that had the cat behaved like the rabbit for which she was mistaken, the hawk would successfully have conveyed the quarry to its eyrie in the rocks. As the nest was two miles distant this would seem an extraordinary feat, and presumably transcend any hitherto published records of the kind. I quite admit that under favorable conditions of wind the female hawk might transport a five or six-pound jackrabbit to the eyrie; but that any cat-lifting hawk should ever surpass what this one achieved seems to me improbable. The dexterous application of the cat's raking claws would not fail to prevent it as in the above remarkable instance. Where a rabbit succumbs to the shock and the hawk's constricting grip, the agile and wiry feline, on the other hand, is stimulated to offer a desperate resistance, and, like Mr. Sullivan's protege, is little the worse for the encounter. It cannot be told whether the hawk was mistrustful of rabbits after this event, but the cat became so suspicious of a flying object that she would race for the wood pile if Mr. Sullivan threw his hat into the air.



YOUNG BIRD AFTER LEAVING NEST



ON THE LOOK-OUT

THE NESTLINGS CROUCHED LOW

A Thoughtful Wife

"Where's my new meerschaum pipe?" asked Mr. Cumso, after dinner. "I thought I left it on the mantel, back of the clock, when I quit smoking last night."

"Didn't I hear you say that it would take a long time to color that pipe, dear?" asked Mrs. Cumso.

"It is quite likely you did. The operation can not be performed all at once. But where is the pipe?"

"You know how anxious I am to save you all the work I can, dear?"

"Yes, just like the precious little woman you are; but what has that to do with the pipe?"

"Just this, love. I got to worrying over the long time it would take you to get it colored, and I wondered if I couldn't help you a bit."

"What! You don't mean to say you have been smoking the pipe yourself?"

"Oh, no! But a poor tramp came to the house this morning. He was smoking the forlornest little bit of a pipe, and——"

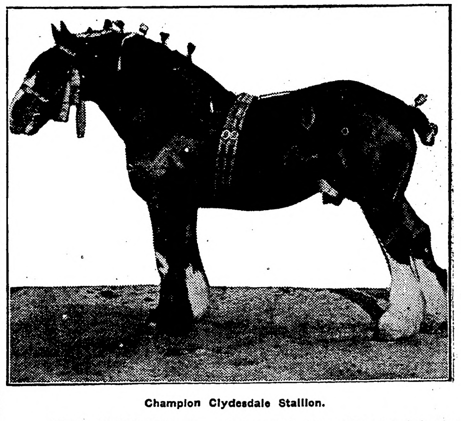
"Go on!" commanded Mr. Cumso in a constrained voice, trying to keep calm. "You have made him a present of my meerschaum, I suppose?"

"Oh, no! Your little wife isn't quite so foolish as all that."

"Then what has the tramp to do with the pipe?"

"Don't be impatient, dear, and I'll tell you. I remembered what you said about the long time it would take you to color it, and so I asked the man if he would smoke it all day for a dollar. He said no; that a dollar and a quarter was the lowest he could do it for. So I told him I'd pay him that. He's out in the back yard now, working hard; and he really seems to enjoy it. Yet some people say that tramps can't be induced to work. But where are you going, love? Not downtown so early, are you? Now I wonder what's made that man so cross?" she added, as her husband slammed the door.—Puck.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR FARM WORK



Champion Clydesdale Stallion.

(By M. COVERDELL.)

If the American farmer would make more use of the fanning mill, his live stock would get more real sustenance from pure grain, our grass and grain crops would be of a purer grade, and our fields would not be seeded down to weeds every year by the weed seeds passing through the animals and being deposited in their manure; then hauled out and scattered in this rich, seed bed over the fields.

If the farmer's cows sleep on a frozen or snowy bed at night, and are given a single roughage ration throughout the winter—what will the cream harvest be?

Don't be too liberal with feed where a whole herd of stock is fed together, as some of them will mince over and waste it, while others will eat enough to overload their digestive systems, which also may be regarded as a waste, as well as a danger to their good health and proper growth.

Sifting snow makes it mighty easy for dampness to creep into the nesting in the hog-houses, and this, together with the chill of wintry weather, is sure to wield a most deteriorating influence on the good health and profit-producing qualities of the herd.

Don't hitch the colt to a vehicle the first time he is in harness. If he wants to cut any antics, let it be while he is hitched to a small log, a sled, or something he cannot damage and at the same time imperil someone's life and limb.

Don't forget to make a note of all the trees that have died and been removed from the orchard, so that the same varieties may be ordered with which to fill up these places.

If our farmers would but visit the schools more, and thus see what progress the boys and girls are making, and help co-operate with them and their teacher, we might reasonably expect some beneficial reforms in our present school system.

A cheap, effective and lasting horse-blanket may be made by joining together three large, close-woven sacks in which oil-meat or some fine boughten feed-stuff has been shipped, lining it with a cheap grade of canton flannel to add warmth.

Keep down the too rank growth of the grape vines by fertilizing them with common wood-ashes. They furnish the necessary muriate of potash for developing the highest quality of fruit, with little danger of rot occurring. The application of poultry droppings, along with the ashes, will supply sufficient fertilizer of an enriching nature.

Get the calf to eating the milder grains and boughten feed-stuffs as early as possible. It will not only mean saving of milk, which may be fed to something else on the farm, but the little fellow will grow more rapidly by getting him accustomed to eating such rations as oats, shorts, bran, etc. These, with a very small quantity of skim-milk and the grass he secures, cannot fail to promote a healthy development of bone and muscle, the prime requisites to a profitable calf.

Grain and cold water are two articles that never should be given the horses immediately after hard work or a warm drive. First let their circulation get back to normal, thus avoiding the sudden shock of taking water into their heated systems or grain into their disturbed digestive organs.

There are just two extremes to be avoided when providing ventilation for stock or poultry in close quarters during the winter months. The first and most common is insufficient air, the other is too much.

We must not get the idea that it is necessary to close every opening in a building in order to keep the stock warm and in good health. Provide an aperture by which the fresh air may enter each building, and one that will allow the foul air to pass out as it is breathed and poison-laden; then regulate the size of the openings as the weather changes.

In ordinary weather, the size of ventilating holes will need to be practically the same, but in case of a storm, extremely severe cold or windy weather, there will be need of much less ventilation, lest the beneficial effect of fresh air be more than counterbalanced by the chilling influence of the passage of air, which is either too strong or too cold.

HINTS IN CARE OF POULTRY AND PIGEONS

Feeding Problem Is Greatly Simplified if Hens of Same Size Are Kept Together.

Never feed oats to pigeons, young or old.

Orange boxes make good nests for pigeons.

If you want big squabs, breed from big hens.

The homer is considered the best bird for squab profit.

Study the wants of each customer, and plan to meet them.

Pigeons must have clean bathing water at least three times a week.

When pigeons are a day old they are called "peepers," and when three weeks old "squealers."

A tablespoonful of baking-soda placed in the water two or three times a week will prevent bowel trouble.

Few men understand the possibilities of two dozen hens when worked up to the limit of their capacity.

If your breeder produces small, mushy squabs be sure there is something wrong. Clean out the lot and start anew.

Keep a close watch for the most thrifty and earliest maturing pullets and mark them for your next year's breeding pens.

Give the turkey hen a feed of grain at night. If fed heavily in the morning, she will not range so far with the youngsters as if she starts out to find her own breakfast.

The feeding problem is greatly simplified if females of about the same age are kept together. What is an ideal ration for old hens may be entirely wrong for pullets. Separate them so as to obtain approximate results while feeding.

MULES ON DELIVERY WAGONS IN COUNTRY

A matched mule team. The general-purpose mule is often observed wherever heavy hauling is being done and is also being used more and more on delivery wagons on the country routes. Under every condition he is found equal to the occasion.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

A Dutch Music Lesson

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

"I HAVE been expecting you for some days, Mr. Lane," said Lord Claude Tresham, when the young American stood before him in the library of his mansion on Park lane, London. "I learned some time ago that you had ceased to be associated with the League. Sit down and tell me precisely why."

Paul Lane answered with some vehemence:

"I was, as you probably know, induced to place my services and my fortune at the League's disposal by Her Highness Princess Clothilde," he began. "I say 'service and fortune,' although I believe that only the latter was required by the minds at the back of the organization. At first I was unaware of this. I threw myself with enthusiasm into the cause."

"That enthusiasm of you Americans will yet be the cause of your country's downfall," answered Lord Claude. "But please pardon the interruption. You found things different from what you had been led to expect?"

"Yes. I had been told that the League was an international association for promoting the principles of monarchy. I found it to be an anarchistic body, controlled by men of whose identity I was never informed. I worked in the dark, and they spent my money—some three millions of dollars—also in the dark. Finally, when the princess proposed that I should organize a conspiracy against my own country, which would have led to the absorption of all the Pacific coast states by a hostile power, I severed my connection. And so—"

"You have come to me to offer to place your services and your knowledge of affairs at the disposal of the counter-organization?" said Lord Claude. "I think you have acted wisely, Mr. Lane. The League is nothing but a criminal society, led by some of the younger and least influential of Europe's rulers. Under the cloak of devotion to monarchy—and no one believes more in that principle than I, for I am secretary of what is called, I believe, the Black Cabinet of Rulers—as I was saying, Mr. Lane, under this pretense the League has united all the criminal and anarchistic elments in Europe against the established order of society. I welcome you and trust that we shall deal with you more frankly than your late friends did."

Lord Claude dismissed Paul Lane cordially soon after, promising to call upon him as soon as the need for his services developed.

The summons from Lord Claude came more speedily than either man had anticipated. When, a few mornings after, Paul went to the secretary's house by invitation, he found him pacing the floor of his study in what in any other man would have been marked agitation. In Lord Claude, however, this mood evinced itself only by a sharper manner of speech than his habitual drawl and certain nervous movements of the hands.

"I am glad you have come so promptly, Mr. Lane," said Lord Claude. "I want you to go upon a mission of the utmost delicacy. I have not forgotten how you outwitted me in the matter of the kaiser's visit to Paris, when you were with our enemies, and if any man can clear up this situation, I know you can."

He handed Paul a cigarette, lit it, and resumed.

"Trouble is brewing in Holland—very serious trouble. Her Majesty Queen Wilhelmina, as you doubtless are aware, when she ascended the throne at the age of eighteen, became fascinated by the ideals of the League, and for a time assisted in its councils. Later, when her eyes had been opened to the true nature of this body, she withdrew from all participation in its schemes, thereby incurring the deadly hostility of the society. You are aware, of course, that her majesty visits Berlin on the fifth, in order to discuss with the kaiser the proposed fortification of Flushing, a measure which he has inspired, and which gives cause for considerable anxiety to England.

"Certain patriots of Holland, considering that the queen, in visiting Berlin, has betrayed her country, are planning a counter-measure, aided, of course by the ubiquitous League. What this is we do not know. We know only one fact—that it is to center around the Princess Juliana, her majesty's five-year-old daughter, and heir to the Dutch throne. It may be the plan to proclaim her queen in her mother's place; it may be something more dastardly. That is what we have to discover—and we rely on you to do it.

"There is no fear of a coup d'etat, for, during the queen's absence, together with her husband, the palace will be guarded by two regiments of loyal troops. What treachery is planned must be consummated by stealth. Your task will be to go to the palace, arriving on the fifth, immediately after her majesty has left. You will remain there until the eighth, one hour before the queen's return. She, of course, knows nothing of this. You will deliver your credentials to Herr Von Grobelaar, the Dutch ministetr for home affairs, who will be in attendance at the palace; you will take up your quarters there and will keep the Princess Juliana constantly under your supervision.

"Now, my dear Lane, there is a very unfortunate incident in this affair. The notorious Princess Clothilde, of Austria, who is well known to be connected with the League, has been installed at The Hague for several weeks as the Princess Juliana's music teacher. She has completely won the favor of Queen Wilhelmina, and all representations made to her majesty on this point have been fruitless. When the queen's mind is made up, nothing can shake her. In that respect she is a true Netherlander. And her majesty, unfortunately, has the most complete confidence in the Princess Clothilde. So you will have to regard the princess as an enemy within the gates. Von Grobelaar will doubtless post you on all necessary matters. You can trust him implicitly. Good morning, Mr. Lane. You will report to me here five days hence at the same hour."

The thought of meeting Clothilde again, matching himself against her, sent the blood coursing wildly through Paul's veins. He hurried home, packed his suit-case, and caught the next train for Harwich, whence a fast steamer landed him in Holland on the following morning. That afternoon he reached The Hague and he drove at once to the palace, and was soon in consultation with Von Grobelaar.

"I have received a communication from Lord Tresham," he said. "He has described you thoroughly, both in features and manner, so that I am confident that you are the person whom you represent yourself to be. You will appreciate the necessity of these precautions when I tell you that Holland is facing the greatest crisis in all her checkered history. Its precise nature is still unknown to us, but we know enough to be aware that it centers upon the Princess Juliana, and it will be effected tomorrow evening, as soon as the news is telephoned to The Hague that her majesty has ratified the treaty which is now pending with Germany. Your task will be to guard the little princess. You are to act under my orders as the princess' guardian until her majesty returns. In particular, you are to watch scrupulously the Princess Clothilde, who is quite well known to be an agent of the League, and who, unhappily, was placed in charge of the princess' musical tuition by her majesty, in spite of all our representations.

"Come, now," he added, "and I will introduce you to her highness."

With a beating heart Paul followed the old minister along the main corridor of the old-fashioned, rambling palace, until they entered the royal apartments. Sounds of a child practicing scales were heard as soon as the heavy swing doors were opened, and Von Grobelaar led Paul into the music room, where, seated upon a high stool, the royal princess was fingering a small keyboard with her tiny fingers, under the direction of Clothilde, who sat beside her on a straight-backed chair.

The entrance of the two caused an immediate cessation of the lesson. The child princess looked round curiously; the other princess, she of Austria, rose and stood looking at Paul defiantly.

"Mr. Lane and I are old acquaintances," murmured Clothilde, inclining her head.

During the remainder of that day the four never left one another. They seemed inspired by mutual distrust. Under other circumstances, it would have seemed comical to Paul for two men and two women to attend laboriously upon the wishes of a child that devoted its pampered day to playing with an enormous collection of toys—bricks, dolls of all kinds—and throwing them aside as it grew tired of each. But to Paul the situation was fraught with ghastly mockery. It was not until the little princess was safely in bed, under the guardianship of the capable nurse, that Paul found himself for a few moments alone with Clothilde.

"Monsieur, I learn that you have left the League," she said, in a tone of inquiry which startled him.

"I, too, am no longer connected with it," she said. "Monsieur, I, too, was unable to acquiesce in the demands made upon me. So now, you see me here, a revolutionary turned courtier, a humble music teacher to the Princess Juliana."

She was trying to disarm his suspicions; Paul saw that, and though he strove to conceal his knowledge of it, he could see that she knew.

"Monsieur Lane is still suspicious of me?" she asked mockingly. She came close to him and stood looking up at him, her arms at her sides, her lips temptingly close. "Monsieur has not repented of the harsh and cruel words he said to me when we met last?"

In another moment he would have caught her in his arms. But just then the door opened and the minister came slowly in. The princess started round, an angry look upon her face; then, recovering her self possession with amazing swiftness, she burst into laughter.

"I was just telling Monsieur Lane," she said, "that I am a revolutionary turned courtier. I believe that Monsieur suspects me of complicity in the plans of the conspirators."

Schooled as he was in diplomacy, Von Grobelaar could not help starting. This was the first allusion made in the palace, except in his own talk with Paul that morning, to what everyone knew.

"But let me say, Mynheer," went on Clothilde, "that I, for one, hope with all my heart that the German treaty will be ratified, and that tomorrow night we shall hear the good news by telephone. And in proof of my own good intentions, I request that, as soon as the news is verified, Her Highness the Princess Juliana may be permitted to play the Dutch National anthem upon the old state harpsichord in the royal museum."

"Thank you, mademoiselle," said Von Grobelaar coldly. "I am sure that the museum can be placed at your disposal if you desire it.

"Now, I wonder what deviltry is afoot," said Von Grobelaar thoughtfully.

"You do not trust her?" asked Paul, shaken with miserable doubt.

Von Grobelaar advanced and placed his hand in a kindly fashion upon the shoulder of the younger man. Perhaps he surmised the true condition of Paul's feelings.

"My boy," he said—"for you are only a boy compared with an old man like myself—I trust few men and no women in matters of state.' A man is bound by certain social codes. A woman has no code in such matters. Love them, worship them, serve them—but do not trust them, Paul."

"And how about her majesty the queen?" asked Paul with some indignation.

Von Grobelaar smiled wearily. "Her majesty is—Holland," he answered. "And Holland must be preserved. Come, Mr. Lane, forgive an old man's outburst, and let me see you to your sleeping quarters. You were not, I think, informed that they are those occupied by her majesty herself when she is in residence here, and that they command the approach to the Princess Juliana's room. Lock your door and take this pistol." He drew a serviceable weapon from his pocket and handed it to Paul. "But you are not likely to be called upon to use it," he added, "for two thousand loyal soldiers are at this moment under arms in The Hague and command all approaches to the palace."

It would be difficult for any man to sleep soundly after receiving such information, and Paul was no more phlegmatic than most men. He did not even undress, but resolving to be faithful to his trust, he started in to spend a watchful night. His first step was to assure himself that Von Grobelaar's statement as to the location of the princess' room was accurate. His first search was for the royal museum, and this he found to be upon the floor below his, and almost immediately beneath his apartment, except that, being of considerably larger size, it extended beneath the apartments of the princess and her nurses. It was devoted to the storage of articles and objects of no special intrinsic value, but much prized on account of their historical associations. Among these was the old harpsichord which was said to have been used by William of Orange, afterward William III. of England, and to which Clothilde had evidently referred.

But why had the Princess Clothilde selected this as the instrument on which her infant charge was to play the Dutch national anthem?

He resolved to examine the harpsichord in order to determine whether it could be reasonably associated with the design of Clothilde. For that, despite her denial, she was the center of the conspiracy, he entertained no doubt whatever.

He half expected to encounter Clothilde, bent upon the same nocturnal errand. It seemed incredible to him that she would not be watching for just such a visit on his part, if, indeed, there lay some sinister design beneath her project. But the corridors were deserted, and, when he reached the museum, he found that the door was unlocked. Inside a single electric light, burning over the door, showed him the switch. And in the center of the room stood the old harpsichord, wide open, its strings, though still serviceable, rusty with age.

It stood between one of the old state coaches and a curious wooden statue which, according to the printed story, which Paul spelled out with some difficulty, had once stood in the assembly house in the days of the Dutch republic. It was a grotesquely carved figure of Justice, of heroic size, and the finger of the uplifted hand reached to within two or three inches of the low ceiling. The statue absorbed Paul's attention but a moment. He turned to open the harpsichord. Somebody had evidently been playing on it at no remote date, for the dust which lay on it thickly had been carefully wiped away from the keyboard and a sheet of modern music lay on the square stool beside it. Paul picked this up and examined it. It was the Dutch national anthem. But it was written in G major.

This fact alone interested Paul considerably. The Dutch national song, like most such, is extremely simple, and is almost invariably played in the key of C major. The change from the key of C to that of G interested him at first as a musician.

Upon closer examination Paul perceived that the work was not printed at all, but written in ink, and so finely done that it would have passed for print at a cursory examination.

Why did Clothilde wish the princess, a child of five, whose musical education was necessarily of the most rudimentary character, to play the anthem in the key of G major? The question recurred again and again as Paul studied the piece in the hope of coming upon some solution of the enigma. That this could have any relation to the conspiracy seemed incredible. But he had learned one thing during his experiences with the League: the most trivial matters often prove the origins of weightiest actions. He read the piece through, note by note, and, at the end, found himself entirely baffled. The only effect of the change of key was that it involved the occasional striking of F sharp, which, in the key of C would, of course, never be played.

This suggested to Paul a new line of investigation. He bent over the keyboard and examined the recurring F sharps minutely. They were of black ivory. Paul tapped them softly, forbearing to press them lest the sound should bring someone into the museum. They seemed exactly like the other black notes as he ran his eye upon the keyboard. One had a small chip or erosion on its surface toward the bottom of the block. It might have been designed to give some signal. But his reason revolted at this pettifogging. It told him that this was an ordinary piano, in no wise different from others of that primitive type; undoubtedly he was playing the fool in the museum at midnight. He rose to go to his apartment. Something made him sit down again. Something in him rose up in intense warning. Something bright caught his attention. He gasped with excitement. The open string of the instrument which communicated with this particular note was not rusted, as were the rest, but bright, metallic, and new. He ran his eye all over its shining surface. He followed its course under the veneered casing. Then he saw that it ran down on the other side of the instrument and into the body of the Statue of Justice.

In an instant Paul was at the base of the statue, upon his hands and knees. He saw that the wire ran straight through the wood, and, springing to his feet, he commenced cautiously to clamber up the wheel of the state carriage until, standing upon the coachman's box, he could see between the ceiling and the statue's upstretched finger. His suspicions were verified; the wire ran into the ceiling immediately beneath the chiffonier in his own room above.

If Paul had prayed to meet no one upon that journey he prayed more earnestly now on his return. Every moment he expected to encounter Clothilde upon the stairway. It seemed incredible that fortune should have permitted him to make his discovery without arousing her suspicions. When he reached his own apartment again he was trembling so that he could scarcely stand, and it was not until he had regained his self-control in some measure that he was able to make the rest of his examination. A very short investigation showed him that the wire passed through the floor and into the body of the chiffonier. But there it apparently ended. Paul pulled out every drawer, inspected every inch of the old piece of furniture with scrupulous care, in vain. At last he was compelled to acknowledge himself defeated. The wire ended somewhere in the wood; but unless he could break the chiffonier into minute pieces he could discover nothing further.

Morning dawned after what seemed an eternity. Breakfast was served to Paul in his room. About ten o'clock Von Grobelaar made his appearance and invited Paul to accompany the child princess and himself upon a morning stroll.

So the day wore away. At six o'clock all were gathered in the queen's boudoir to await the expected telephonic message from the ambassador at Berlin.

At six-thirty the telephone rang with a sudden shrillness that started all and set them upon their feet. From his chair the old minister arose. He walked slowly toward the instrument—slowly, not because he was the less anxious but because he was the more fearful. He listened; then, after a moment, he hung up the receiver.

"Mademoiselle and Gentlemen," he said, "I have the honor to announce to you her majesty has ratified the treaty and left Berlin ten minutes ago, accompanied by his royal highness the prince consort."

For a full half minute nobody spoke. Then Clothilde came forward.

"Mynheer —" she began.

"Gentlemen," said Von Grobelaar, "Her royal highness intends to celebrate the joyful news by playing the national anthem upon the harpsichord of William of Orange."

They trooped down the grand stairway, the Princess Juliana in the lead, whooping exultantly as she raced along.

There was not one wrong note. The princess played with no bad execution and her fingers instinctively felt for and found each separate key. And what had begun as a prank ended differently, for the setting of the scene wrought itself upon the imagination of all present, so that each eye was moist—even Von Grobelaar's, and at the end he was swallowing hard. Paul saw Clothilde turn her head away; he touched her lightly upon the shoulder and she started violently.

"You taught her all this yourself?" he asked.

She stared at him like a madwoman, and suddenly, brushing him aside, broke through the crowd, gained the passage outside, and ran down the corridor, sobbing violently. Paul turned to Von Grobelaar.

"I think that is the last we shall see of Mademoiselle," he said.

"Why?" asked the minister quickly.

The crowd had dispersed outside the door, whither they had been attracted by the Princess Clothilde's behavior, and they stared after her curiously. The little princess was resentfully complying with the admonitions of the head nurse concerning retiring time. Paul led Von Grobelaar to the harpsichord and showed him the new wire.

"I didn't understand," said Von Grobelaar, looking at Paul with the vague air of one absorbed in some abstract cogitation. "Do you know," he continued, "that the sight of her little highness there made me feel like an old fool? When I think how many such princesses have grown up to be men and women —"

'I beg your pardon," said Paul. Did you notice that wire?"

"I — what — which wire? Well, what of it?"

"I was here last night when the palace was asleep."

"Then, sir, you were grossly remiss in your duty. You should have remained in your room."

"Possibly," answered Paul drily. "But the fact remains that that wire runs out of the harpsichord and through that statue and into my room?"

"What!"

Von Grobelaar turned on him a face yellow with fear. He tottered and seemed about to fall.

"I didn't hear you, my friend. You spoke about some wire?"

"That wire," repeated Paul indulgently, "connects with the chiffonier in her majesty's —"

"My God!" yelled the minister, and he dashed for the door. Along the corridor he ran, Paul hurrying after him. But, agile as he was, Paul could not catch the old minister until he came upon him at the door of his own apartment. Von Grobelaar did not seem to notice him. With one sweep of the hand he consigned the chiffonier cover to the floor, with Paul's hair-brushes, keys, collar-box and various small articles of baggage. He pressed a thumb-nail to the polished surface and tapped once. The veneered top slid back, disclosing an ivory button on which was printed, in tiny type, Groningen.

He stared at it and turned on Paul like a madman.

"It is all gone!" he yelled. "Holland is gone—dead—drowned under the waves. That button connects with the military defense works beside the dykes. A touch blows Holland's bulwarks against the sea to pieces and submerges the land, with five million living men and women. The queen and I, alone of all Holland, knew where the secret lay. That button was to be touched when Holland's foes were at the gates of the Hague. I knew they meant to blow up the dykes, but never dreamed they knew the secret." He shook his fist in Paul's face. "You have killed five million men and women, murderer," he screamed. "You were not put here to guard the Princess Juliana. You were put here to prevent anyone entering and touching that button. I couldn't reveal the secret to you. I thought you would be true to your trust. God almighty, they found the secret and connected the wires below. And her majesty—Ah, God, I can almost hear the floods!"

"Calm yourself," said Paul, gripping the old gentleman by the hands. "The dykes are safe. I cut that wire last night."

The other princess, she of Austria, rose and stood looking at Paul defiantly.

ROYALTIES' TIPS AR LARGE

Crowned Heads Expend Large Sums for Gratuities to Those Who Have Served Them.

When a man begins to grumble at the tipping habit in New York, says the Times, he should thank his stars he does not belong to the nobility. The sums paid out by royalty in tipping servants while on a visit would support several families for a year. For instance, the late King Edward's tipping bills ran into the thousands each year. He made it a point that when visiting a friend, even for a few hours, never to leave without bestowing notes among the servants. It is said that when he visited for the week-end he seldom left less than $1,000 to be distributed as tips.

When the king went to a shooting party each beater received $5 and the head keeper $25 or more, according to the duration of the visit. The kaiser is said to be the most liberal tipper among royalty of Europe. It is said that every servant in a house which he visits is sure to be remembered. The day before a visit comes to an end a secretary hands the chief steward an envelope containing the amount to be distributed, and he makes sure each servant receives his allotted share. Even the employes of the stable are remembered.

PAINFUL BLISTERS ON BODY

R. F. D. 48½, Port Orchard, Wash.—"When my baby was about five days old his abdomen became entirely covered with varying sized blisters which were very painful, causing very much distress and sleeplessness. They appeared very much like scalds or skin burns apparently itching and burning. The bands irritated the blisters, causing sores.

"I tried a powder and afterwards other remedies but the sores became worse. They lasted about six weeks before I used Cuticura Ointment. After washing the irritated parts well with Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment he received almost instant relief, and the cure was complete in seven or eight days." (Signed) Mrs. J. G. Kelley, Dec. 4, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Secret of Creation Out.

Marion, aged six years, was looking on while her aunt manufactured a rag doll.

"Auntie, why don't you put in the eyes?" she asked.

"The eyes are put in last, dear," replied auntie.

"Oh, that's why we can't see how God makes us," said Marion; "he puts our eyes in last."

A Regrettable Fact.

"I would not stoop to falsehood."

"That is't necessary, old man. Nowadays falsehood is found in high places."

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

A lazy man does less harm than the active man who stirs up unnecessary trouble.

Backache Warns You

Backache is one of Nature's warnings of kidney weakness. Kidney disease kills thousands every year.

Don't neglect a bad back. If your back is lame—if it hurts to stoop or lift—if there is irregularity of the secretions—suspect your kidneys. If you suffer headaches, dizziness and are tired, nervous and worn-out, you have further proof.

Use Doan's Kidney Pills, a fine remedy for bad backs and weak kidneys.

A Texas Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

Mrs. B. F. Benson, Anderson Ave., Houston, Texas, says: "Two operations failed to relieve my kidney trouble. I had hemorrhages of the kidneys and passed pure blood. The pain and suffering in my back was terrible. I was nothing but skin and bones. When I had given up hope, Doan's Kidney Pills came to my rescue and cured me. Today I am in better health than ever before."

Get Doan's at Any Store, 50c a Box
DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS
FOSTER-MILBURN CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

400,000 Settlers a Year

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

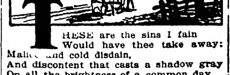
Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says: "The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position."

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessible a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

For illustrated literature and reduced railway rates, apply to Superintendent Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.

The KITCHEN CABINET



THESE are the sins I fain
Would have thee take away:
Malice and cold disdain,
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all the brightness of a common day.
—Henry Van Dyke.

MORE ABOUT NUTS.

Nuts may take the place of meat in many dishes and are a good change to add variety to the menu.

Nut Loaf.—Crumble the inside of a stale loaf of bread and cut the crust fine. Then dry slowly in the oven for two hours, stirring often, not allowing them to brown. To three pints of the crumbs measured before drying, add one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sage, a fourth of a teaspoonful of cayenne, one-eighth of a teaspoon of summer savory, one apple cut in bits and a pint of celery cut fine or ground. Melt a third of a pound of butter and fry in it for five minutes a chopped onion. Pour this over the other ingredients and mix well. Beat three eggs, add a pint of milk and pour over the mixture. Let stand to soften the crumbs. Grind together a cup of pecans, a cup of filberts and a cup of Brazil nuts. Reserve one tablespoonful of ground nuts for the sauce, and mix the rest with the crumbs. Shape in a loaf and bake an hour and a half. Serve on a hot platter with a garnish of sliced orange and a sprig of parsley. Half of this recipe will be sufficient for an ordinary family.

Sauce for Nut Loaf.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in an omelet pan. Add a teaspoonful of chopped onion and four tablespoonfuls of butter; cook until brown. Add a half of a chopped sour apple, pint of milk and a cup of water poured from the baking pan after dissolving the glaze from the pan. Add the tablespoonful of nut meats, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and a half teaspoon of salt.

Hickory Nut Cake.—Cream a half cup of butter, add a cup and a half of sugar, two cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, three-fourths of a cup of milk, the whites of four eggs and a teaspoonful of vanilla and a cup of broken nut meats.

German Nut Loaf.—Sift together four cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a teaspoonful of salt and a half cupful of sugar. Add one cupful of chopped walnuts, one cup of Sultana raisins, one egg well beaten, and two cupfuls of milk. Mix well together and put into well buttered pans and allow it to stand for twenty-five minutes. Bake in a slow oven for forty-five minutes.

Nut Mince Pie.—Mix together half a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, allspice and salt, then add a cup of chopped walnut meats, two cupfuls of chopped apples, half a cupful each of vinegar, fruit juice, and sugar, and a cupful of raisins. Mix well together and bake in two crusts.

Nut and Celery Sandwiches.—Chop together a bunch of celery and three-fourths of a cupful of walnut meats. Mix the yolks of two eggs with two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of mustard, a dash of red pepper and a half cup of vinegar, very gradually. Add enough of the dressing to the nuts and celery to moisten, and spread on slices of buttered bread.

Savory Loaf.—This is a good substitute for meat. It may be made into croquettes, fried in deep fat and served with peas. Mix well four cupfuls of bread crumbs, one cup of chopped nuts, one hard cooked egg chopped, one medium sized onion grated, half a teaspoonful each of sage and salt, sufficient milk to moisten the mixture to mold into a loaf. A well greased single loaf bread pan is a good pan to bake it in, as it turns out well molded. Serve either hot or cold with peas or tomato sauce, or simply without any sauce.

It is a fine notion of life to liken it to the loom. God puts on the warp in those circumstances in which we find ourselves, and which we cannot change. The woof is wrought by the shuttle of everyday life. It is made of very homely threads sometimes, common duties, unpromising and unwelcome tasks. But whoever tries to do each day's work in the spirit of patient loyalty to God is weaving the texture whose other side is fairer than the one he sees.

—Anonymous.

SOMETHING ABOUT TEAS.

The making of tea seems a very simple thing; but how few really good cups of tea do we have served us. The first requisite is a shiningly clean tea pot, preferably a crockery one. Have it scalded with boiling water and add a half teaspoonful of tea for every cup of boiling water; set back and steep or draw for three minutes, then serve. A cup of tea made in this way is a refreshing beverage. Cream and sugar are usually served with tea, or slices of lemon with whole cloves are liked by many. The kind of tea (black or green), which is served depends upon the individual taste. Black tea is a milder beverage and contains less tannin than the green. The distinction between black and green tea is due to different methods of preparation, as they both come from the same plant.

The peculiar stimulating properties which tea possesses as well as its flavor depend upon the season of the year when the leaves are picked, the age of the leaf, the variety of the plant and the care in preparation. The aroma of tea is often artificially increased by the addition of orange flowers, jasmine or roses. Tea of young leaves, packed closely, are smaller leaves, and a spoonful makes a stronger beverage than that of coarser leaf.

The water used to make tea is another important feature. It is said the water makes all the difference between the delightful cup of English tea and the kind we have served on this side of the water. We must not give the water too much of the credit, for care in making is another important factor to be considered.

Tea is mildly stimulating to the nervous system, and helps to increase the vital functions of some of the organs. It has been called a food saver, as less food seems to be needed when tea is taken.

Thompson in his Dietetics says in a recent report tea is mentioned as a contributing factor to insanity in Ireland. "Undoubtedly the method of preparation and the excessive use of this article of diet, now so general among our poorer population, tends to the production of dyspepsia, which in turn leads to states of mental depression favorable to the production of various forms of neurotic disturbance."

Better by one sweet soul constant and true
To be beloved,
Than all the kingdoms of delight to trample thro'
Unloved. —John Oxenham.

CULINARY HINTS.

A cheap cut of lamb taken from the breast which weighs about a pound and a half makes an economical meal.

Put the meat into boiling salted water and simmer for two hours, with an onion and a stalk of celery added to the water. When tender remove the bones and roll, tie with a string and place in the broiler for a few minutes to brown. Serve with peas or lima beans.

Apples cored and the center filled with bananas cut in strips to fit in the opening, sugar and butter added and a little water, baste while baking, makes a very pleasant way of varying the well-liked baked apple.

Frozen whipped cream, sweetened and flavored then packed for several hours in ice and salt to freeze, served with bits of preserved ginger or a cherry or two is a delicious dessert.

When serving pumpkin pie for extra occasions, heap on whipped cream which has been flavored richly with cream cheese or grated cheese of good flavor.

Pineapple Fritters.—Beat an egg until light, add a cup of milk, a pinch of salt, a tablespoonful of olive oil and sift in a cupful of flour; mix till smooth and glossy, then let stand in a cool place for an hour. Add a teaspoonful of baking powder and drop in a few pieces of pineapple, when they are well covered drop into smoking hot fat. Serve sprinkled with powdered sugar.

Why not recognize that half the relish we have for our food is in the manner of serving and garnishing? The busy housewife will say she hasn't time for frills on dishes; but often she is the very one who puts too many on her daughter's clothing.

Delicious Mocha Cake.—Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter and add three-fourths of a cup of sugar, one egg yolk, three-quarters of a cup of milk, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, one teaspoonful of baking powder sifted with one cup of flour, and two squares of grated chocolate. Mix well, fold in the white of the egg well beaten. Bake in two layers. Beat together a cup of confectioner's sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two teaspoonfuls of cocoa, a half teaspoonful of vanilla and two tablespoonfuls of strong coffee. Spread on one layer and cover with the other.

Nellie Maxwell.

Clearing Away Dead Leaves.

The method of clearing away dead leaves from our suburban roads is often more picturesque than effective, and more amusing than either. A small army of men comes along with brooms; the leaves are swept into heaps, and the effect on a perfectly still day, is very pleasant and neat. But if there happens to be a strong wind (and strong winds are not rare in autumn), half the leaves are dispersed again before the cart comes round to collect them. The most likely remedy that suggests itself is that the men should cram the leaves into sacks, which could then be collected easily and carted away. If this were done, three sweepings a week would be more effective than the present daily broom business. The men might fill up their time in intelligent broom practice; there is a good deal to learn even about brooms.—London Chronicle.

Camels are the only quadrupeds that cannot swim.

Classified Mail.

"Good morning," the young woman said as she stepped to the window at the Euclid village post office. "Is there a letter for me today?"

"I'll look," the clerk answered.

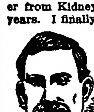
The young woman blushed a little, and she added, "It's a business letter."

The man inside the window took up a handful of letters and looked them over hastily. Then he informed the customer that there was nothing for her; and with great disappointment depicted on her lovely features, she went away—she soon came back, this time blushing more furiously than before.

"I—I deceived you," she stammered. "It—it wasn't a business letter I was expecting. Will you please see if there is something for me among the love letters?"

SUFFERED FOR 25 YEARS.

Mr. R. M. Fleenor, R. F. D. 39, Otterbein, Ind., writes: "I had been a sufferer from Kidney Trouble for about 25 years. I finally got so bad that I had to quit work, and doctors failed to do me any good. I kept getting worse all the time, and it at last turned to inflammation of the Bladder, and I had given up all hope, when one day I received your little booklet advertising your pills, and resolved to try them. I did, and took only two boxes, and I am now sound and well. I regard my cure as remarkable. I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to any one who is suffering from Kidney Trouble as I was." Write to Mr. Fleenor about this wonderful remedy.



R. M. Fleenor.

Dodd's Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free. Adv.

The Slash.

Paul Poiret, the French dressmaker, was asked by a New York reporter if he thought woman's present mode of dress made for morality.

"I do not deal in morality," M. Poiret replied. "I deal in beauty."

Then, apropos of the slashed skirt, he told a story.

"A young lady in a white dinner gown," he said, "stood under a blazing electrolier and, swinging round before her fiance, she asked:

"'How does my new dress show up?'

"'Up almost to the knee,' the young man replied. 'Those white silk stockings with gold clocks are beautiful.'"

Q. E. D.

"Ten years ago," said the professor of mathematics, "I killed a fly that had got into my office. If I hadn't killed that fly, she would certainly have laid 1,500 eggs. From these eggs would have come other flies, who would in turn have increased and multiplied so that by now we should have 550,637,841,296 more flies. Obviously they would have made life an inferno. Therefore, it is certain that by the killing of that fly I did the world a great service."—New York Evening Post.

The Great Danger.

She—Has Jack's auto got him into any serious trouble yet?

He—Well, I understand he has become engaged to the girl he's been taking out in it.—Boston Transcript.

New Excuse.

Mrs. Givem—Why do you beg?

Weary Willie.—The income tax makes sech a delay in collecting me coupons.

WIFE WON

Husband Finally Convinced.

Some people are wise enough to try new foods and beverages and then generous enough to give others the benefit of their experience. A wife writes:

"No slave in chains, it seemed to me, was more helpless than I, a coffee captive. Yet there were innumerable warnings—waking from a troubled sleep with a feeling of suffocation, at times dizzy and out of breath, attacks of palpitation of the heart that frightened me.

(Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"At last my nervous system was so disarranged that my physician ordered 'no more coffee.' I capitulated.

"Determined to give Postum a fair trial, I prepared it according to directions on the pkg., obtaining a dark brown liquid with a rich snappy flavour similar to coffee. When cream and sugar were added, it was not only good but delicious.

"Noting its beneficial effects in me the rest of the family adopted it—all except my husband, who would not admit that coffee hurt him. Several weeks elapsed during which I drank Postum two or three times a day, when, to my surprise, my husband said: 'I have decided to drink Postum. Your improvement is so apparent—you have such fine color—that I propose to give credit where credit is due.' And now we are coffee-slaves no longer."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be boiled.

Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

SUFFRAGISTS HOLD BIG MASS MEETING

URGE WILSON TO FAVOR VOTES FOR WOMEN IN ANNUAL MESSAGE.

OPPOSITION IS NOT HEARD

Delegates Not Favorable to Program Have No Opportunity to Explain—Dr. Anna Shaw Quite Optimistic.

Washington, Dec. 2.—The American Woman's Suffrage association, now holding a week's convention to procure the adoption of a constitutional amendment to enfranchise women, held a monster mass meeting here. An assemblage which packed the theater listened for three hours to discussions by conspicuous advocates of the women's movement.

Banner Proclaims Demand.

Suspended above the drop curtain was a huge yellow banner bearing the legend:

"We demand an amendment to the United States constitution enfranchising women."

The association adopted almost unanimously resolutions introduced by Mrs. Helen Ring Robinson, a member of the senate of Colorado, calling upon President Wilson in his forthcoming message to congress "to adopt the woman suffrage constitutional amendment as an administration measure and to urge congress to take immediate and favorable action upon it; urging the senate to pass the amendment; and asking the house to create a committee on woman suffrage."

The only protest was voiced by one of the delegates from Louisiana backed by a small following. The opposing delegates, however, were not given an opportunity to explain the reasons for their attitude.

Speedy "Deliverance" Seen.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, president of the association, presided, and in her address voiced the belief that "A deliverance—a speedy deliverance—of women is about to come through the action of the American congress and through the president of the United States."

Introducing Mary Anderson, Margaret Hinchey and Rose Winslow, all women industrial workers, Dr. Shaw said:

"The right of the people to a voice in their own government is the one point to which we are directing our efforts. We know no politics—no political parties. We stand for no class—for no race, but only for a voice for all the people in their own affairs."

Miss Anderson, a member of the Industrial Workers of the World, told of her experiences before the Illinois legislature and maintained that if they had votes they could have accomplished much by direct influence. Miss Hinchey, a laundry worker of New York, discussed "the Underpaid and Underfed Women." Industrial Workers recited some of the trials which they were compelled to undergo on account of low wages and bad working conditions.

Girls' Homes Ridiculed.

Miss Winslow ridiculed the establishment of working girls' homes and similar philanthropics. She, too, demanded equality of rights, an equal chance for each girl to accomplish something for herself at a living wage—not merely a minimum wage.

Mrs. Robinson, the Colorado senator, delivered the principal address, her subject being "Women as Legislators."

Lead Pencils Cause Epidemic.

Suffield, Conn., Dec. 2.—Lead pencils distributed and collected each day in the Bridge street grammar school are held to be responsible for an epidemic of diphtheria among the pupils by Dr. W. E. Caldwell, the health physician. He ordered the pencils burned and forbade the continuance of the custom. Fifteen of the 40 pupils in two rooms have the disease.

Buffalo for South Dakota.

New York, Dec. 2.—To repopulate the west as much as possible with the great animals that once abounded there by the thousands, fourteen American bison have been shipped from Bronx Park here where they were born, to Hot Springs, S. D., where they will be turned out on the Wind Cave National park.

Sylvia Pankhurst in Italy.

Milan, Italy, Dec. 2.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, one of the leaders of the English militant suffragettes, was the guest of a number of Italian women, before whom she delivered a lecture on the history of militant suffragism in Great Britain.

Silk Thieves Steal Entire Stock.

Rugby, N. D., Dec. 2.—One thousand dollars' worth of silk, received Saturday by the Amberson department store of this city, has been stolen by burglars who packed the booty away in suit cases and supposedly departed from the city on an early morning train. The robbery was not discovered until several hours after the trains had gone and efforts to apprehend the thieves so far have been unsuccessful. The silk thieves cleaned up the entire new stock

ALWAYS WILLING TO OBLIGE

Accommodating Man Must Have Made Considerable of a Hit With Storekeeper.

A certain class of shopkeepers try to force their wares upon passers-by. A traveler determined to teach one of these a lesson. The offender was a clothing dealer, and had a way of almost dragging people into his place.

One day the traveler stopped for a moment to examine a coat hanging in front of the establishment, when out darted the clothier, who asked:

"Won't you try on one of those coats?"

"I don't know but I will," responded the traveler, consulting his watch. "I have some time to spare. Yes."

He went in; but no matter how often he found his fit, he called for more coats. Finally, when he had tried on thirty or more, he looked at his watch, resumed his own garment, and walked out, saying as he went:

"Good day, old chap. I won't charge you anything for what I've done. I believe in a man who'll oblige another when he can. If I'm ever this way again and you have any more coats to try on I'll do all I can to help you."

Avoid Dangerous Nostrums. Take Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops. They have real value—5c at all good Drug Stores.

Occasionally we meet a woman who actually believes her husband knows as much as he thinks he knows.

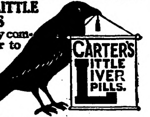
Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

Walters' tips are not the only things in the world that are won by waiting.

PADEREWSKI
THE WORLD'S GREATEST PIANIST
plays in Fargo, N. D., December 10, 1913.
Address
DAKOTA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
Prices of admission, $3.00 and $2.00.

W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES
Men's $2.00 $2.50 $3.00 $3.50 $4 & $4.50
Women's $2 $2.50 $3 $3.50 & $4
Misses, Boys, Children $1.50 $1.75 $2 $2.50 $3
Began business in 1876; now the largest maker of $3, $3.50 and $4 shoes in the world. Over 150 styles, kinds and shapes, in all leathers, sizes and widths.
W. L. Douglas shoes are famous everywhere. Why not give them a trial? The value you will receive for your money will astonish you.
If you would visit our factory, the largest in the world under one roof, and see how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would understand why they are warranted to look better, fit better, hold their shape and wear longer than other makes for the price.
Your dealer should supply you with them. Don't take a substitute. None genuine without W. L. Douglas name stamped on bottom. Shoes sent everywhere, direct from factory, by Parcel Post, postage free. Now is the time to begin to save money on your footwear. Write today for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail. W. L. DOUGLAS, 210 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

Make the Liver Do its Duty
Nine times in ten when the liver is right the stomach and bowels are right.
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS gently but firmly compel a lazy liver to do its duty.
Cures Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, and Distress After Eating.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good



CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

Raw Furs and Hides
We want large quantities of Raw Furs and Hides. Will pay big prices for same. Write for our price lists, they are free. Correspondence invited and cheerfully answered. LA CROSSE FUR & HIDE CO., 232 S. Front St., La Crosse, Wis.

POULTRY WANTED
All kinds, both live and dressed. Top market prices. No commission. Write for guaranteed prices. We also handle on commission country veal and other country produce generally. References—The American Exchange National Bank, Duluth, Dun's or Bradstreet's.
THE VICTOR COMPANY, 202-204 WEST MICHIGAN STREET, DULUTH, MINNESOTA

FREE TO ALL SUFFERERS.
If you feel 'OUT OF SORTS' 'RUN DOWN' or 'GOT THE BLUES' SUFFER from KIDNEY, BLADDER, NERVOUS DISEASES, CHRONIC WEAKNESSES, ULCERS, SKIN ERUPTIONS, PILES, write for my FREE book. THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE MEDICAL BOOK EVER WRITTEN, IT TELLS ALL about these DISEASES and the REMARKABLE CURES EFFECTED by THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. No1. No2. No3. THERAPION & you can decide for yourself if it's the remedy for YOUR OWN ailment. Don't send a cent. Absolutely FREE. No 'follow up' circulars. DR. LECLERC MED. CO., HAVERSTOCK RD, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, ENG.

O. M. ROBINSON

Exclusive Violin Maker and Repairer. Write for prices. SEVEN CORNERS, ST. PAUL, MINN.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

Were there no clouds, would we realize that the sky is blue? If no little misunderstandings had risen above our horizon, would Jesse and I have realized our wedded happiness? How should I know when I read his pocket diary, what was meant by "one night out. Took Matilda," or "Matilda and Fussy tonight," or "marched with Harem!" Matilda and Fussy if you please, are blankets, and the Harem is his winter camp equipment.

What would you think if you found this in a book?

He says it means, "Eating-house woman chasing—Jesse galloping—home head finish."

And some of it is worse!

I dare not accuse my dear man of being narrow-minded. I have no doubt that he is quite satisfied in his intense antipathy to niggers, dagos and chinks—indeed, he will not allow my Chinese servant on the ranch. But if I wished to uncork a choice vintage of stories, I alluded to his prejudice against the word "grizzly" as applied to his pet bear.

"Now thar's whar you're dead wrong." He threw a log of cedar upon our camp altar, making fresh incense to the wild gods. "The landlord's a silver-tip, fat as butter. Down in the low country, whar feed is mean, and Britishers around, the b'ars is poor, and called grizzlies. I'd be ashamed to have a grizzly on my ranch."

"Why is the landlord called Eph?"

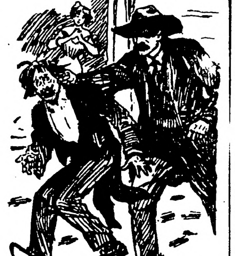
"Christian name. Most b'ars is Ephraim, but he's Ephrata which means 'be open.' I tried to get him to be open with me instead of stealing chickens. That's when the bad fear come."

"Were you in difficulties?"

"Eph was. Them canneries down to salt water, had fished the Fraser out, and the hatchery didn't get to its work until the fourth year, when the new spawn come back to their home river. Yes, and the sarvis berries failed. So when the salmon and berries went back on him, he sort of petered out. He come to the cabin and said, plain as talk, he was nigh quitting business."

"But, Jesse! A starving gr—I mean b'ar. Weren't you afraid even then?"

"Why for? My pardner attends to his business, and don't interfere with my hawss ranch. He owns the grubs, berries, salmon, wild honey and fixings. I owns the grass, stock, chickens, and garden sass. When we disagreed about them cabbages, I shot holes in his ears until he allowed they was mine. His ears is still sort of untidy. As to his eating Sarah, wall, I warned her not to tempt poor Eph too much."



I Twisted Him by the Ear Into My Cabin.

"Sarah?"

"Jones' foal. Being a fool runs in her family. Wall, Sarah died, and cabbages was gettin' seldom, and Eph was losing confidence in my aim, although I told him I'm tough as sea beef."

"He did attack you then?"

"Not exactly. His acts might have been misunderstood, though. Seemed to me it was time to survey the pasture, and see how much in the way of grub could be spared to a poor widower. These people eats meat, but they like it butchered for 'em, and ripened. Down at the south end, I spared Eph a family of wolverines, one at a time, to make the rations hold out. He began to get encouraged. Then this place was just humming with rattlesnakes, so Eph and me just went around together so long as the hunting was worth the trouble. I doubt if there's any left."

At that I breathed a sigh of relief.

"Then Eph gets sassy, wanting squir'ls and chipmunks. Now thar I was firm. Every striped varmint of 'em may rob my oat sacks, every squir'l may set up and cuss all day, but they won't get hurt. Though they has enemies—foxes, mink, skunk, weasel, I fed that lot to Eph, saving the foxes. Tell you, Kate, the landlord began to get so proud he wouldn't know me."

"Your great eagles, Jesse; they kill squirrels, too."

"That's a fact. If I shot the eagles, them squir'ls would get too joyful. Eagles acks as a sort of religion to squir'ls, or they'd forget their prayers. The next proposition was cougars."

"Oh, I'm glad you killed them. At the old ranch I was so terrified I'd lie awake all night."

"I'm sort of sorry. Many's the time, camped on your bench land, which I own is a good place for cougars, I'd set up half the night to listen. They sang love songs, big war songs, and all kinds of music. Fancy you bein' scared!

"Kill them? They're hard to see as ghosts, and every time you fire they just get absent. That ain't the reason though, for if the landlord wanted cat's meat, I'd like to see the fight."

"The'd never dare to fight that giant bear!"

"I dunno. Eph ain't lost no cougars. He treats them as total strangers.

"But the real reason I fed no mountain-lions to Eph is mostly connected with sheep. Cougars does a right smart business in sheep, 'specially Surly Brown's. Sheep is meaner'n snakes, sheepmen is meaner'n sheep, and if the herders disagrees with the cougars' give me the cougars. Sheepmen is dirt."

There spoke the unregenerate cowboy!

"But, Jesse dear, are you sure that Eph won't expect me to be 'spared' next time he's hungry?"

"Why, no. He was raised respectable, and there's a proper etiquette for b'ars on meeting a lady. It's sort of first dance-movements:—'general slide, pass the cloak-room, and whar's my little home?'"

Jesse's Note.

N. B.—Kate and me agrees that the next chapter has to be cut out, being dull. It's all about the barn-raising after we got home to the ranch. The neighbors put us up a fine big cabin connecting to the old one by a covered porch of cedar shakes. That's where the fire-wood lives, the water-butt, the grindstone, which Kate says is exactly like my singing voice, likewise the ax and saw.

Of course our house-raising was a celebration, with a dance, camp-fire water-butt full of punch, and headaches. I bet five dollars I was the only semaphore signaler in our district, and lost it to Iron Dale, who learned signaling five years ago during the Riel rebellion. Cap Taylor put up a signal system for our use, of fires by night or big smokes by day. One means a celebration, two means help, and three means war.

After the celebration we settled for the winter, and I put all the ponies except Jones and the sleigh team down in the canyon pasture. That made the ranch sort of lonesome, but we're short of hay on account of the wedding-trip. We're broke.

CHAPTER V.

The Illustrious Salvator.

Jesse's Letter.

Mother, I'm married. I thought I'd got bliss by the horns, but seems I've not roped what I throwed for, and what I've caught is trouble. I wish you weren't in Heaven, which feels kind of cold and distant when a fellow's lonesome. Nobody loves me, and the mosquitoes has mistook me for a greenhorn.

I can't smoke in the lady's home, and when it's forty below zero outside, a pipe clogs with ice from your breath. Chewing is worse, because she cried. She don't need my guns, saddles, and me, or any sort of litter whar she beds down, and my table manners belongs under the table. Men, she says, feeds sitting down, so they won't be mistook for animals, which stand up.

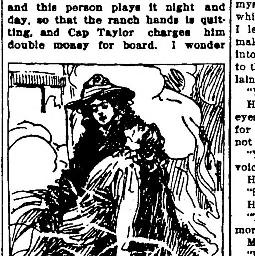
I jest moved back into the old cabin with Mick,—he's wagging himself by the tail between my legs to say as this writing habit is a vice. If I'd only a bottle of whisky now I'd be good but as it's eighty miles to refreshments, he's got to put up with vice.

Mrs. Trevor's husband was an opera singer which mislaid his vocal cords, so settled here to be on his romantic lonesome, and spite his wife. He went loco, and mistook her for a bear; she broke her ankle stampeding; and I took an interest, he shooting me up considerable until he met with an accident. Then his widow married me, and I'm plumb disheartened.

II.

I was cooking slapjacks, which gives quick satisfaction for the time invested, when Iron Dale rolled in on his way home. Says my high-grade slapjacks is such stuff as dreams are made of. With him quoting Scripture like that, I got suspicious about his coming around by this ranch, instead of hitting straight for Sky-line. On that he owns up to something dam curious and disturbing to my fur. Thar's a stranger at Hundred Mile House, claiming he's come from London, England, to find my wife.

On the stage sleigh from Ashcroft this person got froze, which mostly happens to a tenderfoot, who'd rather freeze like a man than run behind like a dog. So of course he comes in handy for poor Doc McGee. He's got a sort of puppy piano along, which grieves me to think our settlers must be getting out of date with such latest improvements, and other settlements liable to throw dirt in our face. Seems it's called harpsecord, and this person plays it night and day, so that the ranch hands is quitting, and Cap Taylor charges him double money for board. I wonder what he wants with my wife, anyhow. The missus wants me to take the sleigh and collect him. I dunno but seems to my dim intellecks that would be meeting trouble half-way, besides robbing the doctor and Capt. Taylor who done me no harm.



She Swings the Widow Through the Window.

III.

This morning, after rigging a life-line to the stable because of this continuing blizzard, I went to the lady's home. She showed me a letter Dale brought, in eytalian, which says the swine proposes to kiss her feet, and wallow in divine song, etc. His name is Salvator, so he's a dago. She, being white, can't have any truck with such, so that's all right. Seems the puppy piano is for her from her beloved maestro, another swine from the same litter. She's singing now, and it goes through my bones. Her voice is deep as a man's, strong as Fraser Rapids, and I own that puppy piano appeals to my best instinks. As for me, my name's mud, and she treads it.

IV.

The wind went chasing after the sun, leaving peace and clear stars, so this morning it must be sixty below zero by the way the logs are splitting. At noon Tearful George transpires, dumping the puppy piano, and the swine with his nose in a muff. Tearful had capsized the sleigh over stumps to make his passenger run instead of arriving here like frozen meat, but appears it hadn't done the harpsecord no good. He said he'd roll his tail before any more music broke out, so didn't stay dinner.

Kate's pleased all to pieces. Seems this gent in the paper collar has wrote an opera, and there's a party goes by the name of Impresse Ario, song and dance artist, putting it on the stage at London, England. The leading woman sings base, and that's why Kate is wanted. To the only woman on earth who sings base enough, they sends this dingus and the organ-grinder. She says it's a business proposition with money in it, and wants me to come along to the Old Country. She'd have me in a collar and chain with a pink bow at my off ear, promenading in Strand Street.

She's been having a rough time here, mostly living on wild meat, without money or servants. I'd like well to see her happier; I know her music belongs to the whole world, and I've no right to hold her for any selfishness. If it's up to her to go, it's agin me to look pleased, and she shall go the day I believe in her call.

V.

I made the dago bed down in here, but he flopped over to breakfast and they've been at it hammer and tongs ever since. "Tinkle tankle ping ping pee-chee-ree ho-O! Oh! Obo! me catamiaou-ow-yow." Cougars is kittens to it, but I'm durned ignorant, and I noticed that the signor looked on while she washed up.

I didn't sorrow with Kate persuading me to drive them as far as Hundred Mile. The sound of her voice stampedes me every time, but when the dago tries to stroke my ears, he was too numerous, so I held his head in the bucket until he began to subside. I don't take to him a whole lot.

From when I'd finished the horses, till nigh on sundown, the music tapered off, and I got more and more rattled. At last I walked right in.

She'd a black dress, indecent round the shoulders, and a bright star on her brow. She stood with the swine's arms around her, until at the sight of me he shrank off, guilty as hell. There was nary a flicker of shame or fear to her, but she just stood there looking so grand and beautiful that my breath caught in my throat. "Why, Jesse," she said, her voice all soft with joy, "I'm so glad you've come to see. It's the great scene, the renunciation. Come, Salvator, from 'Thy people shall be—'"

I twisted him by the ear into my cabin, he talking along like a gramophone. I set him down on the stool, myself on the bunk, inspecting him while I cut baccy, and had a pipe. If I let him fight me with guns, she'd make a hero of him. If I hoofed him into the cold or otherwise wafted him to the dago paradise, she'd make a villain of me.

"You wrote an opery," says I.

He explains with his tongue, his eyes, and both paws waving around for the time it takes to boil eggs. I'm not an egg.

"You give the leading woman a base voice?"

He boiled over some more.

"So you got an excuse for coming."

He spread out over the landscape.

"Thinkin'," ses I, "that she'd nothin' more than Trevor to guard her honor."

More talk.

"But you found her married with a man."

He wanted to go alone to civilization.

"You stay here," I says, "and Salvator, you're going to earn your board."

VI.

I ain't claiming that this Salvator actually earned his grub this month. He can clean stables now without being kicked into a curry hash; he can chop water holes through ice, and has only parted with one big toe up to date; he can buck fire-wood if I tend him with spurs and quirt; but his dish-washing needs more rehearsals, and he ain't word perfect yet at scrubbing floors. He's less fractious and slothful since he was up-ended and spanked in presence of a lady, but on the other hand, there's a lack of joy, cheerfulness, and application.

I sent a cable message by Tearful George to the song and dance artist who's running the swines' opery, just inquiring if he'd remitted Salvator to collect my wife. The reply is indignant to say that the swine is a liar. Likewise there's a paragraph in the Vancouver papers about the illustrious young composer, Salvator Milani, who's disappeared, it seems, into the wilds. His wife is desolated, his kids is frantic, the Salvatori, a musical society, is offering rewards, which may come in useful, and the rest of mankind throws fits. This paper owns up that the departed is careless and absent-minded, and I just pause to observe that he hasn't made my bed. He'll have some quirt for supper.

As to my wife, she'd never believe that the swine wasn't sent to fetch her, or that he's deserted his wife and family. She thinks he's a little cock angel, and me a cock devil. [She'll] have to find him out for herself

VII.

My wife has run away with him.

VIII.

I could pick stars like apples. Here's me with my pipe and dog in my home, and my dear wife content. The Dook of London has no more, except frills. I hardly know whar to begin, 'cept whar I left off without mentioning how they run away. The illustrious didn't have the nerve, so it was my lady who stole over to stable in the dead of night, and harnessed the team so silent I never woke. She drove off with her trunks, the puppy piano, and her swine, on a bitter night with eighty mile ahead before she'd get any help if things went wrong. She has the pure grit, my great thoroughbred lady, and it makes me feel real good to think of the way she followed her conscience along that unholy trail through the black pines.

By dawn she put up for breakfast at O'Flynn's. The widow had broke her leg reproaching a cow, and sent off her son to the carpenter at Hundred and Fifty Mile House to get the same repaired. Her bed was beside the stove, with cord-wood, water, and grub all within reach. It was real awkward though that the stove had petered out, and the water bucket froze solid while she slept, so she was expecting to be wafted before her son got home, when Kate arrived in time to save her from Heaven. The signor volunteers to make fire and cook grub while Kate fed and watered the team, so my wife has the pleasure of chopping out a five-foot well at Bent Creek, while this unselfish cavalierio stayed in the house and got warm. Naturally he didn't know enough to light the stove, until the widow threw things, and he got the coal-oil. Then he disremembered how to soak the kindlings before he struck a match, so he lit the fuel first, then stood over pouring oil from the five-gallon can. When the fire lep' up into the can, of course he had to let go, and when he seen the cabin all in flames, he galloped off to the woods, leaving the Widow O'Flynn to burn comfy all by herself.

By the time Kate reaches the cabin, the open door is all flames; but, having the ice ax, she runs to the gable end, and hacks in through the window. The bed's burning quite brisk by then, but the widow has quit out, climbed to the window and gone to sleep with the smoke, so that Kate climbs in and alights on top of her sudden. The fire catches hold of my wife, but she swings the widow through the window, climbs out, lights on top of her again, then takes a roll in the snow.

When the illustrious comes out of the woods to explain, d'ye think she'd listen? I can just see him explaining with dago English, paws, shoulders, and eyes. She leaves him explaining in front of the burning cabin.

My wife humped this widow to the barn, and got warm clothes from her trunks for both of them. She fired out her baggage and the puppy piano, bedded down the widow in clean hay, hitched up the team, and hit the trail for home.

She hadn't a mile to go before she met me, and what with the smoke from O'Flynn's, the widow in the rig, and the complete absence of the swine, I'd added up before she reined her team. She would want to cry in my arms.

So she's in bed here, her burns dressed with oil from a bear who held me up once on the Sky-line trail. It's good oil. The widow's asleep in my cabin, and I'm right to home with this letter wrote to you, Mother. I guess you know, Mummy, why me and my pipe and my dog are welcome now, which you've lived in your time and loved.

So hoping you're in Heaven, as this leaves me at present.

Yr. affect. son, JESSE

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Worry May Cause Death.

Medical science has recently explained how worry commits its murders. It has reached the conclusion that in many instances of what have been regarded as lunacy, and from which the victim finally dies, the case has simply been one of acute worry. Instead of the person dying of mental breakdown, he has worried himself to death.

STIRRED HEARTS OF MILLIONS

Worshipers of Buddha Highly Excited Over the Finding of the Bones of Their Saint.

Of all the treasures unearthed by archaeologist's spade from the hidden recesses of the earth, no find has ever thrilled more human hearts than the recovery of the bones of Gautama Siddartha Buddha from a mound near Peshawar, India's northwest frontier stronghold.

The effect of this discovery upon the votaries of Buddhaism, who are estimated to number more than 500,000,000 and form a large percentage of the population of Japan, Formosa, Korea, China, Tartary, Siam, Annam, Cambodia, Tibet, Burma, Nepal, India and Ceylon, and who look upon Buddha as their emancipator, their god of gods, can be appreciated only when it is considered what a sensation the finding of the remains of Mohammed would make in the Mohammedan world. The unearthing of the bones of their revered saint, it can be easily imagined, has stirred the Buddhists to the depths of their being in a way that nothing else could have done.

What adds interest to the romantic find, not only for Buddhists, but for men and women of all creeds and climes, is the fact that the exact location where these particular relics of Buddha had been interred was shrouded in mystery, hidden in an almost impenetrable mass of oriental legendary lore. No one knew definitely where the shrine had been erected, and consequently the hunt for the precious bones was no sinecure, but it had to be based to a large extent on pure guesswork.—Wide World Magazine.

Picture Statesmen at Work.

A moving picture concern recently obtained permission to take a series of moving pictures illustrating French parliamentary life. Legislators soon got to hear of the matter, says Les Nouvelles, some of them showing themselves particularly anxious to figure on the film. The taking of the film lasted several days and the operator took pictures of the chamber at all times. Photographs will show the deserted benches of the morning, with a dozen or so deputies discussing laws affecting the whole of France, the solemn arrival of the president, life in the lobbies, a stormy afternoon session and the thronged refreshment bar.

DIAMETER OF EARTH

What is the Greatest Distance Through the Globe?

Varies According to Point at Which Measured—An Interesting Problem That Will Keep the Amateur Mathematician Busy.

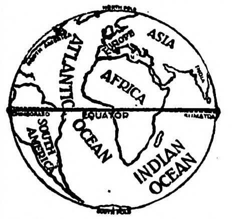
New York.—What is the greatest diameter of the earth? The form of the earth is that of a flattened spheroid, greater in diameter at the equator than at the poles, but this is modified by the accidents of its surface. So that the diameter varies according to the point at which it is measured.

It might be expected that the diameter would be greatest if measured from the top of the highest mountain, which is Mount St. Everest, in the Himalayas, but, unfortunately, the point at which the dimeter would emerge on the other side of the world is the Pacific ocean, where this is more than seven thousand feet deep.

Prof. L. Henkel of Schulpierda, says the greatest diameter of the earth is that taken from the summit of Mount Chimborazo, in Ecuador, 20,136 feet above the sea level. This, he says, emerges at the antipodes on a high point on the north coast of Sumatra. This diameter is 7,929.3 miles.

As Chimborazo is almost on the equator, its summit is that point on the earth's surface which is most distant from the center. There weight is feeblest and centrifugal force greatest.

The earth's smallest radius is that from the center to the north pole, but it is not certain that the line through the poles is the smallest diameter, because the south pole is on a high plateau. It might be found that a line a little distant from the poles, which would emerge at sea level at each end, would be even shorter than the polar diameter. Such a line would be found at a point in the Arctic ocean between Spitzbergen and Greenland to a point just off the coast of the Antarctic continent in the big bay overlooked by Mount Erebus, in about 175 to 180 degrees east and 75 degrees south.



The Equator Is the Dotted Line; the Longest Diameter Is the Black Line.

This would be a pretty problem to set a class of high school boys: To find the earth's shortest diameter, giving them a large globe and the very latest may of the antarctic regions to work with.

It would also be interesting to set such a class to verifying Professor Henkel's figures. The present writer is inclined to believe that the diameter taken from the summit of Mount Chiles, in Columbia, 15,900 feet above the sea, might be greater than that from the summit of Chimborazo, for a careful study of the maps indicates that at its antipodes it would emerge at a higher point in Sumatra than the Chimborazo line. The latter would emerge in 1½ N lat., 101 E long., which point is in the marshes on the plateau near Serentang. The line from Mt. Chiles would emerge at 1 S lat., 102½ E. long., which is on the northeastern slope of the Barison Mountains at an elevation of about 4,000 feet. Which of these lines is the longer depends upon the elevation of their respective antipodes. Chimborazo is more than 4,000 feet higher than Chiles, so the Chiles line would have to emerge at least that much above sea level.

POSSUM FIRST BULL MOOSE

No Doubt of It Since Old Roosevelt Button Has Been Found in Such Animal.

Orange, N. J.—Henry Clark, a local hunter is appealing to his friends to solve an odd puzzle which is amusing local political partisans. Clark went hunting in the Orange mountains the first day of the open season for rabbits, and came home with a large possum in his game bag. When he set out to prepare the possum for a roast he found it had swallowed a celluloid button bearing a picture of Theodore Roosevelt on which was printed "Vote for Theodore Roosevelt for Governor." The button was evidently one used during Roosevelt's gubernatorial campaign in New York state. Clark avers that the original Bull Moose must have been a possum.

Urges Four Babies Each.

Detroit.—Every mated couple should have at least four babies—two to take the place of the parents, one to offset natural losses and one to increase population, Rev. Mr. Erich told his audience the other day.

Offered Trousers for Drink.

Portland, Ore.—Peter Kane was given a jail sentence for wanting to trade his trousers for a pint of whisky and offering to close the deal on a busy street.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
Physician and Surgeon
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
Physician and Surgeon
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - Minnesota.

Loans Probate Work Collections
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

We have read the president's message and we believe it's worth reading all over a second time.

Congressman Steenerson has introduced a bill to approprite $100,000 far a federal building at Thief River Falls, and also a bill to appropriate $50,000 for a federal building at Breckenridge. Evidently the congressman holds the opinion that Thief River Falls is really the coming city of northern Minnesota, and we agree with him.

It has come to be pretty generally accepted that P. M. Ringdal, democratic candidate for governor last year, will get the appointment as register of the Crookston Land Office. The fortunes of politicial war cause changes. Mr. Toupin, who has held this office under the republican administration, is a man of unusually high charactor and ability. Mr. Ringdal posseses the same qualification to an equal extent. Their politics differ, but two better men for public offices would be hard to find. President Wilson has let it be plainly understood that he will name only clean men for public offices, and we question if any other man in the democratic ranks can better comply with the president's requirements than Mr. Ringdal.

Talk to A Good Carpenter

And he will tell you that to lay a good floor you must have good boards. They must be cut, tongued and grooved accurately, so they will match without trouble. They must be well seasoned, so they will not shrink or buckle after being laid. That's the kind of boards we sell. Want any just now.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, Model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9363, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W. 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

Arthur P. Toupin, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. Ose, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. 9570, Serial No. 03897, for Lot 2, Section 9, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tollef Brokke, German Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 12, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Clyde C. Groner, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on Sept. 6, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05585, for SE¼ Section 11, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn., on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tollefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

Arthur P. Toupin, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

HIS HAND A VOTIVE OFFERING

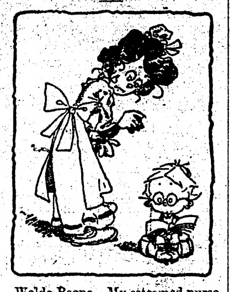
Striking Example of Religious Fanaticism That Took No Heed of Bodily Suffering.

As an example of the triumph of religious ecstasy over bodily torment it would be hard to beat the following story:

In the central provinces of India an illiterate peasant named Lachman abandoned field labor for the ascetic life. One morning he appeared before the head priest of a temple where he was accustomed to worship, saying that he had cut off his left hand as an offering to the god. Evidence of the truth of his assertion was there in the stump of the arm, which was bleeding profusely. A ligature was applied, the police were informed and Lachman was taken to the dispensary, where the civil surgeon operated.

The hand had apparently been hacked off by three rough strokes. The man said he felt no pain and feared no harm; Rama would look after him for the rest of his days. He refused chloroform for the operation; he was sure it would cause no pain, for he had felt none when he cut off the hand. He remained quiet and looked on calmly while the civil surgeon was at work, and similarly during a second operation, rendered necessary by the hemorrhage. On the following morning he appeared pleased and cheerful, declined to attend daily for dressing, and departed on his way in serene confidence.

DENSE IGNORANCE



Waldo Beane—My esteemed nurse, I'm pained to learn that you labor under the impression that "Cosmic Ego" is a breakfast food.

HEAVY HANDICAP.

"Grace won the admiration of the guides, all right."

"As to how?"

"She climbed Mont Blanc in a hobble."

Creamery Statement

Business of Holt creamery for the month of October, 1913.

Cream received	11,175 lbs
Average test	27.98
Butter fat	3,127.26 lbs
Per cent overrun	22.38
Received for butter sold	1,146.14
Balance from last month	126.99
From other sources	5.78
Total	$1,278.91
Paid patrons by check	1,001.27
Expense fund, etc.	137.86
Balance on hand	139.78
Total	$1,278.91

Number of patrons, 77.

Price paid for butter fat, 32 cts.

T. B. FOLDEN' Secretary.

The President's Message

President Wilson's message, delivered to Congress Tuesday, appears in full on another page of this issue. Several subjects of importance are treated. The President makes plain the position of the United States in the Mexicon crisis and re'terates his derermination that Huerta must retire. He asks immediate action on the currency bill and urges special provision facilitating the credits needed by the farmers. Primary elections of president, ultimate independence of the Philippines, safety at sea and our duty toward Alaska are other subjects considered. President Wilson also devotes much attention to the question of government aid for efficient farming. The message though comparatively short is an interesting document and should be read by all.

TRY NOT TO SEE THE BLOTS

Good Lesson for All of Us in Small Girl's Plea for the Overlooking of Fault.

A father, on coming home one evening, tired and somewhat dispirited, was approached by his little daughter with her copy-book, which she had just finished writing. It being her first, her young face reddened with a beautiful and honest flush; as she was sure of receiving some word of praise and cheer for her hard attempt.

The pages were indeed neatly written, and her father told her how well pleased he was to see how careful she had been. Presently, coming to one page which had two small blots, the little girl laid her hands upon them, and artlessly looking up into her father's face, said: "Papa, don't see blots." Of course he did not, but bent down and planted a kiss on the little forehead and felt thankful for the lesson he had learned.

How precious it would be if, amid all the nameless strifes and discords which so fret and chafe us, we would just lay a finger on the sullied-page of human lives and not see the blots. When littleness and meanness and petty oppositions annoy and vex us, if we could only look away from these to some brighter pages.—Selected.

ABUNDANCE OF COMPANY.

"A critic," sneered the artist, "is a person who blames others for not doing what he would not dare attempt."

"Well," replied the humble chronicler, "so is a baseball fan."

NOT SHOCKING SLATTERY.

Mrs. Googan—An' the little thing is the divil's own image of his father.

Mrs. Slattery—Yis, but I don't mind that so much so long as he kapes hilthy.—Puck.

ALWAYS MAD AT HIMSELF.

"Young Jorkins wanted to kill himself because Miss Bilkin wouldn't have him."

"Yes, and he'd want later on to kick himself if she did."

COMPROMISE.

"Were any of the party at that corner shot in their quarrel?"

"No one was shot, but everybody was half-shot."

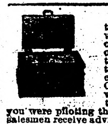
OBVIOUS RESULT.

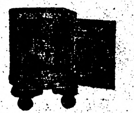
"He pitches his voice too high."

"Maybe that is why you can't catch what he says."

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day





Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.

Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 16 T.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour
Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.
Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL
THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to

Name..

Postoffice.....................................

Route.......... State..........................

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III | HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1913 | NO. 20

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.
We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (ad-tf)

For your Christmas Goods try the Rollis Store.

Al Huseth made a business trip to Thief River Falls yesterday.

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. Backe.

Sunday school in Holt schoolhouse at 10:30 a. m. next Sunday by Rev. Martin T. Strom.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Henry J. Oien says he expects to eat Christmas dinner with the home folks at Shelley.

Carl Hillard and family were up from Thief River Falls yesterday as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Huseth.

B. L. Backe and S. S. Kolden took their families along and made a trip to Thief River Falls Tuesday evening in Mr. Backe's new Buick car.

Miss Emma Olson, who has been suffering from a mild attack of typhoid fever, is now improving steadily and was able to be taken home on Tuesday afternoon.

Ole Reierson brought in some fine young turkeys just before Thanksgiving and sold them to the Holt Mercantile Co. One of the birds brought the owner $3.24, and some others came up pretty close to that figure.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.34
Wheat	.76
Barley d.	.37
Oats	.29
Rye	.43
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

Has a Pure Jersey

On Monday A. J. Nelson received from Benson, Minn., a pure bred Jersey cow. He had her milk tested by Buttermaker P. L. Anderson on Thursday and found that it showed 6.6 per cent of butter fat. He figures on getting in some more pure bred stock, and creamery patrons who want to make money should follow his example. According to this test this cow's milk is about one-half richer than that of the average cow in this vicinity. If a farmer now draws $40 per month in cream cheek from ten cows, the same number of this kind would bring him about $60 per month, at the same cost of upkeep. The difference would soon pay for the good cows.

Huseth pleases all his patrons. Are you one of them? (adv)

For good Coffee for the holidays go to Holt Merc. Co. and get the Quality Steel Cut Coffee. (adv)

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Don't wait until the last minute. Come in early and buy your candies and fruits for Christmas at Huseth's.

Every settler in the Mud Lake region is invited to call at the Rollis Store before Christmas—and at any other time.

Sam Mickelson is building a new porch on Chris Saastad's dwelling house today. How's that for December 12th in Northern Minnesota?

The Skandinavian Free Church Young People will meet at the P. A. Risberg residence at 2 o'clock p. m. next Sunday to organize a Young peoples Society. All welcome.

Tommorrow at 1 o'clock, the Swartzes, father and son, will give a horse breaking exhibition on the streets here. They guarantee to break any horse to ride or drive. This exhibition should be well worth seeing.

There was another nice series of public demonstrations by the Booze Brigade on the street last Saturday. People who object to being classed with this gang shonld have enough self respect to keep out of their disgusting public orgies.

C. E. Williams and William Skeels were here from Rollis on Friday last and went to Warren to attend to some business matters. They found time to make the printshop a pleasant call before returning home on Saturday morning.

At Middle River on Thursday morning of last week fire destroyed the hardware store, Henry Young's store and another building occupied as a warehouse. The total loss is estimated at about $20,000, with insurance of about $12,000.

The Middle River Pioneer has a story from Ringbo to the effect that several young people were injured by the overturning of their wagon while on their way home from a meeting at the German church. As the injured list the Pioneer names Miss Hooper, teacher, Mary Offerdahl, Elie Sorter and Henry Offerdahl.

Johnnie Knutson came in from Mud Lake on Monday with the intention of going to Thief River Falls to consult a doctor, as he was not feeling well. He went to that city and was immediately hastened from there to Crookston, where submitted to an operation for appendicitis on Tuesday morning. Mrs. Knutson went down Tuesday to help take care of him and we understand that he is progressing quite favorably.

...Pay... All Bills By Check

And there will never be any disputes. The Holt State Bank Invites household as well as business accounts. Most women know how difficult it is to make their cash balance when they pay in cash. You can avoid all the trouble and worry by opening an account at the Holt State Bank. Then you'll know where every cent of your money goes.

Holt State Bank
Make your FARM LOAN with us

Marshall Gehrke and Jim Smith left on Saturday last for Warren where they expect to spend the remainder of the winter with their relatives.

On Friday last Walmer Risberg was taken to Warren again to have his leg treated by Dr. Bratrud. It was feared that another operation would be neccessary but he seems to be improving under other treatment and the operation may be avoided. Miss Edna Risberg is taking care of him during his absence from here.

Building for Sale

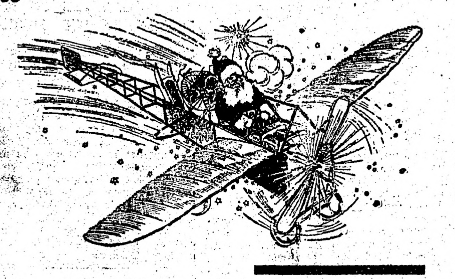
Good log and frame dwelling, well finished and sided, has storm windows. Size 12 x 22 feet. Now located on the Anton Peterson farm, in Section 20, Holt township.

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, December 27th, 1913. Terms, cash. The highest bid gets the building and the buyer will be allowed a reasonable time to remove it.

Chris Saastad, Holt, Minn.
Administrator of the estate of Sophia Peterson, deceased.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.



SANTA CLAUS
Has again established his headquarters in our Big New Store. Call and see

Special Christmastime Prices

On every article in our big stock of New Clothing, Dry Goods, Dress Goods, etc. We ask you to compare our Goods and Prices with others before buying.

Come and see our new sample line of Stockings.
Don't forget to ask for one of our beautiful 1914 Calendars.

Holt Mercantile Co.
THE BIG NEW STORE

HUSETH's
Headquarters for Christmas Candies, Fruits and Nuts
Our Goods always Fresh, Pure and Wholesome
AL. HUSETH, Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

HOUSTON COVERS FIELD THOROUGHLY

SUMMARY OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

EFFORT TO HELP PEOPLE

Department's Information to Be Distributed in All Fields—Changes in Weather Bureau—Estimates of Year's Crops.

Washington, Dec. 8.—David F Houston, secretary of agriculture, today published his annual report for the year 1913. The report, which contains only 58 pages, differs from previous reports in that, instead of merely reviewing the agricultural situation, it presents in summary many broad economic questions. Strong emphasis is placed upon co-operation between the department of agriculture and other federal departments and the state agricultural agencies to promote co-ordination and eliminate duplication of effort. The keynote is getting the department's information in all fields more directly and in more valuable form to the people.

Increases Asked.

Increases in the appropriations for the next fiscal year are recommended, as follows:

$250,860 for extending the work of eradicating animal diseases, feeding and breeding live stock, and for dairying and the enforcement of the meat inspecton law.

$45,660 for the introduction and breeding of new plants, the control of plant diseases, and for improving the methods of crop production, especially cereals.

$143,577 for the classification of agricultural lands and the survey of homesteads in the national forests

$60,441 for extending investigations of the handling, shipping and storing of poultry, eggs and fish.

$24,420 for investigating fertilizer resources, soil fertility, and the chemical and physical properties of soils.

$71,000 for extending investigations of insects attacking deciduous fruits, cereal and forage crops, and forest trees.

$90,000 to enforce the migratory bird law.

$57,000 for gathering crop forecasts and estimates.

$113,500 for road management and road building and maintenance.

$144,000 for investigations of the marketing and distribution of farm products.

$50,000 for live stock and other demonstration work in the sugarcane and cotton areas in Louisiana.

It is recommended that the congessional seed distribution as now conducted be discontinued, and that constructive work in securing and distributing new and valuable seeds and plants be substituted.

Changes in Weather Bureau.

Changes in the organization and work of the weather bureau have resulted in increased efficiency and economies which make possible a reduction of $37,340 in its funds. The crop and flood warning service designed to enable crop growers or those along certain waterways to have notice in time to take protective measures will be strengthened. The scientific work of the bureau will be emphasized, especially in fields having a direct bearing on agriculture, commerce, navigation and aviation.

Certain reorganizations have been effected in the bureau of chemistry looking toward more effective administration of the food and drugs act and to greater constructive technological assistance to manufacturers in avoiding waste, reducing cost of manufacture and to help them develop purer products which will comply with the law.

Rural Financial Needs.

When all necessary allowance has been made for these fundamental factors, it is probably clear that the rural communities are not as efficiently served as they should be by existing financial arrangements. Long-time loans are needed for permanent investments, such as the purchase price of a farm or for the erection of buildings. It is wise economy to encourage the extension of credit for safe productive use, and no less wise to discourage the use of capital along non-productive or speculative lines.

The Crop Outlook.

From the estimates at hand it appears that the production of crops in 1913 was materially below the average, the yield per acre of all crops combined being smaller than in any year in the past decade with the exception of 1911. The corn crop, the most valuable product of this country, according to the estimates, fell below 2,500,000,000 bushels, which is smaller than any crop since 1903.

Budding Flowers Blighted.

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 8. — Budding trees and flowers were blighted when a gale struck Springfield, the temperature falling 30 degrees. Snow fell at intervals and the wind blew a gale all day.

Fiancee Hanged; Marries Brother.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Mamie Dunn, fiancee of Harvey Van Dine, one of the three carbarn bandits hanged here in 1904, is to be married early in January to Frank Van Dine, brother of the man whom she accompanied on his last walk to the gallows. Miss Dunn had been engaged to Harvey Van Dine before he associated with the crowd of thieves who went with him to death. When he was arrested, charged with the others, with a total of eight murders, she remained true to him.

MRS. PANKHURST IS AGAIN LIBERATED

HUNGER AND THIRST STRIKE WINS MILITANT LEADER 7 DAY RESPITE

IS PUT IN CARE OF NURSE

Suffragettes Vow That Emiline Shall Never Again Be Placed in Jail—Chant for Prisoner at Cathedral.

London, Dec. 9. — Mrs. Emiline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader who was arrested on Dec. 4 on her arrival from the United States, has been released from the Exeter jail.

In Charge of Nurse.

Mrs. Pankhurst began a hunger and thirst strike immediately following her arrest She was driven to a hotel as soon as released. She appeared very weak, and immediately retired in charge of a nurse.

Mrs. Pankhurst is liberated on seven days' license. She intends to proceed to London at the earliest possible moment.

Not anticipating the early release of their leader, suffragettes gathered at the Empress theatre, Earl's Court, to protest against the imprisonment of Mrs. Pankhurst. The house was only three-quarters filled and "General" Flora Drummond, who presided, explained the empty seats by accusing the postoffice of tampering with letters containing invitation tickets. In the course of a speech, denouncing the government, she explained:

Swear to Protect Leader.

"Here and now we swear that never again will the government get Mrs. Pankhurst. We shall organize a bodyguard which will even face battleships."

A resolution demanding the instant release of Mrs. Pankhurst was carried with enthusiasm, but as the meeting was dispersing the news of her liberation was announced and was greeted with cheers.

Donations for the Cause.

Several large donations to the cause were made and promises of further donations given, amounting in all to $50,000. This amount includes $22,500, the proceeds of Mrs. Pankhurst's American tour.

Scores of suffragettes invaded St. Paul's cathedral and chanted:

"God save Emiline Pankhurst."

The service was stopped until the women finished and was then resumed as if nothing unusual had happened. The suffragettes quietly left the church.

SNOW IS BEING PENETRATED

Denver People Get Home After Days Up-Town—Rescue Party to Passenger Train.

Denver, Dec. 9.—Warm sunshine and the work of 2,000 men with shovels, succeeded in opening several of the street car lines to traffic and many men and women returned to their homes for the first time since the snow storm last Thursday. Railroad traffic also was greatly improved.

The fate of passengers on a Colorado Springs, Cripple Creek and Florence train, snowbound at one of the highest Rocky Mountain passes, is becoming critical. It is not known whether rescue crews, which started out on snow shoes and skies have reached the train with provisions. Every effort is being made by snow plow crews to reach the snowbound train.

NEEDLE SUSPECT ISOLATED

Man Charged With Drugging Woman at Theater Is Closely Guarded.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 9.—Armand Megaro, the South American, held in $20,000 bail on a charge of having attacked Mrs. Marjorie Graff, victim of a supposed drugged needle in a theater last week, is not permitted to see anyone except an attorney engaged to defend him.

No date has been set for the presentation of his case.

Strikers Kill Three; Shoot Girl.

Calumet, Mich., Dec. 9.—Arthur and Harry James, brothers, and Thomas Dally were killed, and Mary Nicholson was seriously injured by rifle bullets fired into the apartment house in which they lived. The James brothers came here Saturday from Toronto, Canada, and obtained employment in the Copper Range Consolidated, whose men are among those on strike. Miss Nicholson is the daughter of William Nicholson who occupied the other side of the apartment house.

Spring-Like Weather Passes.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—Cities in the Middle West, which boasted Saturday of their spring-like weather and blooming flowers, have their first touch of winter. A drop of from 25 to 30 degrees in temperature in 24 hours was reported generally through the lake region. Snow accompanied the cold wave in most places. In Chicago, where the thermometer has kept around 50 degrees for the last two weeks, the mercury dropped to 18 degrees above and weather bureau officials predicted it will go lower.

MARINES ON THEIR WAY TO MEXICAN COAST

The United States Marines from the navy yard at Charleston, Mass., starting for Florida en route to Mexico's coast, fully equipped and ready to protect American and foreign interests.

GRAY HAIRED WOMEN GUILTY

FIVE WHO RODE WOMAN ON RAIL MUST PAY PENALTY.

Oldest Is 65—Sixth Freed as She Backed Out Before Victim Was Mistreated.

Wasukegan, Ill., Dec. 8.—Five gray-haired women of the village of Volo, who rode Mrs. John Richardson on a rail one night in July, because her name was linked by gossip with that of her brother-in-law, were found guilty here by a jury. Each may be fined $200 and sentenced to six months in jail.

The band of militant housewives who took the law in their own hands was composed of Mrs. Emma Stadfield, Mrs. Levina Raymond, Mrs. Alma Watlan, Mrs. Mary Sabel and Mrs. John Stadfield.

Mrs. Kate Wagner, the sixth woman, who started to carry Mrs. Richardson outside the village limits, was freed by the jury because she returned home before the victim was given her ride. There was no evidence Mrs. Wagner helped support the rail and its burden.

Mrs. Sabel's age of 65 years makes her the oldest of the convicted five, and the others are well above forty. They sat huddled and dazed in the courtroom as the verdict was read. They bore no resemblance to the angry women, outraged because they believed a neighbor preferred the company of another to her crippled husband, who drew Mrs. Richardson from her home by a subterfuge, placed her astride a weather-beaten scantling, bore her screaming and fighting to the edge of town and dumped her to the road with a warning never to return.

Mrs. Richardson is not vindictive against her former friends. She was satisfied with a conviction and was agreeable to letting the women off with a fine. She has a civil suit for $100,000 pending against them.

DENVER STORM IS ENDED

There Are Forty-five Inches of Snow, and Coal Shortage as a Result.

Denver, Col., Dec. 8.—The severe snowstorm which completely tied up all forms of business in Denver and central Colorado ended, and clear, colder weather followed.

The total amount of snowfall during the storm was given, officially, at 45.5 inches, or 2.52 inches precipitation.

One of the gravest hardships accompanying the storm was the extreme shortage of coal.

Railroad traffic to and from Denver remain at a standstill. The blockades on tracks are at points within a radius of 100 miles of Denver. Powerful rotary plows have been able to make little progress.

Pushes Labeling Restrictions.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Solicitor General Davis appeared in the supreme court with a brief urging an interpretation of the pure food laws to require labels on so-called headache cures to state the presence of derivative of habit-forming drugs as well as of the drugs themselves.

Reception of Suffragists.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Mrs. Robert M. La Follette gave a formal reception to the delegates to the National American Woman Suffrage convention here.

Panama Engineer Is Dead.

Baltimore, Dec. 6.—Lieutenant Colonel David Du Bose Gaillard, U. S. A., who directed the engineering work in the Culebra cut division of the Panama canal, died at Johns Hopkins hospital here. Colonel Gaillard had been a patient at the hospital since Aug. 17 last, suffering from a growth in the head, the result of seven years' arduous labor in the tropical climate of the canal zone. A bill was introduced in congress last month promoting him to the rank of colonel in recognition of his distinguished servises.

VILLA STILL AFTER FLEEING FEDERALS

DECLARES THE FEDERALS SHALL NOT REACH THE BORDER WITHOUT A BATTLE.

SITUATION AT WASHINGTON

Foreign Nations Ask U. S. About Ending of Waiting Policy—Other War News.

Juarez, Mex., Dec. 8.—Instead of occupying Chihuahua, the state capital, General Francisco Villa with his 7,000 rebels encamped along the railroad north of the city and returned hurriedly to Villa Ahumada, the telegraph station, to dispatch more men in pursuit of the federals retreating toward Ojinaga, on the border.

A garrison of 500 rebels occupy the fort at Ojinaga and General Villa said his soldiers would not permit the federals to reach the border or cross over into the United States without a fight. His purpose is not only to capture the federal troops but also to seize their arms and equipment. The federals, however, will be in majority unless they are overtaken by the rebels.

General Villa expressed his intention to confiscate the money which the fugitives were reported to have withdrawn from the banks before the evacuation. He said he would protect the non-combatants except such as were considered political offenders. Members of the Terrazas family were placed by him in the latter class.

Crowds of people with automobiles camped at Presidio, Texas, opposite Ojinaga, in anticipation the refugees, including the federals, would cross the river. Should the federals, disheartened by their long siege in Chihuahua, dicide to cross, they would give up their arms on the American side.

The report reached Ojinaga the fugitives had been in great distress. Their route was across a waterless desert plateau, swept by cold winds at night and sand storms by day.

Reports had it part of the fugitives had turned away from the main body and were turning to another point on the border opposite Columbus, N. M. With them were said to be General Jose Salazar and Pascual Orosco, both of whom are under indictment in the United States for violations of the neutrality laws.

Villa and Carranza Communicate.

Another reason why Villa returned northward to Villa Ahumada was to communicate with General Carranza, head of the Constitutionalist party, who is in Sonora.

Pleased at his victories in the north and confident his projected march toward Mexico City will be marked by the desertions or evacuations by the federals, General Villa himself showed no haste to enter Chihuahua, the largest city now held by the rebels. Some of his troops commanded by General Chao went into the city several days ago for police duty.

Other Nations Anxious.

Washington.—Guarded inquiries are being made at the state department by representatives of some of the European governments as to the prospect for an early termination of the present grievous burden upon foreign interests.

Youthful Embezzler Is Sentenced.

New York, Dec. 6.—John C. Schildnecht, the $18-a-week bookkeeper who recently pleaded guilty to stealing more than $50,000 from the Washburn-Crosby Flour Mills company, his employers, was sentenced to Sing Sing prison for not less than two and a half years or more than four years and eight months. Schildnecht admitted that the greater part of the money he had stolen was spent upon a young woman, to whom he had given, among other valuable presents, an automobile and $15,000 worth of jewelry.

COST OF FOOD DISTRIBUTION

39 CENTS OF EVERY DOLLAR GOES FOR THIS, SAYS REPORT.

Bureau for Improvement of the Poor Throws Light on Subject—Consumer and Producer Suffer.

New York.—It costs 39 cents to distribute $1 worth of food in this city. The bureau of food supply of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor has been conducting a cost-of-living inquiry and has just made public a report showing that 61 cents represents the cost of food on its arrival at the terminal markets here while the rest of the consumer's dollar is divided between wholesaler and retailer in the process of getting the food to the consumer's kitchen.

"Every consumer," said Bailey B Burrett, who directed the inquiry, "is amazed at the constantly diminishing quantity of food that his dollar brings to him, and every producer is equally amazed at the small proportion of the consumer's dollar that finds its way into his pockets."

The remedy, the report asserts, is a reorganization of the food distribution system based on the result of careful experiments with the economic efficiency of methods of retail distribution. These experiments, it is set forth, should be made by a group of individuals with no thought of profit.

INDICT DEMOCRATIC OFFICER

Two Counts Against Committeeman on Contribution Charge.

New York, Dec. 6.—Arthur A. McLean, treasurer of the Democratic state committee, has been indicted on two counts for receiving campaign contributions from corporations.

Everett P. Fowler of Kingston, the alleged Tammany "bagman," already under indictment for extortion, was again indicted, charged with soliciting a campaign contribution from a corporation.

The indictment of McLean makes the third growing out of the district attorney's investigation of John A. Hennesy's charges of graft in the state highway department.

Baseball Causes Methodists Trouble.

Macon, Ga., Dec. 6.—Baseball meets with little favor among the Methodists, it would seem, judging from the recent action of Bishop Warren A. Chandler, who has just caused a number of switches in assignments following complaints which reached his ears from a number of parishioners. It seems that two of the best known ministers in the South Georgia Methodist conference were more than fond of the game, and were regular attendants. The members of their parishes decided that this was not the proper thing.

66 Arrests Are Made.

Calumet, Mich., Dec. 6.—Militiamen at Allouez made sixty-six arrests of striking copper miners and their wives for alleged violation of the injunction against picketing and violence. The defendants were cited to appear in circuit court for a hearing. The arrests made a total of more than 1,000 miners and strike sympathizers imprisoned the past two months of the labor war. A general feeling of uneasiness prevailed throughout the strike zone, but no unusual violence was displayed.

Cubist Art Indian Invention.

Carlisle, Pa., Dec. 6.—Credit or responsibility for the origination of cubist art is claimed for the American Indian by Lone Star, art instructor in the United States Indian service, who is stationed here. Lone Star, with his wife, Angel Decora, a beautiful Winnebago Indian girl, who is also an artist, has devoted many years to the study and collection of Indian art specimens and they have many examples to substantiate their assertion that the Indians founded the subist school some 200 years ago.

MONTGOMERY WARD DIES AT AGE OF 70

GREAT MAIL ORDER PIONEER RISES FROM DAY LABORER TO MULTI-MILLIONAIRE.

ESTATE TOTALS $15,000,000

Demise as Result of Complication of Diseases Thought to Have Been Hastened by Auto Accidents.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—A. Montgomery Ward, who rose from a day laborer to the presidency of a mail order house which bears his name, is dead at his residence at Highland Park. The multi-millionaire was 70 years old.

Complication of Diseases.

Death resulted from a complication of diseases which developed after two falls. About two years ago Mr. Ward slipped on the running board of an automobile at Pasadena, Cal., and broke an arm and shoulder blade. These injuries confined him largely to his home. Six weeks ago Mr. Ward fell in his home and fractured his right hip. The kidneys were injured and pneumonia developed.

Aaron Montgomery Ward was a self-made man in the true sense of the expression. Born at Chatham, N. J., Feb. 17, 1843, Mr. Ward advanced himself by his own endeavors until at his death his wealth is reliably estimated at $15,000,000.

Came West When Young.

The Ward family moved west, to Niles, Mich., when the son was eight years old. He attended school until he was fourteen when he was apprenticed to learn a trade. He soon gave up his work in a stove factory where he was paid twenty-five cents a day. Later he became a day laborer in a brick yard.

In the late '50s young Ward went to St. Joseph, Mich., where he entered a general merchandising store at wages of $5 a month and board. He proved successful as a salesman and in three years was in charge of the business and was receiving $100 a month. Mr. Ward came to Chicago in 1866 and obtained work in a department store. Later, he entered a wholesale dry goods house and then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm It was while he was with this concern that Mr. Ward thought he saw a great future for a house which would sell directly to the consumer.

Would Eliminate Middleman.

Mr. Ward returned to Chicago to accept an executive position with a dry goods firm, which he helped reorganize after the fire of 1871. His dream of a store which would eliminate the middleman grew on him and he resigned to found the business which bears his name. It was organized as a partnership with George R. Thorne, his brother-in-law. The company's first quarters were over a stable and the staff consisted of one clerk and the partners.

The firm grew until on Jan. 1 of this year it was reorganized and incorporated in New York for $40,000,000. The company does $40,000,000 worth of business a year, one of its vice-presidents said.

FEARS ABSOLUTE FRIGIDITY

Predicts Stars Will Cool Off and Blackness of Interstellar Night Will Follow.

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 9.—In a lecture on "The Heat Action of Stars," Prof. N. Russell of the department of astronomy at Princeton, declared that upon their creation the stars became hot, but are gradually cooling off and that the ultimate end of the universe, therefore, is absolute frigidity in the blackness of interstellar night.

"The end of the universe is inconceivably far off," was Professor Russell's consolation.

416 Killed; 2,149 Injured.

New York, Dec. 9.—During the 11 months past 416 users of public highways were killed and 2,149 injured in this state by automobiles and other motor vehicles, according to a statement made by Mitchell May, secretary of state. Mr. May said that it was apparent that "there is something radically wrong both in the law and its enforcement, as this sacrifice of human life, almost double that of last year, is too heavy a toll to pay for the advantages of the automobile."

Scientific Experts Quit U. S.

Washington, Dec. 9.—Poor pay in the government service is sending many scientific experts outside for employment according to George Otis, director of the United States geological survey.

Spring-Like Weather Passes.

Chicago, Dec. 9.—Cities in the Middle West, which boasted Saturday of their spring-like weather and blooming flowers, have their first touch of winter. A drop of from 25 to 30 degrees in temperature in 24 hours was reported generally through the lake region. Snow accompanied the cold wave in most places. In Chicago, where the thermometer has kept around 50 degrees for the last two weeks, the mercury dropped to 18 degrees above and weather bureau officials predicted it will go lower.

State News of General Interest

BOOSTS NATIONAL ROADS FOR STATE

NATIONAL HIGHWAY REPRESENTATIVE HERE IN INTEREST OF MOVEMENT.

SCHEME IS WELL EXPLAINED

William C. Conway, Field Organizer, Says Six Great Arterial Highways Will Be Built in Minnesota.

Glencoe.—To complete plans for the construction of national highways in Minnesota, William C. Conway, field organizer of the National Highway association, of Washington, D. C., came here in the interests of a concrete or macadam highway to extend from Minneapolis through Glencoe, to Ortonville.

Mr. Conway is getting commercial clubs and like organizations in towns through which it is proposed to build the highway to get behind the national movement and to take special interest in the $50,000,000 roadway bill the association will present to congress next spring.

Mr. Conway Explains.

"Of course, there will be those people who claim that $50,000,000 is too much to take from the government treasury at one time for the construction of national highways," said Mr. Conway. "When you stop to consider, though, that the people in this country spent $316,000,000 last year for motion pictures alone, just to satisfy a whim, it does not seem that one-sixth of that sum is a very large amount to spend on national highways when it will benefit every city in the country."

Mr. Conway said that the association has in mind the construction of 50,000 miles of permanent highways. Every city with a population of 20,000 or more will be touched by one of the roadways. He said six of the highways will pass through Minnesota. Two will extend from Duluth and International Falls southward through Minneapolis and St. Paul to New Orleans and Galveston. Four other highways will divide the state east and west, the Minneapolis-Ortonville roadway being one of these.

According to plans already made, the highways will be constructed of concrete or macadam and will cost close to $20,000 a mile. The roadways will be made broad, upon a concrete foundation of twelve inches.

As most of the $112,000,000 worth of machinery being used on the Panama canal will be out of service there by January, the association is attempting to get congress to turn this machinery over for the construction of national highways in this country.

If congress passes favorably in the matter, it is expected a plan will be pushed to bring the 30,000 Americans now working on the canal to this country and employ them in building the roads.

PLAN DEMOCRATIC JUBILEE

May Select Jackson Day for Big Love Feast and Get-together Celebration.

St. Paul.—Minnesota democrats will have a get-together dinner this winter, and the date selected may be Jackson day, Jan. 7, conforming with the date chosen by the national heads of the party for a nation-wide celebration. The achievements of the Wilson administration are to be the topics for congratulation. "We have had the subject under consideration for some time," said Fred B. Lynch of St. Paul, democratic national committeeman. "We will undoubtedly have a democratic dinner during the winter which will be a rally for the state democracy. We may decide to have it on Jackson day."

WALLACE-FOSSEEN LAW VALID

District Court Holds Abatement Act Is Wholly Constitutional.

Minneapolis.—Every provision of the Wallace-Fosseen abatement law was upheld and declared constitutional by Judge Joseph W. Molyneaux in the district court, who, after passing on the law's validity, issued a temporary injunction against Emma Le Roy, 16 Washington avenue N, second floor, preventing her from moving her furnishings until an abatement action is tried.

A temporary order with similar provisions was already in force.

Children Try to Rough It.

Minneapolis.—Vague boyish castles of adventure, faint girlish instincts of home-making, translated to definite plan in childish minds by a moving picture film, sent Donald Norton, 13, and his sister, Viola, 11, stealthily from home Monday evening to pioneer alone in a little cottage in the woods for two days, till, romance gone, they came trudging home. They are the children of Innes H. Norton. The children packed a little kit of food Monday night and disappeared

ACCUSE EX-STATE TREASURER

Mismanagement of Corporation By Former State Official and Associates Is Charge.

Duluth.—In an affidavit filed with the St. Louis county district court by James A. Wharton of this city, attorney for the reorganized United States and Dominion Life Insurance company of Duluth, it is charged that Julius H. Block, former state treasurer, and two associates, Otto A. Rabe and John N. Swenson, mismanaged the affairs of the company and "ruined its credit." The affidavit asks that certain judgments against the corporation, secured by default, be vacated and that it be allowed to reopen the case and interpose an answer.

Mr. Wharton in his affidavit says the company was organized in 1912 and the only meeting of directors or stockholders until Sept. 1, 1913 was on April 15 of that year, when J. H. Block, then the president, with Rabe and Swenson, directors, entered into a contract with the company by which "all the assets of the company were seized and appropriated by said Block, Rabe and Swenson, and that the company received nothing at the ensealing of said contract." The affidavit says the terms of the contract never were fulfilled and that, from the time of making it until Sept. 1, 1913, Block refused to reveal anything concerning the affairs of the concern to its stockholders, but on the contrary "wilfully misrepresented the true condition of said company."

RELIGION TAUGHT IN SCHOOLS

High School Board Gets Report and Immediately Takes Action.

St. Paul.—Basing its action on reports that in three public schools in Stearns county and one in Morrison county religious instruction has been given in school hours, religious garb worn by teachers and religious symbols displayed, the state high school board has sent out a circular letter, directing, on pain of a discontinuance of school aid, that after August, 1914, no teacher in a public school will be permitted during school hours to wear the garb of a religious order; that no religious emblem or symbol will be permitted in public school buildings; that no school nor its teachers, pupils or property may be used in the interest of any church or religious order and that no teachers shall give any sectarian instruction during the usual school hours nor immediately preceding or following the same.

The board has been wrestling with the problem more than a year and the members regard its new rules as marking an epoch in the school history of Minnesota.

MIDDLE RIVER HAS BIG FIRE

Mice Start Blaze Which Destroys Three Blocks at a Loss of $30,000.

Middle River.—Fire in the B. F. Benson building was discovered early by the families on the second floor through the suffocating smoke that filled their apartments. By the time the occupants had reached the ground, the whole building was burning and the flames spread quickly to adjoining buildings those of the Middle River Hardware company and Henry Young's general store.

The fire department responded quickly to the first alarm, but the fire had gained such headway it could not be checked. The three buildings burned to the ground with their contents, and the total loss is estimated at more than $30,000 with less than $16,000 insurance. A southwest wind was blowing and carried the flames away from other business property.

The fire has been traced in the belief of some persons to mice working in matches stored in the Benson building, which was used by Henry Young as a storage room and warehouse.

Litchfield Diphtheria Situation.

Litchfield. — Citizens are excited over an epidemic of diphtheria. Dr. Chesley of the state board of health was here and addressed the citizens on the situation. Much opposition was manifested by speakers at the meeting over the methods of quarantine in force and the local board of health appears to be divided on many matters. Dr. Chesley advised in favor of keeping the public schools open with the continuance of inspection by a nurse engaged by the board. Other gatherings of children at Sunday schools and public places is forbidden. At the close of Dr. Chesley's address, two citizens, one a member of the health board, engaged in a heated argument and blows were struck. The affair created a sensation.

Finds Potatoes Are Unharmed.

Crookston.—Robins and woodpeckers are back and practically all of the spring birds are here. Fish are reported to be spawning in the rivers and similar reports are received from fishermen at Lake of the Woods and Rainy lake. Motor boats are running on the river and an excursion was run Sunday to the new dam. While plowing up a potato field that he supposed had been ruined by frost, Andrew Spokely of Climax discovered that only a few of the tubers closest to the surface had been damaged.

REPORT ON GRADED SCHOOLS

State Superintendent of Education Issues Statement Covering Graded System.

St. Paul.—The eighteenth annual report on country graded schools, issued from the office of State Superintendent C. G. Schulz, gives the total number of graded schools at 217, a net gain of thirteen for the year. The five large graded schools at Aurora, Buhl, Blackduck, International Falls and Maple Lake are promoted to the high school list. Eighteen new schools are listed, including eleven consolidated schools. The consolidated schools are at Brook Park, Glyndon, Meadowlands, Medford, Nemadji, Reading, Round Lake, St. Francis, Saum, Villard and Vanda. The other seven are at Bruno, Crosby, Ironton, Deerwood, Greenbush, Lake Wilson, Onamia and Wrenshall.

The annual state aid received by each of these 217 schools is $600. In addition to this aid fifty-nine schools have been awarded $500 each for high school work, nine schools $1,000 each for industrial work, and two schools $2,500 each for complete industrial courses under the Putnam act.

The report states that the average tax rate for graded schools is increasing. This year it is 20.7 mills as against 19.66 last year and 19.14 the year before.

After Sept. 1, 1914, the minimum salary limit for teachers is fixed at $1,000 a year for principals of schools with approved high school departments, $700 a year for principals of graded schools not having such departments, $540 a year for high school teachers and $450 a year for grade teachers.

One hundred and ninety-nine out of the 217 schools furnish free text books at an annual cost of $113 per school or about 75 cents for each pupil.

In the eleven schools offering industrial courses, 548 students have been enrolled in agriculture, 522 in home economics, and 323 in manual training. The total expenditure for these courses during the past year has been $24,270, or an average of $17.42 per pupil.

DAIRYMEN HOLD BIG MEET

Red River Valley Buttermakers Reelect President After a Most Successful Convention.

Crookston. — Concluding a memorable convention, with more than 500 dairymen and buttermakers registered, the Red River Valley Dairymen's association adjourned after electing officers. President C. G. Selvig, superintendent of the Crookston school of agriculture, and Treasurer C. M. Davidson were re-elected. Others are: Secretary, L. Houske of Halstead; first vice president, A. J. Hed of St. Hilaire; second vice president, L. Jenson of Clear Brook. The keynote of the convention was a better grade of butter and increased production.

An effective address was that of Rev. Dr. J. M. Walters of Fargo on "Microbes That Attack the Farmer," showing the necessity of sanitation. The closing speakers were S. Currie, Park River, N. D.; A. F. Cronquist, McIntosh, N. D.; J. D. Bacon of Grand Forks, N. D., and Prof. Berg of the Crookston school of agriculture.

The butter scoring contest, in which the winners were awarded a gold, silver and nickel trophy, respectively, resulted: First, J. J. Harms, Dent; second, M. Sorenson, Pelican Rapids; third, O. O. Heggenes, Lengby.

Federal Inspector Sondergaard, in his address, suggested "community delivery" by the association of seven farmers or more, one to make the trip to the creamery each day gathering the cream from the rest of the farms, each making his daily trip in turn. Thus no old cream would be delivered, and the standard would be raised. He also recommended the three or five gallon can instead of the ten-gallon can, because it is more easily cleaned, handled and loaded.

Mrs. John A. Johnson to Wed.

St. Paul.—Mrs. John A. Johnson, widow of the late Governor Johnson, will on Christmas day become the bride of William Alley Smith, formerly of Minneapolis, who now lives in Pittsburgh. The announcement caused little surprise among the friends of Mrs. Johnson, who have known of the couple's engagement for some time. Mr. Smith is well known among lumbermen of Minneapolis and was for a number of years engaged in business there.

Girls Take Rat Poison.

Luverne, Minn., Dec. 6.—Agnes Moser and Lulu Kloker, 16 and 14 years old respectively, are in a dangerous condition from taking rat poison.

Lauds Co-operative Community Clubs.

Bemidji.—D. B. Jewell, county agricultural agent of Koochiching county, believes in co-operative community clubs. At the annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Development association here he pointed out that such clubs can do many simple things which would not be done were the people not brought together occasionally for a common purpose. "Such clubs," he said, "give communities a chance to get acquainted with the needs, problems and successes."

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION IN WESTERN CANADA

THE LATEST METHODS ADOPTED BY THE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Scientific farming can be pursued with more profit and advantage in Western Canada, probably than in any other portion of the continent. What may be achieved by it may be ascertained when it is known what has been accomplished by the thousands who have been following the occupation for some time and made a success of it with not even a theoretical knowledge. They "have tickled the land with a hoe" and become rich. But the question is how long could that continue. The soil and the climate and every other condition favor great results by a pursuit of such methods as a technical and practical knowledge will bring. There is in the writer's opinion no possibility of failure. Fully aware of this and also of the great potentialities that exist in Western Canada for the following of the profession of farming, as it could be developed and carried on in Western Canada, the various governments have established the machinery, that there may be developed a class of farmers, who in the possession of the rich soil of that country, with its abundant humus and its phosphates and other properties with which it is so largely endowed, will make of the country, the greatest farming portion of the known world.

The Dominion government showed its paternalism years ago when it established experimental farms in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The benefits of these in the matter of practical education have been widespread, but the greatest benefit is to be observed in the immediate vicinity of these farms, where the occupants have brought their holdings into a high state of cultivation, and year after year sees an added value.

The Province of Manitoba is supplementing this work by its excellent agricultural college, manned by professors of the highest standing in their various branches. That this work is appreciated is shown by the large attendance, not only of the farmer's sons, but by the farmer himself and also by the sons of business men and professors who intend following farming as a profession, and that is what it is fast becoming.

The Province of Saskatchewan, alive to the necessity of a higher and a better system of farming, has in connection with its university an agricultural college and what it is doing today in the matter of education will be felt for all time to come, and it will not be long before it will be an easy matter to pick out the farms manned by graduates of this college, or the farms owned by those who have gained from the experience taught by their neighbor.

The same may be said of Alberta. The university at Edmonton has a complete agricultural college. Full advantage of this is taken by hundreds of students anxious to better their agricultural knowledge, and fit them to take hold successfully of the lands that they expect to occupy. This province has also added demonstration farms in various parts, which are very successful, inasmuch as farmers visit them from all parts, and take advantage of educating themselves for short periods during each winter.

Dean Curtiss of Ames Agricultural College, Iowa, says:

"We of the United States think that we know how to get behind agriculture and push, but the Canadians dare to do even more than we do in some respects. They have wonderful faith in the future; they hesitate at no undertaking that offers prospects of results. More significant still is the wide co-operation for agricultural promotion, including the government, private individuals and corporations and the railroads."

"Canadians are putting great faith in education for the development of their resources—not the old education, but vocational and technical. Provinces that have less than half the population of Iowa and much less wealth are appropriating more liberally for colleges and schools. Manitoba, for instance, has in the last two years provided about as much money for the building of an agricultural plant as Iowa has appropriated in half a century. It has given in two years $2,500,000 for buildings and grounds for its agricultural institutions.

"Saskatchewan is building a plant for its university and agricultural college on a broader and more substantial plan than has been applied to any similar institution in this country. Yet neither province has more than half a million population.

"For public schools equally generous provision is made. They are being built up to give vocational and technical training as well as cultural. They fit the needs of the country excellently and should turn out fine types of boys and girls. They do this with a remarkable faith in the value of right education.

"Dean Curtiss was much interested in the many other ways the Canadian government aids agriculture aside from appropriations for educational purposes. They are aiding in solving marketing problems; they are encouraging better breeding of livestock by buying sires and reselling them at cost, and they are doing many other things of like character.

"I found that the government is advancing from 50 to 85 per cent. of the money necessary to build co-operative creameries and elevators," said Dean Curtiss, "and it is doing it at a low rate of interest and on long time payments. Where cattle need breeding up, the government buys bulls of dairy, Shorthorn, or special dairy breeds and sends them in at cost price and on long time payments."

The yield of grain in Western Canada in 1913 was excellent but not abnormal, wheat going from 30 to 45 bushels per acre, and other small grain with equally good averages.—Advertisement.

CASE OF MAN'S INGRATITUDE

Woman Certainly Had Poor Reward for Her Act of Generous Self-Sacrifice.

George B. McClellan, former mayor of New York, was talking about Thanksgiving.

"The day," he said, "is a good one for a holiday—a good one, for a visit to the seashore.

"I was once walking the Boardwalk in the brilliant sunshine of an Atlantic City Thanksgiving day afternoon, when I saw an overdressed couple come forth from a cafe.

"They were quarreling. Their voices grew louder and fiercer. Finally the man gave the woman a push that actually knocked her down.

"As she struggled to her feet the woman shook her fist at the man, and shrieked:

"'And this is what I get, is it, for pawnin' th' fly screens to give you a day off!'"

Took Him at His Word.

A farmer met a man at the railroad station and asked him for a chew of tobacco. The man pulled out a plug and said: "Have you got a knife?" "No," said the farmer. Then he asked the man if he had any objection where he bit and he said: "No." Then he jumped on the train and said: "I'll bite it in the next town."

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chas H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Cheek.

"Your salary isn't enough to supoprt my daughter."

"I'm glad you've come to that conclusion so early, sir."

What She Got.

"I asked my husband for a little money this morning."

"Did you get any?"

"Yes," acrimony.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

As Far as He Got.

"Did your barber do anything on your head with that hair restorer?"

"Well, he made a bald pretense."

Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops effectively drive out colds and stop all throat irritations—5c at Drug Stores.

Even a fourth-class postmaster may be a first-class man.

Don't Persecute Your Bowels

Cut out cathartics and purgatives. They are brutal, harsh, unnecessary. Try

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Purely vegetable. Act gently on the liver, eliminate bile, and soothe the delicate membrane of the bowel. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Indigestion, as millions know.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

$35 to $75 WEEKLY IN A BUSINESS OF YOUR OWN

We need a man—Farmer's son preferred—to handle household necessities always in use, territory is free—work profitable, steady and healthful.

No Experience Necessary

WE TEACH YOU FREE

If you are ambitious for a business all your own, write for our plan—we will explain everything in detail, many are making big money every week under our direction and plans of Modern Merchandising. You can do the same—this is your opportunity—take advantage of it—write today.

OUR SALESMAN WAGON

KOCH V. T. CO
BOX M
Winona, Minn.

Insure your salary in case of

Accident, Sickness or Quarantine

by buying an up-to-date policy with the Bankers Mutual Casualty Insurance Company, Minneapolis. Minn. Liberal contracts and exclusive territory to agents. Mention this "ad" in writing.

O. M. ROBINSON

Exclusive Violin Maker and Repairer. Write for prices. SEVEN CORNERS, ST. PAUL, MINN.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results

The Typewriter for the Rural Business Man

Ball Bearing Long Wearing

Whether you are a small town merchant or a farmer, you need a typewriter.

If you are writing your letters and bills by hand, you are not getting full efficiency.

It doesn't require an expert operator to run the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter. It is simple, compact, complete, durable.

Send in the attached coupon and we will give especial attention to your typewriter needs.

L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co.,
Syracuse, N.Y.
Please send me your free book about typewriters.
Name ....
P. O. ....
State ....

THOMPSON'S EYE WATER Quickly relieves weak, inflamed eyes. Sold everywhere 25c. Booklet free.
JOHN L. THOMPSON SONS & CO., Troy, N.Y.

Fargo Directory

Poultry Profits

Keep the hen laying during the winter months for largest net profits.

Send us your order for

Crushed Oyster Shells	$1.00	per	100	lbs.
Crushed Clam Shells	.85	"	"	"
Granulated Bone	2.85	"	"	"
Alfalfa Meal	1.75	"	"	"
Oil Meal	1.75	"	"	"
Blatchford's Calf Meal	3.50	"	"	"

1914 Seed Catalogue will soon be distributed—send for one.

FARGO SEED HOUSE, Fargo, N. D.

Fargo Tannery

Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

Young Man write the Y. M. C. A.

Gas Tractor and Auto Schools

FARGO, N. D.
We have "The Teaching System." Write us today. R. R. Well, Sec'y.

JOSEPH & HOENCK

Manufacturing furriers. Wholesale and retail. Repairing, remodeling and redyeing. Furs stored and insured during summer months. Raw Furs Bought.

JOSEPH & HOENCK
59 Broadway Fargo, N. D.

DON'T TRY NEW THINGS

Keeley Cure

When you have an old reliable cure that has stood the test for 35 years. Write The Keeley Institute, Box 134, Fargo, N. D., for further information.

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool

to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo, N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.

Pattern of a No. 1 Hide.

WE MAKE RUGS

From Your Old Carpets. Write for information.
FARGO CARPET & RUG COMPANY
103 8th Street, South Fargo, North Dakota

Dr. H. W. Allen, Osteopath

Acute and chronic diseases successfully treated. Spinal injuries and irregularities a specialty. Graduate American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo.
Offices: 321-322 de Lendrecie Block Fargo N. D.

The Nelson Naturopathic Institute

No. 1 Broadway, Fargo, N. D.
The best equipped drugless institute in the northwest. We cure many chronic diseases which have been considered incurable by the medical doctors. Give us a trial. Send for free booklet.

1913 RECORD

Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, at Chicago, Western Canada carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

Apply for descriptive literature and reduced railway rates to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

W. E. BLACK
Canadian Government Agt., Clifford Block, Grand Forks, N. D.
Canadian Government Agent

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 50-1913.

DAKOTA A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year.

BUSINESS Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking.

COLLEGE Next term opens soon. For full information address F. L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER CURE

HORSE SALE DISTEMPER

You know what you sell or buy through the sales has about one chance in fifty to escape SALE STABLE DISTEMPER. "SPOHN'S" is your true protection, your only safeguard, for as sure as you treat all your horses with it, you will soon be rid of the disease. It acts as a sure preventive no matter how they are "exposed." 60 cents and $1 a bottle; $5 and $10 dozen bottles, at all good druggists, horse goods houses, or delivered by the manufacturers.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO., Chemists and Bacteriologists, GOSHEN, IND., U. S. A.

INEXPENSIVE CHRISTMAS GIFTS

By PEGGY POWERS

MOST certainly you promised yourself last Christmas that your future Christmas remembrance would be completed in ample time, and under no circumstances would the next Christmas season find you in a rush and bustle, planning and finishing belated Christmas gifts. What an idle dream that was. for here it is Christmas time approaching again, and you are racking your brain and attempting to decide what to give at the eleventh hour, in a great hurry and turmoil. Isn't it so?

What not to give, would be a more appropriate phrase. For in the selection of your gifts some regard has to be given to the adaptability and the utility of the present. A wise idea is to spend more time than money in thinking what would be suitable and practicable for each individual. Your gift would be all the more appreciated if it expresses something of yourself and shows that your own personal thoughts have been bestowed upon a selection of the tokens.

The real essence of the Christmas spirit is not expenditure. How easy it is to purchase gorgeous gifts if one has a well filled purse! But if the recipient can buy the same article with little effort, the gift idea will not be remembered for very long. Let your gifts be expressions of love and thoughtfulness. The thought and time you put in gifts of your own handiwork will mean much more than if you simply give something for the sake of giving.

The cost of homemade gifts is generally small. A multitude of gifts can be contrived of materials you have at hand, and of odd pieces of linen, ribbons and silk. Clever fingers can fashion charming novelties. Gladness is the keynote of the Yuletide season. Go at your tasks in a cheerful, blithsome manner, and you will find your work one of joy. The following suggestions may provide you with numerous ideas for attractive gifts, which may be made inexpensively.

With little effort dainty sachets to perfume your friends' gowns may be made at a very small cost. Make six sachets in pastel shades of satin ribbon about two inches square. Fill with soft cotton dusted with some fragrant sachet powder. Place the sachets one on top of the other and tie with narrow gauze ribbon. Gilt safety pins are attached to each sachet so the bags can be pinned on the different frocks.

One distinct novelty is a colonial pin cushion. For this unique cushion you will have to purchase a glass candlestick in a simple design. Cover one side of a four-inch square of cardboard with some pretty silk which harmonizes with the color scheme of your friends' bedrooms. Form a mound-like cushion of cotton on the other side and cover with the silk. The cushion is fastened to the candlestick by fine wires or thread. Around the edge of the cushion sew a beaded fringe about three inches long.

Another pin cushion has for the foundation a four-inch wire tea strainer. The back is fitted with a disk of cotton covered in cretonne. The wire part is lined with flowered cretonne and filled with cotton. Wind the handle with narrow ribbon and finish with a pretty bow.

The girl away at college would surely be overjoyed with a shoe bag, which she can hang inside her closet door. The shoe bag should be half the length of the door with compartments for shoes, slippers and rubbers and a long compartment on one side for an umbrella, and on the other for books not in use. The materials used should be heavy denim with the compartments bound in tape.

A pleasing notion would be to make any articles for the girls away at college in their college colors. A piece of gay colored cretonne bound all around with a pretty braid would also be acceptable as a trunk cover.

Dear to every girl's heart are pretty dress accessories. The new Robespierre collars with jabots of frilly lace certainly will be a welcome addition to your friends' wardrobes. The collars are usually made of black satin with the ruffles of lace about two inches wide.

Chic boudoir caps are made of circles of shadow lace 18 inches wide with soft ruffles of narrow lace around the crown. The ruffles should be made in the back wider than in the front to give the effect of a Dutch bonnet. The cap is decorated with little pink rosebuds and a band of pink ribbon.

Exquisite La France roses are made out of folded satin ribbon in three-inch lengths. Turn the ends back at the corners to form the petals. Group the petals together and join to a wire stem which has been twisted with narrow green satin.

A natural looking bunch of violets is formed of tiny bows of twisted violet ribbon tied with green silk wire.

Hat pins, collar pins and buckles are wonderfully effective when covered with ribbon roses made of narrow folded ribbon grouped closely together. If you prefer you can use satin cherries made of tiny circles of satin filled with cotton, with petals of green ribbon.

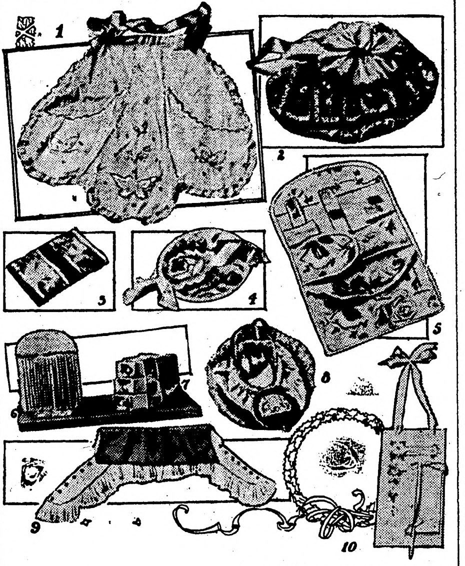
The girl who dances will find much pleasure in receiving a pretty pair of beaded satin slipper bows to match her party slippers.

For the traveler a small cretonne pillow with pockets on one side for magazines and newspapers would be a convenience.

A set of envelopes of white linen to hold the necessary articles, would also be a useful gift. If you have time you could buttonhole the flap in scallops. One envelope for handkerchiefs, one for the night dress, one lined in rubber for the toilet articles, and one large one for the extra waist. The pieces you have left of the linen you can utilize for napkin rings, scalloped and finished with a monogram, or for boudoir lamp shades, which are much admired when inserted with medallions of fine lace.

For the invalid a thoughtful little gift would be a cover for the drinking glass. A glass circle the size of the top of the ordinary glass is required; crochet a cover over the glass in a simple stitch in two colors of mercerized cotton. In the center sew a crocheted ring for a handle.

A tray with a narrow wooden border and brass handles could have a pretty piece of embroidered linen under the glass.



1—Apron.
2—Lantern Bag.
3—Cretonne Pillow.
4—Dolly Bag.
5—Sewing Roll.
6—Colonial Pin Cushion.
7—Chest of Drawers.
8—Collar Bag.
9—Robespierre Collar.
10—Telephone Memorandum.

Ribbon bedroom slippers are especially new and nothing could be simpler to make. Sheer flowered ribbon to soft lamb's wool, draw an elastic through a lacing on the upper edge, leaving a heading about an inch wide. Make full rosettes of ribbon and place one on each instep.

A dolly case will delight the heart of any housewife. They can be made in different sizes. Figured cretonne may be used in making one case with the inside lined in white material. Cover two circles of pasteboard with the material and finish neatly with a pretty wash braid. Use ribbon to keep the dollies in place.

A set of holders for handling hot dishes are made six inches square, of some pretty chintz. These are attached to an apron to match the material.

A set of boxes covered with a pretty pattern of wall paper would be most useful and acceptable to keep in the bureau drawers. These must be pasted neatly and the covers attached to the box.

Another novelty is a chest of draws for trinkets, hair pins or jewelry. Cover the box with cretonne and fit three smaller boxes into it. The boxes are covered with the same material and have little brass rings sewed on the center of each box, so they can be pulled out like drawers.

Aprons are always charming gifts. There are numberless suggestions for aprons. Fascinating aprons are made of sheer lawn with butterflies embroidered on them. The bottom is finished in three deep scallops edged with a fancy stitch and lace. The two end scallops form pockets for the sewing articles. The belt is formed of ribbon trimmed with jaunty little bows. Then there are chafing dish aprons, overall aprons, and many aprons you can devise with a little ingenuity.

We see bags here, there and everywhere. Bags of all sorts and sizes, from the elaborate affairs made of strips of Japanese embroidery like those shown in Chinatown, to those of the simplest design. Sewing bags, opera bags, laundry bags, shoe bags, slipper bags, corset bags, vanity bags, made of ribbon and fitted out with a small mirror and a tiny powder puff. Manicure bags may be fitted with the smaller size manicure articles, and for the children you can make marble bags, school bags, bean bags and pencil bags.

A useful receptacle for sewing materials is a lantern bag made of plain and flowered ribbon, or you could utilize any material you have. For the bottom of the bag cover a cardboard circle three inches and a half in diameter. Gather the flowered ribbon to this and hem the outside. Run an embroidery hoop four inches in diameter around the upper edge. Join the plain material to this and about eight inches from this place another hoop about four inches in diameter. This is the top of bag and is sheered over hoop. A round cover piece of cardboard is used as a cover and a heavy cord is used to carry it over the arm.

Another original bag for threads and needles is made of two circles of cretonne lined with satin. These are joined at intervals, leaving spaces for the spools. In the center is a little pin cushion. A ribbon drawn through the different sections draws this little bag together.

Use a pretty piece of ribbon three-quarters of a yard in length for another sewing contrivance. Turn up one end to form a pocket for the spools of thread, and the other end for the thimble and small scissors, which is attached with a narrow ribbon. In the center have squares of white flannel for the needles and pins. When not in use this case can be rolled up and fastened neatly with a loop and button.

Sometimes it is a rather perplexing question what to give a man. Men always like something that adds to their comfort and personal convenience. If you can knit there is not much difficulty in deciding what to give. Knitted silk neckties are much in vogue.

Good, warm, fleecy mufflers are liked by the man who motors, and bed room slippers are also every welcome.

A telephone memorandum with a pencil attached would be a daily reminder of the giver. Cover a piece of cardboard with tan linen embroidered in pink roses. Buy a small pad of white paper and paste it on the linen.

Men invariably are pleased with personal gifts, such as handkerchiefs with the monogram embroidered in the corner.

A rather good idea is to present your friend with his monogram embroidered heavily in black satin ribbon. These monograms will be of service to sew in his overcoat, so that he can easily distinguish his coat from another's in a crowded place.

Then there are whisk broom holders covered in linen, and collar bags made on a circular form of card board covered with rose-colored brocade and edged with old gold braid.

For the man who shaves himself, a shaving pad is useful. Cover two squares of cardboard with any material you desire. Work the monogram on the center of the upper one, insert leaves of tissue paper and tie together with a silk cord.

There are plenty of adorable gifts one can make for the baby. An ingenious idea is to cover an ordinary scale with pink ribbon and slit it down the center, neatly finishing the edges so mother can see every day how much the new baby is gaining. Use narrow ribbon to hang up the scale. Also a cute little water bag covered in soft pretty flannel will be an acceptable gift for his majesty.

Darling little bibs are made of huck toweling with curious shaped animals cross-stitched in red thread across the border.

A carriage strap which affords much amusement to the infant is made of elastic with satin ribbon in pink or blue sheered over it. To this strap, by means of a narrow ribbon, a celluloid whistle, a rubber doll and a teething ring are attached.

An enchanting little nightingale is made out of a square of cashmere, crocheted on the edge with silk or bound with wash ribbon. Satin ribbons are run through a casing to fit the head.

For the child that is a little older you can make a screen covered in snowy plain material and decorated with pictures cut from magazines and books. One section for flowers, one for animals, and one for birds, would be much appreciated.

A scrap book made of dark gray lining pasted with pictures, is also a gift a child can derive much pleasure from. After you have your presents completed, be careful that they are wrapped so that they have a Yule tide look about them. Use plenty of green and white tissue paper. Seal the package with holly ribbon or gold cord and don't forget to tuck a spray of holly or mistletoe among the wrappings.

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

Birth of the King

Rev. F. W. Shriner

LO, the heaven is all resplendent
With the radiance of a star;
Yonder, in the ether, pendant
Flames its glories all afar.

In the East its splendor shineth,
Sages see its golden gleam;
Read the presage, what defineth?
Follow it to Bethlehem.

Costly gifts and adoration
Hasten they with joy to bring;
Traveling from their far-off station
Come to hail the new-born King.

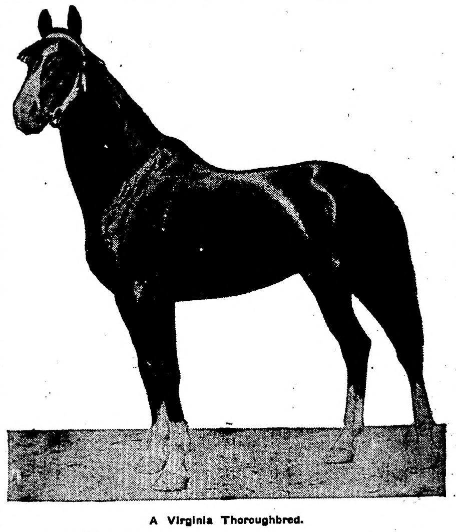
Still falls the night on Judah's plains,
Shine soft the stars, the welkin gem,
When shepherds catch seraphic strains
From angel chords borne down to them.

Hymn of triumph, hymn of glory,
Sings the shining angel throng;
Shepherds list earth's sweetest story
And the world its gladdest song.

Sweeps the paean down the ages,
Swells the note of joy and praise,
Gilds with hope time's op'ning pages,
Wafts its cheer to latest days.

Earth redeemed, with heaven, viest
As it sounds the glad refrain,
"Glory, glory in the highest,
Peace on earth, good will to men!"

GOOD YOUNG HORSES ALWAYS IN DEMAND



A Virginia Thoroughbred.

There is a great tendency on the part of many to neglect the colts on the farm during the winter, says a Minnesota bulletin. It too often happens that there is apparent shortage of feed, and the result is that colts are slighted. One way of ruining a young colt is to have his growth stunted during the first year or two. Most of the colts on the farm get a good start the first six months of their lives, from the fact that they are allowed to suckle the dam during that time. Early fall provides them with good pasture, and possibly they have been receiving some oats or shared a part of the feed of the mare. Such treatment puts them in good shape for the winter, but liberal feeding must be kept up if a strong, well-developed and matured horse is expected.

The colt's system requires a considerable amount of bone and muscle-building material, and this can only be had by feeding nitrogenous feeds, such as oats, a little bran, oil meal; and, if obtainable, some clover hay. The feeding of corn, so often practiced, is not desirable for the growing colt, but had better be confined to the matured horses. Access to the straw pile will not hurt a growing colt, but it should not be compelled to rely on the straw pile for a livelihood.

The question is often asked: Why do we find so many promising colts at the county fairs during the fall, and such poor yearlings? The foregoing statement is in part explanatory of such conditions of affairs.

One of the best forms of investment on the farm is the liberal feeding of farm animals of all kinds; and the colt is no exception. A well-bred colt, if properly taken care of and fed the right kind of feed during his first three years of his life, will bring from $75 to $100 more when three years old than the one that is neglected and poorly fed. Good young horses are always in demand on the market, and can only be supplied from the farms where colts receive the proper care and treatment.

PLANT ALFALFA TO IMPROVE SOIL

Less Expense and Work Required to Handle Than Grain Crop—High Feed Value.

(By W. C. PALMER, North Dakota Experiment Station.)

One ton of alfalfa hay has the same feeding value as 60 bushels of oats. Alfalfa can be expected to average at least two tons per acre. This is the equivalent of 120 bushels of oats. There is no land that will average 120 bushels of oats—in fact it takes good land and good handling to average 60 bushels of oats per acre.

The alfalfa requires less work and less expense to handle than a grain crop. And the alfalfa will improve the soil while the oat crop will reduce its productive power. To get this value from alfalfa it must be fed on the farm.

It needs to be kept in mind that the alfalfa is a roughage.

COMMON SENSE PICKED UP IN HOG LOT

The best results in breeding come from well-matured ancestry.

Growing young pigs can be truthfully termed detail work. The man who is a good pig grower must like the work and be willing to look after the many details that demand attention, and it will pay and pay big returns.

Some think that the breeding and growing of hogs is a crowded occupation; but there is always room for the best breeders and the best feeders at the top, even though the business is crowded by the average class of swine growers.

No hog farm equipment is complete without a good dipping vat, and it should be used frequently during the summer and early fall.

There is no one thing that will do more to maintain health in the herd than the judicious use of the dipping vat.

It is far better to underfeed than to overfeed the sow after she has farrowed, but she must be fed sufficient to keep her quiet.

It is better for the sow if the yards are so arranged that she can go a few rods for her feed and drink.

Stock that is raised for breeding purposes and stock that is raised for market must be treated differently.

If we feed for pork there is a lack of bone, muscle and constitution in our breeding stock.

Darkness always deteriorates the general health of the herd and makes it possible to have corners and other places where filth accumulates. Light and sunshine are invigorating and stimulating and detrimental to the growth of disease and germs.

The bacon type of hogs are more a matter of environment than of breeding.

The old saying that "anything is good enough for a hog," does not go in these days of good farming.

Free range and clean water are the best preventives of disease we know of.

Food for Cows.

After a cow becomes fresh in milk the first feed to give her is a warm bran mash. This, besides being strengthening, is of a general benefit. It is a good idea to cut down the meal ration on the cows, beginning some four weeks before calving and at that time increase the amount of bran. Cornmeal makes animal heat, but bran is cooling to the system.

Thorough Preparation.

The better the preparation of the soil the less seed will be required. Many failures in seed are not due to so much lack of vitality in the seed as to the unfavorable condition of the ground. Thorough preparation not only saves seed, but lessens the work of cultivation.

Age for Breeding.

There is not much gain in breeding a heifer before she is eighteen months old, but there is considerable risk.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Seance at Nishikoff

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

THE league was doomed; that was the substance of nearly every conversation in the diplomatic clubs of Europe. Created by Dvornak, that brilliant and erratic genius whose diatribes against democracy had stirred all the courts of the continent, it had become organized in a single year in every country between Spain and the Urals. Kings had become members of it, and the league, backed by the most powerful of influences, had acquired immunity from governments and threatened to impose its will upon the civilized world. Then the inevitable happened. Factions arose, base men perverted its aims to their own ends; the best element abandoned it in disgust, a counter-organization of Western rulers was initiated, and, after the issue had hung for months in the balance, the scales fell, and the league became discredited.

And up and down Europe, traveling from court to court, a cohort of paladins, each fighting singly and wholeheartedly, strove for the two factions.

That the league was planning a desperate stroke in order to regain its former influence was the substance of a conversation between Lord Claude Tresham, secretary to the cabinet of kings which had fought the league successfully, and Paul Lane, the young American millionaire, as they sat together in the palm room of the Hotel des Anglais, at Geneva, and looked out at the snowy-crested mountains.

Paul's wits had been sharpened in many fights when he was serving the league. He had been induced to place his fortune and his services at its disposal by the Princess Clothilde of Austria, the guiding spirit of the society. When he came to understand that he was but a tool in the hands of an unscrupulous woman, whom, nevertheless, he had grown to love with a passion which, he knew, would last during the remainder of his life; when, too, he understood, in shame and humiliation, that the high motives of the league were shams masking criminal designs, he offered his services to Lord Tresham, to fight his former friends. He had performed several missions with honor, he had met Clothilde herself in battles of wits and worsted her; but each encounter only drove home more deeply the shaft of the pitiless archer who wounded him to the heart.

For this reason he fought the more daringly. He had become, next to Tresham, the opposing organization's most powerful agent.

Tresham had summoned Paul to Switzerland to undertake a mission which was to overthrow the league's last remnants of power and influence in Europe. He explained it to him in the afterglow of the glorious August evening.

"The league has one prop, Paul," he said, "and you are to kick it away. The kaiser has long abandoned it; so has Alfonso of Spain, its leading western ally. But in the realm of the Tsar the league still rests supreme. The Russian agent of that unscrupulous association is Apollodorus, the monk who has obtained so strong a hold over the people and over the superstition-ridden Nicholas II. As you undoubtedly know, this Apollodorus, whose headquarters are in the monastery at Nishikoff, is the latest of a long train of charlatans who have duped Nicholas with spiritualistic phenomena. At Nishikoff, they say, he calls up the ghost of his majesty the late Alexander III., and this spectral adviser, whose counsels are, of course, always those of the league, and who is, in reality, the 'medium' Apollodorus himself, directs the policy of the whole realm of Russia. Paul, did you ever turn the dark lantern on a 'spirit' at a seance?"

"I did," said Paul, chuckling over the remembrance. "It was in my college days. I exposed the notorious Brale, who had fooled many leading people in New York, and photographed him with a calcium light, capering round the room in fifteen yards of crash towelling."

"That, Paul, is exactly what you are to do to Apollodorus," answered Lord Claude. "You can imagine the scene: the Tsar, wildly credulous, his attendants secretly sceptical, but outwardly believers, and just a little bit inclined to a mystical interpretation of the phenomena because of the inherent human tendency to self-deception. I can obtain admittance for you through friends at St. Petersburg. You will, then, attend the seance with a dark lantern under your coat, expose the fraud at the psychological moment, and obliterate the league's influence in Russia in a flood of ridicule. Once Nicholas has left it, we shall hear very little more about it."

Paul left for St. Petersburg on the following day, bearing a letter of introduction to Count Gabel, a man of old family who, though at present out of favor, anticipated the day when the wheel of fortune would once more place him in office. Paul had been instructed that Gabel was a firm believer in the phenomena and that he must obtain admittance to the seance in the guise of a believer. Upon presenting his card he was at once admitted to Count Gabel's house and ushered into the presence of a portly, elderly gentleman, somewhat pompous, but with a saving sense of humor which, together with a certain artlessness of nature, attracted Paul.

"And so you wish to investigate the phenomena of the monk Apollodorus, young man," he said, when he had finished reading the letter. "Lord Tresham and I are very old friends, dating from the days when he was first attache at the Russian court. I am sure that I can obtain permission from his majesty, and you have come, luckily, at precisely the most favorable time, for his majesty departs for Nishikoff on Wednesday next, with all the gentlemen of his court, to question his late father concerning an important matter of foreign policy, upon whose adoption or rejection, I may say in confidence, grave issues depend. His majesty is only too anxious to make converts, and anyone for whom I vouch can accompany his gentlemen."

His voice grew low and he bent forward and began speaking earnestly. "It will convert you, my friend," said Count Gabel. "It is positively the most wonderful exhibition ever vouchsafe to man. I knew the late Tsar Alexander. And, since his death, I have seen him at the Nishikoff monastery—seen him, touched his hand, just as it was in the flesh, and spoken with him face to face and heard his own voice answer me. It is wonderful! Imagine what it means to us who have been privileged thus to learn for surety that death is, in truth, only transition! Imagine what it means to the Tsar to have the advantage of his father's counsel upon matters of state!"

He suddenly became aware that he was talking with utter abandon to a stranger and, sitting up in his chair, resumed his severe manner.

"Mr. Lane, it will be necessary to make use of a very harmless deception," he said. "You are not married?"

"No," answered Paul.

"Good! Good!" exclaimed the jovial old man. "Because of course you must have some sort of excuse for being taken to Nishikoff. You must be some relative of mine, for instance. You don't speak Russian? Ha! H'm! Then you can't be a blood relation. Ha! I have it! You shall pass as the fiance of my wife's cousin, a very charming lady of royal blood who is staying with us and is a friend of the Tsaritsa. She will, I am sure, willingly accept you in that capacity for she loves a jest. She is as convinced as I in the reality of these phenomena—and so will you be too. Now you must send to your hotel for your baggage and come home with me."

Paul was completely disarmed by the old count's hospitality. In fact nothing but a strong sense of duty prevented him from throwing away the dark lantern and calcium powder which he had brought in his suit-case. But he conquered this impulse and at the end of the day waited upon the count again, entered the droshky which was waiting outside his office, and was whirled away to Gabel's residence in a fashionable part of St. Petersburg, where he was warmly welcomed by the countess. A few words of explanation from the count in Russian vastly amused her.

"Clothilde will be here in a few minutes," she said to Paul in English. "But wait! I myself will go and tell her that her fiance is expecting her!" And she tripped out of the room, leaving Paul and the count alone.

Clothilde! It could not be the same, unless she were ubiquitous.

Yet Paul was hardly surprised when she came in, for fate seemed resolved to link their fortunes together.

The strangeness of that meeting filled him with a realization of the dramatic nature of the parts they were to play.

"Well, how do you like each other?" inquired the countess amiably. "Do you think you can permit Mr. Lane to act as your fiance for a day, Clothilde?"

She raised her eyes for an instant. "I—I think I can," she murmured, and the blood flushed her cheecks and then receded leaving them whiter than ivory. In that moment Paul felt assured that she was not indifferent to him.

They found themselves side by side upon the window seat after dinner, while the old count snored peacefully in his chair and the countess knitted, casting secrets, sly, amiable glances toward her guests. She had taken an extraordinary fancy to this young American. She did not know very much about Clothilde, who had always moved in a circle loftier than her own; but the good soul's mind was filled with match-making. If Clothilde could learn to care for him as much as he evidently cared for her! It seemed to be a case of love at sight! Perhaps—well, stranger things had happened. She saw in her mind the acceptance of Paul as Clothilde's lover, the marriage ceremony, the bridesmaids, in white, with fragrant blossoms in their hands . . . and all this faded into the midst of dreams. The countess slept beside the fire, opposite her sleeping husband.

And Paul was stammering out his love and clasping Clothilde's little hands in his.

"Forgive me," he was saying, "for my remarks to you that day in Paris. I was mad with a sense of shame and betrayal. I have always loved you, Clothilde. I shall love you for ever more. Do you love me?"

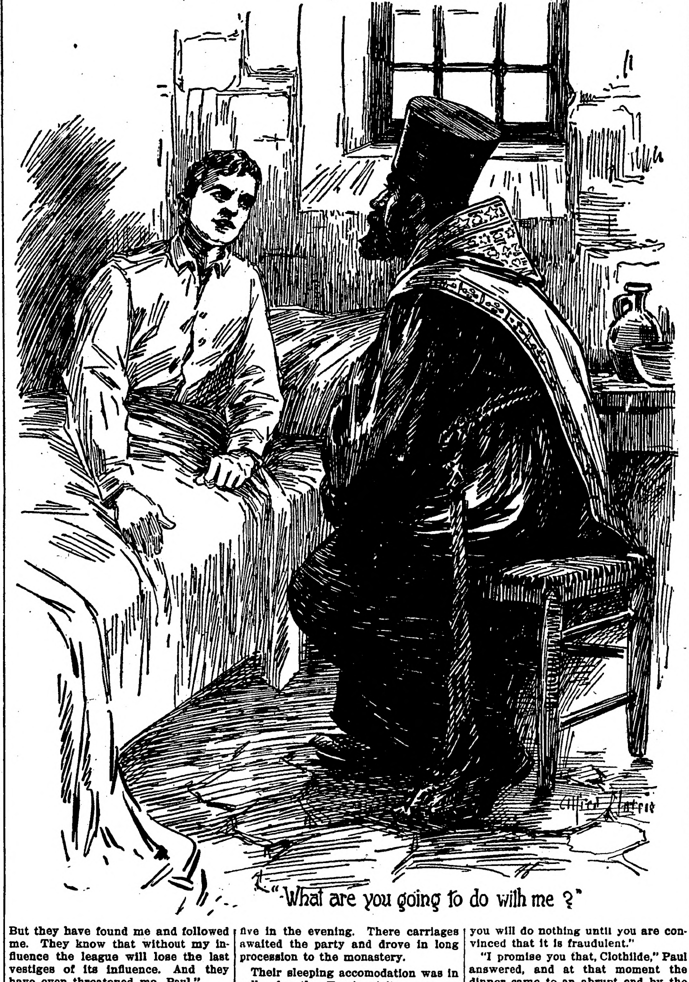
For they never seem banal to lovers, those hackneyed words. Nor did her reply seem as insipid as the printed record of it would be; for both were in heaven.

Paul saw tears in Clothilde's eyes.

"I love you, Paul," she said, and humility had replaced the imperious pride in her voice. "When you showed me to myself for what I am I suddenly realized—O, ever so many things. I knew then that I had found the one man whom I could love. I always loved you, Paul, from that strange moment of our first meeting in America. But lately—well, Paul, do you know why I am here?"

"To aid Apollodorus," he answered, with the least tinge of bitterness in his voice.

"No," she answered. "It is because I am sick of the league. I tried to bury myself here, to escape them.



"What are you going to do with me?"

But they have found me and followed me. They know that without my influence the league will lose the last vestiges of its influence. And they have even threatened me, Paul."

"Who?" he cried angrily.

"Von Holzrath. He is now one of the leaders of the organization. He has offered me the choice between continuing as their agent and the league's enmity. I must decide. I fear him so; I hate the league so much, and I long for peace. I think it is my love for you, Paul, that has sickened me of these intrigues."

"Then come with me," cried Paul. "Come back to America. No one will dare molest you there. Come and—"

She placed her hand upon his arm. "Some day," she answered. "But not now. There are things to be done—you understand? I cannot disappear so swiftly. I feel, somehow, that I must remain until the league is crushed, or till it crushes me. It will be only a little while, Paul. Promise me that, now we are sure of each other's love, you will not seek me out until I call you."

"I promise," he answered sadly. "But, Clothilde, why are you here? Did not the league send you to aid in the fraud upon the Tsar?"

She nodded. "But I found that it is no fraud, Paul," she said.

"What? You don't mean that it is true?"

She nodded, looking earnestly into his eyes.

"It is in very truth the spirit of the late Tsar," she answered. "I was most sceptical; but when I went with the count I saw and heard and touched him. None could mistake Alexander. Why, Paul, do you not know that Alexander was the strongest man in Europe? He could bend a horseshoe double with one of his hands. And I have seen him—his spirit—do that, to convince Nicholas."

"It was Apollodorus."

"Never, Paul. He is a weakling and has hands like a woman. Paul, if you are here to expose the monk you will be convinced in spite of yourself."

"You are deceived by a clever impostor," Paul answered. "It cannot be, Clothilde."

She did not try further to persuade him, and a moment later the countess awoke and looked around for her knitting.

The party was to start from the station at ten o'clock on the Wednesday morning, in a special train, scheduled to reach Nishikoff late in the afternoon, when they would be received and dined in the refectory of the monastery and lodged overnight. The program was carried out as it had been planned. Paul caught a glimpse of the thin, nervous figure of the Tsar as he hurried into his private coach; then, with his host and Clothilde—for the countess stayed comfortably at home—he entered a compartment already three parts filled with gentlemen of the Tsar's bodyguard, and the train rolled out of the station, to pull in at Nishikoff about five in the evening. There carriages awaited the party and drove in long procession to the monastery.

Their sleeping accomodation was in cells, for the Tsar's visits were regarded both by himself and by the head monk as disciplinary journeys; but the meal, spread on long tables in the refectory, was satisfying and almost epicurean. Evidently these monks were not averse to the good things of life; indeed, from the glances which they turned upon Clothide it was evident that they were by no means fanatical in their asceticism. The admission of a woman, though contrary to the strict monastic rule, was condoned in the case of one of his majesty's suite, but it proved sufficiently disconcerting for many of the inmates. Paul noticed, however, that each scrutiny of his companion was preceded by a furtive glance toward a small, thin man in a brown monk's robe made, instead of from cloth, out of horsehair, and fastened with a plain hempen girdle, and that this man, who occupied a carved chair at the head of the long table, seemed to possess a wholesome authority over the brethren.

"That is Apollodorus," whispered Clothilde to Paul; and Paul, looking at the stern, ascetic face of the man, was conscious of a fund of power in him which would make his own duty the more difficult. He grasped the little dark lantern tightly under his coat. Undoubtly Apollodorus was no common impostor and would fight for his control over the wavering mind of Nicholas. And Paul was not among friends. He knew the self-deluded vanity of those who are tricked, which makes them the more insistent in defense of the impostor. He turned to Clothilde.

"Clothilde, as you love me, tell me, do you believe that the spirit of the Tsar really appears to Nicholas?"

"As I love you, I am sure of it, Paul," she answered. "O Paul, I know that you are here to fight against the league, to show up Apollodorus, the impostor, as you consider him. Paul, indeed it is no imposture, and in very truth Alexander III. makes himself manifest to his son."

For the first time Paul was staggered by this calm faith in the monk; he began to feel himself upon the brink of the unknown. The matter was assuming a more serious aspect than ever before.

He ran over his instructions in his mind. His duty was to convince Nicholas that Apollodorus was an impostor. That would turn the weak-minded ruler from his allies and destroy the league for ever. He must, then, catch the man when he was capering round the seance room in the guise of the late Tsar. He could do no more than that; if that failed to suffice, he would fail in his mission.

Clothilde seemed to realize the purpose of his journey.

"Paul!" she whispered, "you will be sadly deceived if you intend to break up the seance meeting. Promise me you will do nothing until you are convinced that it is fraudulent."

"I promise you that, Clothilde," Paul answered, and at that moment the dinner came to an abrupt end by the rising of the Tsar. The brethren stood up from their benches and marched out in order, leaving the Tsar and his retinue alone with the head monk and Apollodorus.

Then, since the affair was a matter of routine, by reason of frequent repetition, no words were spoken, but the whole party filed out in the monks' wake and entered a large, square, vault-like chamber, at one end of which a black curtain had been drawn in front of a sort of dais, a platform containing a dark cabinet and a chair. In front of this were chairs in rows several deep, into which the Tsar and his courtiers sank, while the head monk bowed his head and intoned a prayer. Then, bowing solemnly, he withdrew, leaving Apollodorus to perform his feats.

The monk addressed the Tsar. What he said Paul could not, of course, understand, but he saw how thoroughly the man dominated the mind of the monarch and impressed himself upon the courtiers.

From behind the curtain came a low muttering sound, gradually increasing in intensity, with broken words in deeper tones interjected as by an alien voice. Then a draught blew back the curtain till it bellied into the face of the Tsar. Nicholas drew back with a stifled shriek; a moment later the curtain was as suddenly withdrawn, and, as the Tsar subsided, a huge figure of a man glided from the cabinet and stood before the company, his arms raised as in benediction.

"Do you believe? Do you believe?" whispered Count Gabel excitely in Paul's ear. And Paul, looking, owned that he had never seen a clearer representation of the late Tsar than this spectral figure with the gaunt cheeks, gray beard, and mighty arms stretched out over the company. The Tsar had fallen upon his knees, the courtiers followed suit, and somebody among the audience was singing a Russian hymn. It died away; the figure still stood motionless before the curtain; then Nicholas arose weakly and, prostrating himself upon the lowest step, held communion with the figure, which bent over him. Only the whispers of their voices were audible in the room.

The eyes of all were on the pair. All watched, all wondered; perhaps of that assembly half believed and hardly one was wholly sceptical. Paul slipped, unnoticed, out of his chair, and edged his way toward the front row, immediately behind the prostrate sovereign.

A candle flickered in one corner and the light fell clearly upon the face of the tall figure. Paul was amazed. This could not be Apollodorus—some confederate, perhaps, but never that ascetic little man.

A voice whispered in agitation on one side of him. Others took up the words. Hands clutched at him. Paul did not understand that he was sitting in Nicholas's chair. At any moment the monarch might rise and come back and perceive this intruder. They laid hands violently upon him, and Paul, thinking his purpose had been discovered, tore the dark lantern from under his coat and flashed it into the face of the figure. He had planned to begin instead with the calcium, but this proved equally efficacious.

For everybody was upon his feet shouting as Paul, leaping forward, his lantern light flooding the room, grasped the tall man by the flowing draperies he wore and whirled down the steps with him and into the midst of the guests. Simultaneously the whole company precipitated themselves upon Paul and him whom he held fast. Whoever it was, it was no ghost, that much was certain, but a giant in strength, a giant who sought for him and found him among the stumbling men and crashing chairs and wrapped his great arms around him like a vise and slowly crushed the breath out of his body. Pinned helpless in the grip of his antagonist, Paul felt his senses leaving him. He heard the shouts of the courtiers blend and mingle into a sullen roar as of the sea; lights flashed before his eyes; he felt himself lifted up and carried away. The last things that he saw were Clothilde's terror-stricken face and the horrified eyes of Count Gabel.

When he opened his eyes again he was lying in the little cell which had been assigned to him on his arrival. Overhead an electric light burned brightly. Beside his bed a cowled figure was seated—the figure of Apollodorus. As Paul stirred the monk put down the missal which he had been reading and came toward him.

"You are feeling better?" he asked, smiling composedly. "Then you can tell me who you are. An Englishman?"

"American."

"Newspaper correspondent?"

"If you like," answered Paul indifferently.

"Or perhaps an emissary of the league," continued Apollodorus, smiling more broadly.

"Like yourself? No," answered Paul.

"My good American, you are a month out of the date," Apollodorus answered. "I knew that I had the reputation of being a member of that organization, but one must not believe all that one hears. I have better things to occupy my mind—eternal things, not those of this wretched world. That his majesty has been inclined toward the league was due to the counsels of his father; lately Alexander has counselled him otherwise."

"By whom you mean yourself," said Paul. "Now let us be frank. What are you going to do with me?"

The monk stared at him thoughtfully.

"If you will give me your word of honor to keep the secret which I shall reveal, you may go free," he said. "To be equally frank, you have us in an unpleasant position. If we had not dragged you away before the lights went up—"

"Yes."

"His majesty might have guessed at your purpose. As it is, everybody thinks you were a journalist. Have I your word? Good. The man you fought with was his late majesty Alexander III. In middle life he wished to withdraw from the world to give himself up to meditation. As the Tsar cannot abdicate he followed the example of his predecessor, Alexander I., and withdrew to this monastery after a mock funeral, and hither his majesty comes at times to receive counsel. You understand, my friend, that with a sovereign of his majesty's type of mind we cannot always be frank." He whispered into Paul's ear. "Nicholas is weak in his wits. It is necessary to use certain methods to strengthen them. You understand?"

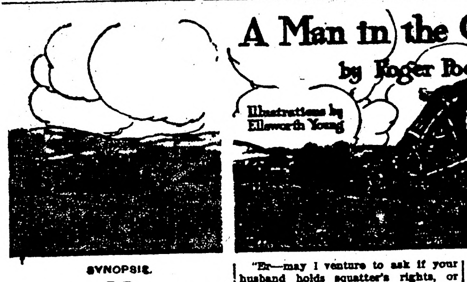
"And to strengthen the priesthood," answered Paul.

"But not the league," said Apollodorus. "Come, there we are quits. You have achieved your purpose—for I know all about you, Mr. Lane. The league no longer rules in Russia. And I have your word of honor. A carriage is waiting to convey you to the station. A train arrives at dawn—one hour from now."

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young



SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse. Their married life starts out happily. Kate succumbs to the pleadings of a composer to return to the stage and runs away with him. She rescues Widow O'Flynn from her burning house, is badly burned herself and returns home, where Jesse receives her with open arms.

CHAPTER VI.

Robbery-Under-Arms.

Kate's Narrative.

We have started a visitor's book. It opens with press cuttings of interviews with Professor Bohns, the famous archaeologist, who came to examine the paleolithic deposits at South Cave. Next are papers relating to a summons for assault, brought by the late Mr. Trevor against J. Smith. But the gem of our collection is a letter of lengthy explanation from an eminent Italian cur, who spent a whole month at the ranch last winter. Nobody is more hospitable, or more hungry for popularity than my dear man, but I think that special prayers should be offered for his visitors. He has a motto now:—"Love me: love my bear, not my missus."

My jealous hero has told the story of an old admirer, once my fellow-student, who brought me a dumpy piano for which I so starved, told me the news, talked shop, and would make me a prima donna—my life's ambition. The trap was well baited. Lonely, and terrified by the dread majesty of winter, I craved for the lights, for the crowds, for my home, for my people, for my art. And there are little things besides which mean so much to a woman.

Salvator turned out to be a cur, his mission despicable, and yet no woman born can ever be without some little tenderness for one whose love misleads him. And I who sought to read a lesson to poor Jesse, learned one for myself. I am no longer free, but fettered, and proud of the chains, Love's chains, worth more to me than that lost world.

One morning, it must have been the twenty-sixth, I think, we had a caller, destined, I fear to entry in our visitor's book. Jesse had ridden off to see how his ponies thrive on the new grass, Mrs. O'Flynn was redding up after breakfast, and finding myself in the way, I took my water colors down to Apex Rock, to see if one sketch would hold winter, spring, summer, as viewed from the center of wonderland.

Now our house being in full view from the apex, and sound traveling magically in this clear atmosphere, I heard voices. Mrs. O'Flynn had a visitor, and I was in such a jealous hurry to share the gossip, that my sketch went over the cliff as I rose to run. A rather handsome man, in the splendid cow-boy dress, stood by a chestnut gelding, such a horse aristocrat that I made sure he must sport a coat of arms. Moreover, in a gingerly and reluctant way, as though under orders, he was kissing Mrs. O'Flynn. She beamed, bless her silly old heart!

Mrs. O'Flynn looks on her truthfulness as a quality too precious for every-day use, and so carefully has it been preserved that in her fifty-fourth year it shows no sign of wear. Hence, on reaching the house I was not surprised to find that her visitor was a total stranger.

Judge by signs—chivalry, reticence, courtesy—Mrs. O'Flynn's guest was not a cow-boy. His florid manners, exaggerated politeness, and imitation of our middle-class English speech stamped his as a bounder, but not of the British breed. Later, in moments of excitement, he spoke New York, with a twang of music-hall.

Even in so lonely a place it is curious to remember that such a person should appeal to me. Still in his common way the man had beauty, carried his clothes well, moved with grace. So much the artist in me saw and liked, but I think no woman could have seen those tragic eyes without being influenced.

"Ah! Mrs. Smith, I believe?" He stood uncovered. "May I venture to ask if your husband is at home? I think I had the pleasuah of knowing him years ago down in Texas."

"He'll be back by noon."

"Thank you, madam. Fact is, we were very much surprised to see your chimney smoke. We thought this exquisite place was quite unoccupied. Indeed!"

"Who's 'we'?"

"Oh, we're the outfit riding for General Schmidt. We've come in search of the spring feed. We were informed that Ponder's place was unoccupied, open to all. Am I mistaken in supposing that this is Ponder's place?"

"It is."

"Er—may I venture to ask if your husband holds squatter's rights, or has the homestead and pre-emption?"

"You may ask my husband."

"Thank you, madam. Our foreman instructed me to say that if the place proved to be occupied, I was to ask terms for pasturage. We've only two hundred head."

"Mr. Smith will consider the matter."

"We're camped in a little cave at the south end of the bench, deuced comfortable."

Of course I know I'm a fool, and expect to be treated as such. But this man claimed to have camped at the South Cave without passing this house, which was impossible.

"Camped at South Cave?" said I. "In that event I need not detain you. Mr. Smith no doubt will call on you after dinner. Good morning, sir."

But this was not to his mind, and I gathered vaguely that my husband was not really wanted at the Bay Y camp. I even suspected that this visitor would rather deal with me than see my husband. It required more than a hint to secure his departure.

Jesse returned at noon. He received the story of our caller with the noises of one displeased. "That visitor, Kate," he summed up, "would make a first-class stranger. Knew me, you say, in Texas?"

Hearing from her kitchen Mrs. O'Flynn's sharp grunt of dissent, I closed the door.

"You've left the key-hole open," said Jesse, rising from the table, "come for a walk."

"Now, Kate, dear," Jesse sat down beside me on the Apex Rock, "this morn you got your first lesson in robbers. How would you like a visit to old Cap Taylor at Hundred Mile?"

My voice may have quivered just a little. "Danger?" I asked.

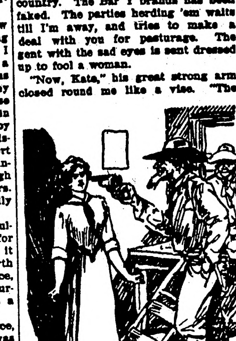
"I dunno as there's actual danger, but if I jest knowed you was safe, I'd be free to act prompt."

"Tell me everything, Jesse."

"Up at the north end of the bench, there's maybe two hundred head of strange cattle. One pedigree shorthorn bull is worth all of twenty-five hundred dollars, and there's a Hereford stud I'd take off my hat to anywheres. There's Aberdeens or Angus—I get them poll breeds mixed—and a bunch of Jerseys grazing apart, purty as deer. Anyways, that herd's worth maybe two hundred thousand dollars, every hoof of 'em stolen, and if you raked all them millionaire ranches in California I doubt you'd get that value."

"No stock owner needs that amount of stud cattle. We don't raise such in the north, so they've been drifted in here from the States. They're gaunt with famine and driving, and it beats me to think how many more's been left dead crossing the Black Pine country. The Bar Y brands has been faked. The parties herding 'em waits till I'm away, and tries to make a deal with you for pasturage. The gent with the sad eyes is sent dressed up to fool a woman."

"Now, Kate," his great strong arm closed round me like a vise. "The bull country knows you're clear grit, so there's no shame in leaving. For my sake, dear—"



Kate's Face Was Dead White With Rage.

"Do you think I'd leave you in danger?"

He sighed. "I knew it. I cayn't help it, and, Kate, it's the truth, I'd rather see you dead than scared. There's Madam Grizzly, and Senora Cougar, there's Lady Elk, and even Mrs. Polecat, brave as lions. I'd hate to have my mate the only one to run like a scalded cat."

"The program, Jesse?"

"Do you remember, Kate, how we lost five dollars finding out that Dale and me is signalers?"

"And Captain Taylor gave us the signals to raise the district: one fire for feasts, two for help, three for war!"

"That's it, little woman. By dusk I'll be on top of the cliffs, and make my fires back from the rim-rock, where them robbers won't see the glare.

CHAPTER VII.

The Round-Up.

Jesse's Narrative.

While I made signal fires on the top of the cliff, Mr. Robber came to find out from my wife why for I hadn't called to leave my card at the South Cave. He's picturesque, says she, hair like a raven's wing, eyes steel-blue, scarf indigo striped with orange, shirt black silk, woolly shaps out of a Wild West show, gold and silver fixings, Cheyenne saddle, carbine of some foreign breed, or maybe a Krag, manners fit for a king, age thirty-four, height six feet two inches, chest only thirty-eight, and such a sad smile—all of this will be useful to the police.

He tried all he knew to get out of being photographed, which I wisht I'd been there, for it must have been plumb comic, but we all submits when Kate gets after us. That reminds me that if he can't capture the camera and plate, we're apt to be burnt out by accident.

She led him on and made him talk. If his boss knew how much Kate has down in her note-book, this guy with the sad eyes would get kicked all round the pasture. When I axed if the robber made love to her, my wife just laughed, and turned away, telling me not to be a fool; but the blush came around her neck.

I dunno. Perhaps it's my liver, so I'm taking the only medicine I have, which it tastes like liniment. Is it liver, or am I getting to dislike this person?

II.

So happens, while I was writing, Billy O'Flynn comes along with the pack outfit on his way to Sky-line. He wanted to know why I made them fires, so I explained I was making a clearing up thar for Kate's spring chrysanthemums. (She spelt that word, which had me bogged down to the hocks.) It may be liver, or my squeam inflamed, but my mind ain't easy, and the Sky-line folk may think I'm only joshing with them fires.

I can't leave Kate to ride for help, I can't shift her, I can't send Billy to the constable without breaking my contract with the Sky-line, and I don't divulge nothin' to William O'Flynn, Esquire, who talks to the moon rather than waste conversation.

If I make a letter for Dale, and slip it into the pouch, Billy won't know, or gossip if he happens to meet in with stray robbers. I'll get him up and off by midnight to the Sky-line, in time for the supper pies, and the boys will be surging down to the ferry before midnight. Now I must make up some lies to hasten Billy's timid footsteps along the path of duty.

III.

Billy hastened away at midnight to tell Dale that pigeon's milk is selling at eighty-four and three-fourths. He believes that if he can get that secret intelligence to Iron in good time, he's to share the profits. Fact is, that Iron's late wife made him the laughing-stock of the plains over some joke she put up on him connected with pigeon's milk, so that Billy's share of the profits will be delivered on the toe of Dale's boot. He's breaking records to make the Sky-line quick.

Nothing happened this morning, except Bull Durham, calling himself Brooke. He, the gent with the sad eyes, who came to make love to my wife. He paid me one hundred dollars for pasturage. Then I axed him to stay to dinner, and Kate says she never seen me so talkative. Bull found out which weeks the Cariboo stage carries specie, and how many thousand dollars a month in amalgam comes down from the Sky-line camp. He even dragged out of me that old Surly Brown, the miser, has fifteen thousand dollars buried under the dirt floor of his cabin—which reminds me that if Brown's home becomes the scene of a mining stampede, I'll have to keep shy of his rifle. Yes, Bull showed a great gift of faith, and got both his photo and the negative to show there was no ill feeling. I'm pastoral, harmless, simple, raised for a pet.

Leaving Kate hid in a ruined shack, half-way to the ferry, I was down by eleven p. m. to the bank of the river, hailing old man Brown. So soon as he'd brung me acrost, I sent him to ride for all he was worth and collect our constable, which cost me eighteen dollars and a horse. The money is severe, but I'll get even on horse trades.

From midnight to one a. m. I put in the time cussing Dale; from then till two a. m. I felt that nobody loved me; from two a. m. to half past, I was scheming to take the robbers single-handed. At two thirty-five Dale rolled up with nine men from Sky-line, mounted on Billy's ponies, besides O'Flynn, and Ransome Pollock, who may be good for a burnt offering but isn't much use alive.

Of course, having raised the country, I'd got to make good, producing a business proposition and robbers to follow. Iron has no sense of humor anyhow, and can't see jokes unless the prices is wrote plain on their tickets. He's come to this earth after dollars. If a batch of robbers is liable to cost him fifty dollars a day, and only fetches fifty-one dollars a day on the contract, his mine is better money, so he rolls his tail and takes away his men. That's Iron Dale seven days in the week.

He's right smart, too, at holding a business meeting, so when I'd ate cranberry pie, which is a sort of compliment from the mine, and the boys has some of Brown's tea as a donation from me, the convention sits down solemn to talk robbers.

Moved and seconded that hold-ups ain't encouraged in her majesty's dominions, and we hands these robbers to the constable as his lawful meat, but we got to get 'em first.

Resolved that there's money in it. The owners of them cattle had ought to be grateful and show their gratitude, 'cause otherwise the stock is apt to scatter. Proposed that we hit the trail right away, with Iron Dale for leader. Carried, with symptoms of toothache disabling one of his men.

Dale told off O'Flynn and Branscombe to stampede the cattle just at glint of dawn, sending 'em past the cave, and shooting and yelling as if there was no hereafter. That should interest the robbers, and bring them out of the cave which overlooks our pasture. Looking down at a sharp angle, they weren't likely to hit our riders, whereas our posse, posted in good cover with a steady aim could attend to the robbers with promptness and despatch.

Crossing the ferry our main outfit left Billy and Branscombe to start drifting the cattle southward, while we rode on to take up our positions around the cave. In the ruined shack, half-way to our home, Kate was to have a candle, screened so that it could only be seen from our trail. We passed my fence, we crossed the half-mile creek, we gathered speed along the open pasture, and then Kate's yell went through me like a knife. The robbers must have had a man on night herd, and found her by that light!

Dale's hand grabbed my rein, and with a growl he halted our whole outfit. "Steady," says he, "you fool!" Then in a whisper, as his men came crowding in: "Dismount! Ransome, hold horses! Sam, take three men afoot round the rear of that cabin. I take the rest to close in the front. Siwash, and Nitchie Scott, find enemy's horses and drift them away out of reach. No man to whisper, no man to make a sound, until I lift my hand at that cabin window. After that, kill any man who tries to escape. Get a move on!"

So, with me at his tail, he crept along from cover to cover, waving hand signals to throw his squad into place. The enemy's five horses at the door were led off by Billy's Siwash arriero, and Nitchie Scott, so gently that the robbers thought they were grazing. By that time Dale and me was at the window gap on the north side of the shack, but the candle was in our way, we couldn't see through its glow, and it wasn't till we got round to the door hole that we'd a view of what was going on inside.

My wife stood in the nor'west, right, far corner. A man with a gray chin whisker and a mournful smile, with his gun muzzle in her right ear, was shoving her head against the wall. Bull was talking as usual, explaining how his tact was better'n Whiskers' gun at persuading females. Ginger was trying to assuage Bull. The greaser was keeping a kind of lookout, although he couldn't see from the lighted room into the dark where he was. Ginger clapped his paws over Bull's mouth before the proceedings went on.

"Now," says Whiskers sadly, "are you goin' to scream any more?"

Kate's face was dead white with rage. "You cur," said she, "I screamed because my—you're hurting me, you brute! Leave off if you want to hear one word from me. Leave off! That's better. No, I won't scream again."

The gun sight was tearing her ear as she screwed her head around, looking him full in the eyes. "If you do me any harm," she said, "my husband's friends won't let you off with death. They'll burn you. Stand back, you coward!"

He flinched back just a little, and I saw his hand drawing slowly clear of her head.

"Get your horses," she cried out sharp, "you've barely time to escape!"

Then I fired, the bullet throwing that hand back, so that it contracted on the gun. His revolver shot went through the rear wall. The hand was spoiled.

"Now, hands up, all of you!" Dale yelled. "Hands up! Drop your guns!" One of the robbers was raising his gun to fire, so I had to kill him. The rest surrendered.

"Kate," said I, sort of quiet, and she came to me.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Stampede.

Jesse's Narrative.

Which these robbers we got in the cave is a disappointment. This old man what leads them with a plume on his face, ought to have more deportment, for screwing a gun in Kate's ear ain't no sort of manners. Even after I'd shot his hand to chips, he grabbed Ransome's gun with his left and tried to make me lie down. There's some folks jest don't know when you give them a hint.

And Bull, with the sad eyes, claims on me his ancient friendship. While we lashed his thumbs behind him, he told us he'd been educated at Oxford and Cambridge.

"What!" Kate flashed out, "after leaving Eton and Harrow?"

"Yes, and I've enough education to guess this ain't no way to treat American citizens. You'll hear of this," he shouted, "from Uncle Sam!"

"Thar," says Dale, "I knew there'd be rewards for you, dead or alive. How much? Two thousand dollars a head?"

Then old Whiskers ordered Bull to shut his head. He's a curious, slow, mournful voice, like a cat with the toothache.

"I demand—"

"Shut up."

So Bull shut up while we lashed him, likewise young Ginger and the greaser. Seeing the fellow I'd killed might want an inquest, we laid him straight in the ruined shack, and then marched our prisoners off to South Cave, where they'll wait until we get our constable to arrest them.

II.

Now on the second day after we captures these ladrones, along toward supper, the depositions of the various parties is as follows, viz.:

Up to the ruined shack two mile north of my home, lies the remains of one robber expecting an inquest. Two miles south, right where the upper cliff cuts off the end of our pasture, there's our cave full of captured bandits, to wit: Whiskers, Bull Durham, Ginger, and the dago. Down on the bench in front of the cave is our guard-camp with Iron Dale in command, and Kate with the boys having supper. Right home at the ranch house is me finishing my chores, and the widow spoiling hash for my supper, because she hates me worse nor snakes for being a Protestant. Away off beyond the horizon is old man Brown cussing blue streaks 'cause he can't find much constable.

Such being the combinations at supper-time, along comes the widow's orphan, young Billy O'Flynn, who handles my pack contract with the Sky-line. He's supposed to be on duty at the guard-camp, and his riding back to the home ranch completely disarranges the landscape. I'm busy, hungry, and expected to take charge of the night guard at the cave, but somehow this Billy attracts my attention by acting a whole lot suspicious. Instead of bringing me some message from Dale, he rides straight to the lean-to kitchen, steps off his pony, and whispers for his mother. I sneaks through the house to the kitchen in time to see this widow with a slip of paper, brown paper what we used to wrap up the prisoners' lunch. At sight of me she gets modest, shoving it into the stove, but I becomes prominent and grabs it. "Shure," she explains, "an' it's only a schlip av paper!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Busy Days.

"Why have you been evading me?" inquired the city official angrily of a man whom he met in the street.

"Evading you!" replied the other man, warmly. "Why, confound it, I've been calling at your office every day this week."

"That's just it. What were you looking for me in my office for?"

MIGHT NOT SAMPLE BY TASTE

Darky Willing Enough to Listen to Praises of His Cider, But Was Not Giving It Away.

Few of the negroes in the southern states are inclined to be thrifty and saving, though many of them are disposed to industry and live in considerable comfort. Some, however, have acquired the saving habit and are not only not wasteful, but are in the local idiom extremely "nigh."

A case in point is an old man, once the slave of the Randolphs of Virginia, who has become the owner of one of their plantations, and is quite rich. He converts into cash everything that is not necessary for the maintenance of the household and gets profit from many things that few negroes ever think of selling. Incidentally he makes cider of all the unsalable apples on his place and sells it, and though he is very fond of the beverage himself, he never drinks with any of his neighbors, unless they pay for the cider.

A young man of the neighborhood, who had been away for several years, coming back home, remembered the famous cider and dropped in to see Uncle Wash. After some general talk he casually observed, "I suppose, Uncle Wash, you still make that good cider, you used to make in old times?"

"Oh, yes," replied Wash, "I still makes my apples mos'ly into cider."

Then he called to Aunt Dinah, his wife, "Dinah, fetch out a go'd of dat bes' cider."

The visitor naturally expected that he was to sample the drink. But not so. The old man took the gourd and drained every drop. Then he handed the empty vessel to the visitor.

"Ef you don' b'lieve dat am good cider," he said, smacking his lips, "you jes smell dat go'd."—New York Evening Post.

Carefully Prepared.

"Your long speech did not make very interesting reading," said the cruelly candid friend.

"It wasn't meant to," replied the senator. "I try to make my speeches long enough to appear important, but not sufficiently interesting to invite criticism."

The Baking Powder Question Solved

—solved once for all by Calumet. For daily use in millions of kitchens has proved that Calumet is highest not only in quality but in leavening power as well—unfailing in results—pure to the extreme—and wonderfully economical in use. Ask your grocer. And try Calumet next bake day.

Received Highest Awards

World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago, Ill. Paris Exposition, France, March, 1912.

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives best results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

Will Grow Up to Be a Lawyer.

Little Charles is trying to learn to control his naturally violent temper, and every adult member of the family is eager to help him. The other children, too, have been urged not to do anything to render a fall easy. Charles is an observant and quick-witted youngster, and the other day, when his mother proposed condign punishment for some act of serious disobedience, he advanced a novel plea for mercy.

"Please don't punish me, mamma," he pleaded. "It makes me so angry to be punished, and I'm trying so hard to keep my temper today."

SCALY PSORIASIS ON LIMBS

Troop H, 6th U. S. Cavalry, Camp McCoy, Sparta, Wis.—"I was troubled with psoriasis for nearly two years. Portions of my arms and limbs were affected mostly with it. It appeared in scaly form, breaking out in very small dots and gradually grew larger and white scales formed when about the size of an ordinary match-head. The looks of it was horrible, which made it very unpleasant for me. It itched a little at times.

"I tried several treatments which cured me for a month, but it always broke out again. One day a friend saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the paper and I sent for a sample. They helped me, so I purchased two more boxes of Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap and they completely cured me. It took three months for Cuticura Soap and Ointment to complete my cure." (Signed) Walter Mahony, Oct. 22, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Dubious Praise.

"Is your wife solid on cooking, my boy?"

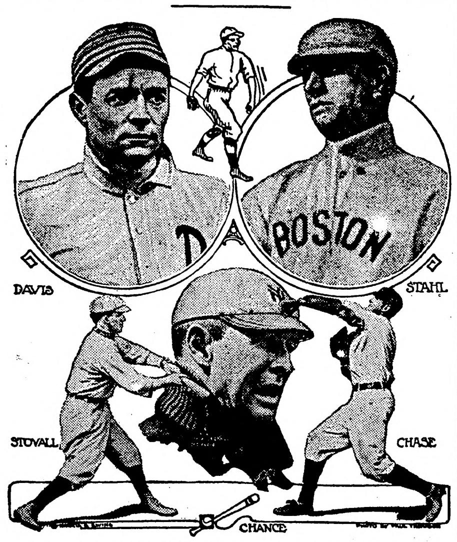
"Well, it's pretty heavy."

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv.

Many a man pats himself on the back who isn't a contortionist.

PISO'S REMEDY
25 CTS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists. 25 CTS.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

HOODOO AND JINX FOLLOWS FIRST BASEMEN



Guardians of the Initial Sack Who Have Been Buffeted About.

First base is beginning to look like a Hoodoo (spelt with a capital H.) The initial sack is fine and dandy when it comes to playing there on and dragging down the salary. But—

Managing and holding down that cushion don't seem to hitch, writes Malcolm McLean in the Chicago Evening Post. Or, rather, those who try the stunt are apt to come to a bitter end.

Glance hurriedly over the following list, and then see if we aren't on the right trail:

Frank Chance—Summarily ousted from the management of the Cubs last fall by President Murphy.

George Stovall—Politely deposed from the leadership of the Browns by Colonel Hedges, president.

Jake Stahl—Winner of a world title his first year with the Boston Red Sox and handed the hook by Prexy McAleer during the midst of the season just past.

Harry Davis—Elevated to the managerial reins of Cleveland, unable to hold them for any length of time, and now back with the Athletics.

Hal Chase—Boss of the New York Yankees for a spell, and mighty glad to get from under.

You can scarcely call any of these men failures as ball players. The reverse is true. In fact, we doubt if you can name five higher class first sackers in the history of the national game.

Consider them as actual workers (aside from their careers as managers):

Chance—One of the best men who ever guarded the station; a wonder on low and wide throws; a .300 hitter and a wonderfully fast and heady base runner.

Stovall—Possessed of all the attributes given to Chance, except he wasn't quite as fast.

Stahl—His fielding and batting was largely responsible for the Red Sox triumphs last year! a clean-up swatter.

Davis—Connie Mack's chief lieutenant during his many years on first for the Athletics. A cracking fielder and there with the bat when in his prime. He was reasonably fast in addition.

Chase—A first sacker who needs little comment. Today he leads the field in effective work—fast, heady and consistent in all branches.

This puts the question squarely up to us, Why the hoodoo?

First base seems to be the best of all places to watch the play and direct the game. The custodian of that station can tell—next to the catcher—just how the pitcher is working. He can direct the whole play by signals, having all in sight except the right fielder.

It's a hard problem to answer.

Mayhap it's a matter of luck—something firmly believed in by ball players. Perhaps it's something else.

You can scarcely call Chance and Stahl failures as managers. Both won league and world titles—Chance a number of them.

Many lay the hoodoo on temperament.

That may have something to do with it in a couple of the cases. But it won't hold water with the rest.

We think accident cut some ice. Chance was beaned a number of times and Stahl hurt his foot. Neither of their presidents wanted bench managers. So they passed.

First base is a dangerous spot to play. One is always open to injuries there.

But the final analysis is something we wouldn't dare to attempt. It brings us to those unanswerable words—hoodoo and jinx.

M. M'LOUGHLIN IS DEFEATED

Champion and Veteran Partner Lose Game in Tennis Tournament on the Pacific Coast.

United States champion Maurice E. McLoughlin, playing with the veteran Sumner Hardy as his partner was defeated at San Francisco the other day in the feature match of the Portola tennis tournament by Clarence J. Griffin and John R. Strachan, runners up in this year's national doubles championship at Newport. McLoughlin played in excellent form, but he refrained from poaching on the preserves of his partner, upon whom Griffin and Strachan centered their entire attack. The score was 6—4, 10—8.

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

Maurice E. McLoughlin.

NOTES OF SPORTDOM

Harry Smith has again signed to manage the Newark champions.

* * *

Charlie Carr has been mentioned of late as a possible head for the Federal league.

* * *

The Boston Nationals will report for spring practice at Macon, Ga., about the first of March.

* * *

The English polo team will practice three months in Spain before its next invasion of America for the international trophy.

* * *

The coast authorities have found it difficult indeed to get crack athletes for the all-star A. A. U. team to invade the Antipodes.

* * *

Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Washington and Boston are being picked as serious contenders for the pennant for next season.

* * *

Charlie O'Leary, the veteran shortstop and member of the Cardinals, has been sold to the San Francisco team by Manager Miller Huggins.

* * *

Austria is about to follow Germany in the employment of an American trainer for its Olympic athletes and has gotten into communication with Sullivan on the subject.

* * *

Patrick Flynn of Ireland is a very clever distance runner. The slip of a lad from the "old country," who made his American debut at Travers island recently, impressed the cinder path critics not a little.

* * *

Cornell university believes it has in Vere Wendnagle a worthy successor to John Paul Jones. He is a freshman. While in the preparatory school he ran a mile in four minutes and twenty-two seconds.

TO POSTPONE OLYMPIC DATE

American Team Would Be Handicapped by Early Opening on July 1—1916 Games Will Be Close.

James E. Sullivan, American Olympic commissioner, has announced that he would request the German Olympic committee, on behalf of the United States team, to postpone the opening of the Olympic games at Berlin in 1916 at least one week. According to word received from Berlin, the opening events in the track and field program are set for July 1. This would prove a handicap to the American team, according to Mr. Sullivan, since it would require the United States representatives to sail before the closing of the American colleges and universities, from which many members of the 1916 team are expected to be recruited. In discussing the conditions Mr. Sullivan said:

"It was the original intention of the German Olympic committee to open the track meet about the middle of June. When I was abroad last summer I explained the situation from an American standpoint and requested a later date. The German committee evidently made a concession to us, but, then, to open the games on July 1 will work a hardship to our team in 1916. The Stockholm games began on July 6, and a similar date at Berlin would be far more acceptable. Close to 50 per cent. of the team will be graduated in the spring of that year. In many cases it would be impossible for them to leave college before June 15 or later.

"The games of 1916 will be closer and harder to win than ever before, and no team of the size of the American aggregation will have to travel the distance that ours will be obliged to undertake. That extra week means more to the American competitors than to any other country interested in the Olympic games, and I feel sure that when the conditions are understood fully by the German committee the concession will be granted.

"According to the present plans of the American Olympic committee the team, which will consist of about 150 athletes, will be quartered in some suburban hotel, near Berlin, during the games. Incidentally it may be stated that the team will not be taken to Europe in a specially chartered steamer, as was the case in 1912."

SOCCERS GET LARGE CROWDS

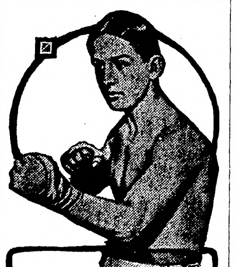
Attendance at International Game Between Teams From England and Scotland Was 127,307.

Although soccer football attracts many more thousands than baseball the gates are not as large as the returns for the world's series or big football matches, because the price of admission is not as much in England and Scotland as here. The record attendance for a soccer game was the international between England and Scotland at Hampden park, Glasgow, on March 23, 1912. The attendance was 127,307, and the gate receipts, including the money from the stands and enclosures, amounted to 6,997 pounds 15 shillings (English money) or less than $35,000. The record attendance in England was 120,028 when Aston Villa and Sunderland played the cup final at the Crystal palace, London, the present year. The record game at a football game in the United Kingdom was at this match between Ashton Villa and Sunderland, when the receipts amounted to 9,406 pounds 9 shillings, or less than $47,000. The attendance at the first of this year's world's series games between the Giants and Athletics at the Polo grounds, New York, was 36,291, and the gate receipts $75,255.

FRENCH TITLE IS RETAINED

Middleweight Champion Pugilist Defeats Aspiring Jim Lancaster in Short Bout at Geneva.

Georges Carpentier, French middleweight champion, retained this honor when he knocked out the aspiring Jim Lancaster in the third round. This bout took place at Geneva and was scheduled for 20 rounds.



Georges Carpentier.

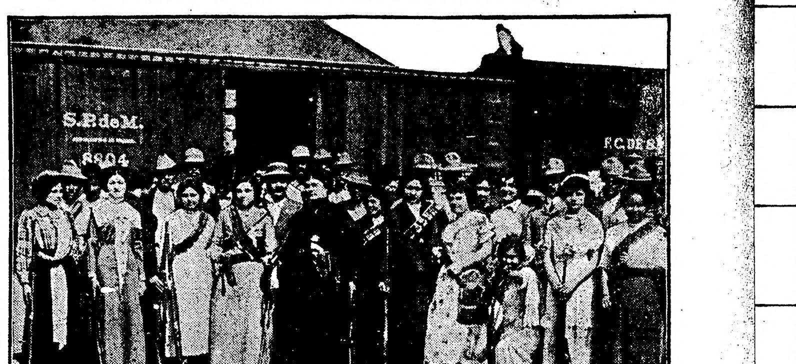
Better Than Tris Speaker.

Mike Finn, who picked up Tris Speaker, says that Dave Robertson, the youngster secured by McGraw, is a better ball player than Speaker. If Dave is, he is some star performer.

Byrne Plays Soccer.

Bobby Byrne, the Phillies' third sacker, is playing soccer with one of the leading soccer football teams in his home city, St. Louis.

MEXICAN WOMEN IN ARMS TO FIGHT HUERTA



S.P.de M.
8804
F.C.DE S.

The wave of rebellion against the reign of Huerta, which is slowly but surely sweeping over Mexico, is felt in every hamlet and city in the province of Sonora. Here the women are banding into companies, as shown by this Magdalena detachment, ready to take up the cause which their husbands, fathers, brothers, sons and sweethearts are espousing.

TOOK LOOK AT ROME

Impression of Americans on Tour of Eternal City.

On Banks of River Tiber—Brief Resume of the Historical Sights of Ancient Capital Depicted in Humorous Vein.

London.—There is a large place down in Italy between Naples and Florence that is known as the Eternal City. You may have heard of it. It was the place, you know, where Romulus and Remus; Julius Caesar, the victim of the black hand plot; Nero, and some other famous persons used to hang out, and which was once saved from some one because a bunch of geese cackled at the psychological moment. Young Remus and his brother Romulus, it seems, started the place and it has been eternal ever since, although a number of lowbrows attacked it with armies and broke up great quantities of its statues and statutes and tried to swipe it off the map in other ways. But it bit its thumb at all these agitators and still manages to worry along on the lire and centisimi it can wheedle out of curious visitors. Hotel keepers have become its principal citizens.

For many, many persons, who just love antique things, go to see Rome every year. Yes, that is the name of the place, if you haven't already guessed it. If you want to do as the Romans do, you can call it Roma. The ruins are great stuff for those who like to investigate the civilization of the folks who lived at the time that Uncle Remus drew a circle on the map and called it Rome, and when Julius Caesar flashed the news to an eager world that all Gaul is divided into three parts. You must remember when he did that all the papers got out "extras."

We were in Pompeii one day and a soldier in the place that must have been the corner grocery of the Pompeiians, for it still seems to be the favorite hang-out for soldiers, guides and other unemployed persons, told us that although these were pretty fair little ruins, if we wanted to see some ruins that were ruins we should run over to Rome for a few days. We had been out to the Blue Grotto the day before, and as we were still feeling rather blue from the experience, we decided to take a look at this Rome-place and see if we couldn't get cheered up a bit.

So we caught a train that afternoon that happened to be going to the Eternal City. We entered a first-class compartment. The man who collects the tickets came around after a while and asked to see our billeti. He looked at them a moment and informed us in a grieved tone that they were for the second class compartment. We assured him politely that that was all right; that we should just as soon stay where we were, as we didn't like to change now that we were all settled. And just to show him that we had no hard feelings toward him we gave him a couple of lire. He understood at once our aversion to making a change and locked the door of our compartment so that we shouldn't be disturbed. Those conductors are charming fellows.

We arrived in Rome along about nine o'clock and took a carriage to a hotel. "In the Eternal City at last," we murmured. Every one else was saying the same thing in rapturous tones as he got into his carriage, so we did likewise, thinking it was customary; it seems to be a popular remark. Just like every one pulls the old one about seeing Naples and dying when he lands there.

Early the next morning we started out to see the Eternal City. We had to admit that it was quite a place, and that the two famous brothers started something when they founded the city. We strolled around to look at the Tiber. We couldn't discover why any one should look at the Tiber, but it seemed to be a popular pastime, so we joined the rest of them. Red Baedekers flashed in the sunlight as a long line of sightseers leaned on the parapet of a bridge and read what the book had to say about the Tiber. All we could recall about the stream was that it used to be a favorite cemetery among the Romans. Whenever a person became obnoxious he was thrown into the river. We concluded that such an action was the height of insult. It was just like being thrown into an unpaved street on a rainy day.

"Isn't it lovely?" an enthusiastic young girl exclaimed, turning to me.

"Great," I replied. "Only it seems to have a bad case of jaundice just now. Perhaps this can be cured, however, so we can't hold it against the poor river."

SHE WOULDN'T PAY HER FINE

Pretty Motorcyclist Gets Novel Sentence and a Dinner de Luxe.

New York.—Miss Lillian Roberts, seventeen, of Flatbush, was before Magistrate Geismar in the Flatbush court, charged with driving her motorcycle at 30 miles an hour.

When a fine of $25 was imposed upon her Miss Roberts, a suffragette, stamped her little feet and declared that she would not pay it. She was given the alternative of a day in jail. She agreed to the latter, but the magistrate grew tender-hearted and decided that she could spend the time in the courtroom instead of going to the Raymond Street jail. Soon after court closed a friend brought Miss Roberts a dinner de luxe, which was eaten on one of the benches.

WEALTHY MAN'S SON LABORS

Takes Place in Factory at Bottom of Ladder to Learn the Business.

New York.—Augustus Cordier, Jr., twenty-three-year-old son of the late Augustus Cordier, who was president of the Lalance & Crosjean Agate Ware factory in Wood Haven, L. I., and was a son-in-law of Florian Grosjean, who founded the company, is a workman in the factory.

When the youth's father died he left his extensive interests to his widow, who is worth several millions. Each morning he arises early and goes to work in the factory to learn the business, with an idea of some day succeeding his father in its management. He is studying the work of every department and dons overalls and works as hard as any of the other employes.

CAN PUT PLANTS TO SLEEP

French Scientist Claims That They Feel Pain—Makes Many Experiments.

Paris.—Can flowers feel pain? This is a question to which French physiologists are giving much attention at the present time.

M. L. Chassaigne believes that they can, and do. His opinion is based on interesting experiments. Taking a mimosa plant, he exposed it to the action of heat. The leaves writhed as if in pain. A simple mechanical effect, say the skeptics; a proof of sensibility, says M. Chassaigne, since it does not take place if the mimosa be anesthetized.

If the vase containing the mimosa is placed in a glass globe with a piece of cotton impregnated with cloroform or any other volatile anesthetic for half an hour, the foliage becomes wilted and the plant has all the appearances of being in a deep sleep. If it be now subjected to the action of heat it remains unaffected.

M. Chassaigne has repeated the same experiments with many different kinds of plants, but always with the same result. "It is maintained," he says, "that plants do not suffer because they have no nerves.

"Many physiologists hold that nerves are but the extension of protoplasm, modified and adapted to fulfill the required function. Hence the protoplasm of plants can perfectly well act as a rudimentary nervous system."

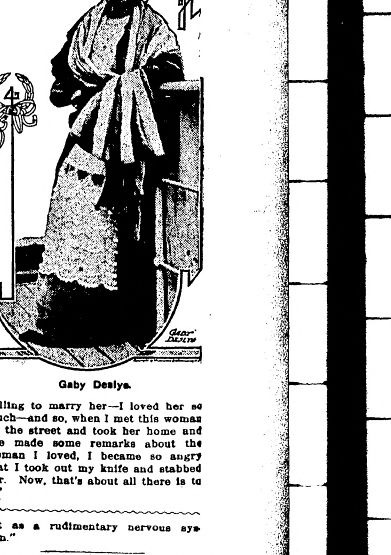
KILLS HER FOR SLUR ON GABY

New York Man Infatuated With Dancer Stabs His Woman Companion for Remark.

New York.—From the first time that William Twist of the Bronx saw Gaby Deslys dance on the stage he was so stuck with her beauty and grace that he became infatuated with her. Although he was not personally acquainted with the dancer, Twist so revered her name that when Miss Louise White made a disparaging remark about the music hall performer he drew a knife and stabbed Miss White to death, inflicting twelve wounds as he attacked the woman in a hallway.

Then Twist gave himself up to Police Sergeant John T. Meade, who found the slayer standing near the body in the hallway of the home of Miss White.

"It was this way," said White. "I saw Gaby Deslys dancing and I was willing to marry her—I loved her so much—and so, when I met this woman on the street and took her home and she made some remarks about the woman I loved, I became so angry that I took out my knife and stabbed her. Now, that's about all there is to it."



Gaby Deslys.

MINISTER'S DOG RIDES IN CAB

Ex-Premier Clemenceau Has to Pay Fares for His Mastiff in French Capital.

Paris.—M. Clemenceau, the French statesman, owns a large and fierce mastiff, whose habit it is from time to time to make long excursions into outlying parts of Paris.

When he is tired, the dog will pump into a horse cab and sit there growling and showing his teeth if the cabman attempts to remove him.

Seeing the name and address of M. Clemenceau engraved on the dog's brass collar, the cabman finally drives the dog home. In this way M. Clemenceau has had several long fares to pay.

Will Not Prosecute Elopers.

St. Clairsville, W. Va.—Elopers who lie about their ages in obtaining marriage licenses here need have no fear of the law. Judge Nichols has announced that no more prosecutions for age misrepresentation will be begun.

Arrest Brothers for Fighting.

Yonkers, N. Y.—Frank, Andrew and Nicholas Holly, brothers, two of them twins, were arrested for fighting in a car. The trouble was caused by Andrew and Frank not liking the fiancee of Nicholas.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
Physician and Surgeon
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney-at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
Physician and Surgeon
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

Loans Probate Work Collections
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

The press dispatches announce that President Wilson has the grippe. Well, why shouldn't he? Nobody envies him the possession anyhow,

Efficiency and economy in the administration of state affairs may well be the leading issues of the state campaign next year. They will be the main issues, too, if the public doesn't get sick of too much discussion of them before the campaign starts.

Congressman Steenerson has introduced a bill to prohibit any person, firm or coporation, from using the words "United States" in their business title. It is a good idea. At present we might say that numerous crimes are made possible and committed in the name of the United States.

The attorney general of this state says that the Bible is barred by law from use in the public schools. This rule was laid down by former attorney general H. W. Childs, and, under the law is the law until it is overruled by some court of competent jurisdiction. The question has never been passed upon by the supreme court.

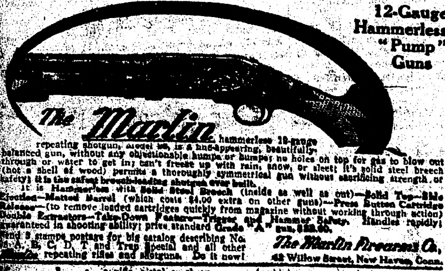
The Oslo Tribune came out last week with a 12-page issue, in which were four full page ads of local merchants, besides several of quarter page size. This is a fine showing of progressiveness by Oslo business men and this kind of advertising is the kind that gets the biggest results. We congratulate Bro. Johnson on the fine appearance of his special number and on the class of business men he has for his patrons.

When You pay for Lumber

You naturally want to get the full value of your money. You'll get it here all right and a little bit more. You will find our laths, shingles, etc., full count and first quality every time. You'll find our regular lumber full measure, cut true and of sound, seasoned wood. Give us a chance to prove our square dealing.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.



The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28, A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9363, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W. 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. Ose, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. 9570, Serial No. 03807, for Lot 2, Section 9, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tollef Brokke, German Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 12, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Clyde C. Groner, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on Sept. 6, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05565, for SE¼ Section 11, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn., on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tollefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 3, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that August Johnsen, of Rollis, Minnesota, who, on February 15, 1911, made Homestead Entry No. 05663, for SW¼ NW¼ Section 3, S½ NE¼ and NW¼ SE¼ Section 4, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Moberg, Martin Moberg, both of Rollis, Minnesota; Christ Norbeck, Ludvig Sagstuen, both of Flakne, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of the Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 2, 1913.

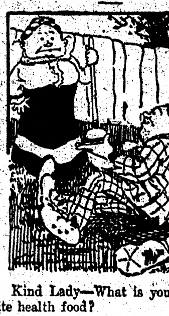
Notice is hereby given that Albert C. Jahr, of Holt, Minn., who, on January 20, 1911, made Homestead Entry, Serial No. 05825, for SE¼ Section 27, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District o' Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 13th day of January, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H Knutson, Carl Sarmo, George C. Anderson, Olaus Rodahl, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

LIQUID FOOD



Kind Lady—What is your favorite health food?

The Tramp—Whisky or beer, mum.

Ringbo School Notes

December 5th was the close of the third month of school in Dist. No. 58.

Those awarded a half holiday because of perfect attendance are:

Victoria Johnson, Alfred Offerdahl Ingvoll Offerdahl, Harry Engen, Sidney Engstrom, Hughey Engstrom, Elmer Engstrom and Alice Johnson.

Christian Saastad and Oscar Erickson entered school this month. This makes an enrollment of forty.

A number of the students were absent during the month on account of sickness. All are fully recovered.

Andrew Erickson is gradually improving at the Bethesda. We have hopes for his recovery.

Ask Martin how he likes the "school ma'am."

Mr. Engstrom treasurer of the district, and Miss Nora Christionson, of Mud Lake, visited school during the past month.

Parents and friends are cordially invited to visit us at any time, 9: a. m.-4 p. m.

Hu-rrah! Hu-rrah! Who are we?
Hu-rrah! Hu-rrah! We are the Ringbo School.

MAN HAS ABNORMAL MEMORY

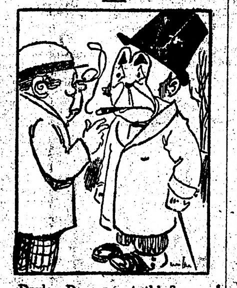
Illiterate English Laborer Whose Feats Have Recently Been Causing Much Astonishment.

George Harbottle, a laborer at a Northumberland quarry, possesses a memory which retains an indelible impression of every word which he hears or reads, says the Northwestern Gazette. After once hearing read, or reading himself, half a dozen book pages of any kind of matter, he can repeat them without omitting a single word.

One one occasion a man who knew Harbottle bought a pamphlet of songs from a street singer, and wagered him that he could not, within 20 minutes, learn and correctly repeat all the songs. Harbottle repeated every song without a mistake in 17 minutes. The names of all the licensed houses in Glasgow were read out to him three times and he repeated them correctly in the reverse order in which they were read out. Two men read two different paragraphs from two newspapers simultaneously and Harbottle repeated one paragraph correctly and made only two mistakes in the other—a remarkable feat. His foreman one day showed him a book containing the record of his seven workmates for eight months. It was at the dinner hour and the men were all sitting in a group. In ten minutes, from memory, Harbottle told each man what he had done and the wages he had earned during each week of the previous eight months.

Being an illiterate man, he can do nothing with figures, but otherwise his abnormal power seems to triumph over the most severe tests to which it can be put.

BAD ONE



Doyle—Do yez get th' flavor of thot cigar, Boyle?

Boyle—Sure, I could smell th' weed wid me eyes shut.

HARSH JUDGMENT.

"In eastern countries men buy their wives."

"I've seen some in this country that looked as if they were acquired at a remnant sale."—Courier Journal.

CANTRARIWISE.

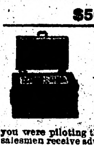
"There is one very queer, yet usual result of a freeze-out by one party."

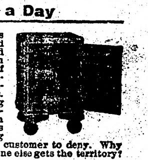
"What is that?"

"A roast by the other."

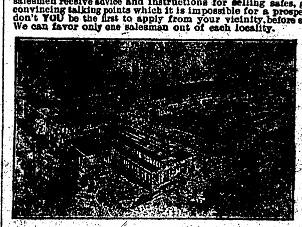
Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's
$50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day





Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity, before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 18 T.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour
Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.
Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL
THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to
Name..
Postoffice..................................
Route............ State......................

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1913 NO. 21

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.
We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

.. When You Want Flour ..
Buy a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.31
Wheat	.75
Barley	.36
Oats	.28
Rye	.42
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

We take pleasure in wishing you a
Merry Christmas
And we cordially invite all our regular customers to call at our store before Christmas Day for a Christmas Present
Remember, our Special, Low, Holiday Prices are in force right up to Christmas eve
Holt Mercantile Co.
THE BIG NEW STORE

Local Items

Merry Christmas.

Bring in the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (adv)

For your Christmas Goods try the Rollis Store.

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. Backe.

Andrew Bjerk made a business trip to Thief River Falls on Monday.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

County Attorney Eckstrom and Sheriff Forsberg were business visitors here Monday from Warren.

Don't wait until the last minute. Come in early and buy your candies and fruits for Christmas at Huseth's.

S. S. Kolden and family made a combined business and pleasure trip to Crookston and Nielsville the first of the week.

The Nasarath Ladies Aid will have their annual meeting at the Hogan Anderson place on first Wednesday in January.

On account of sickness in the family we have had to leave a lot of work undone this week and our news columns are rather slim as a consequence.

There will be a nice Christmas program given by the pupils of the Sorter School near Ri[illegible] [illegible] Every body welcome.

Lars Backe was up from Thief River Falls on Tuesday attending to business at the Farmers State Bank. B. L. took him home in his car the same evening.

On Sunday evening a hayrack party, consisting of twenty-eight young people, drove out to the hospitable home of E. G. Warner. Their coming was a complete surprise but all spent a most enjoyable evening.

The Young Peoples Skandidavian Free Society will have their Christmas Tree at the Holt Schoolhouse on next Wednesday evening, the 24th inst. There's to be a real Christmas time and everybody is invited

Creamery patrons will please take notice that cream will be received on Mondays only at the Holt creamery during the next two weeks. No cream will be received on Christmas or New Year's days.

—P. L. Anderson, Buttermaker.

Albert Oski, the 3-year-old son of John Oski, a farmer living 12 miles east of Thief River Falls, was instantly killed late Sunday afternoon by being shot through the neck with a rifle in the hands of his 9-year old brother. The boy had been hunting rabbits and on returning to the house neglected to unload the firearm. Forgetting that the piece was loaded he snapped the trigger. His baby brother, who was standing a few feet away, received the bullet slightly beneath his chin, cutting an artery.

REPENTING AT LEISURE.

Shimmerpate — I understand Beanbrough fell in love with his wife at first sight.

Hemmandhaw—Yes; and now he is sorry he didn't take a second look. —Judge.

LITTLE DAMAGE DONE.

"I have just heard that a lot of schooners were wrecked lately?"

"Where was the storm?"

"No storm. Saloon raid."

KILLED HIMSELF

The dead body of Peter Backlund was found by C. L. Heinze early this morning hanging from the rear of a hay rack at the Heinze home just north of here. The dead man had fastened a piece of doubled binder twine across the rack, inserted his head behind the twine and then got down on his knees, in which positon the body was found. The coroner was notified and will be here tomorrow, Saturday,

Deceased was a well known resident of the Randen neighborhood, about 60 years old and unmarried. He left Randen about two weeks ago to visit relatives at Hoffman, Grant County, but never showed up there. He had been drinking considerable for some time and, it is supposed, has been no further away than Thief River Falls. He arrived here on the noon train yesterday and stopped off to visit with his nephew, O. J. Backlund. At the hotel he acted queerly and talked about sleeping in the barn. After supper he went out and failed to return. A close search was made for him around the town but no trace of him could be found until his dead body was discovered by Mr. Heinze this morning.

The relatives at Randen and Hoffman have been notified and funeral arrangements will be made as soon as the coroner gives permission.

Struck Lignite Coal

Reports received here the first part of this week are to the effect that well drillers at work on the John [illegible] struck a vein of good lignite coal at a depth of fifty-five feet. At the time the report was brought here the drill had gone through six feet of the vein and was still drilling coal, so there is no telling how deep the vein may be.

Gas and small veins of coal have been found in different parts of the Mud Lake region before, and it is not at all unlikely that there are valuable coal deposits throughout a large area there.

Huseth pleases all his patrons. Are you one of them? (adv)

Scandinavian Money can be had at the Farmers State Bank of Holt.

Carl Newton and family moved out to their homestead north of the Moose River last Saturday.

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Every settler in the Mud Lake region is invited to call at the Rollis Store before Christmas—and at any other time.

Mr. and Mrs. John Olberg were in from Thief Lake on Sunday for a visit with their daughter, Mrs. S. S. Kolden.

Attorney Ira C. Richardson was up from T. R. Falls between trains last Saturday to transact some business with a client.

The Ladies Aid of the Scandinavian Free Church will meet with Mrs R. L. Olson on Sunday, January 4th. All welcome.

Ed Gunderson came up from Crookston on Saturday last and made a brief visit with the Sorter family who are his relatives.

E. T. Eide and brother left on Saturday for Spooner for Spooner where they will spend the winter attending to their feed business.

A number of the local young people went out to Mrs. M. Olson's place south of town on Tuesday evening and had a very pleasant social time until a late hour.

...Pay...
All Bills
By Check

And there will never be any disputes. The Holt State Bank Invites household as well as business accounts. Most women know how difficult it is to make their cash balance when they pay in cash. You can avoid all the trouble and worry by opening an account at the Holt State Bank. Then you'll know where every cent of your money goes.

Holt State Bank
Make your FARM LOAN with us

New Young People's Soc.

The Mission Congregation met at P. A. Risberg's last Sunday afternoon and organized their Young People's Society. There was a big crowd present and the proceeds amounted to $28.40. As a temporary name the title of "The Skandinavian Young People's Free Society" was adopted and officers were elected as follows.

President—Arvid Carlson,
Secretary—P. L. Anderson,
Treasurer—M. O. M[illegible]

Henry J. Olen, Lydia Risberg and Esthor Reierson were appointed as program committee, and Clara Sollom, Edna Risberg and Henry Wendt were appointed a committee for decorating the Christmas Tree.

Next week we publish the list of names of the members.

Building for Sale

Good log and frame dwelling, well finished and sided and has 8 storm windows. Size 12 x 22 feet. Now located on the Anton Peterson farm, in Section 20, Holt township.

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, December 27th, 1913. Terms cash. The highest bid gets the building and the buyer will be allowed a reasonable time to remove it.

[illegible], Holt, Minn.
Administrator of the estate of Sophia Peterson, deceased.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

HUSETH's
Headquarters for Christmas Candies, Fruits and Nuts
Our Goods always Fresh, Pure and Wholesome
AL. HUSETH, Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS
We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.
We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.
Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.
S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

'MONA LISA' VIEWED BY GREAT THRONG

ESTIMATED 30,000 PERSONS SEE PICTURE IN FOUR HOURS.

A NEW MOTIVE FOR THEFT

French Detective Suspects Mercenary Design—Story of Girl May Have Bearing on the Case.

Florence. Dec. 16.—A close examination of the painting, "Mona Lisa," has disclosed a slight abrasion on the cheek and a scratch on the left shoulder, which were received while the picture was in the hands of Vincenzo Perugia.

The chief of police says Perugia believes that he has rendered a service to Italy and is under the impression that his imprisonment was necessary to save the face of the authorities, and that he soon will be released and rewarded.

Great Disorders Experienced.

Great crowds gathered at the Uffizi gallery where the "Mona Liza" was exhibited. Although strong cordons of carbineers were drawn up around the building and others guarded the entrances and halls, the struggles of the multitude to get inside resulted in greater disorder. Soldiers were thrust aside or knocked down; windows were smashed, and the people swept through being forced out the exits by the surging masses behind. In four hours more than 30,000 persons viewed the Leonardo Da Vinci masterpiece.

When order was partly restored 125 visitors on the average were admitted every minute.

Motives May Be Mercenary.

Paris. — Detective Nicausse has made an important discovery among the effects of Vincenzo Perugia which seems to throw fresh light on his theft of "Mona Lisa." The discovery tends to show that in taking the picture from the Louvre Perugia was not actuated by purely patriotic motives, as he pretended was the case, and that the theft was long contemplated.

Among miscellaneous papers were two notebooks, dated December, 1910, the time when Perugia was employed by a firm of decorators which was engaged at the Louvre in placing glasses on pictures. The writing in the note books, the detective says, is in the hand of Perugia.

The first book contains a list of multi-millionaires, including the late J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie. The second contains a list of art dealers and collectors, not only in Rome, Florence and Naples, but in Hamburg, Berlin, Frankfort and other German cities.

Woman in the Case.

The police investigations have revealed the fact that Perugia was deeply in love with an exceedingly beautiful girl, the image of "Mona Lisa." Ninety-three fervent love letters from the girl, signed Mathilde, were found in Perugia's room. It appears that some years ago Mathilde was brought to a dance hall by another Italian who quarreled with and stabbed her, and then fled. Perugia witnessed the attack upon the girl, and, being struck by her beauty, lifted her into a cab and took her to the home of an old Italian woman who nursed her back to health.

The acquaintance developed into an ardent love affairs. The police hope to obtain from the girl information concerning Perugia which would clear up the question as to whether he had accomplices.

MR. TAFT HAS STRIKE PLAN

Former President Against Compulsory Arbitration But Offers Another Course.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 16.—Former President Taft took a stand opposing compulsory arbitration of labor disputes which, he said, had been found useless, and advocated the appointment of a tribunal which should refer its decisions to public opinion for the settlement of strikes.

Professor Taft gave this opinion in a talk in which he introduced John Wesley Hill, president of the international peace forum, who spoke on "Industrial Peace."

Mr. Taft also told how the "railroad spine" delayed a workmen's compensation act.

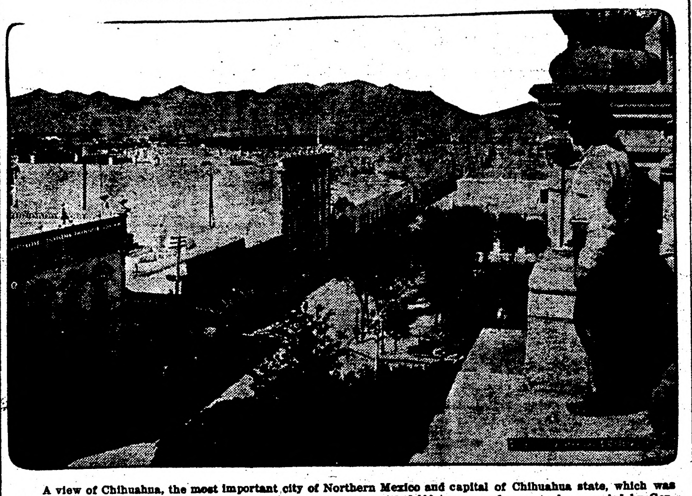
Hotel Afire; Guests Flee.

Chaffe, Mo., Dec. 16.—One hundred guests narrowly escaped death and more than $125,000 damage was caused by fire which destroyed the Astoria hotel. The fire was not discovered until almost the entire lower floor was aflame. The guests escaped in their night clothes.

Japanese Launch Battle Cruiser.

Kobe, Japan, Dec. 16.—The battle cruiser Haruna, a sister ship of the Kongo, which was built in England for the Japanese navy, was launched here. Japan will build three superdreadnaughts in 1914 in home dock yards. Though classified as a battle cruiser the Haruna, in size and power, will be almost the equal of the United States battleship Texas. In speed and radius of action, she should be superior to the Texas. The Haruna is 704 feet long, 92 feet in breadth and has a draught of 27 feet five

CHIHUAHUA ABANDONED BY HUERTA'S FORCES



A view of Chihuahua, the most important city of Northern Mexico and capital of Chihuahua state, which was deserted by Salvador Mercado, the federal military governor, with 3,000 troops and soon to be occupied by General Villa of the constitutionalists.

OUSTERS OF MRS. YOUNG QUIT

HARRISON OUSTS MEN WHO OPPOSED FORMER SCHOOL HEAD.

Declares He Would Remove Other Enemies of Educator If He Had Power—Makes Statement.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—The resignations of five members of the school board, all of whom are said to have voted against the re-election of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young as superintendent, have been accepted by Mayor Harrison, to take effect at once. The resignations accepted are those of John C. Harding, Charles O. Sethness, Harry A. Lipsky, James B. Dibelka and Henry W. Huttman.

The resignations have been held by the mayor since the appointment of the board.

In accepting these resignations, Mayor Harrison stated plainly he would remove other opponents of Mrs. Young if he had the power.

Members Harding, Sethness and Dibelka, considered the mayor's personal appointees on the board, received sharp letters from the mayor, criticizing their votes.

"The re-election of Mrs. Young was made by me an administration measure six months ago," the mayor wrote, "and all my friends were so notified. The failure of friends personal and political, upon whom I had counted to give my wishes support, has placed me in an embarrassing position which requires drastic action to show the public at least that I was not a partner in the secret method adopted to obtain Mrs. Young's removal."

News that the resignations of five board members had been accepted was received with rejoicing at a meeting of the Teachers' federation.

Mrs. Young was engaged again receiving callers, who came singly or in delegations, to voice their indignation. She has accepted a position as educational editor of a Chicago newspaper and said that under the law her successor had been legally elected and saw no way to compel her own reinstatement.

A WOMAN SUFFRAGE PLANK

Robert M. LaFollette Plans a Coup for Coming Wisconsin State Campaign.

Milwaukee, Dec. 15.—Senator Robert M. LaFollette is said to be planning a bold coup in this state in the coming campaign, the plans for which will be sprung on his followers at the conference which is to be held in Madison in a few days.

It is the plan of Senator LaFollette that his followers shall come out as the open advocates of woman suffrage for Wisconsin, and that the woman suffrage question shall be made one of the cardinal planks in the coming LaFollette campaign in Wisconsin.

Spaniards Lose Property.

El Paso, Texas, Dec. 15.—Formal protests were sent to the Spanish ministers at Washington and Mexico City on confirmed reports received that General Francisco Villa, the rebel leader, had confiscated all the property of Spaniards resident in Chihuahua and had served notice on them they must leave the country within ten days. The Spaniards in Chihuahua, who own property there valued at $4,000,000, appealed to Harry Scobel, the British vice consul.

Sentenced for Manslaughter.

Middletown, Con., Dec. 15.—On a plea of guilty Arthur T. Bradley of Meriden, a railroad man, was sentenced to jail for three months for manslaughter. Bradley was pilot of a trolley car which was using steam road tracks at Westfield when it ran into a passenger train of the New Haven railroad company on Oct. 10. In the crash R. A. Blydenburgh, editor of the Middletown Penny Press, was killed and several persons seriously injured.

AMERICANS TAKEN OUT OF TAMPICO

ADMIRAL FLETCHER ACTIVE IN PROTECTING INTEREST OF UNITED STATES.

SITUATION 'GROWING WORSE'

American Naval Officer Cables Washington of Terrible Atrocities and Intimates Blue Jackets May Land.

BULLETIN.

Washington.—After four days of fierce fighting, the Mexican garrison at Tampico, reinforced by the arrival of gunboats with troops, ammunition and dynamite, has driven the attacking constitutionalists out of range of their guns. With a cessation of hostilities, medical officers from the United States gunboat Tacoma and the scout cruiser Chester are ashore in the military hospitals helping to care for more than 200 wounded.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Rear Admiral Fletcher cabled from Tampico that he ordered all Americans out of the city and that he transferred about five hundred who were aboard the Wheeling and Tacoma to the battleships Virginia, Rhode Island and New Jersey, outside.

Some Men Remain.

The admiral reported that all foreign women and children were out of the city, but that some men preferred to remain. He also stated that the situation was "getting worse," and that skirmishing continued with the Mexican gunboat Bravo shelling the position of the constitutionalists.

Admiral Fletcher asked the navy department to make public announcement that all foreigners were safe and that it was impossible to send personal messages to all who have relatives on the ships. The navy department engaged the Ward liner Morro Castle, which arrived at Tampico early Sunday to receive such refugees as wished to leave.

Hanged in Full View.

In full view of the American fleet and the thousands of inhabitants of Tampico, Mexican federals and constitutionalists alike have hanged prisoners of war. As a result of this violation of international precedent, Admiral Fletcher, commanding the American forces, sent an officer ashore and protested in the name of humanity against the practise.

Increasing evidence that the situation at Tampico, where Mexican federals and constitutionalists are in a death grapple, is growing more serious daily, leaked out at the navy department today. Naval orders issued in a routine way disclosed that the battleship New Jersey, supposed to be at Tuxpam, arrived at Tampico in the night to reinforce Admiral Fletcher's force. Just what necessitated this move is not known.

Marines May Be Landed.

There is a growing belief here, however, that Admiral Fletcher may yet have to land marines and bluejackets to protect foreigners.

Germany Accepts U. S. Invitation.

Berlin, Dec. 13.—The foreign office has formally notified Ambassador Gerard of Germany's acceptance of the invitation extended by the United States to send a squadron of warships to attend the opening of the Panama canal. The number of ships to be sent has not yet been determined. The public announcement was construed here as a probable attempt to soften Germany's refusal to participate in the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco.

COLD STORAGE TRUST PROBE

U. S. OFFICIALS CONCLUDE CONTROL IS NOT NATION-WIDE.

Inclined to Blame Hen for High Prices of Eggs—Combines in Large Cities May Prevail.

Washington, Dec. 13.—After several weeks of investigation over the United States, officials of the department of justice have reached the conclusion that there is little ground for belief that a nation-wide cold storage trust exists.

Every United States attorney in the country was pressed into service for quick survey of the cold storage field, and their reports to Washington indicate that while combines have been formed in a few of the large cities, there is no reason to believe there is a cold storage plant controlling the price of eggs and other products in all parts of the country.

Sufficient evidence has been forthcoming, however, to show that in some of the cities such combinations do exist and the department already has turned its attention to a careful scrutiny of the operations of cold storage men there. Its next step will be to trace the lines of interstate combination between the dealers in these large cities for, without connection between them across state lines the Sherman act would not be available and the department's effort to bring down the cost of living by the breaking of a monopoly hardly would be successful.

The inquiry has intended to put the department of justice on the side of the department of agriculture, placing much of the blame for high egg and poultry prices not on cold storage men, but on the hen. According to reports cold storage men have suffered from a marked lack of eggs and other products and the prices have gone up for this reason.

U. S. RADIUM GOING FAST

Valuable Ores Shipped Abroad to Disadvantage of Home Industry Says Report.

Washington, Dec. 15.—Deposits of radium-bearing minerals in the United States are being rapidly depleted by wasteful exploitation, chiefly for the benefit of foreign markets, according to a report issued by the bureau of minerals.

From Colorado and Utah, said to possess the most important radium bearing deposits known in the world, the report said, there was shipped to Europe in 1912, carnotite ores valued commercially at $792,000.

This, the report added, "opened to foreign medicine and science opportunities in this most promising field that have been denied to our own people except by purchasing the manufactured radium compounds at an almost prohibitive price."

Bowmanville, Ont., Dec. 15.—A westbound passenger train on the Grand Trunk railway crushed into the rear end of a west-bound freight train near Oshawa killing an unidentified man and injuring three others. Twenty freight cars were thrown into a tangled mass along the tracks.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 15.—Two time honored sinecures in the Pittsburgh fire department were abolished when the city's nine councilmen refused to renew appropriations for an "official designer" and a "hose man clerk."

Dr. Carl Von Klein Is Dead.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—Dr. Carl H. von Klein, widely known for his research work into the medical lore of the ancients is dead here. Dr. von Klein spent a fortune in his studies. His health broke last summer when his son, Edmond E. C. von Klein of Minneapolis, was arrested on complaint of Miss Ethel Newcomb, who charged that the young man had bigamously married her in Portland, Ore., and then deserted her, taking with him her jewels valued at $3,500.

FINAL GOVERNMENT REPORT ON CROPS

CORN SMALLEST SINCE 1903—WHEAT LARGEST YIELD EVER RECORDED.

INCREASE OF PRICES, THOUGH

This Compensates For Decreased Yields—Department of Agriculture Bulletin Covers Fourteen Leading Crops.

Washington, Dec. 16.—Final estimates of production and value of fourteen of the important crops which form a part of the enormous grand total, aggregating approximately $9,000,000,000, of wealth produced on farms through the soil and farmers' livestock during 1913, just announced by the crop reporting board, bureau of statistics, department of agriculture. The figures are the official government estimates of acreage, production and value, based on prices paid to farmers on Dec. 1. These fourteen crops are only a portion of the production of the soil which approximates $6,000,000,000 in value each year. The total value of the animal products of the farm is estimated at about $3,000,000,000 annually.

The Main Crops.

The government's estimates are: Corn, 2,446,988,000 bushels; winter wheat, 523,561,000 bushels; spring wheat, 239,819,000 bushels; all wheat 763,380,000 bushels.

Below the Average.

"The production of crops in the United States in 1913 was materially below the average," the secretary of agriculture, David F. Houston, announces, "the yield per acre of all crops combined being smaller than in any year of the past decade, with the exception of 1911. This shortage was caused by a severe drouth, accompanied by excessive heat during the summer months, in an important portion of the agricultural district of the United States, and particularly in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and adjacent states.

"Inasmuch as crop production of 1912 was unusually large, a greater proportion than usual has been carried into the present crop year, which should mitigate somewhat the effects of the shortage of this year's crops.

Corn Crop Smallest Since 1903.

"The corn crop, the most valuable farm product of this country, is smaller than any crop since 1913. Wheat production is the largest ever recorded in this country."

FOREIGN COMMERCE IS BIG.

Tremendous Growth Shown by Secretary Redfield's Report.

Washington, Dec. 16.—According to the annual report just issued by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, the foreign commerce of the United States during the past year increased more than $421,000,000 over the year of 1912.

Our foreign commerce has grown by leaps and bounds until during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913, it reached the great total of $4,279,000,000 in value. Of this great sum $2,466,000,000 were exports and $1,815,000,000 were imports, showing a trade balance on these transactions in our favor of $653,000,000.

Suffragettes Destroy $400,000 Worth.

London, Dec. 16. — The suffragette arson squad set fire to a lumber yard at Devonport and destroyed property worth over $400,000.

IS RULING WITH HIGH HAND

Francisco Villa Establishes Himself as Dictator and Antagonizes All Foreigners.

El Paso, Texas, Dec. 16.—Americans, Germans and Spaniards, who arrived from Chihuahua, Mexico, report that Francisco Villa, the rebel leader, virtually has constituted himself dictator there and that he refuses to heed the requests of representatives of foreign governments.

They assert that the rebel leader has seized $5,000,000 worth of property belonging to foreigners, has put to death about twenty Mexican civilians, including Sergeic Sanchez, a lawyer and former state official, and has commanded the American, German and British consuls to obey rebel orders.

Posses Resume Bulkheading.

Bingham, Utah, Dec. 16.—The part of the Utah-Apex mine in which Ralph Lopez, the slayer of six men, is believed to be hiding has been bulkheaded off. It is thought by the sheriffs that Lopez is securely sealed up. The posses made no attempt of searching because the net work of connecting corridors would have made it easy for the desperado to elude them. It is planned to starve Lopez out.

Get Blame or Credit.

St. Louis, Dec. 16.—The teachings of Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and other great materialistic thinkers were termed causes of the tango, turkey trot and other animal imitating dances by Rev. Luther E. Todd in a sermon at the Wagoner Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, South. To them, also, he attributed the extremes in women's dress. "As a result of the teachings of these three, people have come to worship a god of the senses," the minister said.

MISS JESSIE M'CANN

Miss Jessie McCann, daughter of a well-to-do merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been missing since December 4, and for whom the country is being searched.

MUCH TO WORRY GREAT BRITIAN

CONCERNED OVER RECENT RIOTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Immigrant Question and Especially Discriminations Against Indians Cause Trouble.

London, Dec. 16.—The British and Indian governments are seriously concerned over recent occurrences in South Africa arising out of what the East Indians consider discriminatory legislation against them. An effort is being made to minimize the seriousness of the situation which was accompanied by a general strike of thousands of East Indians in Natal and riots in which several were killed.

Viscount Hardinge, viceroy of India, has tried to pour oil onto the troubled waters, expressing his sympathy with the East Indians in South Africa and asking for a thorough investigation by the imperial authorities and the Marquis of Crews, secretary of state for India, in reply to a deputation of Indians has likewise expressed himself in favor of inversion. All this, however, has not had much effect on the Indians, or at any rate, those living in the British islands.

They are thoroughly aroused and are demanding equal treatment for their fellow subjects in all the British dominions, practically all of which have adopted or contemplate adopting laws to keep the Indians out of their respective countries.

The difficulties of the imperial government are two-fold. It is pointed out that it cannot dictate to the dominions what immigrants they shall admit, without arousing, particularly in South Africa, a storm that might lead to a demand for separation from the empire; and in India it is realized that it would not take much to fan the flame into a rebellion that would tax the resources of the empire. To put down a rebellion in India would be a very serious matter under any circumstances, but there is the added difficulty now that Hindus and Mohammedans are united in demanding what they consider justice to Indian subjects and have been holding meetings of protests and making joint representations to the Indian officials. These meetings have been scarcely noticed in the papers, although the speeches at some of them have been of such an inflammatory character that on other occasions the speakers would have been charged with sedition.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance, too, is proving a thorn in the side of the British empire now, that the various dominions are attracting immigrants from all parts of the world, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, or at any event the western provinces of Canada, have declared for a "white man's" country and their laws aim at the exclusion of all Orientals, whether British subjects, as the Indians are, or Japanese, the subjects of her ally.

Christmas Tree For Beasts.

Chicago, Dec. 16.—A Christmas tree will be delivered at a South Side house, there to be decked out with choice foods and toys for next week. Among these tidbits will be sardines, liver and soft, toothsome bones. Strange food for children? Of course. The tree is not for children, but for the convalescent animals in Miss Elinor McGrath's cat and dog hospital. According to Miss McGrath, the beasts are appreciative—a lot more so than some children.

Japanese Launch Battle Cruiser.

Kobe, Japan, Dec. 16.—The battle cruiser Haruna, a sister ship of the Kongo, which was built in England for the Japanese navy, was launched here. Japan will build three superdreadnaughts in 1914 in home dock yards. Though classified as a battle cruiser the Haruna, in size and power, will be almost the equal of the United States battleship Texas. In speed and radius of action, she should be superior to the Texas. The Haruna is 704 feet long, 92 feet in breadth and has a draught of 27 feet five

State News of General Interest

CHOLERA FIGHT OF STATE CRITICISED

WEST CENTRAL DEVELOPMENT AGENTS DON'T LIKE THE METHODS PURSUED.

TOO MANY HOGS WERE LOST

Would Empower All the Licensed Veterinarians to Administer Cholera Serum.

Morris.—The West Central Minnesota Development association is going to take up the question of the state's way of fighting hog cholera. The county agents of the association's territory do not like the way things are done. They say that but for present laws many more hogs could have been saved this fall. Consequently these agents drafted resolutions calling for a change, and submitted these to the development association for its approval.

Resolutions as Drafted.

The resolutions drafted are as follows:

Whereas, the state of Minnesota has suffered the loss of several million dollars' worth of hogs this summer and fall, because of the wide-spread epidemic of hog cholera; and,

Whereas, we believe that much of this great loss could have been prevented by making it possible for more veterinarians to administer hog cholera virus, insuring permanent immunity, and,

Whereas, we believe that this condition has been made partly possible by the clause in the state laws restricting its application by state veterinarians only;

Therefore, be it resolved by the West Central Minnesota Development association, that the Minnesota law regulating the administration of hog cholera virus be amended so as to permit any licensed veterinarian to administer it, instead of restricting its use as at present.

And whereas, we believe that the sale of hog cholera serum by the state of Minnesota at less than its cost of production is restricting the manufacture of serum by commercial enterprises in large enough quantities to supply all serum needed by farmers to immunize their herds against a serious outbreak of hog cholera,

Therefore, be it further resolved by the Western Minnesota Development association, that the Minnesota law should be amended, compelling the state either to discontinue the manufacture of serum or sell it at cost.

EX-BANDIT AFTER ESTATE

Member of Band That Terrorized Utah Is After Inheritance.

East Grand Forks.—Claiming to be the last surviving member of the "Butch" Cassidy gang that once terrorized Utah, and that he had just been released from the Utah prison after serving twenty-one years for participating in a train robbery, Frank Walness passed through East Grand Forks to his former home in Iowa, where he proposes to begin a fight for the recovery of his father's estate, which reverted to the state of Iowa several years ago when no heirs appeared.

Walness is not the man's right name, but it was the name he gave officials when he and two other train robbers were captured within a few hours after they had robbed a train of $26,000, and he refused, while here, to give his real name.

Walness says his father spent $10,000 in a search for him, but that he always kept his identity secret.

Not Suicide, Says Witness.

Blue Earth.—Dr. George E. Merry of Dunnell was the first witness in the trial of Chris Virgens, charged with the murder of John Steen at Triumph. Dr. Merry examined the body of Steen and located the bullet by an X-ray examination. Dr. Buttz of Monterey was also called to the stand. They described in detail the course of the bullet and declared the wound could not have been self-inflicted. August Steen, aged 11, son of the murdered man, followed the two doctors on the stand and described the finding of his father's body in the yard of the hoghouse on his farm. The Virgens murder trial is attracting great interest, the large courtroom being packed, even all the standing room being taken by the spectators.

Norman Organizing Farm Clubs.

Ada.—The third farmers' club in Norman county was organized ten miles west of Ada last week under the name of "The Viking Farmers' club." County Agent Gray and Professor Wentzel of the Ada high school are pushing the campaign.

Noted Novelist Not Here.

Duluth.—It was announced the other day that John Fox, Jr., author of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and other novels, and former husband of Fritzie Scheff, was camping on the shores of Buck lake near Nashwauk, seeking inspiration for another story. The spot was approached with awe by those who had occasion to go near it, but it has been learned that not an ounce of romance is being absorbed thereabouts, for the Fox who is sojourning there is W. Melvin Fox, a former instructor in manual training.

SHOOTS WIFE AND DAUGHTER

Mother Tries to Shield Her Child From Infuriated Stepfather.

Minneapolis.—In a futile attempt to shield her 11-year-old daughter from the fury of her husband, Mrs. Mary Biegler, 711 Twenty-seventh avenue northeast, was shot twice. Henry Biegler, the husband, before shooting his wife, shot his little stepdaughter, Alice, as she ran away from him when he brandished a revolver at her.

Mrs. Biegler is in a serious condition at the City hospital. One of the bullets pierced the tip of her left lung and the other lodged in the right lung. Another bullet Biegler fired at her went wild. All of them were fired from behind while the mother was trying to cover the girl with her body and get her out of the house. The daughter, Alice Chamberlain, was shot through the shoulder. A bone was broken, but she is not seriously hurt.

Mr. and Mrs. Biegler had been married only two months, but there had been domestic trouble in the home for some time past.

THOUSANDS OF DEER SPOIL

Multitude of Venison Carcasses Dot Ground Hunted Over this Season.

St. Paul.—Woodsmen scurrying to the settlements for warmer clothing report that the ground is dotted with the carcasses of thousands of deer. A multitude of venison carcasses which hunters brought to the settlements spoiled before they could be transported home.

Sherman Bailey, chief game warden of the western half of Minnesota, whose headquarters are at Bemidji, and Thomas Storey, chief of the eastern division with headquarters at Duluth, are preparing reports indicating that thousands of the deer and moose killed this fall never will grace a roasting oven or frying pan.

Previous to the arrival of cold weather, these two chief game wardens were aware that many deer had spoiled.

WISE BURGLAR STEALS EGGS

Shows Unusual Thrift and Displays Knowledge in Sorting the Loot.

Winona. — With the prevailing retail price of eggs at a new figure and still ascending, burglars in Winona are showing unusual thrift and enterprise. A new angle was given their operations here when the storage plant of the William R. Foster & Co. was found to have been looted of a large number of fresh eggs.

The burglar entered the building by shattering a rear window, giving him access to the main operating room. There he carefully sorted the different eggs, showing a knowledge of the different classes and their age in storage.

Romance Ends in Wedding.

Winona.—As a result of a romance of their younger days, Henry S. Johnson, veteran conductor on the Green Bay road, residing at Merillan, Wis., and Mrs. Ella Graves of Chicago were united in marriage in this city, Rev. George S. Keller officiating at the rectory of St. Paul's church. Thirty-five years ago, about the time Mr. Johnson entered the employ of the Green Bay railway, he and his present bride were youthful lovers.

Wahkon a Dry Village.

Wahkon.—The Village of Wahkon is now dry. The only saloon, the bar in the Rex hotel, has been closed by order of the village board, which refused to grant a license. As a consequence the Duluth Brewing company, owner of the hotel, has closed the building.

Sold Stale Eggs; Fined.

Pipestone.—Mrs. Minnie Trede was arrested, charged with having sold stale eggs to a merchant at Verdi. Though a plea of not guilty was first entered by the woman, following a conference with her husband in the court room, the plea was changed to that of guilty and Judge Sattler imposed a fine of $30 and costs.

Weasel and Chickens Friendly.

Willmar.—A weasel makes its home under the chicken house of John Carlson here. The animal sleeps among the chickens and runs about on porches and sidewalks like a cat.

Mapleton Man Fatally Burned.

Mapleton.—Charles Yeager, 25 years old, was seriously if not fatally burned by an explosion of gasoline while he was endeavoring to thaw out a frozen pump.

Poultry Show a Fine Success.

Crookston.—With the biggest exhibition ever held by the Northern Minnesota Poultry association, with Professor C. E. Brown of the Crookston School of Agriculture elected president for next year and Senator John Saugstad secretary-treasurer, the tenth annual meeting of the association, after a show lasting over a week, came to a close. As a direct result of the activities of the association it was shown that poultry is being shipped from all the main shipping points of the valley in car lots.

MYSTERY IN CASE OF BANKER

T. B. DAWSON OF LA MOURE, N. D., FATALLY INJURED.

Police Believe Man Shot Himself—Victim Says It Was Case of Hold-up.

Minneapolis.—T. B. Dawson, who is a North Dakota banker and pioneer, was probably fatally wounded in the rear of the Keeley institute, Tenth street and Park avenue, Tuesday night. He says he was held up. The police have not accepted the injured man's statement that he was robbed and shot by two men. They attempted to get an admission from him that the wound was self-inflicted. His clothing was burned by the charge of the weapon and a revolver was found near where he lay. The bullet penetrated the right breast over the heart and lodged in the shoulder.

Dawson's cries for help aroused the whole neighborhood. Miss Julia Anderson was first to reach him and says she saw two men running away. Dawson was taken into the Keeley institute and cared for by Dr. W. W. Boales, superintendent, a life-long friend. Dawson's pockets were turned inside out. He had neither money nor jewelry, though he is known to be wealthy.

Dawson lives at La Moure, N. D., is a bank president and a pioneer of the state. He is 63 years old. Papers found in his pocket indicated that he recently made large bequests to an institution in Cleveland, Ohio. He was a patient at the local Keeley institute a year ago and since then has, according to Dr. Boales, made many gifts to organizations fighting the liquor habit.

The police say, in support of their suicide theory, that a highwayman, seldom drops his gun at the scene of the shooting. Then they point out the burned clothing.

Residents in the neighborhood of the shooting and the hospital authorities do not look with favor upon the theory that the man attempted his life. They say his cries preceded the shot a few seconds. No one but Miss Julia Anderson saw any men. She says she just caught a glimpse of two disappearing in the darkness. The police have no description.

BOYS HOLD A CORN SCHOOL

Swift County Lads in Acre-Yield Contest Organize for Season of 1914.

Benson.—Upon the special invitation of Alfred Carlsted, agricultural agent, boys in the acre-yield contest gathered at the high school building in this city and spent two busy days judging and scoring corn. The boys went at the work with vim and energy and kept the instructors plied with questions.

The work began with a talk by Professor T. A. Erickson, rural school specialist from the university farm, who emphasized the need of the "get together spirit" in farm life, and also the benefits of a good general knowledge of natural life. He was followed by Professor P. E. Miller of the Morris agricultural school. Mr. Carlsted then made a short talk, opening the way for the actual work in judging. The high school agricultural class was combined with the corn school boys for the two days' work.

Instruction in judging and scoring was then given by Professor Erickson and Professor T. Z. Arehart, the instructor of the high school agricultural department. The boys were taught the use of the score card and, from the appearance of the work done later in the judging contest, used their time to the best advantage.

The boys were given a treat in the form of a luncheon served by the freshmen class in domestic science in the school dining-room.

Farmhand's Hand Shot Off.

Heron Lake.—Karl Hall, a farmhand living a mile out of Brewster, is in the hospital here suffering a gunshot wound, said to have been inflicted by Joseph Fields, a fellow employe. The greater portion of his hand was torn away and it was found necessary to amputate it above the wrist. Fields was arrested and charged with assault in the first degree. He waived examination and was bound over.

State School Girls Escape.

Little Falls.—Frank Ludenal, Lars Soma and Andrew Soma of Swanville entered pleas of not guilty here to have sheltered and aided three girls who escaped from the state school at Sauk Center. The complaints were made by an officer of the institution. All were released under bonds.

Minnesota Trapping Profitable.

Winona.—The trappers in this part of Minnesota this fall are reaping their richest harvest. The fur-bearing animals, particularly the muskrats, were never more numerous. So profitable have been the trappers' operations in the few days since the ban was lifted by the law on December 1, that the market in Winona is flooded and the price has dropped to a new level. The mild weather that has prevailed this fall is held accountable for the abundance of the animals.

THOUSANDS OF AVAILABLE HOMESTEADS

Western Canada's Homestead Area Being Increased.

The great rush for homesteads whenever a reservation is opened by the U. S. government reveals the fact that there is a great desire on the part of the American people to get land. The fact that tens of thousands are on hand at every opening, and only a few hundred homesteads are available shows that the available agricultural lands which are in the gift of the government are rapidly diminishing. In addition to this agricultural lands that are of proved value have advanced in price to such an extent that it becomes a serious question to the man with moderate means who intends to go into farming, where he shall go. Fortunately there is yet to be had in Western Canada, either in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, thousands of free homesteads of 160 acres each, which may be had, by the simple process of filing, paying a ten dollar entrance fee, and living on it for six months each year for three years. There is no necessity to make a long, tedious and expensive journey, only to find you have one chance in fifty of getting what you want. Although this homesteading has been going on in Canada for a number of years, and hundreds of thousands of them have been taken by hundreds of thousands of Americans, there remains sufficient to last for some time, and of as good land as any that has yet been taken up. In fact, in the opinion of very many, those that are left are of the best. They comprise lands that give the opportunity to indulge in the growing of grain, whether it be wheat, oats, barley or flax, but in addition these lands are admirably adapted for mixed farming, a class of farming that is certain to give better returns than that of all grain-growing. Cattle thrive and fatten on the nutritious grasses; dairying can be carried on successfully; timber for building is within reach, and water is easy to get. These lands are located in the park districts of any of the three provinces; groves of trees intersperse the landscape and give it a beauty that can only be attained in the more open prairie sections by the planting of trees. Tree culture by the way is being carried on to a great extent. Besides these free grant lands there are lands which may be had by purchasing from railways and private companies and individuals. These lands have not increased in price as their productive qualities and their location might have warranted, and may still be had at reasonably low prices and on easy terms. The crop in Western Canada in 1913 was one of the best of the number of good crops that that country has raised. Wheat has been reported with yields of from 30 to 45 bushels per acre, and other grain with like heavy yields.—Advertisement.

One of the Guggenheims.

"There's nothing like putting the best foot foremost—putting the best face on the matter," said Oswald Garrison Villard in a recent Baltimore address.

"Why shouldn't we emulate Mrs. Sudden Ryches whose father was a policeman?

"Lord Lackland said to Mrs. Sudden Ryches at a luncheon at Sherry's:

"'What business is your father in, madam?'

"She flushed slightly, sipped her amber-colored Chateau Yquem, looked Lord Lackland straight in the eye, and answered:

"'Copper.'

"And Lord Lackland, remembering the pale palaces of the copper millionaires overlooking the park, said: 'Ah!' sagely, and was very much impressed indeed."

HOW TO TREAT PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the skin.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Essentially Feminine.

Florist—This is a century plant. It blooms once in a hundred years.

Lady—Haven't you got a century plant that will bloom oftener?—Chicago Daily News.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv.

Don't let your lofty ideals be restricted to high living.

HOPE TO RAISE LARGE SUM

Millions of Red Cross Christmas Seals to Be Sold for Anti-Tuberculosis Work.

Few people have any idea of the magnitude of the Red Cross Christmas seal campaign. This year over 100,000,000 seals have been printed and distributed. If placed end-to-end these seals would extend nearly 2,400 miles, or practically from New York to Salt Lake City. They have been sent to over 25,000 different agents and will be sold and handled by an army of not less than 100,000 volunteers, including men, women and children. Millions of advertising circulars have been scattered throughout the country, and so thoroughly has the advertising campaign been organized that it is doubtful if many people in the more populous states of the country will not have heard of the Red Cross seal and its mission in the prevention of tuberculosis. It is hoped that at least 50,000,000 seals may be sold this year. The principle upon which the sale of seals is based is that every cent except what little is needed to cover the actual cost of printing and handling shall be spent for tuberculosis work in the community where the seals are sold.

Cows and Grass.

Two Washington youngsters were visiting their father's country place in Virginia, when one of them observed:

"Marie, I don't see how cows can eat grass. Do you?"

Marie gave the question appropriate consideration, and then replied:

"I suppose it's like this: When the cows are young the mother cow keeps saying to her children: 'If you don't eat grass you shan't have any pie?'"

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas H. Fletcher
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

A Legacy.

"Binks inherits his wit."

"Yes, he writes the same jokes his grandfather wrote."

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

A man with a beard may use it as a barometer. Beards are harder and curlier as wet weather approaches.

They stop the tickle—Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops stop coughs by stopping the cause—5c at Drug Stores.

One must be a born leader or driver in order to have things come his way.

Those Girls of Ours.

"Here comes Polly Perkins. Let's make it hot for her."

"How?"

"Why, let's be cool to her."—Boston Transcript.

W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES
Men's [illegible]
Women's [illegible]
Misses, Boys, Children [illegible]
Began business in 1876; now the largest maker of $3, $3.50 and $4 shoes in the world.
Over 150 styles, [illegible] leathers, sizes and widths.
W. L. Douglas shoes are famous everywhere. Why not give them a trial? The value you will receive for your money will astonish you.
If you would visit our factory, the largest in the world under one roof, and see how carefully W. L. Douglas shoes are made, you would understand why they are warranted to look better, fit better, hold their shape and wear longer than other makes for the price.
Your dealer should supply you with them. Don't take a substitute. None genuine without W. L. Douglas name stamped on bottom. Shoes sent everywhere, direct from factory, by Parcel Post, postage free. Now is the time to begin to save money on your footwear. Write today for Illustrated Catalog showing how to order by mail. W. L. DOUGLAS, 210 Spark St., Brockton, Mass.

The Typewriter for the Rural Business Man
Ball Bearing Long Wearing
Whether you are a small town merchant or a farmer, you need a typewriter.
If you are writing your letters and bills by hand, you are not getting full efficiency.
It doesn't require an expert operator to run the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter. It is simple, compact, complete, durable.
Send in the attached coupon and we will give especial attention to your typewriter needs.
L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Co., Syracuse, N.Y.
Please send me your free book about typewriters.
Name..........
P. O..........
State..........

FREE TO ALL SUFFERERS.
If you feel 'OUT OF SORTS' 'RUN DOWN' or 'GOT THE BLUES' SUFFER from KIDNEY, BLADDER, NERVOUS DISEASES, CHRONIC WEAKNESSES, ULCERS, SKIN ERUPTIONS, PILES, write for my FREE book. THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE MEDICAL BOOK EVER WRITTEN, IT TELLS ALL about these DISEASES and the REMARKABLE CURES EFFECTED by THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. No1. No2. No3. THERAPION & you can decide FOR YOURSELF if it's the remedy for YOUR OWN ailment. Don't send a cent. Absolutely FREE. No 'followup' circulars. DR. LECLERC MED. CO., HAVERSTOCK RD, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, ENG.

Prepare for a Business Position at Aaker's Business College
PROF. H. H. AAKER
Grand Forks or Fargo, by taking a bookkeeping course, or shorthand on the wonderful stenotype machine, or a Gas Tractor and Auto Engineering course. Write today for catalog.

Constipation Vanishes Forever
Prompt Relief—Permanent Cure
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS never fail. Purely vegetable — act surely but gently on the liver. Stop after dinner distress—cure indigestion, improve the complexion, brighten the eyes.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

35 BUSHELS PER ACRE was the yield of WHEAT
160 Acre FARMS in WESTERN CANADA FREE
on many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 50 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, 50 bushels for barley and from 10 to 20 bushels for flax.
J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 66 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.
Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.
The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.
Ask for descriptive literature and reduced railway rates. Apply to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or
W. E. BLACK
CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AGENT, CLIFFORD BLOCK, GRAND FORKS, NO. DAK.
Canadian Government Agent

Fargo Directory
Fargo Tannery
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

EARN $75 TO $100 A MONTH
Young Men Wanted to fill the demand of Automobile and Gas Traction Engineers. "Now is the time to act." Write for free information.
Fargo School of Automobile & Gas Engineering, 1018 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakota

Young Man write the Y. M. C. A.
Gas Tractor and Auto Schools
FARGO, N. D.
We have "The Teaching System." Write us today. R. R. Wolf, Sec'y.

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo, N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.
Pattern of a No. 1 Hide.

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

Dr. H. W. Allen, Osteopath
Acute and chronic diseases successfully treated. Spinal injuries and irregularities a specialty. Graduate American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo. Offices: 321-322 de Lendrecie Block Fargo N. D.

Neal 3 Day Cure for the drink habit is a positive and permanent cure. Easy to take. Save time and money by taking the Neal Treatment at 1825 3rd Ave., S., Fargo, N. D. Drug habit cured.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE
A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year.
Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking.
Next term opens soon. For full information address F. L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES
Color more goods brighter and faster colors than any other dye. One 10c package colors all fibers. They dye in cold water better than any other dye. You can dye any garment without ripping apart. WRITE FOR FREE booklet, calendar, blotters, etc. MONROE DRUG COMPANY, Quincy, Ill.

PISO'S REMEDY
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS
25 CTS.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

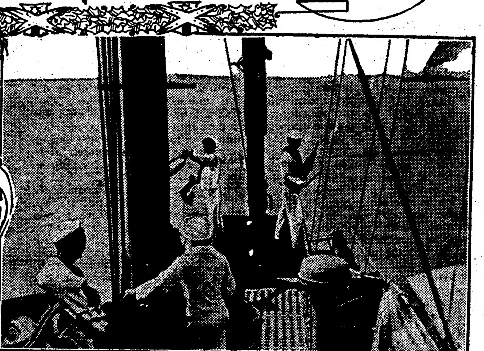
W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 51-1913.

WHEN SANTA CLAUS BOARDS MAN-O'-WAR

ABSURD as it may sound to every one, the bluejackets still believe in Santa Claus. That rotund, rosy-cheeked little old man pays as much attention to the thousands of boys on board the warships as he does to the thousands of, perhaps younger in years, boys and girls ashore. Instead of coming in a sleigh with reindeer and merry bells, he comes in a precarious-looking boat, fully armed and convoyed, with the boom of musketry and the loud blowing of horns. The blowing of horns is a universal custom with the boys of all countries and colors and with the bluejackets too.

On Christmas day Santy is the highest ranking officer of the fleet, and all flags are junior to his fur tree hoisted to the masthead. With his flag lieutenant, his aide and the rest of the staff, he cruises about among the ships distributing the gifts with which his argosy is laden. His method of doing this is fraught with as much red tape as was ever the greetings of the old admiral of the Dutch fleet in the time of Queen Bess. All the paraphernalia symbolical of austere rank and bounty that can be gotten together are used as adornments and no end of work is expended on the rig of the boat to be used, which is sometimes the wherry and sometimes the punt.

In order to hold to the traditional custom used in the time of Paul Jones and down through the years, the boat is rigged like a brig, that is, with two masts and yard arms crossing, with jib and staysail and spanker out astern. On the fore and after quarters they arrange large wooden tubes, in which are inserted small arms. These "spiggoty guns" compose the saluting battery and heavy main battery also, and are manned and fired by the boatswain of "Der Prosit," who is a ponderous man in his official garb and daring in the way he approaches the ships, whose crews throng the sides and answer the salute with a revolver shot from the poop.



EXCHANGING CHRISTMAS GREETINGS BY FLAG SIGNALING

CHRISTMAS DINNER IN THE U.S. NAVY

PLAY TIME ON BOARD

BLUE JACKETS WRITING CHRISTMAS LETTERS

The saluting takes place before "Der Prosit" is within hailing distance, and all hands have a laugh at the tiny sounds, strongly contrasted in their minds with the salute of the big guns which they are accustomed to hear. Next the boatswain gets up in the bows and resting one hand almost on top of the foremast and lifting a megaphone as long as himself to his lips, calls out at the top of his voice, "Ship, ahoy!" The quartermaster answers from the bridge, "Hello, hello! Der Prosit?" "Aye, aye," the boatswain returns. "Come alongside," calls the quartermaster. Then the admiral of "Der Prosit" rises in the stern, some ten feet aft of the boatswain in the bow, his head on a level with the topmast, and bawls out through his megaphone, "All hands fur-r-l sail," With that the crew, consisting of one man, who also acts in the capacity of foghorn, gets amidships and climbs the mainmast, which sways to and fro as if about to capsize the entire craft, and pulls down all the sails. "The vessel is standing to," he then calls out to the boatswain, who reports to the admiral over the crew's head, who in turn reports to Santa Claus, sitting in the stern sheets at the tiller. All these orders are given and carried out in the most solemn manner, to the merriment of the ship's crew looking on from the rail above.

The crew of "Der Prosit" then gets out oars and pulls alongside while on deck the real boatswain's mate pipes eight side boys to stand at the head of the gangway and salute the admiral and Santa Claus when they come aboard. The president of the United States only rates six side boys when he comes aboard, while Santy has his eight, besides his are petty officers while the president's are only good-looking apprentice boys. As the argosy draws alongside the boatswain pipes the long, low tune and three short blasts characteristic of the coming aboard of great men.

No less a person than the captain of the ship meets the admiral of "Der Prosit," his wife, Santy, laden with a huge basket full of presents, the boatswain and the crew, while the bugler sounds three portentious ruffles and the ship's company, assembled aft, stands at attention. Indeed the officers are all present, for they believe in Santy as well as do the crew. When the admiral's wife, some fair faced sailor with Manila rope hair and a tawdry skirt, swings aboard holding her train high and exposing a generous view of red stocking to the eyes of the sailors, a great laugh is evoked and a shout goes up, "higher, higher," or "Oh, you Kiddo!"

The boatswain in command of the crew shouts to his one man for, "Attention!" then puts him through a series of gymnastics of a peculiar and intensely funny character. The admiral, as if not thoroughly taking in the landscape, lifts a huge pair of binoculars in the form of two quart wine bottles lashed together, to his eyes and makes a pretense of getting his bearings by scrutinizing the sailors about him. Presently he reports to Santy, who has deposited his basket of presents on the quarter deck, "Sir, I see we are now in the Cannibal isles."

Santy begins then to pick up presents and read the names aloud, giving them to the crew of "Der Prosit" and the admiral's wife, and even to the admiral himself, who distributes them accordingly, cutting many ridiculous capers.

The presents are of a type that bring laughter. They are gotten up and made by the friends of those to whom they are sent, with an idea towards characterizing the ambition, the whim or the standing jokes that mark the receiver. If the captain is a four striper he will probably get an admiral's star, unless he has some other whim by which he is more properly known. When he is presented with this he can only blush in the presence of everybody, and take his dose, as Santy is supreme on Christmas day.

But the greatest gift that Santy can bestow falls to the lot of those who, through some misfortune or slip, have come in line for punishment. It is customary for Santy to walk boldly up to the captain and ask him to "whitewash" the books. In the face of everybody and on Christmas day the captain can not very well refuse this request, although some captains have been seen to wince and cough before granting the immeasurable favor. The report book, in which all punishable acts are entered, is swept clean and the culprits are reinstated to first-class standing and enjoy all the privileges held by their more fortunate shipmates who have not fallen before the multiplicity of temptations that daily assail the man-o'-warsman.

The event which forms a background for all this merriment is the regular "big feed," as the sailors call it. For the last week this has crept into their conversation. Pie, turkey and plum duff are the three great delicacies to the sailors, and they have more respect for them than for the three graces.

"What kind of a feed is the commissary gonna hand us?" one sailor asks of another. During this time of anticipation excitement runs high and the commissary is a very much respected person. In fact, he is never a retired person, for his billet is a hard one to fill to the satisfaction of every one who eats at the general mess. There is always some old tar or other who imagines himself to be slighted by the quality of his food, and the apprentice boys take from him the habit of complaining with very little reason on their side. Quarrels often result and have to be referred to the "mast," where the first lieutenant (first luff) settles the matter in favor of the commissary, so that the sailor arranges a private settlement with the commissary later on where the first luff has nothing to say about it.

The burden of the repast falls naturally upon the cooks and mess attendants. It is far from an enjoyable affair with them, although they are an affable lot. The preparation of the potatoes is the work of a dozen men, since they must be extraordinarily nice.

The "skinners" arrange themselves astride a bench in range of a tub where one man sits and tosses potatoes continually. The tub is kept full by another man who dumps in from a sack carried down from the upper deck. So a cycle is made, the clean peeled potatoes going constantly into another tub, which is dragged into the galley and dumped into a great urn through which water is percolating. These are rinsed around by another mess attendant and dumped into other urns where steam is turned on, while another tub of peeled ones are being brought from the skinners.

When they are done the ship's cook himself, who paces to and fro in the galley all the while, mounts upon the nearest urn with his, and taking a great six-foot masher proceeds to pound them into a white flakey mass fit for a king.

But this is not all he has to do, either. The turkeys are browning in the long ovens and he and his three assistants have continually to open the doors, probe with long forks into the swelling breasts and ascertain when to take them out.

The mess tables are all numbered so that each sailor knows just where to go when he gets down through the hatchway, and he doesn't waste any time getting there on this occasion. It is indeed a singular and lively scene on the gundeck at this period. Every man's plate is heaped to the brim before him and all apply themselves with a daring and disregard for mere stomachs that would make a dyspeptic wince and turn his head. Dozens of tables dangle from hooks between parallel columns of sailors, who seem only restrained from eating each other alive by the flimsy, vacillating boards which support the food.

When these ravenous appetites have been slaked and even those who have the dilating powers of an anaconda are put at rest, or in pain, as the case may be, some of the "old shellbacks" will begin to grow reminiscent and tell of the Christmases they have spent in lands where there were no turkeys nor anything else fit for the "big feed."

Says old Péte, the sailmaker's mate: "I mind the time down in Darien, when the steward had nothin' in the storeroom but a ton of crusty hard biscuits full of bugs, so when y' busted 'em with the handle 've yer knife they went whimty nifty in every direction—under yer plate, behind yer cup, up yer sleeve and around the mess pans. But, mates, that was a Christmas fer yer life! We couldn't eat the buffalo meat, it was that much like bolt rope, so we drunk or coffee and engaged ourselves in bug races down the table. By tryin' all the bugs out we got some speedy ones. And they was speedy. I had one that could trot down that table—trot, mind y'—like it was Maude S herself. The devil of it was the bloody bug wouldn't keep in the course between the plates. She'd break fer a hole near the finish. I bet big money on 'er, though, and after loosin' 20 bones by her duckin' out of it when she was two whole plate lengths ahead, mind y'. I figgered I could head her off the next time and win anyhow, so I put up 50 bones—50 good cold plunkers on that skinny little runt of a bug, and strike me blind! you ought a seen that race! Gol That cussed little bug slid down that mess table like it was on ball bearings. I headed 'er off at the hole with a piece of tack and she run clean again the bottom board of the table an' butted 'er brains out, kicked over on 'er back stone dead. But that race! Whew! I raked in the coin from the captain of the hold Christmas! Well, strike me, fellers! That was some Christmas even if we didn't have any eats."

SERUM CHECKS RAVAGES OF HOG CHOLERA

Check Pens.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

During the cholera epidemic of the fall of 1911 a farmer came to Veterinarian Hadly, of the University of Wisconsin, and wanted to know what was the matter with his hogs.

"It is not cholera," he declared, "for I had that on the farm about ten years ago, and the pigs behaved differently then."

"Wait a minute," declared Doctor Hadly. "Before you go on I will tell you the symptoms of those animals. They exhibited a loss of appetite, they were chilled and trembled, their temperature was two to five degrees above normal, the skin was scurvy, and the coat hard and dry, they hid in the litter and resented being disturbed, they walked stiff and sore and stood about with their hind legs crossed, they—"

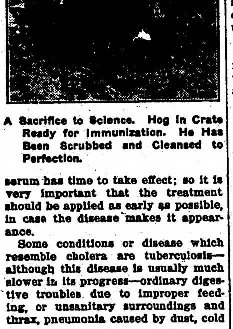
"How did you know that?" interrupted the farmer excitedly. "That is just what ailed my hogs."

"I was simply describing to you the symptoms of acute cholera. The other time your herd probably had the chronic form of the disease; there is a great difference between the two forms."

The symptoms of cholera must usually be confirmed by a post-mortem examination. The hog is strung up just as it is slaughtered for the butcher and the carcass opened. If cholera is really present, the lymph-glands will be red and congested, the kidneys diseased, the marrow of the backbone dark to almost black, the lungs congested and the bowels show ulcers and sores.

Serum a Preventive, Not a Cure.

The serum used in hog-cholera is not a cure, but is intended as a preventive measure in case of an outbreak, or where an outbreak is threatened. In some cases hogs may contract the disease and die before the serum has time to take effect; so it is very important that the treatment should be applied as early as possible, in case the disease makes it appearance.



A Sacrifice to Science. Hog in Crate Ready for Immunization. He Has Been Scrubbed and Cleansed to Perfection.

Some conditions or disease which resemble cholera are tuberculosis—although this disease is usually much slower in its progress—ordinary digestive troubles due to improper feeding, or unsanitary surroundings and thrax, pneumonia caused by dust, cold or worms.

A hog can be made immune by vaccinating with anti-hog-cholera serum, so he will not take the disease. This is called artificial immunity, and may last for a few weeks only, or during the life of the animal, according to the method used in the vaccination.

Hog-cholera serum is nothing more nor less than the defribinated blood of hyperimmunes, with the proper antiseptics added for preserving it, and consists of a saturated solution of antibodies to antagonize the germ of hog-cholera.

There are four ways or methods of transforming an immune into a hyperimmune. The first way is the quick subcutaneous method, introducing subcutaneously in the region of the abdomen ten cubic centimeters of virulent blood to the pound of liveweight of the immune.

The objection to this method is that a leakage may be made through the needle wounds, owing to the great pressure produced by the introduction of such great quantities of blood under the skin causing abscesses.

The second way is the slow subcutaneous method which has less radical effect on the hog, and is less likely to cause abscesses. It takes a longer time to produce a hyperimmune than the first way. Administer doses of one, two and one-half and five cubic centimeters per pound of body weight seven to ten days apart, thus giving the immune ample time to recover from the transitory effect produced.

The third way is known as the abdominal method introducing the virulent blood directly into the peritoneal cavity. The dose is the same as in the first way. Care must be taken not to puncture the bladder.

This method is best employed by suspending the animal by the hind legs and allowing the abdominal contents to rest on the diaphragm, then inserting the needle through the wall of the abdomen about two or three inches below the anterior borders of the pubis, an inch or two inside of the median line to avoid puncturing of the bladder.

The fourth way by intravenous injection. Virulent blood is introduced directly into the circulation by way of the ear-vein at one dose. Five cubic centimeters per pound are prescribed. It is difficult to reach the veins, because of the coarse ears, and often the veins are scarcely visible. However, this method is a trifle more potent. A 150 pound hog requires 750 cubic centimeters of serum.

How the Serum Is Obtained.

The hog is placed on the table and then washed, the tail is thoroughly washed with an antiseptic solution and luke-warm water and soap, and then with a weak solution of alcohol. Before preparing the hog bottles are washed and sterilized and covered with a cloth which has also been sterilized. A piece of the tail is amputated, and in this way the blood is drawn from the hog.

From a hog weighing 150 pounds about three pints of serum is obtained at one bleeding. A hog can be bled four times before he has to be hyperimmunized again. The blood received in this way is defibrinated, and the small amount of carbolic acid is added to preserve it, and does not injure its protecting power. The blood is then ready for use.

A hog weighing 150 pounds will yield from 90 to 100 doses of vaccine at one bleeding. A hog can be bled once every eight or ten days. The above are government directions.

After the serum has been tested and found to be potent, it is put up in bottles of three sizes, sealed and stored in a cement cellar, where it can be kept at even temperature until used.

Some Dangers to Be Avoided.

From the fact that there is always more or less fever caused by vaccination, and more or less danger of the animal becoming infected through the wound made by the needle of the syringe, the following after treatment is recommended:

Spare diet for three or four days, especially of corn, but plenty of water, thoroughly clean and comfortable pens with plenty of clean bedding, with absolutely no chance to get into the mud of any kind. The more mud and dirt the more danger. They should not be dipped or operated upon for at least two weeks after vaccination.

When the disease makes its appearance in the neighborhood, all the well hogs should be vaccinated, and all the sick hogs should be destroyed and burned, and should any of the vaccinated hogs develop cholera, they too, should be destroyed and burned.

This will prevent to a certain extent the spread of infection. Among the most convenient and efficient agents for destroying disease-germs rank heat, solution of creolin, carbolic acid, caustic soda or sulphate of copper, fumes of chlorine, chloride of lime, slake lime, lime water and kerosene oil.

All straw, cobs and litter should be removed, and if cholera is present, burned, and a strong solution of some good coal-tar dip or crude carbolic acid, about one part of the dip to twenty of water, used on all woodwork and floor of the pen.

Though hog-cholera is not communicable to man, there is danger of anthrax, septic infection and tuberculosis. If a person has a sore on his hand he should not touch a dead animal, or if he should receive a cut or a scratch during the examination, the hand should be placed in pure kerosene at once.

The League of Lost Causes

By H. M. EGBERT

Being the Romantic Adventures of Paul Lane, American Millionaire

The Education of Edward

(Copyright, 1912, by W. G. Chapman.)

AND this, I suppose, will be the last meeting of the club," said his majesty, King George of England, rising with a yawn and buttoning up his gloves.

"The last regular meeting sir," answered Lord Claude Tresham, secretary to the organization. "The premises will always be open."

"But for more convivial purposes," put in ex-King Manuel of Portugal, laughing. "I regret to say that an immediate engagement——"

"Manuel," interrupted the English monarch, clapping the young fellow upon the shoulder, "we owe you much gratitude. By detaching yourself from this criminal league you have put an end to its activities in Europe. When the Tsar withdrew his support you were the last prop left. And now——"

"Well, I did think it could get me back my throne," said Manuel, yawning. "And naturally I was not greatly averse to using it as a means toward that end. But now, if you will pardon me, a most important affair of state makes my presence imperative, and so——"

"It's curious," observed King George, lingering at the door, "it's up in a night and lost its influence in a day. When Professor Dvornak propounded his plan for the revival of aristocracy he had an immediate response from half the rulers of Europe. I confess that for a time he influenced me. I believe the league would have effected its purposes, too, had it not been used by base men for their own purposes, and sunk to the level of an anarchistic organization, thus compelling us to form a counter league to thwart it. And that we have succeeded is due entirely to you, Tresham."

"And to Paul Lane," said Tresham.

"The American millionaire?"

"Yes, sir. He, too, was entrapped into joining the league and aiding it with his money, principally through the influence of her highness the Princess Clothilde of Austria. He came over to us when he learned the true nature of the society, and has since done all in his power to aid us. And I have hopes that the princess herself will join in giving the league the coup de grace."

"A very remarkable woman, the Princess Clothilde," said King George thoughtfully. "I know her well and hope to see her often now that she has abandoned Dvornak and his fellow conspirators. As for this Lane—where is he?"

"Not far from here, sir," answered Lord Claude.

"Well, you must bring him to see me next time we are both in Paris. Do you go my way, Manuel?" he continued, turning to the Portuguese sovereign.

"No, cousin. I have a most pressing appointment on weighty matters of state," replied the other, and vanished without further ceremony down the same stairs by which King George soon afterward took his departure.

It was in the private dining room of Monsieur Gabriel, in Paris. Seven kings had attended what was to be the last session of their club. Formed by the steadier heads among the European rulers, to combat the perilous activities of the league, it had accomplished its purpose. The league was on its last legs. And Paul Lane, who had opposed it with all his resources, had been mainly instrumental in securing its overthrow.

Lord Claude Tresham stepped back to the mantel and lit a cigarette.

"I wonder," he mused, as he puffed out a cloud of fragrant smoke, "I wonder just how soon King George will learn that his heir has been kidnapped!"

He strode across the room and pulled back the curtain which separated the dining room from that of the attendants.

"[illegible]!" he called, "come in."

Paul Lane, in waiter's garb, which was converted into conventional evening dress by the removal of the napkin protruding from his waistcoat, entered and took the cigarette which the other handed him.

"I wanted you to hear our conversation tonight, Paul," said Lord Tresham, "because I have good reason to believe that the activities of the league are not wholly ended. In fact, they have succeeded in pulling off a most daring coup. Prince Edward of Wales was kidnapped two hours ago."

"In Paris?"

"Yes, from the town house of the Marquis de Breteuil, whose guest he has been, as you know, for several months, in order that he might become proficient in French. King George and Queen Mary arrived in Paris this afternoon incognito, to see their son. They visited the marquis' house and met the prince, and, being satisfied that all is right with him, will not expect to see him again until tomorrow. Between now and then the prince must be found. I have just learned the news from one of our agents. Nobody knows it yet, not even the Marquis de Breteuil."

"But is there no clue? What was the purpose of the conspirators?"

"The purpose, Paul, is wholly unknown to me. There does exist a clue, however. The Princess Clothilde, who, as you know, has resolved to oppose the league, but fears to do so openly owing to some hold which Von Holzrath, their leader, has over her, wishes to see you at midnight in the Cafe Celestiel, on the Boulevard Richepin—a famous haunt of actors and soubrettes. She sent me this message half an hour before the club convened. It was something of an ordeal to keep all knowledge of this affair from King George, as you may well imagine. Now the best thing you can do will be to follow up this clue. I rely implicitly in you, Paul—only remember, Prince Edward must be found by daybreak and restored to the house of the marquis before his father and mother get wind of the affair."

Paul did not delay a moment, but, clapping on his hat and struggling into his overcoat, he hurried down the stairs of Gabriel's and took a taxicab to the corner of the Boulevard Richepin. Arrived there, he dismissed the vehicle and proceeded afoot toward the cafe, reaching it just as a clock pealed the hour of twelve in announcement to twenty other clocks, which solemnly took up the sound.

The Cafe Celestiel was brilliant with lights and gay with diners. Men in evening dress and women in magnificent gowns, set off with flashing jewels, moved restlessly among those seated, or, seated themselves, sipped their liquors and chattered incessantly, while over the buzz of conversation rang out the lively strains of music. Paul, standing at the entrance, let his eyes wander over the throng. He scanned each face, but he did not detect that of Clothilde.

He noticed, however, that, though apparently engrossed in their own affairs, each couple looked furtively toward one central focus, on which all eyes were more or less directed, while he could hear low exclamations of astonishment among those nearest him. Following these glances, Paul suddenly found himself staring at a lad of about seventeen or eighteen years who, seated beside a loudly dressed woman, evidently an actress, was indulging in hilarious laughter due quite as much to wine as to amusement. Paul looked harder and then gasped in astonishment. This was Prince Edward. There was no mistaking that trim coat, of English cut, those patent leather shoes, topped with the white spats, and the very cane with a dog's head, all of which had been familiarized to the Parisians through newspaper drawings and cartoons. And the woman was—Gabrielle de Soucy, the notorious actress whose indiscretions had formed the staple of Paris gossip ever since she entangled the ex-king of Portugal in her clutches and released him several thousand pounds the poorer.

"But it is indiscreet!" he heard a woman near him murmur to his companion. "To princes much is forgiven—but to parade himself thus, here!"

"Oh!" murmured the man, rolling up his eyebrows in affected horror, "if his royal mother knew—that Puritan lady of England! Mon Dieu! Doubtless she thinks he is asleep in his bed at this hour."

"The marquis, his guardian, must be stark, raving mad to allow this," exclaimed the woman again.

Paul's eye caught that of the prince. He detected a distinct message in it. He moved toward the young fellow, puzzled, wondering; something in that glance made him dimly aware that he had seen him in the flesh, knew him. . . .

It was the Princess Clothilde, masquerading in the prince's clothes!

The shock of the discovery stupefied Paul. Quite quietly he sat down into the chair which the princess indicated to him. He saw the looks of the diners fixed on him; he felt amazed, helpless, out of his depth. But the pseudo-prince was talking more hilariously than ever, and the actress, apparently believing Paul to be one of the prince's friends, had already transfixed him with her languishing glances.

"No, no," hiccoughed the prince, catching the glance. "No, he is not for you, my dear Gabrielle. This is a particular friend of mine, with whom I have an important engagement. You will pardon me if I leave you for one moment?"

"O, certainly," murmured Gabrielle, not in the most friendly tone. Evidently she suspected Paul of being an agent of the marquis, he thought.

Then, slipping out of the chair, Clothilde plucked Paul by the arm and motioned to him to follow into a dimly lighted corner, a little apart from the crowd. She sat down at a small table and Paul took his seat at her side.

"Clothilde, what folly is this?" he began harshly. "To masquerade in public while——"

"Hush, Paul!" she answered, and suddenly he perceived that there was a depth of passionate emotion under the feigned merriment. "Paul, when I told you that I was resolved to leave the league, I told you also that I must first work out my destiny, until I had crushed the league or till it had crushed me. Von Holzrath knows that I am no longer an enthusiast in his cause. He offered me the choice between furthering his schemes and—ruin. I pretended to obey him; secretly I sent a message to Lord Tresham, making an appointment for you to meet me here, for I had heard you were in Paris. Now listen, Paul:

"They mean no harm to the prince. They want to set France and England by the ears—and what easier than to make England think that the young prince, who is a model of decorum, has fallen into evil ways and that the Marquis de Breteuil has been unfaithful to his trust? They know that King George and Queen Mary arrived incognito in Paris this afternoon to see their son. So they have kidnapped him for a few hours, meaning that I shall play his part with Gabrielle de Soucy in public. Tomorrow, when the prince is released, his story of kidnapping will be scouted; the king will take him back to England immediately, and public opinion in England will be aflame against France.

"I dared not refuse Von Holzrath, but I sent a message secretly, as you know."

"But where is the prince?" cried Paul.

"I do not know. I could not learn. Paul, for heaven's sake follow on his track, for I must go back and play my part again. Von Holzrath is ubiquitous, his spies may even now be watching me. It is madness to be seen talking with you."

"One moment. Gabrielle thinks you the prince? It is incredible that a woman should be deceived."

"No, Paul. She is but playing her part. She knows nothing of the plot and thinks the whole thing a wager, wherefrom she is to reap ten thousand francs for aiding in the jest. Now I must go." She rose.

"But the prince," Paul cried again in desperation. "Give me some clue."

"I cannot, Paul. Ask at the house of the marquis. That is all I can suggest. I must go, Paul—forgive me."

For a fraction of a moment he felt her hand in his, and then he knew that, whatever the part which she must play, her love was his. Some day, when all their sufferings were ended, he would take her home with him, to dwell in peace and quiet for all their lives in his own land. Home! The thought, the memory of it burned in his heart and gave him new resolution. He buttoned his coat tightly and hurried away from the restaurant toward the marquis' town house.

But it was five miles from the Cafe Celestiel to that fashionable neighborhood where the Marquis de Breteuil resided, and Paul, when about to hail a taxicab, discovered to his consternation that he had no money in his pocket. He knew no one from whom to borrow in that region. It was almost as far to Lord Claude's abode as to that of the marquis. There was nothing to do but to walk. So he strode through the endless streets, crossed the Seine, and then proceeded through a mean region of little shops, while from time to time the pealing of the city clocks indicated the swift passage of the hours. It was nearly two before he stood at last in front of the old chateau in which the prince was harbored.

He knew his room! It had been indicated in many a diagram and plan in many a newspaper. It overlooked the avenue, and now Paul, standing directly under it, perceived that there was a light in the prince's window. And, as he looked up, straining his eyes to catch a clearer glimpse of the figure behind the curtain, suddenly the window was thrown wide open and the youthful figure of the prince looked out.

It was Prince Edward! There was no mistaking him! None could have mistaken that characteristic figure, that bright, English face, the profile—it was the prince complete, even down to the fashionable coat so often portrayed.

As Paul watched the prince turned round, the curtain fell, and the light went out.

He had come on a wild goose chase, and the true explanation of it suddenly flashed through his mind. Von Holzrath, the soul and cunning inspiration of the league, distrusting Clothilde, had merely pretended that the prince had been kidnapped, in order that she might reveal the story and spread the rumor, they incidentally throwing his enemies off their guard. Paul had not credited the man with so much originality. In the midst of these rumors, which would doubtless be communicated to King George, who would believe the prince's own story that he had spent the night quietly at home, when the newspapers would be full of his night adventure in the Cafe Celestiel? Truly Von Holzrath had hit upon a cunning scheme, and one which far transcended the vulgar vice of kidnapping the heir apparent.

Paul's resolution was made up in an instant. He must hurry back to the Cafe Celestiel, acquaint Clothilde with the truth about the affair, and force her, by any means in his power, to accompany him to Lord Claude's house and there reveal the details of the conspiracy.

The Cafe Celestiel was still brilliant with lights, and the band still played, but the cafe itself was almost empty. A few newcomers lazily sipped their absinthe there—shabby folks, night birds, journalists and writers who kept irregular hours. They were gathered in little groups and all notably discussing some topic of interest. Paul, seating himself close by, made out the tenor of the conversation with no difficulty.

"I wish I had been there!" moaned a shaggy-haired newspaper writer. "Just my luck to miss such an event! Tell me, Alphonse, just what occurred."

"He was here at midnight with her—Mademoiselle de Soucy," he said. "Sapristi! they drank together for two hours, Mademoiselle and the prince, till both were tipsy. And he flaunted himself so daringly, Messieurs, in his English coat and his patent leathers, yes, even to the dog's-head cane that all Paris has learned to know. He won all hearts, this English prince. And then, just as we were wondering whether or not he would roll under the table, up steps—who do you think? Manuel of Portugal!"

"Ciel! What a meeting! And hten?"

"When Mademoiselle perceived him she grew pale as death and rose from the table with a little cry of fear, and stood facing the ex-king with arms stretched out as though to shield the boy prince from his wrath. And the prince rose, too, and looked upon Manuel with calm dignity—the dignity of a prince, an English prince, Messieurs. And then Manuel walked up to the prince and, taking off his gloves in a leisurely way, folded them together and struck Prince Edward across the face. And then men sprang between them and—and——"

"A duel!" exclaimed the shaggy-haired journalist. "Mon Dieu! Where will it be?"

"None knows. They went off with their seconds in two taxicabs, leaving poor Mademoiselle de Soucy alone and half hysterical. But it is certain that they will fight before morning."

Paul sprang to his feet in horror. A duel! Clothilde, in a boy's garb, engaged in a fencing bout with the infuriated young man who had been ruler of Portugal!

He made his way drunkenly toward the corner in which he and Clothilde had sat. A scrap of paper was lying upon one of the chairs. Paul opened it mechanically and saw a scrap of writing upon it. He read:

"The little park in the Bois at five."

The blood tingled in his veins. Clothilde, in the supreme moment of the challenge, had, then, found time somehow to indite that note to him, knowing that he would come back, and trusting that he would discover it. Paul knew the little park—an unfrequented glade, one of the score and more in which duelists met to settle their differences.

It was a quarter before four. He had no time to go to Lord Tresham's house. He must decide immediately. If he set out at once he could reach the dueling ground some fifteen minutes before the appointed time.

The pale light of the summer morning had already begun to make the trees and paths distinguishable when Paul arrived at the gate of the Bois nearest to the dueling ground. It was twenty minutes to five. He quickened his steps, directing them toward the little glade. At last he reached it—thank God, it was empty—and, flinging himself down upon the dewy grass, he rested. His limbs ached and his head was swimming; his eyes were heavy from want of sleep. He needed all his strength to control himself. He must act wisely, swiftly and say not one rash word.

Presently a fiacre rattled up and halted in the middle of the near-by carriage drive, and two men stepped out of it. Almost immediately it was followed by another, which, halting in the identical spot, disgorged three others. Through the bushes behind which he lay concealed Paul could see, in the rapidly increasing light, that the first two men were Manuel and his second; the other three were the supposed prince, his second, and a man who carried a little black case and was evidently a doctor.

The parties saluted formally, and the man with the case stepped forward and communed for a while with Manuel's second. Then, being joined by their parties, they stationed them in chosen places, some fifteen paces apart. And, as the man with the case opened it, Paul perceived to his horror that the case did not contain surgical supplies.

It contained two pistols. This was evidently to be a duel a l'outrance. And one of the combatants would fall, killed, or perhaps mortally wounded.

That the duel was to be a serious one was evinced from the fact that the combatants were set facing each other, and not back to back, as is commonly done in encounters when only honor is sought. The principals raised their pistols; the seconds took their stations. The man with the case, half between the two, raised a white handkerchief.

"One!" he counted.

Suddenly Paul saw a third carriage, driven at a furious pace, dash down the drive and come to a halt fifty yards away. A middle-aged gentleman and a lady, primly dressed, descended, and, perceiving what was taking place, began running wildly toward the combatants.

"Two!" shouted the man in the middle.

Paul bounded from the underbrush. "Put up your weapons!" he yelled in French. And the five, startled by this sudden appearance and still more unceremonious command, obeyed.

"Monsieur!" exclaimed the man with the handkerchief, as Paul stumbled toward him, "this is most unseemly. If you——"

"Well done! Well done!" shouted the middle-aged man, finding his voice as he staggered into the middle of the group, leaving the lady toiling in the rear. 'Just in the nick of time. Edward!"

But if the others were disconcerted the middle-aged man was more discomfited than they. He seemed to totter backward; his eyes stared through their heavy fringes, and his mouth opened and remained open. The lady, who joined the group at that moment, seemed paralyzed with fear. She sank to the ground, sobbing. The gentleman raised her in his arms and, turning upon the group with an expression of sternness, said:

"That man is not my son."

Round the bend of the drive came a fourth carriage, and before it stopped a young man leaped from it and came bounding, lithe as a deer, across the grass, shouting as he advanced. He burst into the midst of the assembled company and clasped his mother in his arms. And the rest, entirely overcome by the crescendo of these unparalleled circumstances, only looked wildly at one another. They could not find their tongues.

It was really astonishing how little they resembled each other—the true prince and the false. If clothes make the man, they had certainly made the prince in the minds of the Parisians. For, save that each wore a trim English coat and patent leather boots and spats, and carried a cane with a dog's head, there was astonishingly little resemblance between the true Prince Edward, with his arms round his sobbing mother, and the false Prince Edward, still holding the dueling pistol.

"I heard that you had come here to look for me, father," exclaimed the prince. "What does it mean? They sent a telephone message to the marquis' house——"

"Who sent it?"

"The 'Daily Star.' They told the marquis that I had been out all night in a cafe, that I was to fight a duel, that you had come to Paris and had been warned to be in the Bois, and so I—what does it mean?"

Queen Mary picked herself up and came forward, her eyes boring like steel augers into Clothilde's face.

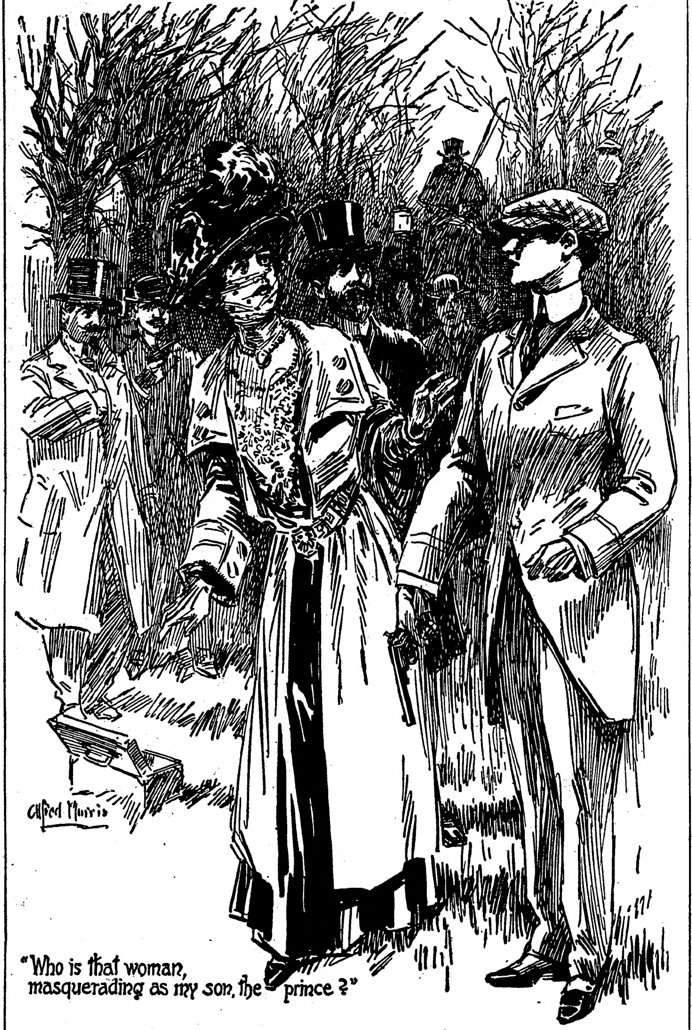
"Who is that woman, masquerading as my son, the prince?" she asked.

Then, rising to the occasion, Paul stepped forward, doffing his hat with his politest smile.

"It means, Madam," he said, "that a cinematograph picture was to be taken in the Bois, and that one of the chief actors unfortunately adopted a dress too similar to your son's."

"Ha!" snorted King George incredulously. "Where is your camera, sir?"

"I left it in the cab," replied Paul deferentially. "The cabman took it in charge because I had forgotten my money."



"Who is that woman, masquerading as my son, the prince?"

FAMOUS PAINTER AND FENCER HERE

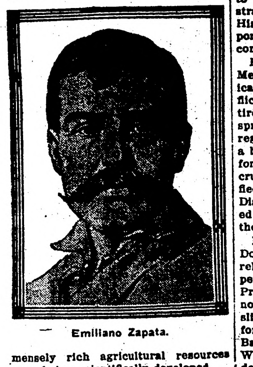
The Baron and Baroness de Meyer have arrived in America from England and the baron is giving in Chicago an exhibition of portraits of American women. He also has done much to stimulate the interest in gardens in this country by showing a collection of autochrome slides which he displays on the screen. The Baroness de Meyer is a god-child of the late King Edward of England, is one of the best-known women fencers of Great Britain, has fenced here with many women prominent in society and posed for one of the most successful paintings of Sargent.

MEXICO'S FALL FROM AFFLUENCE TO POVERTY; FROM ORDER TO ANARCHY

Some of Those Who Have Figured in the Startling History Made by the Southern Republic During the Past Three Years—Land of the Montezumas Stood at Apex of Its Glory on September 16, 1910.

New York.—From affluence to poverty, from peace and order to anarchy and massacre. From one of the great nations of the world to one of the semi-barbarous countries—that has been the history of Mexico in the last three years.

Mexico stood at the apex of her glory on September 16, 1910, the centenary of her independence from Spain. Porfirio Diaz' government was the only Latin-American power, save Brazil, to maintain an embassy as distinguished from a legation at Washington. With a population of 13,000,000 and an area equal to the United States east of the Mississippi (leaving out the New England states and New York), she stood fifth among the gold and first among the silver-producing nations of the world: and her immensely rich agricultural resources were being scientifically developed.



Emiliano Zapata.

But Mexico's peace and prosperity had fundamental weaknesses. It was dependent on the hand of a monarch, and its funds for development had come from other nations. The United States had invested nearly $1,000,000,000 in Mexico; England, $320,000,000; France, $143,000,000, and other foreign countries $118,000,000. Her own citizens had invested only $800,000,000.

Furthermore, a group of self-seekers had gathered about Porfirio Diaz, the Iron Man, in his old age. They belonged to the "cientificos," and scientifically they extracted their percentages from every project set on foot. The foreign capitalists, naturally, had to transfer this burden of graft to the returns they extracted from their businesses in Mexico, and the money finally came out of the pockets of the common people.

Then there was the land situation. A few hundred proprietors owned practically every acre of the country. While the cost of living increased, as it has in every country of the civilized world, the great land barons evaded their share of the taxes altogether.

This last oppression was especially felt in the northern tier of states, where Americans and other foreigners were particularly numerous, and where the Mexicans could look across the border to the north and see a happier land. There developed a yearning for democratic government in the far north of Mexico, which resulted in the candidacy of Francisco I. Madero, son of an immensely wealthy and influential family, for the presidency in 1910. He drew up a scheme of reform, known as the "Plan of San Luis Potosi." He was beaten in the election—was thrown into jail and probably would have been "shot escaping," according to the pleasant little Mexican custom, had not his family been so influential. As it was, he was allowed to go to the United States, and there straightway organized a revolution. His father and his many brothers supported him. The Waters-Pierce Oil company supplied the sinews of war.

Fearing that American residents in Mexico might be murdered and American investments destroyed in the conflict, President Taft mobilized an entire division at San Antonio in the spring of 1911. A brigade of three regiments was stationed at Galveston, a brigade of infantry in southern California, a squadron of battleships and cruisers at Galveston, and a smaller fleet at San Diego. Mr. Taft notified Diaz that no hostile move was intended; that the soldiers were simply on the spot to maintain order.

In April there was a fight opposite Douglas, Ariz., between federals and rebels, and stray bullets wounded five persons in the American border town. President Taft dispatched a sharp note to Diaz. Partly due to this, Diaz slipped to Vera Cruz and embarked for Europe. Senor Francisco de la Barra, who had been ambassador at Washington, became provisional president until Senor Madero was elected, on October 15, and took office. The kind of suffrage possible in Mexico under the best conditions was shown in the fact that the successful candidate received only 23,000 votes. The defeated candidate, Bernardo Reyes immediately started a revolt, but was shortly put down.

Then Madero made what many consider his fatal mistake. He refused to follow the cruel methods traditional in Mexico when rebels are caught. He sent Reyes to prison for 16 years instead of following the "law of flight," which would have resulted in a shooting under pretence of justification. He caused no political executions. As a result, disorders were continuous throughout his administration. Everywhere bands of robbers, masquerading as "patriots," looted, burned, blew up trains, massacred and carried off women captives. The barbarous Emiliano Zapata continued to fight in the south under some theory or other. In the north Pascual Orozco, Madero's ally, headed an insurrection and even took Juarez.

Moreover, Madero, the philosopher, the dreamer, the poet, had not been able to create an organization of upright men around him. His relatives led in the plunder of the state and the "holding up" of foreign investors. There was great pressure for intervention by the United States, but president Taft was adamant. The northern revolutionists made little progress after the United States had placed an embargo on arms and ammunition; but the old "cientificos" raised a new standard of revolt under the leader of Felix Diaz, a colonel of the army and nephew of Porfirio Diaz.

Madero imprisoned Diaz. But he refused to follow the adage, "When in Rome do as the Romans do." He let Diaz live. He sent him to Vera Cruz a prisoner. Consequently Diaz was soon freed in a farcical raid, his guards firing a single volley into the air. The garrison declared for him. But Madero sent General Blanquet against him, and Diaz was soon a prisoner again. Again he was allowed to live, although the laws of Mexico allow a "traitor" to be put to death.

Madero had put down two revolts of the cientificos. Now came the third and final one. On February 9, 1913, about half the army mutinied, and both Reyes and Diaz were liberated.

Reyes was killed in an attack upon the national palace. Then came the battle in the streets of Mexico. There was an artillery fight between the arsenal and the national palace, in which thousands of civilians, including many women and children, fell.

Madero's principal reliance was a hard-bitten old soldier, Gen. Victoriano Huerta. This man had earned a reputation as a fighter and little else. Suddenly he turned traitor to Madero. The political bee had got into his bonnet. Diaz thought he had gone over to the cientifico leader, and so it seemed for a time. Diaz and Huerta imprisoned Madero, his relatives and members of the administration. Then Diaz suddenly—everything happens suddenly in Mexico—discovered the leader was not himself, but Huerta! He acquiesced with some grace. Huerta was proclaimed provisional president under an agreement that Colonel Diaz would run for president in the coming elections. This was on February 18.

Gen. Venustiano Carranza.

Five days later came the disgraceful episode in modern history—the murder of Francisco Madero. With Senora Madero imploring in tears for his life, the kindly-disposed president and his vice-president, Suarez, were shot "trying to escape" as they were being transported across Mexico City in the early morning from the palace to the penitentiary. Huerta was accused of murder in many quarters. Several months later, to anticipate a bit, Dominquez, the lieutenant who had charge of the squad which had killed Madero and Suarez, was himself slain. "Dead men tell no tales."

More crude methods were taken to get rid of some Maderistas. The president's brother, who had been minister of finance, was slain in cold blood in his cell, his nose and ears were cut off, and his body was subjected to other indignities.

This was what led President Wilson to say in his speech at Swathmore, Pa., "Government stained by blood cannot endure."

The question of recognition of Huerta, now undoubtedly in control of the most important port of Mexico, as the de facto ruler, came up. President Taft, who was about to end his administration, naturally did not seek to establish a policy for Mr. Wilson, having no desire to embarrass him. Just one week after his inauguration, President Wilson issued a statement which made it clear the United States would not recognize government by assassination. On this he has stood ever since.

Huerta had scarcely seated himself on the throne than rebellion broke out again, with Gen. Venustiano Carranza, who had been a close friend of Madero, in the lead. Carranza has made great progress, and in fact now controls more of Mexico than did Madero when Porfirio Diaz abdicated.

The situation since has been growing more and more serious, until many now believe that intervention by the United States is the only means of restoring order in Mexico.

Nelson O'Shaughnessy, charge d'affaires of the American embassy at Mexico City, has been the diplomatic representative of the Wilson administration, following the retirement of Ambassador Wilson, whose actions in Mexico did not please the president.

E. BROWN ON CHAMPIONSHIP COMMITTEE

Everett C. Brown, Member of Championship Committee of A. A. U.

President A. J. Lill of the National A. A. U. has recognized the work of Everett C. Brown, who was director-general of the international athletic championships in Chicago last summer, by appointing Mr. Brown on the championship committee of the A. A. U. This committee is considered the most important in the A. A. U.

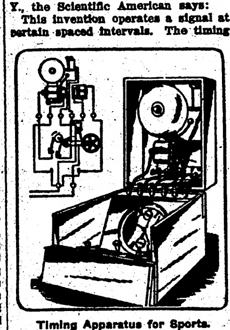
The other members are: James E. Sullivan, Bartow S. Weeks, New York; E. E. Babb, Boston; C. P. Curran, St. Louis; George F. Pawling, Philadelphia; George T. Turner, Baltimore; T. Morris Dunne, Portland, Oregon.

TIMING DEVICE FOR SPORTS

Apparatus Is Especially Adapted for Contests Where Limited Time Is Allowed for Preparation.

In describing a timing apparatus for sports, invented by W. F. Minor of 480 Ninth avenue, Manhattan, N. Y., the Scientific American says:

This invention operates a signal at certain spaced intervals. The timing device is adapted to be used in sports and contests where a limited time is allowed for the preparation, and also for the execution or for the contest, the device automatically measuring off these respective times in succession, and thereby obviating any charge that the official of the events may not be fair or correct in his timing.



Timing Apparatus for Sports.

DEATH LIST FOR 1913 IS 14

One Hundred and Seventy-five Other Players Were Injured in Football Season Just Closed.

Fourteen players were killed and 175 were injured in football games in the season which virtually closed Saturday. This record of casualties is only slightly below that of 1912, when 13 players met death and 183 were injured.

Of the 14 deaths, 13 succumbed to injuries occurring this year. The fatalities resulted, with few exceptions, from fractured skulls, broken necks or spinal injuries.

Only two university players were killed. Vernon Belyea of the Norwich (Conn.) varsity was thrown heavily in a game with Holy Cross and died three days later. Edward Morrissey, captain of St. Ambrose varsity, suffered a broken leg September 25 and died of blood poison.

Training Quarters.

Here are the cities where the American league teams will train next spring: Sox, at Paso Robles, Cal.; Yankees, at Houston, Texas; Tigers, at Gulfport, Miss.; Red Sox, at Hot Springs, Ark.; Naps, at Macon, Ga.; Browns, at St. Petersburg, Fla.; Athletics, at Jacksonville, Fla., and Senators, at Charlottesville, Va.

Record for Consecutive Run Made in Pool Match

Edward Ralph, in a pocket billiard match with Morris Fink at Philadelphia the other night, made what is claimed to be a new record for a consecutive run, when he pocketed 73 balls straight. The best run at pool on record is 85, made by B. Allen in Boston in 1909, while the highest previous run under the new rules is said to have been 59, made by De Oro. Ralph won the game by the score of 150 to 31.

MIXING PROS AND AMATEURS

Former President of Amateur Athletic Union of United States Is Very Much Opposed to Plan.

Walter L. Liginger, former president of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, in an interview today voiced his protest against a suggestion of President G. T. Kirby of the A. A. U. that amateurs and professionals be allowed to compete against each other in certain athletic events.

"Year after year," said Mr. Liginger, athletic organizatons of the United States have met at the annual meeting of the A. A. U., held at New York city, to discuss and amend the rules in such a way as to strengthen and safeguard the definition of an amateur, and place amateur sports on a sound basis."

Mr. Liginger offered as a suggestion that action to be taken by the A. A. U., making the line separating the amateur and professional in competition a shade deeper, so that "no masquerader, be he ever so good, will ever be successful in beating his way across."

Status of Rhodes Scholars.

A meeting of the Oxford (England) athletic committee was held to consider the question of Rhodes scholars competing in the freshmen's sports. Two resolutions were adopted. First, that residence at any other time in any other university or similar institution shall disqualify a student from competing in the freshmen sports, and, second, that in the Oxford university athletic club's sports, as distinct from the college sports, no competitor shall be allowed who is over twenty-four years of age. The resolutions will go into effect next October.

Carroll an Old-Timer.

Dick Carroll, who has been awarded the Buffalo franchise in the Federal league, is an old-time pitcher, formerly with Montreal and Toronto, and he hopes he can interest Montreal people in backing his venture.

Syfert's Job Safe.

Bloomington club of the Three-I league has re-elected Harry Syfert as manager for next year, which was a foregone conclusion, as Syfert is a stockholder in the club.

Notes of Sportdom

Orvie Overall has retired from baseball.

* * *

Artie Hofman may be with the New York Highlanders next season.

* * *

Lee Barrett and "Spike" Kelly fought ten rounds to a draw at Milwaukee.

* * *

Announcement that there will be a new ball park built in Boston for the Braves has gladdened the Boston fans.

* * *

Harry Donohue of Pekin, Ill., decisively defeated Freddie Daniels of St. Joseph in 15 rounds at St. Joseph, Mo.

* * *

Freddie Welch, lightweight champion of England, outfought and outboxed Phil Bloom of Brooklyn in a ten-round bout at New York.

* * *

Whatever else they may have done, Ping Bodie and Fred Merkle can boast of the fact that they did not make up Dartmouth's schedule this year.

* * *

The Willard-Reed fight at Fort Wayne, scheduled for ten rounds, ended in the second when Willard knocked out his opponent.

FREAK SCORES IN THE EAST

Harvard, Winner of First Place in Rating of Eastern Teams, Wins Honor Without Touchdown.

It is regarded as an index to the new order of things in football that Harvard, winner of the first place in the rating of eastern teams this fall, has won this honor without a single touchdown in either of its two most important games. Harvard defeated Yale and Princeton by field goals entirely, notwithstanding that Harvard was a better team than either, according to many observers, in all around football.

PHOTO. BY PAUL THOMPSON

Charles E. Brickley of Harvard.

The absence of the touchdown play is made still more remarkable by noting that Yale also made no touchdown against Harvard or Princeton and Princeton made none against Yale or Harvard. In this triangle of major teams twenty-seven of the twenty-nine points scored were by goals from the field, the remaining two being due to a freak safety, which is a unique record in the annals of Harvard-Yale-Princeton football.

Charles Edwards Brickley, whose wonderful drop-kicking scored a Harvard victory over Yale, has scored 248 points on the gridiron during three years at Harvard. The period covers one year on the freshmen eleven and two on the varsity, and the total points are divided as follows: Twenty-four touchdowns for 138 points, 5 goals from touchdowns for 5 points and 34 goals from field for 102 points.

In two years as a varsity player he has kicked 24 goals from the field in 73 out of 18 games, and wound up with his high-water mark of 5 against Yale.

Newark Club in Air.

It appears there is a difference of opinion among Newark people as to the value of the International league franchise, and while those who took up the proposition with the Brooklyn owners dropped it because they thought too much money was asked, others have interested themselves and a deal may yet be made that will land the club in the hands of home owners.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse. Their married life starts out happily. Kate succumbs to the pleadings of a composer to return to the stage and runs away with him. She rescues Widow O'Flynn from her burning house, is badly burned herself and returns home, where Jesse receives her with open arms. Cattle thieves appear in the neighborhood. Jesse asks Kate to go to a place of safety. To his joy she refuses. Jesse resumes the narrative. He calls on neighbors and plans to capture the robbers. Kate is rescued from the hands of the bandits.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued.

Seems to be scratches on the smooth side of this paper, sort of reminding me that Bull has a fountain-pen sticking out of his vest pocket. If he's been writing with milk, I'd warm the paper—but no, we use canned milk, and haven't got any either. I've heard faintly somewheres of things wrote in spittle, so I pours on a bottle of ink, and rinses the paper in the water-butt. Yes, there's the message plain as print.

"Gun to hand, but cartridges wrong size, no good. Get 45. Billy to wait with ponies under nearest pine N. of cave, when plough above N. Star. Send more gum for chief's wound.—Bull."

Billy was mounting at the door to put out for solitude, but since he knows I can't miss under two hundred yards, he was persuaded to come into the cabin. There I read him some of the etiquette about keeping his temper and not using coarse language. Also I told him politely what I thought of him, and where he'll go when he dies. He waited, stroking the little fur on his muzzle, till I got through, looking so damned patient with me that I came near handing him one in the eye.

"You invited these robbers to my grass?"

He nodded.

"Thanks to you, my wife had a gun muzzle screwed around in her ear."

"Bet she squinted!" said Billy.

If I lose my temper, I can't shoot, and Billy knew that well. "She's up agin it good and hard," said he.

"Agin what?"

"Making a silk purse out of a sow's ear."

"You lop-eared, mangy, pig-faced, herring-gutted son of a—"

"From the 'Etiquette?'" asked Billy. "I don' think much of you, anyway. Mother ain't got no use for you either, or any of the neighbors, you old cow thief!"

Now if Billy talked so big as all that, it must be to astonish his mother. So she must be at the keyhole, and sure enough I heard her grind her stump with the backache from stooping down. Happens Mrs. Smith has a garden squirt which it holds a gallon, so while I kep' young Billy interested with patches of etiquette, I took off the hose, filled the squirt, and let drive through the key-hole into the widow's ear. At that she lifted up her voice and wept.

Feeling better, I resumed the conversation. "Billy," sez I, smooth as cream, while I filled the squirt, "on the shelf there you'll find a little small bottle." In my dim way I aimed to get him excited, and talkative, divulging secrets with all his heart. Then afterward I'd like him asleep, out of mischief.

"Drink, or I'll Splash Your Brains on the Floor."

"Get your bottle yourself," says he, sort of defiant, so I let drive at him with the squirt.

"If you please," said I, and he got the bottle all right.

"If you don't mind," said I, "will you just draw the cork?"

"And if I won't?"

I took my squirt and watched him pull the cork.

"Thank you," sez I, seeing how beautiful is the use of true politeness. "Now may I trouble you to spill what's left in the bottle into that there goblet? Now be so kind."

"I refuse!"

The squirt won't scare any more Billy, so I exhibits my gun.

"I regrets to remark, Mr. O'Flynn, that this gun acts sort of sudden."

"Shoot, and you go to jail!"

"But first, my dear young friend, I've time to lop off a few fingers, one at a time—won't miss them all at once. May I request you to pour out the medicine? No—not on the floor, please, but into the goblet, while I observe that your right thumb seems tender after that cut, and ought to be treated. So, a little more. That's right. Now honor me by adding a little water from the pitcher. Thank you. Thumb feeling easier? Well, that there laudanum soothes the fractious infant, and causes a whole lot of repose. Quite sweet without sugar. Yes, please, you'll lift the goblet to your mouth while I watch that nothing goes wrong with your pug nose. You want to throw back your head, you treacherous swine. Drink, or I'll splash your brains on the floor!"

"I daren't! It's poison!"

"It's bullets—you'd better! Drink, or I'll kill you! Drink! One—two—much obliged, I'm sure. Hope you'll sleep well."

"Curse you!" he shrieked, and flung the glass at my head.

Then down came the widow like a landslide. She scratched my face, confessed my sins, sobbed over her darling Billy avick, prescribed for my future, wrung her wet frock, and made a soap emetic for her offspring all at once. It's a sure fact that widow was plenty busy, and what with slinging that emetic at the patient, and gently introducing the lady to the kitchen cupboard, wall, I declare I didn't have a dull moment. Then distant shots brought us all up standing.

"At last!" Billy shouted, "they're off!"

"Who's off?"

"Father and his men—escaped while I kep' you in talk. Fooled, Jesse! Fooled! I fooled you to the eyes! My father's Larry O'Flynn, Captain Larry O'Flynn, captain of the outlaws!" My, there was pride in that lad! He sat on the table in the dusk, fighting to keep awake, rubbing his eyes with his sleeve. "He's give me leave to join, and I'm hitting the trail tonight—hitting the trail, d'ye hear?" His eyes closed, his voice trailed off to a whisper.

Outside I could hear a rider coming swift, and Dale's voice hailing, "Jesse! Jesse!"

"Jesse," the lad was muttering, "lift his stock, and his woman, burn his ranch, and put his fires out—thatsh the way to—"

Dale had stepped from his horse, and stood in the doorway, making it dark inside. "Where in blazes are you?"

"Look," said I, and Dale watched, for the boy, dead pale, was lurching from side to side, his eyes closed, his lips still moving.

"Only drugged," said I. "Who let them robbers escape?"

"Ransome Pollock," said Dale.

"Who else?"

"Dave."

"How's his poor tooth?" says I, and Dale explained he'd been clubbed.

Young O'Flynn rolled over, and went down smash, so that I had to kneel, and try if his heart was all right. It thumped along steady and give no sign of quitting.

"I had to," said I, "old Whiskers yonder is the widow's husband, and father to this boy. He's clear grit, Iron."

"Where's the widow?"

"Resting." I heard horses come thundering out of the dusk. "Robbers broke south?"

"Yep."

"Hev they grow'd wings?"

"Nope."

"Can't swim the Fraser?"

"Bottled?" said he, cheering up.

"Some," says I. "Not corked yet. You want to make a line here quick, from the foot of the upper cliff to the edge of the river, and each man make three big fires. Then post half your men to tend fires, and the best shots to hold that line with rifles. Them robbers has got to break through when they knows they're cornered. Here's your boys, Iron. Git a move on!"

"That's so," says Dale, and in two shakes of a duck's tail he was throwing his men into line. Meanwhile the widow, wild and lone, had flew; so that left Kate without help, her job being coffee to keep the boys awake till we'd daylight to corner the robbers.

Men watching on a strain like that get scary as cats, so by moonset some of our warriors would loose off guns at stumps, trees, rocks, or just because they felt lonesome. After the moon went down, dry fuel got scant, so that the fires waned, and some of our young men must have seen millions of outlaws. When at last something actually happened, it was natural that Ransome should have adventures. He wasn't built for solitude, and when he seen a flag wave from behind a bush he called the boys from left and right to bunch in and corroborate. The flag kep' waving, and presently two more of our men had to join the bunch because they couldn't shout their good advice, lest the robbers hear every word. I was away to Apex Rock, Iron down in the canyon, and these blasted idiots talked.

Of course old Whiskers knew that antelope will always creep up to inspect any waving rag. Before the excitement was properly begun he and his robbers slipped through our broken line.

If Ransome has time to aim he's dangerous to the neighbors, but since the odds were a thousand to one the gun would kick him as far as next Thursday, I'd have bet my debts he wouldn't hit the party with that flag. Yet that's what happened. He got the widow O'Flynn.

With one heart-rending, devastating howl she went to grass, and she did surely shriek as if there was no hereafter. Murthered in the limb she was, and as I left to follow the sounds of them escaping robbers, I didn't have time to send a carpenter.

CHAPTER IX.

The Untruthful Prisoner.

Jesse's Narrative.

With creditors, women, robbers, and everything dangerous, you want to be chuck full of deportment and a whole lot tactful. Anything distractful or screeching disturbs one's peace of mind, and sends one's aplomb to blazes, just when a bear trap may happen at any moment. I traveled for all I was worth to put that widow behind me, and compose my mind.

Mr. Bull Brooke Got Hurt on the Nose.

Maybe I'd gone a mile before remorse gnawed Whiskers because he'd abandoned the widow. He paused, and as I come surging along, he lammed me over the head with a gun.

Yes, I was captured. They got my gun, too, and marched me along between them. Old man Brown was away, but as I'd left the scow on the near bank, the robbers were able to cross, and put the Fraser between me and rescue. That ought to have cheered him up, since it gave them a start of several hours toward safety, but instead of skinning out of British Columbia, as I advised them with powerful strong talk, they'd got to stop for breakfast on old Brown's beans and sow-belly, cussing most plenteous because he wasn't there to cook hot biscuits.

After breakfast they wasted an hour dressing his paw for old Whiskers, and wondering whether they'd waste one of my cartridges on me, or keep them all for my friends. On that I divulged a lot of etiquette out of my book. I told these misbegotten offspring they'd been brung up all wrong, or they'd have enough deportment to make tracks. "Now," says I, "in the land of the free and the home of the brave you been appreciated, whereas if you linger here till sunup you'll be shot."

That made poor Whiskers still more suspicious, wondering what sort of beartraps guileful Smith was projecting. "Wants to get us up on the bench," says he, "that means ware traps. We'll stay right here, boys, for daylight, when we'll be able to see ourselves, how to save them cattle."

"You're dead right, Whiskers!" says I. "Hair on you!"

But he being fretful with his wound, orders his men to disable Brown's fiddle, and lash me up with catgut. Moreover, when I was trussed, this Bull seen fit to kick me on the off chance, a part which ain't referred to in polite society, especially with a boot.

"Brave man!" says I, and the rest of them robbers was so ashamed they got me a gag.

"Sorry," say I, "pity I won't be able to guide you to Brown's cigars. He keeps a bottle, too."

"Where are they?" says Bull.

"Gag Brooke," said I, for Bull went by that name, "and I'll divulge the drinks."

"Gag Brooke," says Whiskers, cheering up a little, "pity he weren't born gagged."

So they gagged Mr. Brooke, and mounted him on sentry while they had Brown's bottle of whisky and cigars. I got some, too.

Of course there or'nary, no-account, range wolves reckoned my friends would wait for day before they attempted tracking. Whereas Dale got the lantern, found my paper trail, and guessed at the ferry. Before we entered the cabin, I'd seen the glint of that lantern behind the rim of the bench, and I knew our boys trusted me to keep the robbers somehow down at the ferry-house. Whiskers, since the liquor made his wound worse, lurched groaning around the shack. At the first glint of dawn, he ordered Bull to take out the gag and lie down, then went to the door himself.

It's a pity that Dale, our leader, a sure fine shot, has a slight cast in his near eye, which throws his lead a little to the right. That's why, when Whiskers went to the door, Dale's bullet only whipped off his left ear. Instead of being grateful, Whiskers skipped around holding the side of his face, with remarks which for a poor man was extravagant. The shot made Bull bolt courageous behind the stove, to look for a bandage, he said, while Ginger and the greaser sat up on their tails looking sort of depressed. Not one of the four was happy on finding that they'd bottled themselves in the cabin instead of taking my advice and clearing for the States.

"Prisoner," said Whiskers, dolesome, holding his poor ear, "you can talk to your friends acrost the river?"

"Why, certainly, Captain."

"What way?"

"Signaling."

"Cut the catgut, Colonel."

So Ginger cut me free.

"Show a white flag, General," said I.

So Ginger waved a paper on a stick, and Dale replied with a white scarf from his neck.

When I walked out, the boys acrost the river gave three cheers, but I was halted from behind before I'd got far sideways. "Now," says Whiskers, "signal, and pray that you won't be tempted to send erroneous messages."

"Remember," Bull shouts, "I can read Morse. No fooling."

"All right, Mr. Brooke," I called back, "then I'll use semaphore."

I heard Whiskers in tears directing his two youngsters to put Mr. Brooke's head in the meal sack, and sit hard on top. So I began to signal, explaining each word to Whiskers.

Swim. "That," says I, "means 'Dale.'"

Pool. "That's 'fool,'" says I, "because he don't give the answer."

Below. "That's 'Hello.'"

Rapids. "That's 'Hello' again."

"You lie," says whiskers, miserable, through his teeth. "You made six letters."

"Sorry," says I, "it got spelt wrong first time."

Float. "That's 'skunk,' says I, "because he's a polecat not to answer me."

Guns.

"What's that?" asked Whiskers, heaps suspicious because I couldn't think of another word of four letters.

"Hell!" says I.

"Quite right," sighed Whiskers, "to think of your future home."

Dale signaled, Coming.

"Tell Dale," says Whiskers, and his bereaved voice kind of jarred me now, "we're just goin' to keep a gun at your ear-hole while we march up the trail. If Dale's men fire, your wife will be a widow, Mr. Smith."

At that I wagged my arms and signaled. "No call to get wet. Hold-ups marching to Georgia. Kill man with gun. If you miss, ware Widow Smith." You see if Dale squinted and missed, my widow was apt to reproach. So I added, "Allow windage for squint."

Dale answered, "You set your life will."

Then I swung round facing the cabin, and saw the barrel of my own revolver just peering round the door. By its height from the ground I judged that poor young Ginger was the artist. I wished it had been Bull, for I'd taken a fancy to Ginger.

"Well, gents," says I, "your umbrellas is in the hat rack. All aboard for Robbers' Roost, and don't forget the lunch."

Whiskers wanted me into the cabin, but I'd taken a dislike to catgut, so Ginger got orders to shoot me. At that I flared up. "Shoot," says I, "you skulking cowards, scared to show your noses at the door. Hold your off ear, Whiskers. Charge, you curs!"

The chief came first, straight at me, and seemed to climb over my foot on to his nose. Mr. Bull Brooke got hurt on the nose too, and I'd just time to hand the greaser a left hander behind the ear, before I went down on top of Whiskers, and the four of us rolled in a heap. I learned when I was a sailor how to argue.

Then I struggled, dragging my pile of robbers off sideways, so that to keep us covered with the gun, poor Ginger showed his red head in the doorway. It was his life or mine, yet when the shot rang out from across the river, and I saw the lad come crashing to the ground, I felt sort of sick. Of course that shot slackened the grip of the three robbers, so I wrenced loose, struck hard, and jumped high, gaining the north wall of the cabin. When I turned round, our boys across the river were pouring hot lead after the robbers as they dived through the door of the shack. Ginger sprawled dead on the doorstep, and my gun, six paces off, lay in the dust. The robbers were disarmed, and I was free.

"Say, Whiskers," I called, "I want to save your lives, you and the greaser. Come and throw up your hands before you're hurt."

There was no answer. Rocky Mountain outlaws may be mean and bad but they fight like Americans, and they know how to die. I'd only one way left to force their surrender, and save their lives, so I hustled brushwood, cordwood, coal oil from the shed, piled up the fuel, and got a sulphur match from the bunch in my hind pocket.

"Boys," I called, "Old Brown sort of values this place. It's all the home he's got, and it ain't insured."

No answer.

The little flame lep' up and caught the brushwood, the crackling lifted to a roar, and the robbers must surely know that their time was come, for if they showed at the door they would be shot. I grabbed my gun from the ground to stop our boys from firing. Then I shouted above the noise of the flames, "Come out and throw up your hands!"

They came, poor fellows, and I made them prisoners, marching them down to the ferry.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Troublesome Tower.

She was a good servant, was Jennie, and Mrs. Wanderfarr never wished for better. But in the matter of pictures Jennie was weak. There was one in particular, which showed the leaning tower of Pisa. Every day Mrs. W. hung it straight, and every morning Jennie put it crooked.

So Mrs. W. watched.

"Now, look here, Jennie," she said, "you've hung that picture of the tower crooked again! Just look at it!"

"That's just what I say, mum," returned the domestic dolefully. "Look at it! The only way you can get that silly tower to hang straight is to hang the picture crooked."

Crops on Same Land Far Between.

Though tobacco is the chief product of North Borneo, the land produces but one crop of the product in seven or nine years, with the result that new fields must be cleared every year. After the jungle is cut and burned an army of Chinese coolies is turned on the land with hoes to dig it and prepare it for planting. No plows are used. The young tobacco plants are set out by hand and kept clean with hoes. It is necessary for a tobacco planter to possess thousands of acres of uncultivated land in reserve, and to employ 500 to 1,000 coolies.

TOOK GHOST'S WORD FOR IT

New York Woman Declares Father's Spirit Told Her That Friend Had Purloined Ring.

Through the proxy of Mrs. Ida Shapiero of Brooklyn, the ghost of her father appeared as a witness before Magistrate Miller in the New Jersey Avenue police court of that borough, aleging that Mrs. Clara Steiner, who occupies an apartment on the same floor with Mrs. Shapiero, had stolen a $150 ring belonging to her.

Mrs. Shapiero charged that Mrs. Steiner had visited her on July 3 and was upward of an hour in her bedroom, which Mrs. Shapiero had occasion to leave once or twice. In a drawer of the dresser reposed the ring. On July 4, when Mrs. Shapiero missed her ring she went looking for Mrs. Steiner, and learned she had gone to Paterson, N. J.

"But sure as I am here, your honor," said Mrs. Shapiero, "the figure of my departed father appeared to me. I could see him as plainly as you yourself sitting before me. He spoke slowly. He said: 'Mrs. Steiner has your ring. She took it from a drawer in your dressing table. Take [illegible] into court and recover your property.'"

Whether Magistrate Miller pinned faith in the evidence of the astral father of Mrs. Shapiero or was unsatisfied with the answers made by Mrs. Steiner, who, among other things, declared most earnestly she did not steal the ring, does not appear as a matter of record, but he held her in $500 bail for the grand jury.

Mayor's Pleasant Duty.

A pretty ceremony took place at Newcastle, England, recently, when the customs of "Barge Day" were observed, and the mayor and corporation sailed up the river to "claim the soil" of the Tyne. The great moment of the ceremony is the landing when the mayor has the delightful if invidious, privilege of selecting any young lady he places from the assembled crowd and giving her a kiss and a sovereign. The sheriffs also choose a fair lady on whom to bestow a kiss and a gift, and the mayoress is expected to make some useful present to the damsel kissed by his worship.

Make Children Glad.

Let us make children glad with things which they long for and cannot obtain.—John [illegible].

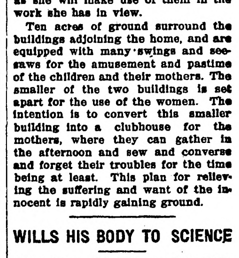
SOLVE BIG PROBLEM

Home for Convicts' Children Found Very Efficacious.

While Offender Against Society Is Sent to Prison His Family Suffers—Mrs. Booth Meets the Situation Effectively.

New York.—What becomes of the children of convicts? Every day of the year some man is sentenced to prison, leaving behind him boys and girls or both who are at the mercy of the people of the community for clothing and food, shelter and education. The judge who pronounces sentence on the erring father and husband cannot concern himself about the mother and children who are thus left behind to shift for themselves. Justice must grind out her grist, and the father must take his medicine for his sinful ways. It is the business and common duty of the judge to see to it that the offender is sent to prison for the crime committed. It is, in fact, no one's business in particular what becomes of the wife and children of the convict, what they do for a living while the father is in jail. This condition of affairs, so very common everywhere in America, as well as in other lands, puzzled that great prison worker, Mrs. Maude Ballington Booth, who has made it a life work to see to it that the convicts were given their shade of justice, after having been sentenced. She is known the country over as "Little Mother," and there are countless thousands of hard, harsh men, who will prove themselves wife-beaters when at home, who, in jail, deem it the happiest hour of their sentence when they are interviewed by the little lady.

Thousands of convicts with whom Mrs. Booth has talked in the hundreds of jails have begged for their children, to keep them if possible out of the sinful ways of the street and city, to take them away somewhere where they will be brought up among wholesome surroundings and a healthy environment. Many pitiful cases of destitution among the families of the convicts could be cited, which have come under the direct observation of Mrs. Booth in the course of her evangelistic work in the prisons. She planned to establish a home for these innocent victims of another's wrongdoing, and recently the opportunity came to her. In a beautiful place at Gwynedd valley, near Philadelphia, the work has been established on a practical and successful basis. The buildings were originally designed as a home for convalescent children. The main structure is equipped for the reception of as many as 75 boys and girls, and in addition 50 mothers may be accommodated when the arrangements are completed. The buildings and grounds, with furniture, beds, bedding and crockery, were the gift of a wealthy, well-meaning person, to Mrs. Booth for her use as long as she will make use of them in the work she has in view.



Home for Convicts' Children.

Ten acres of ground surround the buildings adjoining the home, and are equipped with many swings and seesaws for the amusement and pastime of the children and their mothers. The smaller of the two buildings is set apart for the use of the women. The intention is to convert this smaller building into a clubhouse for the mothers, where they can gather in the afternoon and sew and converse and forget their troubles for the time being at least. This plan for relieving the suffering and want of the innocent is rapidly gaining ground.

WILLS HIS BODY TO SCIENCE

Metchnikoff, the Famous Bacteriologist, Wants It to Benefit Even After His Death.

Paris.—Prof. Eli Metchnikoff, the world's leading bacteriologist, director of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, has willed his body, when he dies, to scientists, whom he gives permission to do what they like with it. This was admitted by Metchnikoff.

"I insist, however," he added, "that my remains must be interred in the cemetery nearest to the Pasteur Institute. I expressly stipulate in my will that my body must not be carried any farther from my home than the Montparnasse cemetery, which is a short distance from here."

Metchnikoff said he was continually receiving offers of important appointments in the United States, England and Germany, but that he was determined the only change he would ever make would be from the institute to the grave.

Dr. J. G. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
[illegible] Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.
Phone Central

The Northern Light

CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Mud Lake Murmurs.

A Merry Christmas.

Chris Sibelrud was to Rollis Monday on business.

Peter Kolden transacted business at Holt on Saturday.

Charlie Martell made a business trip to Holt on Tuesday.

Clyde Groner made a business trip to Thief River Falls the later part of last week.

Carl Dahl was to Holt on Saturday marketing a load of flax and doing some shopping.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Groner made a combined business and pleasure trip to Holt on Tuesday.

Robert Lillie, Elling Tollefsrud, Cleve Bergum, Olaf and Salmer Dahl were business callers at Gatske on Monday.

A crew of men are busy puting in a dam across the big ditch, near the line between this and Eckvoll township.

Johnson Bro's, of Eckvoll, are busy with their portable gasoline saw rig, sawing wood for the settlers in this locality.

Don't wait until the last minute. Come in early and buy your candies and fruits for Christmas at Huseth's.

When You pay for Lumber

You naturally want to get the full value of your money. You'll get it here all right and a little bit more. You will find our laths, shingles, etc., full count and first quality every time. You'll find our regular lumber full measure, cut true and of sound, seasoned wood. Give us a chance to prove our square dealing.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, [illegible] is a fine-appearing, beautifully balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side [illegible]—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) [illegible]—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. [illegible] A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Christmas Services

Will be held first Chrisimas Day in Holt church at 10:45 a. m., at Ringbo 3:30 p. m., and at Middle River 8 o'clock p. m. The same services will be held at Thief Lake on second Christmas Day, Friday, at 11 o'clock a. m. and on Saturday at Golden Valley 11 a. m. and at the East Valley school house 4 p. m.

Confirmants will meet at Nazareth church in Holt next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. Children from Holt and vicinity will meet in the church the same afternoon at 2 o'clock to practise on Christmas program.

Confirmation and Communion in Nazarath Church, Holt, Sunday Dec. 28th at 10:45 a. m., and Christmas Tree progrm on Monday, the 29th at 2 o'clock.

M. B. Ordahl, Lutheran Pastor.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9363, Serial No. 08709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. Ose, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. 9570, Serial No. 08897, for Lot 2, Section 9, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 43 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tollef Brokke, German Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 12, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Clyde C. Groner, of Golden Valley, Minn., who, on Sept. 8, 1910, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 05565, for SE¼ Section 11, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn, on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tellefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 3, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that August Johnsen, of Rollis, Minnesota, who, on February 15, 1911, made Homestead Entry No. 05858, for SW¼ NW¼ Section 3, S½ NE¼ and NW¼ SE¼ Section 4, Township 156 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses; John Moberg, Martin Moberg, both of Rollis, Minnesota; Christ Norbeck, Ludvig Sagstuen, both of Flakne, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 2, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Albert C. Jahr, of Holt, Minn., who, on January 20, 1911, made Homestead Entry, Serial No. 03625, for SE¼ Section 27, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 13th day of January, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H Knutson, Carl Surmo, George C. Anderson, Olaus Rodahl, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

STATEMENT

Of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., required by Act of August 24, 1912, of The Northern Light, published weekly at Holt, Minn., for Oct 1, 1913.

Name of— Post-office address

Editor, managing editor, business managers, Publisher } Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

Owners: Chas. W. Latta, Holt, Minn.

Known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders, holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities: B. L. Backe, Holt, Minn.

—Chas. W. Latta.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of December, 1913.

—Nils Engebretsen, Notary Public, Marshall Co., Minn. My commission expires 6-15-1919.

HON. P. M. RINGDAL

Prominent Crookston man who was the Democratic candidate for governor last year, and who was nominated last week by the president to be Register of the U. S. Land Office at Crookston.

It is said that G. H Wahlund, of Warren, is to be appointed receiver of public monies at the same office.

USE THE SCIENTIFIC TERMS

Peculiarity Noticed in Old Soldiers When They Are Talking of Wounds Received in Battle.

Three veterans of the civil war sat on a bench of new, sweet-scented pine in a wood. The occasion was a Fourth of July picnic, and the veterans eating sandwiches and drinking lemonade, talked of war.

"Yes, this here," said the first veteran, twiddling with a flattened bullet that dangled from the end of his watch chain—"this here entered my tibia at Bull Run, fractured my fibia, and tore up my gastrocnemius quite some."

The second veteran displayed a flattened bullet that served, surrounded with tiny diamonds, as a scarfpin.

"This feller," said he, "went through my radius and ulna."

The third veteran, showing a flattened bullet that formed the central ornament of a massive gold ring, said:

"This ball, friends, was dug out of my deltoid."

The veterans munched their sandwiches calmly, and calmly drank their lemonade; and an army surgeon remarked to a bystander, with a wink:

"A queer thing about old soldiers the world over is that they preserve as ornaments the bullets that have wounded them. Another queer thing is that they always learn the scientific names of the bones and organs and muscles that have suffered.

"Radius and ulna, gastrocnemius and deltoid, tibia and fibia—you'll always hear such terms as those upon the white-bearded lips of an old soldier."

THINKS NEATNESS HALTS AGE

Doctor Asserts There Is Much Beneficial Psychic Influence in "Sprucing Up."

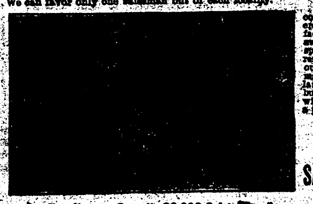
Neatness, bathing and massage are recommended to men past middle age who would avoid manifestations of decline. Dr. I. L. Nascher of Boston writes in the New York Medical Journal:

"The improvement in the general appearance has a profound psychic influence, not only directly through the stimulation of the sense of pride in appearance, but indirectly through the flattering comments which it arouses. This important measure is generally neglected by men, yet aside from the beneficial psychic influence, for aesthetic reasons alone the old man should endeavor to make himself appear as attractive as possible. This does not mean that he should resort to the artificial devices that [illegible] aged and elderly women employ to enhance their charms. It does mean that the old man should stimulate the surface circulation by means of baths and massage, remove wrinkles and folds by inunction with animal fats, try to stimulate the growth of hair on the head and remove hair from abnormal situations as the ears, use a cane and wear braces to overcome the tendency to stoop, employ harmless cosmetic measures to improve his appearance, and above all, observe a sense of neatness in dress. Instead of decrying such a course as vanity it should be encouraged as a laudable effort to maintain a youthful spirit."

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day

Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 16 T,
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour
Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.
Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL

THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to

Name..............................

Postoffice..............................

Route.............. State..............

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1913 NO. 22

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans

When in need of Farm Loans be sure to call on us.

We are in a position to render Prompt service in this respect. Long and easy terms, at a rate of interest consistent with location, value of security and producing qualities of the soil

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt

[illegible] BACKE, Pres. and Manager, S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier

Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.34
Wheat	.76
Barley [illegible]	.36
Oats	.29
Rye	.41
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

We Tender Our Sincere Thanks

To our numerous patrons for the excellent business we have had throughout the year 1913.

During 1914 we hope to merit a continuance of this patronage, and we heartily wish to all a

Happy and Prosperous New Year

Holt Mercantile Co.
THE BIG NEW STORE

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, phone 140. (adv)

Pete Kolden came up from Crookston to spend Christmas vacation at home.

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. [illegible]

T A. Tobiason transacted business at Thief River Falls over Monday night.

Leo Holden made a trip to Thief River Falls on Monday to do some holiday shopping.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Nels Gndvangen and [illegible] Adolphson transacted business at Middle River on Tuesday.

Tony Carlson left on Wednesday to spend the Christmas season with his parents in [illegible]

Herman [illegible] and children left Tuesday for a holiday visit [illegible] Falls and other points.

Rev. Martin T. [illegible] services in the Holt [illegible] next at [illegible] invited.

[illegible] J. Backlund [illegible] day from Randen [illegible] with the body of [illegible] Backlund.

[illegible] VonWald [illegible] Falls Tuesday [illegible] many friends here.

The editor made a business trip to Thief River Falls Monday and exchanged the season's greetings with a number of the friends worth while.

The Scandinavian Young Peoples Free Society will meet at Chris Saastad's on Saturday evening, the 27th inst, at 7 o'clock. All welcome.

Clarence Kolden came over from Kenmare, N. D., on Tuesday to spend his Cristmas vacation at home. He is holding down a position as bookkeeper at Kenmare and making good, of course.

John A. Sorum left on Wednesday for Hillsboro N. D., to visit with his mother. John makes it a point to spend a day or two with her every winter ond add a little sunshine to her evening of life.

Henry J. Oien left on Wednesday for Shelly where he will spend the holidays visiting with his relatives. During his absence the Red Lake Falls Milling CO's elevator will be looked after by Racine Olson.

Twins, boy and girl, arrived safely at the home of Frank Coppay on Wednesday morning, and Frank feels that no one received a better Christmas present than he. May they all live long and prosper.

Al Huseth and family left on Wednesday afternoon for Fertile where they will spend the holidays with relatives. Mr. Huseth expects to return in a couple of days, while Mrs. Huseth and the children expect to be away until after New Year's

Mr. and Mrs. D. Payne had as gueits at Christmas dinner yesterday Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Kolden and Lillian and Edna Payne, from Niolsville; Agnes Rudser, of Crosby, N.D. Annie and Mable Lund, of Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. T. Reep and daughter Ella, Ellinor, Lydia and Ansof Dahlen, of Thief River Falls; Selmer Kolden, of Crookston, and S. S. Kolden and family, of Holt. Some of them have left for their homes and some are staying for a longer visit.

List of Members

The list of those who organized the Scandinavian Young People's Free Society is as follows:

P L Anderson, S G Svenkeson, O J Backlund, Bennie Nyberg, A L Carlson, Arvid Carlson, M O Matson, A F Mathison, Henry Wendt, H J Oien, Carl Christoferson, Esther Reierson, Christine Saastad, Louise Rux, Esther Werner, Arnold Burnstein, Dick Swarts, Anna Reierson, Hilma Nyberg, B Reierson, Mrs A T Johnson, Bertha Yttri, Anna Hoel Mabel Hoel, Olga Hanson, Inez Alkenbrack, Renie Werner, Rudolph Reierson, Cora Hanson, Anne Tharaldson, Clara Sollom, Lydia Risberg, Edna Risberg, Ruth Backe, E P Silbaugh.

Funeral at Randen

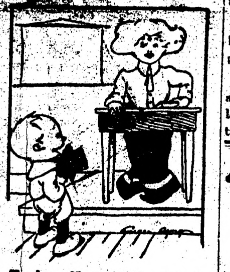
On Sunday the remains of Peter Backlund, who killed himself here a week ago, were taken to Randen for interment and the funeral was held there on Tuesday. The coroner was here last Friday night to make an investigation and found suicide so plainly indicated that he decided no inquest was necessary.

Huseth pleases all his patrons. Are you one of them? (adv)

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

Charley Charleson was in from Grand Plain on Wednesday to make arrangements for proving up his homestead there.

TWO VARIETIES



Teacher—Now, Willie, you can tell how a bat hangs with his head downward.

Willie (after deep thought)—Please, ma'am, do you mean a chimney bat or an acrobat?

EXPLANATION.

"What makes that dress so loud?" asked a husband of his wife the first time she donned her latest summer creation.

"Maybe," she replied meekly, "it's the piping."—Detroit News.

ONE ACCOMPLISHMENT.

"Your mother baked the best bread in this town. Can you say as much?"

"Maybe not, dad. But I play a pretty fair game of bridge."

THEIR INTENTIONS.

"Look at those boys threatening each other?"

"Are their intentions bellicose?"

"No'm. Their intentions is to scrap."

HARMONY.

"How did that couple come to be attracted to each other?"

"He is a man of iron and she a woman of magnetic personality."

HIS WAY.

"He is very particular about doing the right thing, isn't he?"

"Yes; he even answers categorical questions dogmatically."

...Pay... All Bills By Check

And there will never be any disputes. The Holt State Bank Invites household as well as business accounts. Most women know how difficult it is to make their cash balance when they pay in cash. You can avoid all the trouble and worry by opening an account at the Holt State Bank. Then you'll know where every cent of your money goes.

Holt State Bank
Make your FARM LOAN with us

Ringbo Rumbles

The Erikson brothers have quit the well drilling for this season.

Miss Gunhild Sorter arrived Friday last from Minneapolis to spend Christmas at home.

The school children of Ringbo gave a Christmas entertainment at the local church Tuesday evening which was well attended. After a most successful program, Santa Claus made his appearance to the delight of the performers.

Well! Well! How did Santa Claus treat you? Did you get an apple?

The Rumbler wishes the Editor a Merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

The Continental Insurance Co. has an unexcelled record for paying all losses. Why not have insurance that insures? CHAS W. LATTA, ag't.

Building for Sale

Good log and frame dwelling, well finished and sided and has 3 storm windows. Size 12 x 22 feet. Now located on the Anton Peterson farm, in Section 20, Holt township.

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned up to 12 o'clock noon on Saturday, December 27th, 1913. Terms, cash. The highest bid gets the building and the buyer will be allowed a reasonable time to remove it.

[illegible], Holt, Minn.
Administrator of the estate of Sophia Peterson, deceased.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

HUSETH's
Headquarters for Christmas Candies, Fruits and Nuts
Our Goods always Fresh, Pure and Wholesome
AL. HUSETH, Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long.

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

Defective Page

MARRIAGE LICENSE IS NOT NECESSARY

MEMBER OF THE U. S. SUPREME COURT DECLARES CEREMONY NEEDLESS.

BLOW FOR EUGENICS LAW

Judge Says Mutual Agreement to Accept Each Other Is Sufficient, and This Will Prevent Enforcement of Statute.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 23. — The Wisconsin eugenic marriage law, which goes into effect on January 1, and which has created a state-wide discussion for several weeks, received a severe jolt when Horace B. Walmsley, a member of the bar of the supreme court of the United States, came forth with a statement that a marriage ceremony in Wisconsin is unnecessary and therefore the eugenic measure is useless.

Can't Enforce Law.

"All that is required in this state is that two persons who are not married at the time agree to accept each other as mates," said Mr. Walmsley. "No service is necessary and the physical examination required by the late law cannot be enforced."

The contention of Mr. Walmsley is based on a decision of the state supreme court of April 8, 1913. The decision says that any man or woman not married at the time may make a legal and valid contract of marriage without any license, medical examination, priest, clergyman or magistrate. All that is required is that two persons agree to take each other as man and wife and begin to live together in that relation.

No Evidence Required.

No written statement nor witnesses are required, but the court suggested that for the benefit of both parties it would be well to sign an agreement.

The court also suggested that there be duplicate copies of the agreement so that both parties may be supplied.

This discovery has thrown the eugenic supporters into a state of uncertainty. They are beginning to feel that the law is useless. The opponents of the law are happy and now everyone is awaiting the new year to see just what will happen.

The decision of the supreme court permitting marriages without license and examinations will hold after Jan 1 and cannot be changed until the next meeting of the state legislature.

AEROPLANES FOR U. S. MAIL

Given Tentative Approval by Recommendation for $50,000 Appropriation.

Washington, Dec. 23. — Aeroplane mail service is given tentative official approval in the report of Second Assistant Postmaster General Stewart. The report says that such experiments as heretofore have been made in the carrying of mail by aeroplanes have been conducted without expense to the government, although the mails thus transported were entrusted only to sworn carriers. The satisfactory performance of the service has induced a recommendation by Mr. Stewart for an appropriation of $50,000 for a regular experimental aeroplane service.

The report discloses the fact that the postoffice department expects to reduce the increased expenditures for railway car service by establishing railway terminal postoffices and requiring a separation by routes of first and second class mails of publishers.

During last year, says the report, a large amount of additional car space was required because of the establishment of the parcel post system.

Federal Officers Are Shot

Hermosillo, Mex., Dec. 23. — The commissioned officers and many sergeants and corporals of the tenth batalion of the federal garrison at Guaymas were executed in that city, according to word brought here. Officers and men of the tenth were disarmed several days ago by General Ojeda, federal commandant, when he discovered they were plotting to desert the insurgents. It was announced that services of neither officers nor privates of the deserting federals would be accepted in the constitutionalist army.

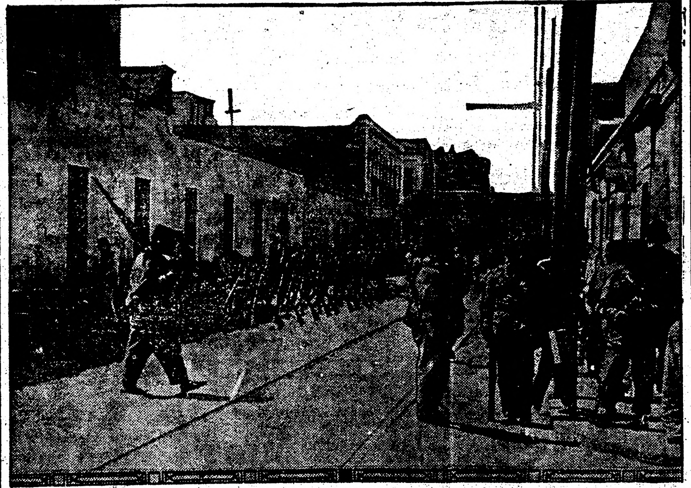
Woodmen Abandon Fight.

Rock Island, Ill., Dec. 22.—Announcement is made by the executive council of the Modern Woodmen of America that the council, through its administrative officers has abandoned its fight for increased insurance rates and that the question would not be proposed at the national head camp meeting to be held in June at Toledo, Ohio, unless it originated from the membership.

Omaha Accepts Tango Ball.

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 23.—Omaha is going to have a tango charity ball. And as a result there is a clash between almost every preacher in town and a number of the best paying and most respected church members. The ministerial union is demanding a "denatured" tango and the dancers insist on going the limit. The committee in charge of the program was displeased because the report got abroad that nothing but the tango would be permitted on the floor the night of the

HUERTA'S SOLDIERS LAY DOWN ARMS UNTIL PAID



Government soldiers with arms stacked in the Calle Ancha, a street in Mexico City, who refused to fight any longer for the Huerta government until paid and fed.

ZAPATA IS ALMOST CAPTURED

REBEL GENERAL CUTS WAY THROUGH ARMY OF ENEMY.

Activities—Six Mutineers Executed Because of Pay Shortage.

Mexico City, Dec. 20.—The federal troops just missed capturing Emiliano Zapata, the rebel leader, at Nenapera ranch in the federal district, about fifteen miles south of Mexico City. Zapata established his temporary headquarters at Nenapera ranch during his recent attack on the government forces.

Rebels Are Routed.

The federal troops approached the ranch from several directions. After an hour's skirmishing the rebels were routed. Some of the rebel prisoners told their captors that Zapata himself was in command and was one of the last to escape. He broke through the circle of federal troops with a few companions who used their machetes to cut their way out.

The report sent to the war office by the federal commander said the rebels were not pursued owing to darkness and the difficult nature of the country.

Carranza Orders Activities.

Persons coming from the state of Morelos confirm the report that the activity of Zapata is due to instructions received from General Carranza. The latter recently sent several emissaries to confer with Zapata and other rebel leaders in the south. They are reported to have supplied Zapata with funds for the renewal of his campaign against the federals.

Six of the ringleaders of the mutiny of part of the garrison at Aguas Calientes have been executed by order of the military government. Failure to receieve their pay is said to have been the cause of the trouble.

PARCEL POST TAXES SERVICE

Christmas Mail Is Being Rushed as Fast as It Is Possible, However.

Washington, Dec. 22.—Extraordinary efforts are being made by the postoffice department to prevent delays in the delivery of Christmas mail. There is always a great volume of mail around Christmas time and this year, with the added task of handling hundreds of thousands of parcel post packages, the offices in the larger cities would have been hopelessly swamped but for emergency measures.

Practically every postoffice and mail route in the land is overwhelmed with parcel post matter, taxing to the utmost the facilities of the service. Postmaster General Burleson said that congestion had been prevented and promised that there would be no delays.

Christmas Week Weather Unsettled.

Washington, Dec. 22.—Christmas weather is likely to be unsettled, the government forecasters say. While they are not yet able to predict exactly whether Christmas day will be cold or warm, stormy or calm, the experts are reasonably certain that there will be a change next week over practically the entire country.

Vessel in Great Danger.

New York, Dec. 22.—The three-masted schooner John R. Woolley, New York to Providence without cargo, ran ashore on the rocks off Gardner's island at the eastern entrance to Long Island sound and is reported to be breaking up with eight men of her crew lashed to the rigging and unable to reach land. The revenue cutter Itasca was caught by wireless off Montauk Point when the report reached New York and started for Gardner's island to aid the stranded vessel.

SENATE PASSES MONEY REFORM MEASURE, 54-34

QUITE DIFFERENT FROM MEASURE THAT PASSED HOUSE.

ADJUSTMENT COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY SENATE

Will Try to Adjust Agreement—Expected Instrument Will Be Signed By President Within Short Time.

Washington, Dec. 22.—The administration currency reform bill, proposing a revision of the financial system of the United States and the creation of regional reserve banks to act as stabilizing elements in the banking and financial world, passed the senate by a vote of 54 to 34.

Division on Final Vote.

Forces that had fought together for improvement and amendment of the measure to the last, divided when the final vote came.

Senator Hitchcock who had led the opposition to the bill returned to the Democratic ranks, and Senator Weeks, one of the leaders on the Republican side, with five other Republicans and Senator Poindexter, (Progressive) voted for the passage of the measure.

Different from House Bill.

Wide differences exist between the form of the legislation passed by the senate and the bill that passed the house several months ago. Democratic leaders already have partly adjusted these differences, however, and it is predicted that the bill will be completed by a conference committee and sent to President Wilson for his signature very soon.

The adoption of the administration bill, known as the "Owen bill," followed upon the formal defeat by 44 to 41 of the "Hitchcock bill," which had been indorsed by Senator Hitchcock and the five Republican members of the evenly divided senate committee that passed on the legislation. The senate had previously rejected, without a roll call, a "central bank" bill offered as a substitute by Senator Burton.

To hasten final enactment of the bill that is expected to reorganize and give balance to commercial and financial conditions, the senate named its conference committee to work with a house committee to compose the differences between the two bills.

Many of the chief points of difference have already been gone over between currency leaders of the two houses, in conference with Secretary McAdoo of the treasury department.

Killed Child; Autoist Sentenced.

Milwaukee, Dec. 22.—Roman Schubert, 26 years old and wealthy, was found guilty of murder in the fourth degree and sentenced to one year in prison in municipal court for running down and killing Mabel Lohman, four years old, with an automobile.

Colorado Gets Dr. Farrand.

New York, Dec. 22.—Dr. Livingston Farrand, who for nearly ten years has been the executive secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, has severed his connection with that organization to become the president of the University of Colorado, according to an announcement made from the association's headquarters here. Dr. Farrand has probably done more for the promotion of the organized anti-tuberculosis movement in the United States than any other single individual.

REPRESENTATION IS CHANGED

REDUCTION IN SOUTHERN STATES' VOTE WILL FOLLOW.

States Must Ratify Action Before It Becomes the Law of the Party.

Washington, Dec. 19.—By adopting a resolution providing for a radical change in the basis of representation on the national nominating committees which would reduce the quota of southern states from 33 to 16 per cent of the convention's total vote, the Republican national committee concluded its work for the reform in party procedure and launched its campaign for a reunion of warring elements.

The action of the committee, criticized in vigorous terms by several of its members, but made unanimous before adjournment, must be endorsed by states entitled to cast a majority of votes in the electoral college before it becomes a party law.

In order that such action shall be promptly taken the committee appointed a sub-committee of three, consisting of Charles B. Warren of Michigan; Senator Borah of Idaho and Governor Hatfield of West Virginia, to prepare an address to the states urging immediate ratification of the proposal. This address will be drawn up shortly before the holidays and leading members of the committee expressed the hope that it would meet early action.

Approval by the states will insure a call from the national committee for the national convention of 1916 along the lines just laid down.

The reorganization plan adopted came as a compromise which reflected the views of many committeemen that southern representation should be reduced but not brought to the vanishing point.

The new basis of representation shall not be made the basis for the call of the national convention to be held in the year 1916, unless prior to January 1, 1915, Republican state conventions held under the laws of the states or called by the Republican states committees of the states in such number of states as are entitled to cast a majority of the votes in the present electoral college, shall ratify the action of this committee in respect to determining this basis of representation.

TRAIN WRECKED; NONE HURT

300 Passengers Aboard—Six Coaches Burned When Train Leaves Track—$80,000 Loss.

Winnipeg, Dec. 22.—Five passenger coaches and one baggage car were destroyed by fire with a loss of $80,000, yet no one was injured, when the Canadian Northern Express, number one, was wrecked at Lorette, 18 miles east of Winnipeg. The train was an hour late from Duluth and Port Arthur, and was running at 35 miles an hour when a broken rail was struck, throwing the engine and cars off the track.

In some way gas exploded in the cars and they were soon a mass of flame, but long before this the 300 passengers had all left the cars and not a single person received a scratch.

Among those on the train was J. R. Cameron, assistant general manager, in his private car.

Mona Lisa Takn to Rome.

Florence, Dec. 22.—Dr. Ricci, director general of fine arts, personally supervised the packing of the painting "Mona Lisa, which has just been forwarded to Rome. The picture was guarded by police and museum officials while carbineers were on duty at all stations along the road. The school children, accompanied by their teachers, were allowed to view the "Mona Lisa" Friday. An unknown man visited Perugia's lawyer and offered to advance $1,000 for Perugia's bail.

CORPORATIONS TO COMPLY WITH LAW

PRESIDENT WILSON EXPECTS OTHERS TO FOLLOW LEAD OF BELL WIRE CONCERN.

ADMINISTRATION WILL AID

Officials Will Do Everything In Their Power to Bring About Amicable Settlements—Statement Is Expected.

Washington, Dec. 23. — President Wilson has let it be known that some other corporations besides the American Telephone & Telegraph company had shown a disposition to take the initiative in reorganization to conform with the Sherman anti-trust law.

The president did not specify what corporations he referred to, though in formal discussion of the subject with callers he spoke of having some in mind. He reiterated that there appeared to be a very general disposition to inquire what the law was, to know what would be expected to "big business" and a desire to comply with the spirit of the law.

U. S. Will Co-operate.

Mr. Wilson made it clear to his callers that it would be the policy of his administration to co-operate in every way it legitimately could to bring about a satisfactory understanding of the law by the business men of the country and that the executive departments did not want to raise barriers against those who wanted to obey the law. The president pointed out that the attorney general would co-operate and heartily desired and welcomed the impulse on the part of business to take the initiative.

The president indicated in his manner of discussion that he hoped the government had shown by example in the American Telephone and Telegraph settlement what might be expected as the future course of his administration. He has been conferring with congessional leaders on the anti-trust subject and will read a special message to congress after he returns from his vacation in which he will point to the necessity of a rigid enforcement of the Sherman law and will endeavor to make clear the interpretation of that statute, which the department of justice will follow.

Trust Statement Expected.

A note of confidence that the business men of the country will co-operate with the government in securing a compliance with the sherman law is expected to be sounded in a statement expected from the president. He will indicate the manner in which the administration will approach the subject, express his realization of the delicacy of the task and the necessity for cautious and careful treatment of it because of its intimate relation to the business conditions of the country.

It became known that the department is at work on plans submitted by other corporations for friendly settlements. Just which ones they are was not divulged.

TELL OF AWFUL ATROCITIES

Refugees From Venezuelan Rubber Colony Say 173 Have Just Been Murdered.

Manaos, Brazil, Dec. 23.—A motor launch has arrived here with refugees from the rubber colony of the Territori de Amazona, Venezuela, telling of 173 murders there in the last few months and confirming stories of atrocities brought here by Michael J. Gilleran, an American refugee, who had been ordered to be shot and who escaped.

Refugees arriving here tell of a reign of terror and anarchy in the rubber colony. A rebel force has been organized under General Gonzales and all who are suspected of being opposed to him are shot.

The latest crimes include the murder of eight women and four young girls in the rubber territory. It is believed here these women and girls were put to death because it was feared they would escape and spread to the world news of the horrors being committed in the colony.

Italy to Recognize Huerta.

Vera Cruz, Dec. 23.—Senor Cambiago, the newly appointed Italian minister to Mexico, arrived here from Havana and will proceed to Mexico City, where he will present his credentials to General Huerta. This is taken to indicate that Italy would recognize the dictator.

Mexican Bank Closes Doors.

Mexico City, Dec. 23.—The Bank of London and Mexico closed its doors yesterday.

Duluth Man Is Murdered.

Chicago, Dec. 23.—The body of Nels Elmer Ohaman, 35 years old, who was on his way from Duluth, to Sweden, was found in his hotel room. His throat had been cut and the contents of his suitcase scattered about the room. The police believe that he was murdered. Ohaman had deposited drafts for large sums in the hotel safe. Ohaman was making the trip to Sweden to visit his wife. Robbery is believed to have been the motive for the crime, as the victim had given a draft for $1,800 to the hotel authorities.

GEN. GEORGE P. SCRIVEN

Brigadier General George P. Scriven is the new chief signal officer of the United States army.

ROOSEVELT'S IRE IS AROUSED

AS A RESULT, CLASH WITH CHILEAN SPEAKER FOLLOWS.

Former Minister to United States Calls Monroe Doctrine a Dead Issue—Heated Language Used.

Washington, Dec. 23.—Members of the diplomatic corps, especially representatives from the South American countries, are greatly interested in a report reaching Washington that Former President Roosevelt and Dr. Marchial Martinez, at one time Chilean minister to the United States, had clashed in Santiago de Chile on account of divergent views on the Monroe doctrine. The Chilean is reported to have strongly dissented from the Roosevelt view that the much discussed doctrine is still a vital issue.

The reported debate attracted unusual interest here because both of the prepared speeches were reviewed before delivery by the Chilean foreign office. Dr. Martinez, it was said at the Chilean legation, was selected as the spokesman of the Chilean government at the state reception given the American visitor recently at the University of Santiago because of his warm friendship for the United States. He is one of the oldest and most eminent Chilean diplomatists and made many lasting friendships during his service as minister here many years ago.

In his address at the Roosevelt reception, Dr. Martinez dealt with the Monroe doctrine, characterizing it as a dead issue and arguing that the conditions which gave rise to its promulgation by President Monroe in 1823 had almost entirely disappeared. This statement is said to have aroused the ire of Colonel Roosevelt who replied with some heat, holding that the Monroe doctrine still had a vital principle of the foreign policy of the United States. He is said, too, to have suggested to the Chilean diplomatist that it was ill-advised on such an occasion to inaugurate a controversy.

That Colonel Roosevelt, according to report, stated that before leaving the United States, the texts of the addresses he proposed to deliver in Brazil, Argentine and Chile had been submitted to the diplomatic representatives of those nations in Washington to avoid the inclusion of anything that might prove offensive to his hosts. To this Dr. Martinez is said to have replied that his own address had been submitted to the Chilean foreign office, three days before Colonel Roosevelt's arrival, and that as no objection had been raised in that quarter he could see no reason why the discussion of the Monroe doctrine should be avoided as a dangerous issue.

Nothing official has reached the Chilean legation here concerning any phase of what diplomatists are inclined to consider a delicate situation.

It is said that at the conclusion of the Roosevelt reception a demonstration against the American visitor was made.

Breaks Leg Doing Tango.

New York, Dec. 23.—Confined at the Roosevelt hospital suffering from a broken leg, Mrs. Ethel Fitch Conger, niece of the late Clyde Fitch, warned tango dancers against the "dip." Mrs. Conger is regarded as an excellent dancer, but when doing a fancy step she fell to the floor and her leg was broken just below the hip.

Mexico Thanks Jap Government.

Tokio, Dec. 23.—Francisco De La Barra, the former provisional president of Mexico, has arrived here. He is at the head of a mission sent by the Mexican government to thank Japan for her representation at Mexican centennial.

Educational Fund for Labor Party.

Brussels, Dec. 23.—Ernest Solvay, discoverer of a process for the manufacture of soda, who recently gave more than $1,000,000 to educational and charitable institutions and the employes of his firm, has given to the labor party $200,000 as an educational fund for workingmen.

Boy Chastised; Kills Self.

Vernon, Ill., Dec. 23.—Garland Shepherd, 15 years old, committed suicide at the home of his grandparents because he had been spanked.

"WHY I EMIGRATED"

THE NOTES OF A PROMINENT JOURNALIST WHO MADE A TRIP THROUGH WESTERN CANADA.

A prominent journalist from Chicago some time ago, made a journey through Canada obtaining a thorough knowledge of the land and people and of the "boundless possibilities" that Canada, the virgin land, affords. In an American Sunday newspaper he published after his return the interesting account which we print as follows. He writes:

"Why did you emigrate from the United States?" I asked a farmer in Western Canada.

"I believe that for a poor man Western Canada is the most favorable land," was the reply, "and I have now found that it is the Paradise of the Poor."

The farmer, a pioneer of the west, had five years earlier left Iowa for Canada to secure a new home there. After traversing the country for some time he started his home on the open prairie and with steady industry devoted himself to the working of the virgin soil. Now he is the well-to-do owner of that endless sea of waving wheat ears that goes on for miles before my eyes. His strong, sunburned figure finds the best background in his farm itself, which is the outcome of his ceaseless activity—a pretty two-storied dwelling house, a large clean stable in the midst of a hamlet of barns, sheds and outbuildings, a useful garden overflowing with products; horses, cattle, sheep and swine on the rich pastures, and around to the horizon wheat, golden wheat.

"In Iowa?" the farmer continued, "I farmed on rented land, for at the price of $100 per acre I did not possess money enough to buy. I might farm, I might farm as I could more than the living for myself and family, I could not attain. Sometimes the harvest turned out good, sometimes bad, but the grand total was a bitter combat to keep want from the door. It was impossible to lay by for bad times and in spite of all trouble and work an old age free of care was not to be thought of. My death would have brought bitter poverty to my wife and children.

"I decided to break-up and go to Canada, where at least I could fight out the struggle for existence on my own land. I started out with a mule team, all my earthly possessions were in the prairie-schooner with my wife and children. Then I took up a homestead of 160 acres to which I added by purchase gradually; now as a whole I count about 3,000 acres as my own. The whole property is free of debt. I do not owe a cent to anyone. I bought my land for $2-$10 per acre, now I would not give it up for $50."

"Do you mean to say that you paid for the whole land in the five years?" I interrupted.

"In a much shorter time," replied the farmer. "The land paid for itself, some already by the first harvest, and at longest in 3 years each field had brought in its purchase price. If you doubt that land in Western Canada pays for itself within 3 years you can easily convince yourself of the truth of my assertion. Let us assume that a farmer buys a farm of 160 A. at $15 per A. for $2,400. Farm machines, seed ploughs, mowing and threshing might bring up the outlay to about $10 per acre. If the farmer sows the 160 A. for 3 years in succession with wheat and harvests 20 bus. per acre, then the product of an A. at the average price of 75c per bu. is exactly $15 per acre. If you deduct the $10 outlay, you will retain a clear return of $5.00. For 160 A. the annual excess amounts to $800, consequently the farm has after the third harvest brought in the purchase price of $2,400.

"Sometimes—and not rarely—the land pays for itself by the first harvest of 35 bus. of wheat-bring in more than the purchase price of $15 per acre. As in some years I harvested more than 35 bus., you can reckon for yourself how quickly I paid for my farm."

"Would you not prefer your own farm in Iowa?" I asked.

"No," replied the farmer, "never will I go back. In general very few American settlers return to the old home. In Iowa a 160 A. farm costs 100 per A., $16,000; in Western Canada $15, only $2,400. For the same money that you require to buy a 160 A. farm in Iowa, you can buy here in Western Canada a farm of 1,000 acres. I have money enough to buy a farm in Iowa, if I wished. But there my yearly income would be a small one, whereas here I work for a great gain. There I would only be a small farmer, here I am a large landed proprietor."

In a corner of the farmyard I had during our conversation noticed a mound of earth overgrown with grasses and wild flowers. To my inquiry as to what it was, I received the reply: "That is the run of the wooden shack covered with sods, which I called my home when I settled here five years ago."

I gathered a wild aster from the ruin and flung it into the air. In a purplish-glittering line the wind drove the flower towards the fine, modern-equipped farmhouse. What a contrast between the lowly earthy hut of yesterday and charming palace of today! This contrast says enough of the unbounded possibilities, which this new land offers to the willing worker. How the poor emigrant on the open prairie, through energy and activity, within 5 years worked his way up to being a well-to-do farmer and esteemed citizen! More, the farmer did not require to say. Why did he emigrate? WHY? Why I saw the answer with my own eyes."—Advertisement.

State News of General Interest

SEEK UNIFORMITY IN SCHOOL METHODS

PROPOSE EDUCATION BOARD GOVERN ENTIRE STATE SYSTEM.

AIM IS FOR STANDARDIZATION

Educational Commission Appointed By Governor Eberhart Makes Report Which Will Be Considered and Acted Upon.

St. Paul.—A state board of education, to have general supervision of courses of study in the schools supported by the state in the interest of uniformity in methods, is proposed by the educational commission appointed by Governor Eberhart to make a survey of the Minnesota school system and report to the next legislature.

Conference Is Held.

The matter was discussed at a conference between the members of the commission, the Board of Regents of the University of Minnesota, the Normal School board and the presidents of the five normal schools. The object was to consider the relations of the normal schools, university and the proposed board of education.

The commission in its investigations has discovered that the courses of study and standards required of pupils in the various rural, graded, consolidated and high schools differ widely. Its object is to unify the school system of Minnesota. The commission would standardize the work of the schools, making the university the head of the system and grading the work down to the rural schools.

BEGIN DRILLING FOR ORE

Cuyuna Range Lands Are Being Exploited—Some Favorable Reports Made.

Crosby.—The Cuyuna Central Exploration company of Duluth has started drilling on lands in section 27, 47-29. The northeast quarter of the northwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter were taken over from the Plymouth Exploration company of Minneapolis, which had started drilling.

In order that temporary repairs may be made in the shafts, the Armour No. 2 mine, at the west border of this village, and the Kennedy mine, near Cuyuna, both operated by the Rogers-Brown Ore company, will close down for eleven days, from Dec. 24 to Jan. 5.

From various sources there comes news that another open pit mine will be developed near Crosby by the Cuyuna Iron & Manganese company of Duluth. This company controls the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 10, 46-29, which adjoins Crosby on the west and the Pennington open pit property on the south.

It is said that the drill holes put down so far have shown a sufficiently large body of high grade iron ore to warrant the opening of a mine, and, as the conditions are much the same as those at the Pennington, the officials of the company believe the open pit system will prove profitable.

Western State Teachers Meeting.

Montevideo.—The Western Minnesota Educational association will hold its convention in Montevideo on Feb. 12, 13 and 14. The officers of the association are: President, J. J. Bohlander, Montevideo; vice president, A. N. Gausemel, Olivia; secretary, Lue A. Olds, county superintendent of Yellow Medicine county; treasurer, A. J. Kittleson, county superintendent, Lac qui Parle county. Among the speakers will be Dr. George James of the University of Minnesota, President Guy Maxwell of the Winona normal, President Frank A. Wold of the Moorhead normal, J. H. Worst of Fargo, C. G. Schulz of St. Paul, A. D. Wilson, S. A. Challman, George B. Aiton, Dr. F. H. Swift of the University of Minnesota, Julius Borass, A. V. Strom and J. Adams Puffer of Boston, and H. W. Fough of Washington, D. C.

Two Sent to Prison.

Red Wing.—Charles Bailey, convicted of a statutory offense, and Peter Weiland, convicted of forgery, were sentenced to indeterminate terms in the state penitentiary by Judge Albert Johnson. On Jan. 5 William Metcalf will be tried on a charge of killing his wife last June. Ralph Babcock of Minneapolis will be retried for manslaughter.

Graft Charged at Duluth.

Duluth.—Attorney General Smith, in an opinion read at a mass meeting discussing police department conditions, held that Commissioner of Public Safety Hicken is guilty of malfeasance in office and that it is the duty of the mayor to take steps to remove him. The opinion of the attorney general was based on the fact that Hicken admittedly permitted a saloon to run without a license. Charles S. Mitchell charged that the books of one disorderly house alone would show $40,000 graft.

MANKATO PLANS BIG AFFAIR

Joint Meeting of Southern Development League, State Seed Men, and County Breeders' Association.

Mankato.—Plans are being perfected for the joint annual meetings of the Southern Minnesota Better Development League, the Minnesota Seed Improvement Association and the Blue Earth County Field Crop Breeders' Association to be held at Mankato January 20 to 24 inclusive.

An extensive program for the five days meeting is being arranged and the plans at this time include the ablest speakers to be found in the United States, including Secretary of Agriculture D. H. Houston, Prof. P. G. Holden, formerly of Ames, Iowa, Senator Newlands of Nevada, Prof. N. E. Hansen of Brookings, S. D., famous for his work in horticulture and in the securing of new kinds of alfalfa. Mr. Hansen has just returned from his fourth trip to Russia in the interest of the farmers of South Dakota. Dr. E. Dana Durand who has recently come into Minnesota after having been U. S. director of census for a number of years and is the best posted man living on what the farmers of the United States have done and are doing in the matter of production. Pres. Geo. E. Vincent of the State University, Gov. Eberhart, Dean Woods of the Agricultural College, Prof. A. D. Wilson of the Extension Department, Prof. Storm of the State Agricultural College, Prof. C. Willis, editor of the "Farmstead," and M. L. Bowman, editor of "Corn," published at Waterloo, Iowa. Hon. George Tawney, Winona, will give a finished address on Good Roads.

John D. Deets.
Secretary of Association.

In addition to this part of the program there will be an interdenominational church rally of all the various churches for a study of the social service problems that confront country churches. This will be the largest gathering of ministers in the southern part of the state, as this meeting includes every denomination and will discuss questions that concern all of them alike.

There will also be held during the five days a corn and grain exposition. The Minnesota Seed Improvement association will have as their part of the exposition, corn, wheat, oats, barley and other field crops, exhibited from all parts of Minnesota. Prizes aggregating $3,000 in value are being offered. The Development league is arranging to give some special prizes for corn from the southern part of the state which will be of greater value than any of the prizes heretofore offered. One will be a complete silo; another will be a farm tractor that will take the place of two or three teams of horses.

Fergus Falls After Industrial School.

Fergus Falls.—The board of education has called a special election for Jan. 7 to vote on the question of issuing bonds for the erection of a $45,000 industrial school building, adjoining the high school building. The plan contemplates a large gymnasium on the first floor, where a course in physical exercise will be given as a part of the regular work of the school. The board takes the ground that the present method of conducting athletic affairs is to select the strongest boys and give them all the training so that they will be able to meet the strongest boys in some rival school. The idea here will be to develop those who need development—to select the students with narrow chests, stooping shoulders and tubercular tendencies and endeavor to build them up, rather than give all the attention to the boys who do not need it.

Girl Dies of Scarlet Fever.

Fergus Falls.—News was received from Deer Creek, this county, of the death of Lilly Hast, 15 years of age, from scarlet fever.

Logging Handicap Reflected in Trade.

Two Harbors.—The unprecedented mild spell is seriously interfering with logging operations, there being no snow and not enough freezing for road making. Many contractors are laying off men and others are reducing wages. As all work possible is now completed and nothing more can be done until the roads are in shape for hauling, all lines of business are suffering in consequence, but will boom when the weather becomes seasonable.

SCANDINAVIAN ART SOCIETY

NATIONAL BODY MAY CENTER IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Perpetuation of Handicrafts of "Old Countries" Is the Aim—Co-operation of All Countrymen Asked.

Minneapolis. — All of the ground work of the organization of the Scandinavian Art Society of America, centering in Minneapolis and its new art museum, yet reaching for the co-operation of Scandinavians of the entire country, was laid before Minneapolis Scandinavians at the Odin club.

The report recommends the establishment, in connection with the Minneapolis Society of Fine Arts, of a Scandinavian society to develop not only Scandinavian fine arts, but industrial arts, and through it found a Scandinavian collection for the new art museum that will advance the knowledge, appreciation and influence of Scandinavian art.

This tentative plan of organization was the report of a special committee composed of Andreas Ueland, Einar Hoidale, and C. E. Wallerstedt, to a larger committee of Scandinavians headed by Lauritz S. Swenson. The report yesterday was accepted, will be presented to the Odin club as a whole within a few days, and will then probably be brought to the attention of a representative meeting of Scandinavians from every part of the country to be held in Minneapolis as soon as feasible.

Fifteen directors, serving for five-year terms, three to retire each year, with an executive committee of five to manage the society's affairs are proposed.

The society, as far as possible and practicable, will seek to have the art of the three Scandinavian countries equally represented.

STATE GRANGE ELECTS RICE

Chooses Old President Again—Co-operation Among Farmers Emphasized at Annual Meeting.

Austin. — The forty-fourth annual meeting of the Minnesota State Grange closed with a banquet served at Elks' hall to over 200.

State Master Charles L. Rice presided during the sessions. The reports showed seventeen new granges organized in Minnesota in 1913. All reports showed a prosperous year.

The report of the state lecturer advised close co-operation with the state agricultural college, especially in connection with its extension division. The United States department of agriculture is reaching out to help solve rural problems and the high and normal schools are paying far more attention to agricultural courses.

The master's annual address emphasized the need of co-operation among the farmers and the securing of more economical methods of marketing, so that the enormous profits of the middlemen may be cut down and the producer be brought closer to the consumer to the mutual advantage of both. In discussing good roads federal aid was recommended for the central market roads with little to be laid out on roads benefiting the few.

The following are the officers for the coming year: Master, C. L. Rice; overseer, C. S. Reinhard; lecturer, George H. R. Brush; steward, A. S. Hassel; assistant steward, J. W. Stoos; chaplain, H. G. Hickok; treasurer, E. May Gillespie of Minneapolis; secretary, L. L. Hockett of Austin; gate keeper, J. A. Swenson; Ceres, Mrs. Anna Ruland; Pomona, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright; Flora, Mrs. A. M. Beech; lady assistant steward, Miss Helen J. Newhall; executive committeemen, W. D. Ames, A. R. Hammergren, H. G. Hickok, Eugene V. Hart; delegates to State Agricultural society, Charles L. Rice, L. L. Hockett, A. R. Hammergren; alternates, C. S. Reinhard, Harry Jones, W. G. Prosser.

Policeman Shot By Horse.

Minneapolis.—J. P. McDonald, traffic policeman, was shot by a horse. McDonald was holding down his allotted section of asphalt at Fifth and Hennepin. On the pavement, unnoticed, lay a 32-20 rifle cartridge. Along came the horse. He stepped on the cartridge, which exploded, the bullet piercing McDonald's heel.

Four Drowned Men Identified.

Boy River.—The four unidentified men who were drowned in Boy River, near this village, Sunday were Louis Larson and Walter Tinde of Moorhead, E. S. Goldamer, Neillsville, Wis., and Fred Krogan, who has made his residence lately at Cass Lake. The bodies were taken to Cass Lake.

Woman Held for Incendiarism.

Le Sueur Center.—Mrs. Hazel Aubuchon of Kasota has been released on $500 bond after being held to the grand jury on a charge of having set fire to her house on the night of Nov. 19. She denies the charge. A farmer who was passing discovered the house on fire and aroused Mrs. Aubuchon and assisted in putting out the flames. Mr. Aubuchon, who is a signal man for the Omaha Railway company, was away from home.

100 DROPS
ALCOHOL—3 PER CENT
A Vegetable Preparation for Assimilating the Food and Regulating the Stomachs and Bowels of
INFANTS CHILDREN
Promotes Digestion, Cheerfulness and Rest. Contains neither Opium, Morphine nor Mineral
NOT NARCOTIC
A perfect Remedy for Constipation, Sour Stomach, Diarrhoea, Worms, Convulsions, Feverishness and LOSS OF SLEEP.
Fac Simile Signature of
THE CENTAUR COMPANY,
NEW YORK.
35 DOSES 35 CENTS
Guaranteed under the Food and
Exact Copy of Wrapper.

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children.
The Kind You Have Always Bought
Bears the Signature of
Chas. H. Fletcher.
In Use For Over Thirty Years
CASTORIA
THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Prepare for a Business Position at Aaker's Business College
Grand Forks or Fargo, by taking a bookkeeping course, or shorthand on the wonderful stenotype machine, or a Gas Tractor and Auto Engineering course. Write today for catalog.
PROF. H. H. AAKER

There is no need of guide posts on the road to ruin.

ERUPTION DISFIGURED FACE

Lock Box 35, Maurice, Ia.—"In the spring of 1911 our little daughter, age five years, had a breaking out on her lip and part of her cheek that we took for ringworm. It resembled a large ringworm, only it differed in that it was covered with watery blisters that itched and burned terribly, made worse by her scratching it. Then the blisters would break through and let out a watery substance. She was very cross and fretful while she had it and had very little rest at night. When the eruption was at its worst the teacher of the school sent her home and would not allow her to attend until the disfigurement of her face was gone.

"I wrote and received a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which we used according to directions, and they gave instant relief, so we bought some more. It gradually grew better. We kept on using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in three or four months the child was entirely cured." (Signed) Mr. Henry Prins, Oct. 22, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Some people never forgive until they break into a padded cell.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist), Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Fargo, N. D.

On the level, did you ever see a woman who was speechless with rage?

A simple remedy against coughs and all throat irritations are Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops—5c at all good Druggists.

Your young physician very speedily acquires a wise look.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle. Adv

A teaspoonful of gossip will taint a kettleful of pure truth.

Your Liver Is Clogged Up
That's Why You're Tired—Out of Sorts—Have No Appetite.
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS will put you right in a few days. They do their duty. Cure Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion and Sick Headache
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

FARMS WANTED
and wild lands. Best System for quick, satisfactory results. Particulars and magazine free. Don't pay big commissions. Desirable property located for purchasers free. WESTERN SALES AGENCY, Dept. A, Minneapolis, Minn.

GO TO WESTERN CANADA NOW
The opportunity of securing free homesteads of 160 acres each, and the low priced lands of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, will soon have passed.
Canada offers a hearty welcome to the Settler, to the man with a family looking for a home; to the farmer's son, to the renter, to all who wish to live under better conditions.
Canada's grain yield in 1913 is the talk of the world. Luxuriant Grasses give cheap fodder for large herds; cost of raising and fattening for market is a trifle.
The sum realized for Beef, Butter, Milk and Cheese will pay fifty per cent on the investment.
Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to
W. E. BLACK
Canadian Government Agt.
160 ACRES FARM IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Fargo Directory

Fargo Tannery
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Mensen, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

DON'T TRY NEW THINGS
Keeley Cure
When you have an old reliable cure that has stood the test for 35 years. Write The Keeley Institute, Box 134, Fargo, N. D., for further information.

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool
to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo, N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.
Pattern of a No. 1 Hide.

Dr. H. W. Allen, Osteopath
Acute and chronic diseases successfully treated. Spinal injuries and irregularities a specialty. Graduate American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo. Offices: 321-322 de Lendrecie Block Fargo N. D.

WE MAKE RUGS
From Your Old Carpets. Write for information.
FARGO CARPET & RUG COMPANY
103 8th Street, South Fargo, North Dakota

Neal 3 Day Cure for the drink habit is a positive and permanent cure. Easy to take. Save time and money by taking the Neal Treatment at 1525 3rd Ave., S., Fargo, N. D. Drug habit cured.

The Nelson Naturopathic Institute
No. 1 Broadway, Fargo, N. D.
The best equipped drugless institute in the northwest. We cure many chronic diseases which have been considered incurable by the medical doctors. Give us a trial. Send for free booklet.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 52–1913.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE
A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year.
Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking.
Next term opens soon. For information address F. L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. High-est references. Best results.

PISO'S REMEDY
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

Fur Coats, $12.50
We tan the hide and make your coat complete for only $12.50. We furnish hide and make coat for $18. A square deal. All work guaranteed. We are the pioneer tanners of cattle and horse hides for coats, robes, rugs, etc. Write for free booklet. Send your orders early.
BAYER TANNING COMPANY
7 S. W. 9th Street Des Moines, Ia.

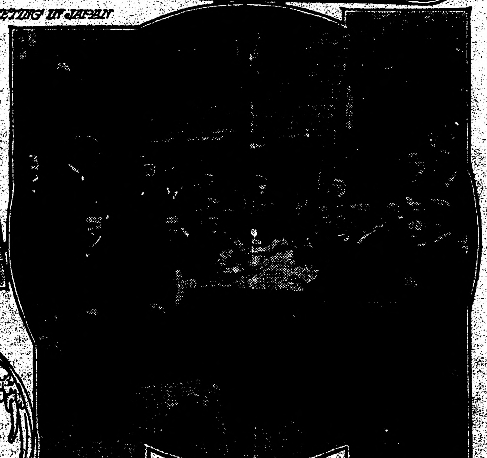
Defective Page

NEW YEARS IN MANY LANDS

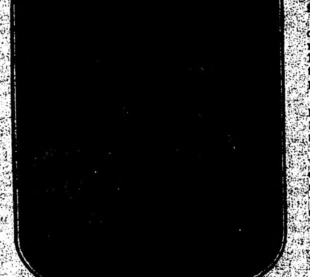
BULGARIAN WOMAN IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE

NEW YEARS GREETING IN JAPAN

ITALIAN FAMILY TAKING NEW YEAR'S OUTING



GERMAN STUDENTS CELEBRATING NEW YEARS



RUSSIAN SOLDIERS CELEBRATING NEW YEARS

NOWHERE does New Year's ceremony mean more than in the land of the little people whose faces have become familiar to us on paper fans. Indeed, from a national point of view, this season is the greatest occasion of the year.

Elaborate preparations are made long in advance. Houses are cleaned inside and out. Doorways are decorated with rice ropes and fern leaves and evergreen. Every housewife buys a pot or two of "prosperous age plant," a miniature pine tree, some bamboo, and some plum twigs, to win for her home by ornaments like these the favor of the jealous deities that guard the future.

The city streets resound with the mallet blows of the dough pounders making "mochi," the Japanese equivalent of plum pudding. All debts are paid. New clothes are bought. There are toys for the children, and picture cards that bring good fortune and are good to dream on when tied securely to the wooden pillow.

O, happy New Year! Day will hardly dawn before each town and village will be stirring. There is so much to do in celebration. First there will come the ceremonial breakfast, when the health of all the family must be drunk in that rice wine called "soni." Then visits must be paid to all acquaintance. Father will wear no more the traditional costume, fantastic and peculiar. For him the frock coat now, of European manufacture. But mother, in her quaint kimono and elaborate headdress, will look just as she has looked on New Year's day since time immemorial.

The children will be decked out in gorgeous colors; they will throng the streets, clattering along on their wooden clogs in pigeon toed but joyful haste, and shouting "Banzai!" to friends and foreigners. In the streets clowns will perform strange antics, exclaiming loudly meanwhile:

"Hail, hail, ye gods of heaven and earth! Significant omens are in the air, and the universe is full of lucky signs."

To accompaniment of flute and drum, two-legged lions will give the "lions' dance" in masque. Strange masqueraders will dart hither and thither through streets and temple gardens.

It will be a happy time for Japanese children. For three glad days every little girl will expect to play her favorite game of shuttlecock and battledore. The boys will fly their brand new kites. The children will play games with brightly colored balls, chanting countless rhymes. Grown people will play New Year's card games. The firemen will give acrobatic exhibitions on their ladders. Every nook and corner of Japan will be in gala dress and gala mood.

Northern France is not far behind Japan in appreciation of the significance of the New Year. There Christmas, so important on our calendar, is scarcely celebrated, except by attendance at midnight mass and by a festal supper. But the last night of the year, the "Vigil of St. Silvestre," calls for observance, and the first day of the new year, "le jour de l'an," or "le jour d'etrene," is dedicated to the renewal of friendship and to general gift giving.

So universal, in fact, has the custom become of giving presents and pretty little souvenirs that the expression "bonne etrene" means good fortune and "mal etrenne" misfortune. Candy and flowers are acceptable gifts in France, but there is only one real rule in the matter—a New Year's gift must not be useful.

In most Scotch households, as in France, New Year's day takes the place of Christmas, an evidence of ancient sympathy when both countries regarded England as a mutual enemy. On the last night of the year, in rural district, groups of men and boys go disguished from house to house singing curious songs, such as this:

Rise up, good wife, and shak' yer feathers.
Dinna think that we are beggars;
We are bairnies come to play.
Rise up and give us hogmanay.

When they have received the cakes and coins they expect they go on to the next place, first, however, having chalked the house, in token of good luck. Next morning all the children get up early and view with wide and interested eyes the blue and white marks that decorate every dwelling in the village.

Scotland is, as well, the land of cakes, and at this season the bakers' shops are filled with toothsome dainties, sugar covered and mottoed in ice.

Germany observes various customs. Calls are made on January 1, and gifts are exchanged; delicious little cakes are eaten in honor of the festal day. Different neighborhoods have characteristic rites and superstitions.

Thus, in the Black Forest a workman likes to work a little bit at his trade the first day of the year, to coax luck in business; most picturesque is the vender of clocks, who sets out to sell one at least of his wares. Munich drinks deep to the health of the season in good Bavarian brew.

Jena, whose people recognize descent from those ancient Germans who believed in a god that brought light and warmth each year into the world to overcome the cold and dark of winter, builds in its public square at New Year's time a great bonfire, which typifies this ever new gift of the genial old deity that loved warmth and gave light.

Thither at midnight the people carry the things they wish to cast out of their lives with the old year.

Fire as a New Year's symbol is favored in Wales, as well. There fires are burned on New Year's day to purify the house for the entrance of a new and gladsome era; and the ashes are kept sacredly from year to year, esteemed for special medicinal virtues.

The ringing of bells to announce the death of the old year and the birth of the new one is common in England and Scotland and in some parts of the United States. In many English churches impressive midnight services are held.

In the dales of Westmoreland it is usual to open the west door to let the old year out and to open the east door to let the new year in.

In England it is still an enjoyable practice to offer a mince pie to every caller during the last week of the old year, for every pie eaten under a different roof represents a happy month during the year to come. Often as January 1 draws near one hears the expression:

"Thanks, I have eaten my twelve, so please excuse me."

What probably is the strangest New Year's rite is held in the Cevennes mountains, in southern France. At the last evening mass of the old year the herds and flocks of the peasantry are gathered before the portico of the little stone church high up on the mountain side and are blessed by the priest and sprinkled with holy water by the acolyte who follows him, in order that that this, the sole wealth of the countryside, may increase and prosper during the year to come.

The sight of the holy hour is wonderful. As the church bell tolls above them the frightened animals bleat and bellow and try madly to escape. First the oxen are blessed, then the cows, next the sheep and lambs, and finally the goats and pigs.

Throughout Europe many delightful customs prevail. In Scandinavia a feast is always prepared for the little birds, which might otherwise go hungry, on account of the deep snows.

In Holland, as in Scotland, the wind is noted with care, because the luck of the year will be determined by the direction whence it blows. The south wind brings heat and fertility, the west wind milk and fish, the north wind cold and storm, and east wind a fruitful season.

In Italy the New Year is a day of greeting and good will and special feasting. Sicilian peasants take advantage of the fete to drive to town in their gay carts, so that the country roads are merry with the music of tinkling bells.

And Swiss folk, practical, industrious, stop their work for the nonce and visit friends, even when they have to carry their babies down the mountain slopes in cradles on their heads.

Bulgaria's heart history is of especial moment just now. On happy New Year's day in Bulgarian villages the small boys run from house to house waving branches of the cornel tree and shouting greetings as they tap all they meet with the luck bringing branches.

Bulgarian girls go through an interesting ceremony in an effort to pry into the secrets of the days to come. On New Year's eve a queen, chosen by lot, guards a kettle full of water, in which both men and maidens have dropped finger rings or some personal trinkets. Till dawn she watches.

Then to an open place in the center of the village she takes the precious kettle, covered with a cloth, a dancing, singing crowd following her. An oracle, who has been selected for eloquence of speech, proclaims successive fortunes. He cries:

"The lucky girl whose ring shall appear shall marry the best man in the village."

The queen of the festival dips her hand into the kettle and brings forth a ring, and its owner receives it from her secure in the belief that good luck betides her matrimonially before another New Year.

GETTING BACK.

"Why do you insist on trying to sell me beefsteak and beans and buckwheat cakes?" demanded the barber. "I told you all I wanted was two fried eggs."

"Well, I was in your shop yesterday," retorted the restaurant man. "All I wanted was a shave, but you bulldozed me into a shampoo, a foam fizz, and a tonic rub."

A SAD AWAKENING.

"Warden, where are my flowers? Give me those flowers."

"Those flowers are for an embezzler in the next cell."

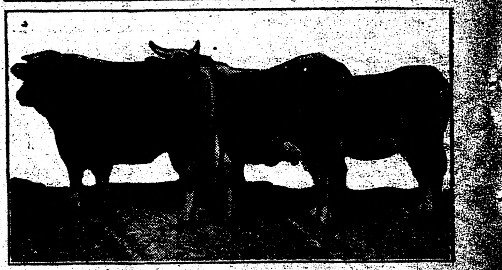
"Flowers for an embezzler, with a murderer in the same jail? A life of crime is not what I was led to expect."

NOT DIFFICULT.

"I wish I could do something startling," said Gladys Gloom, sick unto death with ennui.

"Well, Gladys, that is easily accomplished," said her close friend, Bella Blazes. "Go back to that little old-fashioned town where you were born and smoke a cigarette on the public square."

VARIETY OF FEED FOR THE FARM CATTLE



The Improved Animal That Has Inherited Fixed Characteristics Is the Best Machine for Converting Farm Crops Into Beef. Good Beef Type of Cattle.

(By M. ROBERTS CONOVER.)

To lay in a supply of winter food for the family and neglect to cater to the family cow is an oversight which retaliates upon the owner straightway with unerring accuracy, for the milch cow measures to her owner in proportion as he metes out to her materials from which she is to maintain her own strength and vitality and produce a good flow of milk.

The demand of her body for greater warmth during the winter months make it necessary that she be in first-class condition—fat and sleek.

An abundance of food which not only aids in maintaining her bodily warmth, but is of a nature to wet the appetite to its keenest, is essential to keep the milch flow at its best.

Like other domestic animals, cattle enjoy variety. The available food-material on a well-conducted farm affords this. Clover and timothy hay, oat-hay, cornstalks, cowpeas, bran, a quantity of undersized, unmarketable apples, potatoes, squashes, beets and carrots are a delight to the healthy cow.

Where one has not the facilities for supplying ensilage, the vegetables and fruits mentioned above are a most excellent substitute.

Turnips, cabbage and strong-flavored vegetables are also relished by this family cow, and are very wholesome, but as they give an unpleasant flavor to the milk they cannot be admitted to her diet.

Decayed or moldy fruit or vegetables should, needless to state, be rejected. The seeds should be removed from squashes and pumpkins, as they tend to diminish the flow of milk.

In order that the food be wholesome and nutritious, it must be stored under approved conditions.

Hay, well-cured, keeps in a mow or a loft with plenty of bottom ventilation. Stalks are usually ricked out-of-doors. This is satisfactory if they are thoroughly dry when ricked, and so tightly packed that those underneath are thoroughly protected by the sloping outside layers.

Apples should be kept just above the freezing point in the cellar, if possible; potatoes at a temperature of 40 degrees, and squash in a dry place where they will not freeze.

The squashes should be fed early in the winter, as under ordinary storage conditions they cannot be depended upon for long keeping.

Of the apples, the culls of the early winter varieties are, of course, first used. Those of the Salisbury and the longer-keeping varieties may be reserved for later feeding.

A bran mash, with chopped beets or carrots stirred into it, is a great treat, and is a beneficial form of feeding which should be offered occasionally. Be sure that the bran or meal offered to the cow is sweet and good, or trouble may result.

The cornstalks may be fed once a day, and clover or oat-hay at another meal; the meal of the day being the bran-and-vegetable mixture.

Squashes and large beets should always be partly cut up, as they are difficult for a cow to manage when whole.

KILL WEED SEEDS BY USING A SILO

Do Not Retain Sufficient Vitality to Germinate in Spring, Says Missouri Expert.

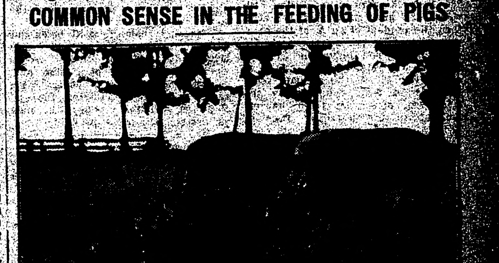
That the seeds of the common field weeds when ensiloed with corn, peas or any forage used as silage will not retain sufficient vitality to germinate in the spring when returned to the land mixed with manure, is the belief of E. B. Hart, chief agricultural chemist of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin, and A. L. Stone, state seed inspector.

While there are no experiments on record with regard to the combined chemical action of silage and manure on the germination of seeds, it is quite likely that there is little danger of seeding valuable fields with noxious weeds in this manner. As an added precaution the storing of manure under a shed is, because of the fermentation taking place in the compost heap, to be advocated as a sure means of destroying any weed seeds contained therein.

Trichinosis Danger.

Danish researches show that the death of cats and dogs because of trichinosis is very common. Dead bodies, therefore, should be disposed of in a way that will effectually prevent other animals from being contaminated.

COMMON SENSE IN THE FEEDING OF PIGS



A Fine Duroc-Jersey Litter.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

A mistake that we often make is that we wean our pigs too young. I believe in getting the little pigs started off to eat at three or four weeks old, and there is nothing better than a little milk and shorts to get them started. Then feed them liberally, and by the time you wean them at eight or ten weeks old you have a big, strong, lusty pig.

I am satisfied that a great many of our people lose all the profit in the business by the way they handle the pigs at weaning-time. I am a strong believer in raising little pigs out in the open. Of course you must have shelter for them in storms, and for feeding purposes, but let them have access to the earth; keep them on the ground, and give them green food, and you will get them to develop bone and muscle, and a strong stomach.

They are always on their feed and always at their feed. I like to have them out on a clover pasture, or on peas and rape. For later pasture rape gives satisfactory results. Of course you must feed the pigs reasonably at the same time.

We all know that for economic production a mixture of several grains fed together, will give better results than any one grain fed alone.

I cannot lay down a hard and fast rule. Some seasons oats might be very satisfactory, but if you get such a combination as high-priced oats it would be foolish to advocate them, especially when we have to purchase our feed.

During the winter months, in a root-growing country, I believe roots are a good food and should compose a large portion of the ration, and I believe in boiling the roots and feeding some grain.

Do not load them up with a great lot of water, feed the roots in rather a thick batter, and mix in your shorts and middlings, and whatever grain you might happen to have. For the larger pigs pulp the roots and feed the meal sprinkled on. I like to take the chill off the food, and always see that the pigs clean the trough up, leaving no material in them.

A great many people make the mistake of having food left in the troughs. Pay particular attention to cleanliness, have dry beds, and give them dry straw to lie on.

In the winter months give them wood ashes and charcoal, and sod or earth of some kind. Earth seems to be absolutely necessary to keep the digestive organs in good condition. Milk is one of the best things for a pig. Nothing lengthens them out like milk, if properly handled.

The Robinson Diamonds

An Audacious Hazard of Nikolai, Independent Agent, as Related by His Lieutenant, Summers

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman)

This is the first of a series of stories, each complete in itself, which narrate the tremendously exciting adventures of Nikolai—a sort of modern Robin Hood who calls himself a "leveler of fortunes." The clever device by which he restored the Robinson Diamonds to their rightful owner is the subject of the present tale.

I think there must be some malign Providence that sends our enemies across our paths just when we think that we have put them out of our lives forever. How else can one account for the meeting between Sir Julius Robinson and Mary Boyd?

It happened aboard the Linlithgow, one of the older vessels of the Atlantic passenger fleet. There were not many of us, and we soon became intimate. The man in my cabin was, I fancied, a Russian or Austrian by birth; he called himself Baron Nikolai and seemed possessed of unlimited wealth. Sir Julius Robinson and Van Aam were South African diamond magnates about to pay a visit to America in order to float some company, and after the lights were turned out in the smoking room the four of us played poker into the small hours of the morning in Sir Julius' cabin. Nikolai always won; afterward, when our association had become close, I learned that cards were one means whereby he made his living. But that is neither here nor there; if he took from the rich, he had supreme compassion for the poor. Indeed, he posed as a sort of Robin Hood, called himself, whimsically, a leveler of fortunes, and claimed his own share as middleman in these transactions.

Sir Julius and Mary Boyd met on the deck the second morning. I saw the fat man grow pale; he put one hand out to steady himself against the rail of the ship, and as the girl swept by, not deigning to notice him, he looked after her with a scowl. It was Mary herself who told me of the circumstances later.

It was a very simple story. Her father had been one of the first discoverers of diamonds in the river Vaal. Robinson and he had been partners; when Boyd fell sick of typhoid fever Robinson possessed himself of his claim through some legal chicanery. Boyd emerged from the hospital to find himself penniless. His wife died in privation not long afterward, and Mary was adopted by a poor family of the district. She educated herself, became a school teacher, fell in love with a visiting American, and was now on her way to Savannah, the terminal port of call, to marry him.

Meanwhile Robinson, grasping his stolen prize, had flourished. He became a millionaire, was knighted, and had put Mary Boyd out of his recollections.

When Nikolai heard the story his eyes blazed.

"I have learned one thing in the course of my experience, Summers," he said to me. "No man can sin and get away with it. Somehow, somewhere, Robinson will make restitution."

"Who will compel him if the courts can't?" I asked.

"I will!" he cried.

It was on that same evening that Robinson, insolent and flushed with wine, pulled from the inside of his shirt a silken cord at the end of which was hung a chamois leather bag. He tossed it on the table and opened it. A handful of brilliant pebbles tumbled out.

"Do you fellows know what these are?" he hiccoughed.

"Uncut diamonds," replied Van Aam sharply. "Put them away and don't be a fool, Robinson."

"Why shouldn't I be a fool if I want to?" demanded the millionaire. "I got the coin, ain't I? Can't I be a fool if it amuses me? Yes, diamonds, gentlemen; uncut, but worth a cool half million. These are my samples, and if I can't float the biggest capitalized company in the trade on the strength of them, why I'll pitch them into the sea. No, I won't either—I'll hang them around pretty Mary Boyd's neck for a love gift."

I longed to break his own neck. Nikolai nudged me under the table and, looking up, I saw him frown slightly. I understood the warning; I knew that he had conceived some scheme which I must not spoil by precipitate action.

"Worth a cool half million, gentlemen," went on the millionaire, gathering up his samples. "Pounds—not dollars. Sometime I'll tell you how I jumped old man Boyd's claim when he was sick. I s'pose Mary's painted me as black as Satan to you; what? Well, if I hadn't jumped his claim he'd have jumped mine. Ain't all fair in business?" He took the last stone in his hand and toyed with it thoughtfully. "I'd give this to Mary for one kiss," he mumbled, "but I know she wouldn't do it. She's hounded me for years and hates me like poison because I wont be blackmailed. She'd want more than one—two, I reckon."

"Shut up, Jule," said Van Aam, kicking him. "You've had too much champagne."

The ship was rolling heavily in the trough of the seas. It was the end of the tenth day; on the next we might look for land. As I turned into my cabin I fancied that I smelled smoke, but I was dog tired from the long play, and must have undressed and tumbled into bed without knowing what I was doing, for the next thing that I remembered, after turning the handle of our door, was hearing the sound of hurrying feet above us. The next minute Nikolai was shaking me by the shoulder.

"Wake up," he cried. "The ship's afire."

I sprang to my feet in panic, and as I did so I heard confused cries and shouting outside; then screams of women wakened from sleep by that most dreadful of sea tragedies. As I opened the door a cloud of acrid smoke rushed in. Nikolai closed the door and restrained me with one hand.

"Take your time, Summers," he said. "It's still below decks; there's plenty of time. They aren't even getting out the lifeboats yet."

I dressed in a hurry, threw my overcoat over me and hastened out with my companion. We had to fight our way through the smoke, and the floors were noticeably warm beneath our feet. On the deck I cannoned into Sir Julius.

"What shall I do?" he whimpered, clutching at my arm, and I saw that his face was gray with fear. "The ship's afire. We shall all be drowned."

"There's plenty of water to put it out," said Nikolai sardonically, looking down at the heaving sea. "By the way, where are those diamonds, Robinson?"

"They're here," gasped the millionaire, placing one pudgy hand upon his breast. "I'll give you all if you will save my life." He had nothing over his pajamas but a long mackintosh, covering him from throat to knees, and carpet slippers. At his side stood Van Aam, perfectly cool and collected, smoking a cigar. He was as spruce as though he had just dressed for dinner. All around us women were huddled upon the deck; beneath us the steerage passengers kept up a constant outcry. The officers were guarding the lifeboats—which were being provisioned. From the afterhatch a dense black cloud rolled up.

"Your first visit to the States?" said Van Aam to me, coolly. "Yes? You'll enjoy these parts. I own an interest in a summer hotel on one of the Georgian islands. We can't be far from shore. Look at Sir Julius!"

"I thought you were a South African," I said.

"I am," he answered. "But I've spent several summers in America of late, and Sir Julius is coming for the first time under my escort. By Jove, look at Miss Boyd!"

I saw Mary Boyd descending the gangway. She was completely dressed, and, save that her hair was unfastened, she might have been preparing to go ashore at port. As she passed us, calm enough in the face of the ever increasing danger, I heard Nikolai say to the millionaire:

"You will give all your diamonds if I save your life?"

"Yes, yes," cried the millionaire, who was leaning, with a sea-sick expression, against the rail, enviously watching the nearest lifeboat. "How can you do it? Can't you get me a special lifeboat, with a crew, and come with me? We four—and my man. Surely the captain will do that for me."

Nikolai took him by the shoulder and shook him as a terrier shakes a rat.

"You hound!" he roared. "Do you want to leave the rest to perish? Do you think a man will enter the boats before the women are safe? Robinson," he continued, more kindly, "our chances are desperate ones. Do a just act before you die; restore those diamonds to Miss Boyd."

I looked round. Mary was standing quietly beside me.

"But how do you know we won't be saved after all?" asked Julius cunningly. "The law can't touch me."

"My poor fellow, there are other kinds of laws where you are going," Nikolai answered. And even as the words left his lips there came a roaring sound, a spurt of flame, and the afterhatch disappeared in a geyser of fire.

"All hands man the boats!" roared the captain; fifty sailors sprang forward and began to swing the boats free from their lashings. There was a universal cry; men started forward; the officers drew their revolvers and the cowards slunk back again.

"Let him keep his stones," said Mary with quiet contempt. "I have no need for that sort of restitution."

"But if he gives them freely—" began Nikolai.

"I will not take his gifts."

"But if he barters them or sells them to you—"

Mary looked at him doubtfully. A lane was formed in front of us and the women were passed into the boat. The men followed. The millionaire, Van Aam, Mary and I found ourselves together in the bow. It began to descend. Julius, reduced to a cowering heap of fear, crouched against the gunwale. I remember seeing the sea heave toward us—and then—

We were all in the water, and at the same instant every porthole became ablaze. The fire had reached the cargo, which consisted largely of sulphur and nitre. A violent explosion followed. Whether this or the fall stunned me I do not know, but I opened my eyes to see, high over my head, the lifeboat hanging by one rope from the side of the sinking ship, while close at my side swam Nikolai, supporting Mary. I understood what happened immediately. The ropes had refused to work; one had broken, and all had been flung into the water. I must have been swimming for some time before recovering consciousnes, for all this passed through my brain as some horrible moving picture play. When I regained full possession of my faculties I found myself clinging to a small water-cask that floated at my side, tossing like a cork upon the waves. The ship had disappeared and under the light of the stars the sea looked inky black and void of life. Had all except myself perished? As the thought flashed through my mind I heard myself hailed, and, looking round saw Nikolai, not twelve feet away, clinging to the side of an empty lifeboat, one arm supporting Mary.

"Swim to the other side and climb in while I steady her," he called.

I struck out with the cask, climbed in with difficulty and hauled in the cask after me. Then I helped Nikolai in with the half-conscious girl. The oars were still in the boat, but the provisions were gone; evidently this was the one that had broken loose from the vessel at the moment of the catastrophe. As we sank back exhausted upon the bottom a feeble voice cried to us from the waters.

We seized the oars and pulled with a will. In a few moments we reached a man clinging to a spar; it was Van Aam, and with one hand he supported the puffy face of Sir Julius.

"I had to stun him to keep him from pulling me under," he said, as we hoisted him in. "But he was too fat to sink. Now all together!"

We got the millionaire into the boat, but that was our last effort. We drifted to and fro upon the face of the sea until day broke, disclosing a long, flat coast-line not five miles away.

Sir Julius, who since recovering consciousness had been alternately praying and weeping, sat up and pointed.

"Thank God, we're saved; we're off Georgia," he cried.

Van Aam laughed sarcastically.

"I wish it were," he said. "That's one of the Caymans, an uninhabited cluster of coral isles covered with jungle. Our troubles are only commencing."

"But we've got food," said the millionaire. "We can signal to passing ships."

Then, looking round, his eye fell upon the water cask.

"Where's breakfast?" he demanded peevishly. "We ain't in such bad straits after all, but I'm devilish hungry. Got any eggs?"

"Sir Julius Robinson," said Nikolai, tapping the fat millionaire upon the shoulder, "all the eggs you are likely to get during the next few weeks are turtles' eggs—raw."

"Ain't you got any food?" asked Julius, bewildered.

"Take up that oar and pull, or we'll toss you overboard," shouted Nikolai savagely.

The millionaire attempted to obey. But his flabby hands could hardly hold the handle, and Van Aam snatched it from him impatiently and gave it to Miss Boyd. She pulled bravely, and soon we began to draw nearer to the shore. After several hours of work under a burning sun we beached the boat upon a shore of dense and impenetrable jungle.

"And now to make a camp," said Nikolai. He had taken command as if by right, and no one questioned him. He assaigned Van Aam to gather wood from the jungle—happily I had a silver box full of matches which had escaped wetting; to myself he gave the task of gathering turtles' eggs from the shore; he announced his intention of ascending a peak which was visible some miles away through the jungle in order to investigate our surroundings. It was generally agreed that we must have landed upon one of the uninhabited and inhospitable Caymans.

I was lucky in my search and came back with several turtles' eggs; I also discovered a pelican colony and located several nests of young. These would serve us at a pinch, though the flesh would be as unpleasant as that of most sea-birds.

When I returned I found the fire merrily blazing and Mary in charge of the camp. Sir Julius lay stretched out on his back groaning. Nikolai, who returned a few minutes after me, announced that we appeared to have landed upon a large island, and that he had found no trace of water. However, our cask contained enough to last us, with care, for several days. We broiled the turtles' eggs and sat down to our unappetizing meal. Then Sir Julius rose with alacrity and stretched out his hand toward the pot.

"Turtles' eggs, hey?" he said sniffing. "Well, they don't look so bad. I'll take that one."

"You'll get breakfast in the morning if you work for it," said Nikolai.

"What?" shrieked Sir Julius, "are you thieves going to leave me to starve? Ain't I one of the party?"

"Sir Julius," said Nikolai with a bow, "you can gather all the turtle's eggs you can find in the morning and have them for yourself—"

"Raw," I interrupted. "The matches belong to me."

"Damn you," snarled the millionaire. "I could buy fifty such puppies as you."

"You can buy your share of the meal," said Nikolai.

The millionaire's features relaxed into a sour smile. "Oh, trying to hold me up, hey?" he said. "Well, I haven't got my checkbook here, but you can charge it up against me. How much a day? Laundry included?"

"One diamond a meal," said Nikolai blandly.

Sir Julius turned livid; he clutched at his neck where hung the chamois bag suspended from the cord.

"You don't get anything," he shouted. "That's a nice trick to play on a man. Because I've got a few precious stones—"

"I want nothing," said Nikolai. "Miss Boyd is the hostess here. Diamonds are nothing but crystallized carbon. As you are aware, Sir Julius, they have no intrinsic value apart from their relation to other commodities. In Maiden Lane or Kimberly they bring good prices; here they are worth exactly one turtle's egg for the smaller ones and one turtle's egg and a drink of water for the finer stones."

Sir Julius detached the bag and picked out a tiny stone.

"Here! Give me a turtle's egg," he snarled.

Nikolai picked out the smallest egg and handed it to the millionaire with a bow. While Sir Julius devoured it greedily, Nikolai turned the diamond over to Miss Boyd.

"We have a new boarder," he said. "Please accept his meal ticket in advance."

Mary took the diamond with a smile. When the millionaire had concluded his meal he bought a drink with another stone.

"How many more have you?" asked Van Aam, laughing.

"Twenty-four," answered Sir Julius with a snarl.

"Three a day," mused Van Aam, "and one for lodging—unless Sir Julius prefers to sleep outside the campfire among the raccoons. That will last six days. Perhaps by that time we shall find some manner of reaching a more hospitable shore."

"Nikolai," said Van Aam, when the millionaire had departed wrathfully to pace up and down the sandy beach and battle with his emotions, "where do you think we are? This is not one of the Caymans. There is no scrap of coral formation. We must be north of the coral limit—that would mean in the latitude of the Bahamas."

He ceased and sprang to his feet suddenly. "Come with me, Nikolai," he cried. "I want to speak to you. Quick, before it grows dark. We have some walking to do."

They did not return until after sunset. Then they were both chuckling.

"Miss Boyd and Mr. Summers," said Nikolai, "excuse this mirth in the presence of such danger. But really we have a joke too exquisite to be shared. How long will it take our stout friend to dispose of his diamonds?"

"Six days," said Mary, smiling.

"And you promise to keep them?"

"Yes," said Mary, her face suddenly becoming serious. "Yes, I will. Do you know he tried to push me out of the boat when they lowered it from the deck?"

Nikolai clenched his fists. "It's a pity we can't leave him here to rot," he muttered. "But after all we have some sort of human duty toward him."

"The worst of it is," said Van Aam, "that we shall have to stay in this confounded place until he has passed over his board."

"Have you seen a ship?" I cried.

Van Aam and Nikolai looked at one another and laughed.

"Well," said Van Aam, "the secret will keep six days, won't it?"

That night Sir Julius paid out another diamond for his lodging, and his raucous snores, interpersed with groans as he tossed from side to side upon the stony ground, kept most of us awake until the sun rose.

We exacted a tribute in advance that day, and when Sir Julius in a last attempt to save his gems offered to work for his living, we sent him off for turtles' eggs. We watched him wander off into the jungle and peer into the trees; that effort was too much for him, and thereafter he lay at home in sullen silence while we went off on our expeditions.

But not to gather turtles' eggs. At evening Van Aam and Nikolai disappeared, returning on the following morning when the sun was well up over the trees. They called to Mary and myself to follow them, and, leaving the millionaire sitting despairingly beneath the thorn shrubs, we hastened to a tiny glade beside a trickling rivulet, where we found spread out upon the grass a first-class banquet. There was a ham, two loaves of fresh bread, a pound of butter, clean napkins, and, to crown all, a bottle of champagne.

"Fall to, fall to," said Van Aam, inviting us to the feast. "When you are satisfied the mystery shall be entirely explained."

Even our curiosity could not overcome our hunger. Two days' diet of turtles' eggs had sickened us of that staple food for all time. When, at last, we laid our napkins aside we rose and followed our companions through a narrow path in the jungle. A mile ahead we emerged into a clearing! we heard the sound of the sea; and all at once, rounding a promontory, there appeared before our astonished gaze—

"My little hotel—my latest investment," said Van Aam proudly, pointing to an immense five-story erection, covering some half an acre, set in the middle of spacious grounds.

"Then we are—" I gasped.

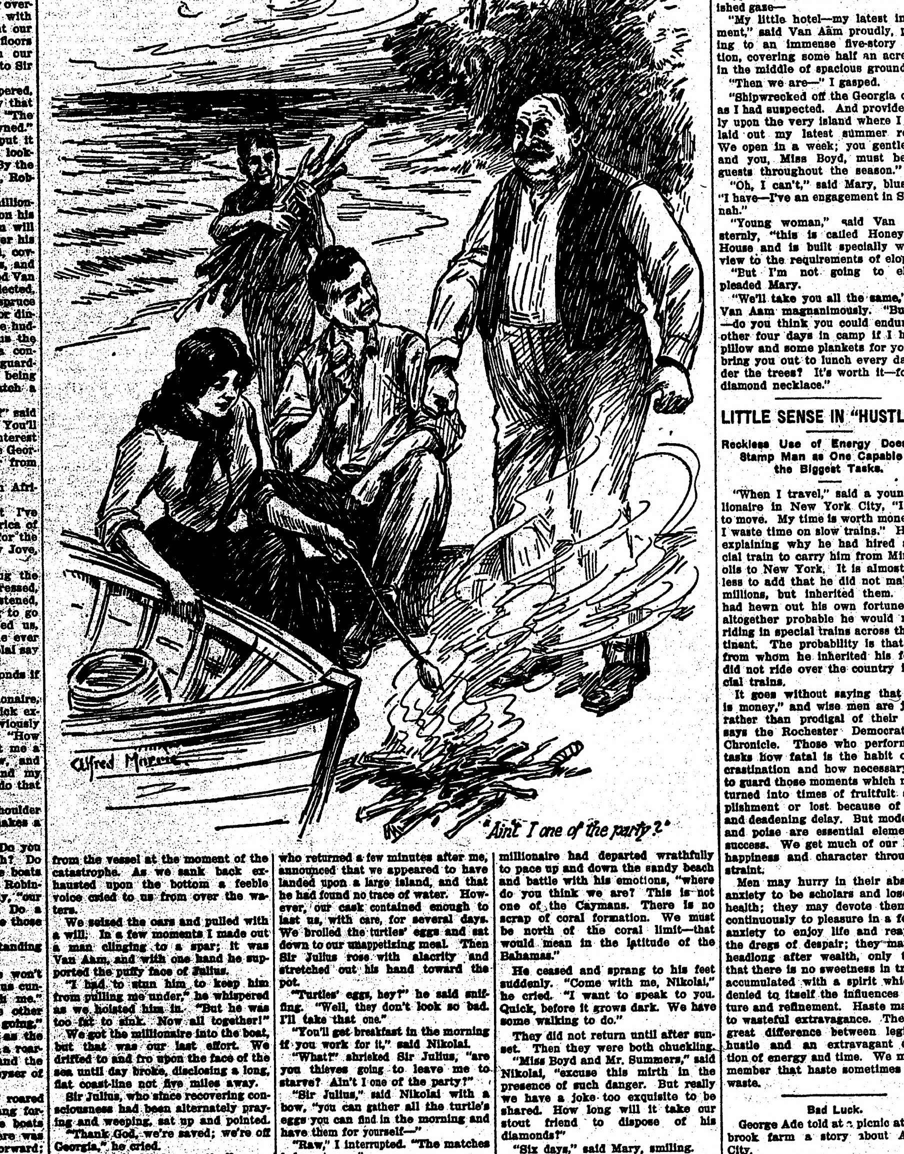
"Shipwrecked off the Georgia coast, as I had suspected. And providentially upon the very island where I have laid out my latest summer resort. We open in a week; you gentlemen, and you, Miss Boyd, must be my guests throughout the season."

"Oh, I can't," said Mary, blushing. "I have—I've an engagement in Savannah."

"Young woman," said Van Aam sternly, "this is called Honeymoon House and is built specially with a view to the requirements of elopers."

"But I'm not going to elope," pleaded Mary.

"We'll take you all the same," said Van Aam magnanimously. "But say—do you think you could endure another four days in camp if I hide a pillow and some blankets for you and bring you out to lunch every day under the trees? It's worth it—for the diamond necklace."



"Ain't I one of the party?"

LITTLE SENSE IN "HUSTLING"

Reckless Use of Energy Does Not Stamp Man as One Capable of the Biggest Tasks.

"When I travel," said a young millionaire in New York City, "I want to move. My time is worth money and I waste time on slow trains." He was explaining why he had hired a special train to carry him from Minneapolis to New York. It is almost needless to add that he did not make his millions, but inherited them. If he had hewn out his own fortune, it is altogether probable he would not be riding in special trains across the continent. The probability is that those from whom he inherited his fortune did not ride over the country in special trains.

It goes without saying that "time is money," and wise men are jealous rather than prodigal of their hours, says the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle. Those who perform big tasks how fatal is the habit of procrastination and how necessary it is to guard those moments which may be turned into times of fruitful accomplishment or lost because of waste and deadening delay. But moderation and poise are essential elements of success. We get much of our health, happiness and character through restraint.

Men may hurry in their absorbing anxiety to be scholars and lose their health; they may devote themselves continuously to pleasure in a feverish anxiety to enjoy life and reap only the dregs of despair; they may rush headlong after wealth, only to find that there is no sweetness in treasure accumulated with a spirit which has denied to itself the influences of culture and refinement. Haste may lead to wasteful extravagance. There is a great difference between legitimate hustle and an extravagant dissipation of energy and time. We must remember that haste sometimes makes waste.

Bad Luck.

George Ade told at a picnic at Hazelbrook farm a story about Atlantic City.

"A young fellow," he said, "went to Atlantic City, had a gay time, and at the end of his vacation eloped with an Altoona girl.

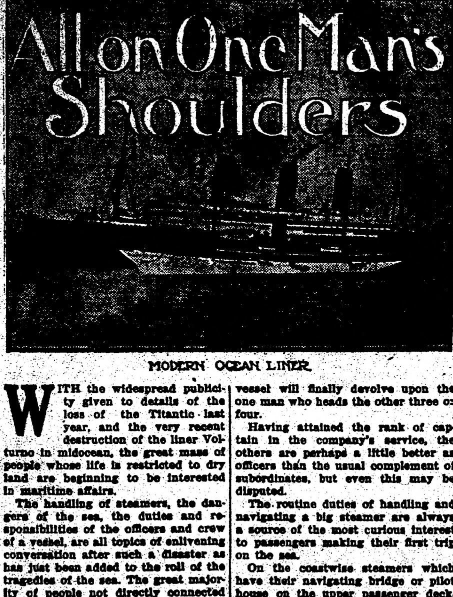
"Several years later the Altoona girl, now his wife, said to him during a quarrel:

"'You were bright and sweet enough that summer at Atlantic City, you old bear! I'd just like to know how many girls you made love to at the hotel before you took to me!'

"'Twelve,' the man groaned; 'but I didn't thing to count 'em up till it was too late.'"

Defective Page

All on One Man's Shoulders



MODERN OCEAN LINER.

WITH the widespread publicity given to details of the loss of the Titantic last year, and the very recent destruction of the liner Volturno in midocean, the great mass of people whose life is restricted to dry land are beginning to be interested in maritime affairs.

The handling of steamers, the dangers of the sea, the duties and responsibilities of the officers and crew of a vessel, are all topics of enlivening conversation after such a disaster as has just been added to the roll of the tragedies of the sea. The great majority of people not directly connected with maritime affairs have a very slight frequently erroneous idea of these matters.

Conflicting reports of well-meaning survivors, who give testimony of a very few facts of the wreck or disaster which they have been through, tend only to confuse the reader who is seeking for reasons and facts. The reticence of surviving officers does not help to make things any plainer.

Another feature which retards the general spread of knowledge about nautical affairs is the failure of seafaring men to realise that things which seem like a-b-c to themselves are absolutely foreign to the understanding of the average landsman.

Hero or Coward.

According to the reports which circulate after any marine disaster, the captain is either held up as a hero or cursed as a coward. Yet when the majority of people have forgotten the case, a well-informed, sober-minded body of men acting as a board of inquiry and wading through a mass of testimony get down to a few kernels of established facts.

And the truth is usually found that the captain was merely trying to carry out his duty as the master of his vessel.

If he holds back a mob of frenzied passengers at the point of a revolver from committing suicide by piling into the small boats in hundreds, he is merely doing what any police officer on our city streets would do if a calamity of similar nature threatened on his beat.

The captain of a vessel is the master in fact as well as in name. On the high seas his orders are law and the courts of the nations uphold him. Any refusal on the part of the crew of a vessel to do their duty as ordered by the master may be construed as mutiny.

In the older days of the sailing vessels and long trips, the powers of the captain were often abused and frequently crews were compelled to endure tremendous and even incredible abuses. In more recent times no captain dares seriously to misuse his authority, for, while a refusal to perform duties on board ship still constitutes mutiny and is severely punished as such, a sailing master can also be made answerable for illegal acts committed at sea.

With much authority the captain of a vessel also has to bear a similar measure of responsibility. No matter what happens on his ship or to it, this one man must answer for it.

On one of the thousand-foot monster steamers which now rip their way across the Atlantic in a trifle over four days, this means not only the navigation of the boat, but also a detailed knowledge of the condition and working of every piece of equipment on board, the executive control of a large force of men and the safety and happiness of a thousand or more passengers.

When a vessel is lost the master, if he happens to come out alive, is pretty sure to lose his license. Although the loss may appear to have been unavoidable, the unfortunate captain is very likely to be sidetracked to some minor berth, if he doesn't lose his papers outright.

This probably explains why so many shipmasters, especially elderly ones, finding their vessels piled up on the shore or sinking, have quietly gone to their cabins and escaped the admiralty court via the 32-caliber method.

Never Touches the Wheel.

The unprecedented growth in dimensions and speed of ocean liners in the past 20 years has greatly increased the burden of responsibility that is placed upon the commanders of these ships. So acute has this situation become that the largest steamship companies are trying to meet it by having several captains under a commander or commodore upon their newest ships.

Yet marine authorities admit that this action does not help matters much, for the responsibility for the vessel will finally devolve upon the one man who heads the other three or four.

Having attained the rank of captain in the company's service, the others are perhaps a little better as officers than the usual complement of subordinates, but even this may be disputed.

The routine duties of handling and navigating a big steamer are always a source of the most curious interest to passengers making their first trip on the sea.

On the coastwise steamers which have their navigating bridge or pilot house on the upper passenger deck, the officers are often annoyed beyond the limit of their patience by passengers whose curiosity leads them to crowd about the windows of the pilothouse and ask numberless questions.

On the larger ocean steamers this bother is avoided because the bridge from which the vessel is controlled is built well apart from the passenger accommodations.

In the popular mind the captain's job is to steer the vessel from one port to the other. So it is, in a manner, but not in the way that the landsman believes.

On anything larger than a harbor excursion steamer the captain is seldom seen to touch his hand to the wheel that controls the rudder. Neither does his first officer or other navigating officers. A petty officer ranked as a "quartermaster" is engaged for that particular duty.

These men have practically no other duties and really have little to do with the actual navigating of the ship. They are given a certain "course" to steer, by the senior officers, who know the vessel's position and how she should be headed to reach her proper destination.

This ability to find the way across an ocean absolutely devoid of tracks or guide posts is one of the greatest mysteries to the uninitiated. Navigation is really a highly complicated science, requiring the use of astronomical principles and the higher mathematics.

But it has been so simplified by the use of rules and formulas, and by the publication of elaborate tables that masters are able to find their position at sea with the "sextant" or "hogyoke," as it is familiarly called, as accurately as an accomplished mathematician could.

The sextant is an instrument of great precision, with which the navigator is able to measure the angle between the horizon and any heavenly body, sun or stars. He also makes use of a very accurate chronometer, or clock, which keeps Greenwich time.

With these two instruments and his tables and formulas he can get the latitude and longitude of his vessel at frequent intervals. In the hours or days between observations the vessel is navigated by compass, and her distance measured by a patent log which records the miles traveled. Her direction and progress from the last "observed" position are plotted on the chart so that her officers can point at any instant to the exact position of the ship.

Worth the Price.

The bore had his feet on the table and was smoking one of the lawyer's good cigars while he discussed various subjects of no particular interest.

"I have heard it said," remarked the lawyer, "that if you loan a man money you make an enemy of him for life."

"Shouldn't wonder," returned the bore.

"That he will avoid you ever afterward."

"That's the way it generally works, I believe."

The lawyer produced his pocketbook.

"I couldn't get you to accept a loan of five dollars could I?" he asked.

But the bore, being a bore, never saw the point, and thus the brilliant scheme went for naught.

Evidently Not a Rover.

Removal day has never troubled Mr. James Smith Woodside of Birse, Aberdeen, Scotland, who is eighty-five years of age, is still in the same house in which he was born, and sleeps on the same oak bedstead on which he was born. He is very active for his age, and is a keen gardener.

Fire!

Harry—They say that Belle has had more proposals than all the other girls in town.

Larry—You see, she fans every spark into a regular old flame.—Dartmouth Jack o' Lantern.

NEW FIGHTING RULES

Boxing Regarded as a Staple Sport in Australia.

Everything Pertaining to Pugilism Thrashed Out Thoroughly and Many Evils of Pastime Rectified.

That boxing is regarded as a staple sport in Australia is evinced by the fact that a conference of sporting authorities was held in the City of Sydney for the purpose of framing rules beneficial to the game, writes W. W. Naughton in the Chicago Examiner.

A certain degree of eclat was lent to the occasion by the presence of H. D. Morton, speaker of the legislative assembly, who opened the proceedings and then vacated the chair in favor of H. Y. Braddon.

Everything pertaining to glove fighting was thrashed out thoroughly, and many of the evils of the pastime, as Australians saw them, were rectified when the conference got down to framing rules. As many of the new regulations will be of interest to American pugilists who intend trying their luck in Australia, a digest of the work of the conference may not be out of place.

The new scale of weights runs as follows:

Bantam, 118 pounds; feather, 126; lightweight, 135; welterweight, 147; middleweight, 160; mid-heavy, 175; heavyweight, any weight, which presumably means any weight above 175.

In all contests in Australia weight must be made at the ringside, and it is explained that this means "within one hour of the advertised beginning of the contest."

This is an entirely new construction of ringside weighing, by the way, and it will burn more quickly into the intelligence of American ring men when it is told to them that they must weigh "one hour before."

Here is an interesting rule framed by the conference:

"The Australian championships shall be contests boxed in Australia, and where a boxer from another country having a 12 months' residential qualification defeats an Australian in an Australian championship he shall only be the holder of the championship while resident in the country, and on his departure the championship shall revert back to the previous holder."

This may or may not have been worded thuswise at the suggestion of the Land Settlement League of Australia, but anyhow it is explicit. You can't bring Australian championships away as souvenirs.

In many other respects the new rules follow the lines of the old Queensberry regulations, the latter being extended and amplified to suit Australian requirements.

The five-ounce glove of pugilistic commerce is discarded for the six-ounce mitten, and the number of seconds in a man's corner is limited to four. These henchmen are forbidden to "coach, assist in any manner, advise their principal during the rounds or enter the ring during the progress of a contest. By offending against these rules they will cause disqualification of their principal by the referee."

Contestants are warned against hitting in clinches, and a clinch is defined as a condition which exists when "both men are holding with one or both hands."

Infighting is tabooed, and it is left to the referee to determine what constitutes infighting. Such being the case, it will be as well for boxers to engage in a match to interview the referee before tearing loose.

Here is how a knockout is defined:

"A knockout shall be counted (a) when a contestant is knocked down and is not on his feet ready to resume boxing in ten seconds from the time he is knocked down, (b) when a contestant's towel is thrown in while he is taking the count, (c) should a contest be stopped by the referee or any official owing to a contestant not being considered in a fit condition to continue as a result of punishment he has received."

There was quite an argument as to whether the referee should hold court in the ring or outside of it. Finally, by a small majority, it was decided that the referee's place is where the blows are flying thickest, and that it is wrong to have him propped up on a bench like a British justice of the peace.

It would be as well for American pugilists afflicted with the wanderlust to study these rules, for the excuse "I didn't know" does not hold in Australia.

English Offer Alibi.

A. N. S. Jackson, dean of the Oxford university athletes and treasurer of the Oxford University Athletic club, denies that the new rules limiting the eligibility of Rhodes scholars to compete in the university sports are the direct outcome of recent victories by Rhodes students. He says the matter was discussed in 1911 and that unless some action along this line had been taken the Oxford University Athletic club soon would have ceased to exist, because all the energy and enthusiasm of the public school boy would have been dampened.

They All Get It.

Manager James Gray, manager of Lowell in the New England league, says he has offers to manage two Class AA league clubs, and will accept one of them if he can sell his half interest in the New England league club.

HAMMERLOCK IS MOST EFFECTIVE HOLD

Bar Hammer Lock.

The hammerlock is one of the effective holds in wrestling. When once secured by a strong aggressor, it is usually "all off" with his opponent, but the hold is by no means an easy one to secure.

Gotch has won but few of his important battles by means of the hammerlock. The first was his defeat of Scott Miller in 1902. He employed the hammerlock in downing Emil Klank in 1903, afterward his manager. He also used the hold in 1904 on John Berg, one of the strongest grapplers of the day.

Later Gotch was touring the south meeting all comers and offering $10 a minute that each wrestler should remain on the mat with him. At Galveston he met Prof. Herman Berneau, who had boasted that Gotch could not pin him. Gotch had been on the mat with Berneau only a few minutes when he cornered the professor and grabbed him. He wished to win in a hurry and caught his opponent with a hammerlock. Berneau cried out that he was being hurt and Gotch released the hold. Again the champion secured it, and again Berneau protested. He refused to submit when Gotch once more secured the dangerous hold. Berneau left the mat and had Gotch arrested, but did not push the case.

That taught the champion a lesson he never forgot and he has seldom used the hammerlock in any of his big matches.

"There are several varieties of the hammerlock," says Gotch. "The hold is usually secured when working over an opponent on the mat. The aggressor reaches inside the left arm of his opponent and grasps his hand with his own right hand if working on the left side. The attacker also grasps his opponent's fingers with his left hand. He works the imprisoned hand up and back, using the leverage thus obtained to accomplish his purpose. When the imprisoned member is pulled back, the grip may be retained with one of the attacker's hands and a waistlock added to force back the hand toward the shoulder blades.

"I defeated John J. Rooney, a Chicago policeman, with the hammerlock in 1906, using Farmer Burns' method of getting the back hammerlock. I grasped Rooney's right hand and pushed my head into his right arm pit. Suddenly I jerked his right hand back, caught his arm above the elbow and threw my weight forward, forcing his right shoulder to the mat. His arm in this way was imprisoned. It was only necessary then to change my position and force the imprisoned arm back for the hammerlock. The arm may be shoved back to the shoulder blades when the defensive wrestler will gladly submit, turning over on his back.

"The hammerlock is usually secured in conjunction with some other hold. A hammerlock and grapevine or a hammerlock and crotch are very effective combinations, but not easy to secure on strong opponents.

"When I met and defeated Jimmy Esson, the Scottish champion, in Chicago, in February, 1910, I put the hammerlock on him several times, but he broke it each time by rolling and using his strength against the hold. He put up one of the gamest battles against the hold ever seen on a mat in a championship match. I have used the hold in winning few hard matches, but it has been helpful in leading to other grips which have brought home the bacon."

(Copyright, 1913, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

ENGLAND WINS GOLF TITLE

Miss Gladys Ravencroft Succeeds in Wrestling Championship From Her American Sisters.

There is one international championship which England succeeded in wresting from the United States this year, and that was the women's open golf championship. Miss Gladys Ravenscroft, champion of England last year, was one of the half dozen English women who invaded the United States this year for the open championship of this country, and she succeeded in winning it by defeating Miss Marion Hollins.

Miss Gladys Ravenscroft.

Kling Retires Once More.

John Kling, catcher for the Cincinnati National league baseball club, has returned to Kansas City and immediately announced his annual retirement from baseball.

Pugilist Driscoll Retires.

Jim Driscoll, the famous Welsh and world's featherweight boxing champion, and the winner outright of the Lonsdale belt, has definitely announced his retirement from the ring.

MANAGERS FOR 1914.

National.

New York	John McGraw
Brooklyn	Wilbert Robinson
Boston	George B. Stallings
Philadelphia	Charlie Dooin
Pittsburgh	Fred Clarke
Cincinnati	—
St. Louis	Miller Huggins
Chicago	Johnny Evers

American.

New York	Frank Chance
Boston	Bill Carrigan
Washington	Clark Griffith
Philadelphia	Connie Mack
Cleveland	Joe Birmingham
Detroit	Hughey Jennings
St. Louis	Branch Rickey
Chicago	Jimmy Callahan

NOTES of SPORTDOM

Announcement from the National Sporting club is that Bombadier Wells has been really matched to meet Georges Carpentier.

* * *

Jack Enzenroth, who captured the Michigan University baseball team four years ago, has signed to play with the St. Louis Browns.

* * *

Clyde Milan of the Senators was charged with twenty-four errors last season. About 75 per cent. of these were made on ground balls.

* * *

Smith of the Dodgers, with forty doubles, led the league in that respect. Vic Saier led all the National league hitters in banging out triples, getting twenty-one.

* * *

Jack Root, the star middleweight of a few years ago, who is now a theatrical magnate with bank deposits, goes into training six weeks of every year to keep his digestive organs right.

* * *

Illinois rooters want to have football relations resumed with Wisconsin. The Badgers have not been played since 1908. Coach Zupke, a Wisconsin graduate, inclines favorably to the idea of meeting the Cardinal eleven.

* * *

That a man can come back practically without practice in midseason has been demonstrated by the return of Craig to the Wolverine machine. Yost's star back featured the game with Syracuse though he had been in uniform less than a week.

NO MARRIAGE BANS IN BURMA

Wedding and Divorce Regulations Among Burmese Trifle Loose According to Our Ideas.

New York.—Marriage and divorce regulations among the Burmese strike even a Westerner as loose, according to a recently published book by Sir Herbert T. White, called "A Civil Servant in Burma." The sole essential of a marriage is mutual consent, and no court need intervene in divorce. But the test of a thing is the way it works, and "many, probably most, men live happily with one wife all their lives." No ceremony is necessary in marriage, and, among the mass of the people, none is usual.

Burmese Mother and Child.

Divorce is so easy that it is commonly accepted that, even without fault on either side, one party can insist upon divorce against the wish of the other. In this respect, men and women are upon equal terms. But a safeguard against capricious divorce is found in the strict rule that the one who, under the circumstances indicated, insists upon divorce must abandon all property to the reluctant partner.

It is not unusual for divorced persons to come together again—in fact, "an appreciable proportion of the crimes of violence is due to the refusal of a woman to rejoin her divorced husband."

DUB BLOND ESQUIMAUX IRISH

Descendants of Band of Monks Who Came to America in Sixth Century, Priest Declares.

St. Louis.—Rev. C. F. O'Leary, pastor of the Catholic church of Notre Dame, who recently returned from a visit to Ireland, is convinced that the blond Esquimaux discovered by Vilhjalmur Steffansson are in reality descendants of early Irish settlers.

"It is my belief," said Father O'Leary, "that St. Brendan and his monks settled in America in the sixth century. Many historians believe this. Brendan was a great mariner, as well as a great student, and with him missionaries were going out by the scores from Ireland to Germany, Italy, France, and other countries.

"The Norwegians formerly called America 'the Lesser Ireland,' and we have the evidence of Brendan's discoveries in the sea which long was named for him Mare Brendanicum."

Father O'Leary when abroad visited the famous St. Brendan's Mount, on which the monastery stood, and studied the old records. The expenses of his trip to Europe were paid in part with a fund which his parish presented to him on the occasion of his fortieth jubilee last spring.

MOURNS AT "HIS OWN" COFFIN

On Recognition of Supposed Dead Son Mother Faints and Is Seriously Ill.

Hamilton, Ont.—While relatives and friends surrounded the coffin in which lay the body of a young man identified as John Thompson, a victim of a recent storm on the great lakes, the real John Thompson rapped at the door and was admitted to the house. His mother collapsed, seriously ill.

Young Thompson's father did not know on what boat his son was employed. When he read of the finding of the body of a John Thompson, fireman on the lost steamer Carruthers, he went to Kettle Point and identified it as that of his son.

The body was shipped to the parents' home in this city, and friends were assembled for the funeral, when the young man suddenly returned. He explained that he had been in Monterey during the great storm, and had just heard of his reported death.

Giraffe Hit by Switch Engine.

Dupo, Ill.—A giraffe being shipped to a circus' winter quarters stuck its head out of the car and was struck by a switch engine. The animal is being cared for in an improvised hospital in the Y. M. C. A. building. Veterinary surgeons said it will live.

Woman Mayor of Oregon Town.

Troutdale, Ore.—Mrs. Clara Latourelle Larsson, daughter of an Oregon pioneer resident, was elected mayor of this place by five votes.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse. Their married life starts out happily. Kate succumbs to the pleadings of a composer to return to the stage and runs away with him. She rescues Widow O'Flynn from her burning house, is badly burned herself and returns home, where Jesse receives her with open arms. Cattle thieves appear in the neighborhood. Jesse asks Kate to go to a place of safety. To his joy she refuses. Jesse resumes the narrative. He calls on neighbors and plans to capture the robbers. Kate is rescued from the hands of the bandits. The robbers are captured, but later make their escape. Jesse is captured by the robbers, but by a clever ruse makes prisoners of the robbers.

CHAPTER X.

Kate's Narrative.

At Hundred Mile House the long table had been removed from the dining hall, the benches set back to the log walls, and at the head of the room an enormous Union Jack draped a very small portrait of Queen Victoria. Beneath was the chair, in front of it a table set with writing materials and the Bible, while at one end the schoolma'am looked very self-conscious as clerk, in official black, with large red bows like signals of distress.

On the right sat Iron Dale, Jesse, and myself, and all our posse, very ill at ease. On the left were two gaunt American stockmen, both wearing hats, while one hid the star of a United States marshal. Beside them sat the general public, consisting of Tearful George, two ranch-hands, an Indian, and the captain's bulldog. Wee James, the captain's grandson, sat with the dog at first, but presently he interrupted the court to say that he would like to sit on me. He sat with considerable weight for so small a person.

At Captain Taylor's entrance the constable ordered us all to stand. At sight of the two strangers he mounted a single eye-glass, and stared with growing wrath until they removed their hats. Then, taking the chair, he permitted us to be seated and ordered his constable to "Bring the prisoners aft."

Had our captives been washed and brushed, they might not have looked so wretched or so guilty. Old O'Flynn, described by Jesse as Whiskers, with his head in a blood-stained bandage, his right hand in a gory handkerchief, looked so ill that he was given a seat. The Mexican, whose beautiful leather dress and soft dark eyes reminded me sharply of the opera-house, seemed like a trapped wolf, only thinking of escape to the nearest woods. Bull Durham's swaggering gallantry was marred by obvious traces of a black eye.

"Prisoners," said our justice of the peace, laying his hand on the Bible, "this book contains the only law I know. I'm not here as judge or lawyer, but as one of Her Majesty's officers trusted to do the sporting thing, and to deal fairly and squarely with three innocent men who have the misfortune to be charged with crime. You've only to prove to me that you're innocent, and I have power to let you go free. But I warn you to tell the truth."

"Seems a square deal, Cap," said Whiskers.

"It is a square deal. Now, would you like to have some one of your countrymen as prisoners' friend?"

Whiskers looked reproachfully at the United States marshal who demanded his extradition, and the representative of stock associations who offered fabulous rewards for his body, "dead or alive."

"Wall," he drawled, "not exactly."

"You other prisoners. Do you accept this man as your spokesman?"

"Si, senor."

"That's all right," said Bull.

"Prisoner O'Flynn, you are charged with assaulting a woman, you others with aiding and abetting. Guilty or not guilty?"

"It's a fact," said Whiskers sadly, "and all three of us wishes to say what's got to be said"—he drew himself up to his full height—"by gentlemen! We tried to force a lady to give her husband away. She shamed us, and we honors Mrs. Smith for what she done. She told us to go to blazes. Yes, sir! We just owns up that we're guilty as hell, as the best way of showing our respect."

"Gentlemen," Captain Taylor spoke very gently. "I understand that you, O'Flynn, received two wounds in punishment, and that two of your comrades were killed by the men who avenged this affront. Is that true?"

"It's a fact."

"The verdict of the court is, not guilty.'

"But prisoner, your confession proves the right of the settlers to organise for defense of the settlement until the constable could be brought to their help. All you settlers who have taken part in the capture of these prisoners are engaged by the province as special constables from the day you undertook service, until I give you your discharge. You will be paid on such a scale as I direct.

"Rudolph Schweinfurth."

The marshal came forward and was sworn.

"You are a United States marshal?"

"Yes, your honor."

"You submit proof?"

The marshal's credentials were read.

"You claim these prisoners for extradition?"

"Yes, sir."

"Sit down. Cyrus Y. Jones." The other stockman was sworn. "You are representative of certain stock associations and submit proof? Right. You claim certain cattle alleged to be stolen, and found in possession of the prisoners? Right. You submit photographs identifying certain of these cattle and evidence of theft. And you offer twenty-five thousand dollars' reward for recovery of the stock. Pay that money into court and take my receipt.

"Prisoners, you are charged in your own country with robbery-under-arms and homicide in various degrees. Do you or do you not wish to prove your innocence?"

The prisoners scratched their heads.

"Marshal," said the magistrate, "I don't know what my powers are in this matter, but it's evident that the less red tape there is the sooner these men will get the justice they rightly demand. I don't want them. Give me a receipt and engage what men you need for escort duty. You, Mr. Representative, give me your receipt for the cattle. Now clear out, and get to the States before you're interfered with by any lop-eared officials. Constable, hand over your prisoners.

"Mr. Dale and Mr. Smith, will you trust me as magistrate to make a fair division of this reward? All right. One-quarter goes to Dale, one-quarter to Smith, and the other half to be equally divided among you. Is that fair? All right, here's the plunder. Let's get the table in and dinner served. I'm famished."

So the court rose, and the dear old captain, having, I believe, broken every statute in British Columbia jurisprudence, asked all hands and the prisoners to dinner. "Of course," he said afterward to Jesse, "I ought to have committed you and Dale to trial for homicide, fined you all round for using guns without a license, turned the lawyers loose on a fat extradition case, and impounded the cattle to eat my grass at government expense. As it is, I'll be hanged, drawn, and quartered by the politicians, damned by the press, and jailed for thrashing editors. And I missed all the fun."

After dinner the crowd broke up into little groups. In one corner the American officials were bargaining with Mr. Dale for his Sky-line men to ride with the prisoners and the cattle. By the door stood Mr. Brooks, explaining something at great length to our bored constable. At the head of the long table Captain Taylor was telling me how difficult it was to find a suitable nursery governess for Wee James. At the foot of the table I saw the Mexican whispering to his unfortunate chief—plans for escape, no doubt. Then Jesse joined them, with a present of pipes, matches, and tobacco to ease the journey.

"Whist! Hide the Gun," He Said.

"Mr. Smith," said poor old O'Flynn, "this yere Sebastian Dias has been with me these twelve year. He's only a greaser—"

"Medio Sangre, senor!" said the half-breed proudly.

"But he's got the heart of a white man. He's like a son to me."

"I'm proud," said Jesse, "to make your acquaintance, both of you. You are men, all right."

"We fought the rich men that had wronged us, them and their breed. We put up a good fight. Yes, sir! And we wouldn't have missed a mile of that twelve years' trail. It wasn't our way to insult women, Mr. Smith."

"You had to git that information somehow," said Jesse, "and Mrs Smith forgives you."

"That's off our minds, Mr. Smith."

"Mostly known as Jesse," said my husband.

"Jesse. We bin consulting, and we agree you're the only man here we'd care to ask favors of."

"I'm your friend, all right."

"Jesse, if we don't escape, we are due to pass in our chips."

"I'm not going to help you escape."

"Wall, you haven't helped our escape to any great extent, so far as I know."

Jesse chuckled.

"But I'm asking you to look after my wife and my son."

"I'll do that."

"You'll save the boy from his father's trade?"

"I reckon."

"Put her thar."

And they shook hands.

"Them horses we was riding," said the outlaw, "is for my son."

"That's all right."

"And one thing more. That Brooks has an eye on your good lady. He's your enemy from times far back in Abilene. He'll live to do you dirt. Thar, I sort of hates to talk so of one of my men, and I won't say no more.

"Say, my hands being hurt, will you just reach into my off hind pocket? That's right. There's a gold watch. Take it, my time's up. Give that to your lady from us as a sort of keepsake. Goodby, partner."

"Goodby, friend."

"Adios," said the Mexican. "Vaya usted con Dios!" And the English of that is, "May you ride with God!"

CHAPTER XI.

Billy O'Flynn.

Kate's Narrative.

Jesse is cruel to young O'Flynn. Perhaps he is justly, rightly cruel, in gibing at this young cowboy, taunting him until the lad is on the very edge of murder. "Got to be done," says Jesse, "I promised his father that I'd break the colt until he's fed up with robbers. So just you watch me lift the dust from his hide, and don't you git gesticulating on my trail with your fool sympathies." Billy does not suspect that the tormentor loves his victim.

My heart aches with his humiliation. His mother is my cook, not a princess, as the boy's pride would have her. His father was one of the most dangerous leaders of the Rocky Mountain outlaws, so there the lad saw glory, and I don't blame him. But all the glamor was stripped away when Jesse tricked O'Flynn and his gang into surrender, handed them over to justice, and showed poor Billy his sordid heroes for what they really were. His father has been hanged.

That night the lad had come from Hundred Mile House, with Jesse's pack-train bearing a load of stores. There was a dress length, music for my dear dumpy piano, spiced rolls of bacon, much needed flour and groceries, and an orange kerchief for Billy. From his saddle wallets he produced my crumpled letters and the weekly paper a Vancouver rag. Therein Jesse labors among tangles of provincial politics, I gloat over the cooking recipes of America's nice cuisine, and spare maybe just a sigh over the London letter. Billy's portion consists of blood-curdling disasters and crimes, and the widow waits ravenous for her kindling, bed stuffing, wall paper, and new pads for her wooden leg. At ten cents that paper is a bargain.

II.

After breakfast when Jesse had gone to work, the widow came to me in deep distress, leaning against the door-post, twisting up her apron with tremulous fingers, her eyes dark with dread. When I led her to a seat, perhaps she felt my sympathy, for a flood of tears broke loose, and wild Irish mixed with her sobs. The leprechawn possessed her bhoy avick, night-riders haunted him, divils was in him acushla, and the child was fey. His step-uncle went fey to his end in the dreadful quicksands, her brother-in-law went mad in the black Indian hills, running on the spears of the haythen, rest his sowl, and now Billy! He was gone this hour. Fiercely she ordered me out to search, for she would take the southern pasture, so surely I would find him in the pines. She feared that place; muttered of fires lighted by no mortal hands. Yestreen a falling star had warned her that she was to lose her bhoy, and had I not seen that face in the windy last night?

Soothing the poor thing as best I could, I undertook the search, glad of an excuse to get away outdoors. Presently I came upon Billy perched on a root overhanging the depths of the canyon. He was cleaning Jesse's rifle, and I surprised him in a fit of angry laughter.

"Billy," I shouted, "come in off that root before you fall!"

He obeyed with sulky patience at my whims.

"Why are you not at work? What are you doing with my husband's rifle?"

"I'm at work," he answered sulkily—then with an odd vagueness of manner, "I'm cleaning the durned thing."

Being a woman, and cursed at that with the artistic temperament, I could not help being moved by this lad's extraordinary beauty—the curly red-gold hair, skin with the dusty look of a ripe peach, the poise of easy power and lithe grace, the sense he gave me of glowing color veiling ragged strength. As an artist studies a good model, I had observed very closely the moods of Billy's temperament.

His mother was right. That vagueness of manner was abnormal, and the lad was fey.

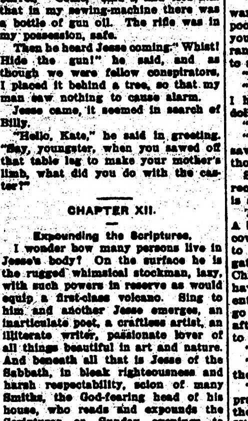
"But why are you cleaning his rifle?"

"It kicks when it's foul," he said absently.

"You're off hunting?"

"Goin' to shoot Jesse, that's all."

"I'm sure," I said, "he cleaned it yesterday. Look here," and I took the rifle to show him it was clean. "See," I put my little finger nail in the breech while he looked down the barrel. "Come," said I, and told him that in my sewing-machine there was a bottle of gun oil. The rifle was in my possession, safe.



"I'm a Rich Woman, Dear."

Then he heard Jesse coming. "Whist! Hide the gun!" he said, and as though we were fellow conspirators, I placed it behind a tree, so that my man saw nothing to cause alarm.

Jesse came, it seemed in search of Billy.

"Hello, Kate," he said in greeting. "Say, youngster, when you sawed off that table leg to make your mother's limb, what did you do with the caster?"

CHAPTER XII.

Expounding the Scriptures.

I wonder how many persons live in Jesse's body? On the surface he is the rugged whimsical stockman, lazy, with such powers in reserve as would equip a first-class volcano. Sing to him and another Jesse emerges, an inarticulate poet, a craftless artist, an illiterate writer, passionate lover of all things beautiful in art and nature. And beneath all that is Jesse of the Sabbath, in bleak righteousness and harsh respectability, scion of many Smiths, the God-fearing head of his house, who reads and expounds the Scriptures on Sunday evenings to sullen Billy, the morose widow, and my unworthy self.

When we knelt, the widow still sat rigid, and with her wooden leg scratched out upon the oil-cloth vague outlines of a gallows. Afterward she explained. "Yer husband, Mrs. Smith had cess to him, is mighty proud av his spectacles, phwat he can't see through and all, and showing off his learning and pride av a Sunday."

"But why draw gallows on the floor?"

"And why for should I not draw gallows on the flure, seeing he'll never drown? It's hung he'll be for a opprissing the fatherless and the widow, and burn he will afther for a Protestant. Yis," she flashed round on her son, "feed buttermilk to thim calves, and hould up yer head alladh, 'cause you inherit glory while he's frying!"

Away from the widow's hate and her son's vengeance, I led my man out under the stars. I gave him his cigar, that black explosive charged with deadly fumes, lighted him a sulphur match. It soothes his passions, and the pasture scent makes him gentle, but when I fear my grizzly bear, and hardly dare to stroke, I lead him by the keen silver spring, across the hollow where our flowers would make a devil smile, and on through the wild rose tangle, to my cathedral pines. Tonight he seemed suspicious even there, biting off tags of the vindictive Psalms. Nor would he sit under the father tree until I sang to him.

"What do you want?" asked Jesse then, all the rancor gone.

"Jesse, do you know that it's nearly a year since we married?"

"Ten months, Kate, and fourteen days. Do you think I don't reckon?"

I sat down on the root of the little governess tree, the humblest in the grove. "In the Bible, dear, who was the son of Jesse?"

"David, of course."

"Do you remember, dear: 'for I have provided a king among his sons'?"

He looked away across the thunderous misty depths of the canon, and the moonlight caught his profile as though it were etched in silver. "A mighty valiant man," he whispered, "prudent in matters, and a man of war."

"Jesse, I've got such a confession to make. When you settled Mr. Trevor's estate—"

"His estates were debts, and we paid 'em. There ain't no need to fuss."

"You paid the debts. You were hard driven to meet the interest on your mortgage."

"That's paid off now. Besides we've a clear title to our land, mother's gravestone's off my chest, we don't owe a cent in the world, and there's nary a worry left, except I'm sort of sorry for them poor robbers. Why fuss?"

"You earned six thousand dollars, at goodness knows what peril. I let you still imagine that you were poor."

"We got plenty wealth, Kate, wealth enough for—for David."

"I wanted you, Jesse, just you, I wanted poverty because you were poor. I have been content, and now you've won the capital to free the ranch, to buy a thoroughbred stallion, to stock the place."

"That's so."

"Jesse, under my dear father's will, I have seven thousand five hundred dollars a year."

"A what!"

"I'm a rich woman, dear. I've been saving my income, and there's ten thousand dollars for you at the bank."

So I gave him my check, which he receipted promptly with a kiss. He is so rough, too.

Then we discussed improvements. A bunch of East Oregon horses, three cow-boys to handle our stock, a man to run the Sky-line contract, an irrigated corn field, and winter feed, two Chinese servants, so many 'must haves' that we waxed quite despondent over ways and means. Jesse must go to Vancouver on business, and thus after much preamble I came at last to the point.

"Take Billy with you."

"But if I go, he's got to look after the ranch."

"You preach at Billy," I said, "you pray at him. Remember he's wild as these woods, son of a dangerous felon. His mother goads him on, and there's danger, Jesse."

I knew while I spoke the folly of appealing to his sense of fear. He chuckled softly.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THOUGHT NIGHT HAD PASSED

Tired Farm Hand Lost All Track of Time in His Brief but Evidently Deep Slumber.

Even when you are wide awake it is frequently hard to estimate the passage of time. On one occasion you find it hard to believe that several hours have elapsed, and on another the day may drag so slowly that the clock seems to have shirked its duty. While you are asleep the calculation of time is, of course, almost impossible, as this incident, told by a farmer's son at the corner store one rainy morning, aptly illustrates:

Father hired a new hand last night—a big, good-natured Dutchman. Evidently the poor fellow was tired from tramping about the country, for he went to bed immediately after supper.

As usual, father went down to the cellar about 9:30 to throw some coal in the furnace and adjust the drafts for the night. Evidently this made enough noise to rouse the new hired man, for mother, who was sitting beside the table in the dining-room, saw the stair door suddenly open and disclose the broad form of the Dutchman. Blinking drowsily before the light, he exclaimed:

"Good morning, Missis! Good morning! I could chust as well haf come down von hour ago if you had only voke me up!"—Youth's Companion.

Pocket Telephones in Use.

A serviceable pocket telephone is the latest innovation of the Hungarian posts and telegraphs administration. The appliance weighs only 120 grammes, is no bigger than a card case, and can be had by any one on payment of the price of 40 ordinary telephone conversations, which cost a penny each. The pocket telephone is adapted for insertion in a wall plug either in a private house, on street walls, or in a lamp-post, etc. When the user has finished his conversation, he simply removes the telephone from the plug and puts it back in his pocket.

PREPARING FOR WAR

Army of Flies to Fight Invading Caterpillar Hosts.

Scientists of the Department of Agriculture Are Making Extensive Preparations for the Coming Conflict—Millions on Each Side.

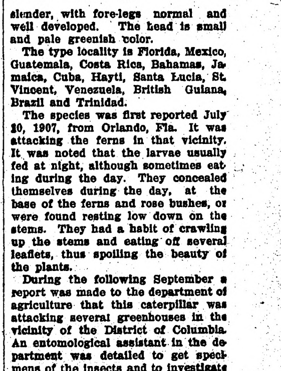
Washington.—Scientists of the department of agriculture are busy at present preparing for one of the greatest wars ever fought within the confines of North America. While war talk concerning Mexico has been going the rounds for the past few months, comparatively few people are aware that two armies, each numbering hundreds of millions, will soon be destroying one another right and left.

The people most interested in the coming battles are the scientists and the owners of greenhouses, where roses and ferns are grown. The war is to be between the Florida fern caterpillar, known to the scientific world as Eriopus floridensis, and the ichneumon fly, the only natural enemy of the fern caterpillar.

The fern caterpillar has been attacking greenhouses in all parts of the country, destroying plants, especially ferns and rose bushes, and now it has been decided to turn loose millions of the ichneumon flies in the areas attacked by the caterpillar. It will be a battle royal with the odds on the ichneumon army.

During recent years this species of caterpillar, native to Florida and tropical America, has made its appearance in appalling numbers in northern greenhouse. Its three principal bases of operation have been Ohio, Illinois and the District of Columbia, although many other states have suffered more or less from the pests. It is apparently restricted to ferns and rose bushes, upon which it feeds naturally in its occurrence in the open in the warm south. It has evidently been carried to ferns in northern greenhouses on ferns from Florida.

The moth belong to a group of noctuide, in which the fore-wings bear at the sides, with just above the middle a tooth. The back wings are large and rounded at the sides. The thorax and abdomen are wide. The fore-wings are pale brown, marked with white scales, forming a peculiar and attractive pattern. The rear legs are dull buff, edged with a dusky grown; the lower surface of the body is much paler. The expanse of the wings is about 1⅛ inches and the entire length of the body is in the neighborhood of half an inch. The larva is slender, with fore-legs normal and well developed. The head is small and pale greenish color.



Florida Fern Caterpillar on Top, Moth Below; Dark Larva at Right, Drawings Much Enlarged.

The type locality is Florida, Mexico, Guatemala, Costa Rica, Bahamas, Jamaica, Cuba, Hayti, Santa Lucia, St. Vincent, Venezuela, British Guiana, Brazil and Trinidad.

The species was first reported July 10, 1907, from Orlando, Fla. It was attacking the ferns in that vicinity. It was noted that the larvae usually fed at night, although sometimes eating during the day. They concealed themselves during the day, at the base of the ferns and rose bushes, or were found resting low down on the stems. They had a habit of crawling up the stems and eating off several leaflets, thus spoiling the beauty of the plants.

During the following September a report was made to the department of agriculture that this caterpillar was attacking several greenhouses in the vicinity of the District of Columbia. An entomological assistant in the department was detailed to get specimens of the insects and to investigate the conditions of the different greenhouses where the caterpillars had been ruining the plants and ferns.

Scores of methods of destruction have been tried in the different parts of the country infested with the fern caterpillar, but no method has proved a success, and so the commander-in-chief of the ichneumon fly army has been called into consultation and advises an immediate attack in several parts of the country.

Gloomy Weather Causes Trouble.

Chicago.—One hundred and fifteen warrants have been sworn out by women against men in the court of domestic relations during the recent gloomy days—twice the usual number. Court attaches say the gloomy weather is the cause of the increase in domestic troubles.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
Physician and Surgeon
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
Physician and Surgeon
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

Loans Probate Work Collections
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

When You pay for Lumber

You naturally want to get the full value of your money. You'll get it here all right and a little bit more. You will find our laths, shingles, etc., full count and first quality every time. You'll find our regular lumber full measure, cut true and of sound, seasoned wood. Give us a chance to prove our square dealing.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, Model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

The Northern Light wishes all of its readers a happy and prosperous New Year.

It is said that Canada will shortly remove the duties on grain and farm machinery, which will virtually mean reciprocity with the United States. Well, we don't think that will make condititons for the American farmers any worse than tney are.

The new Currency Bill passed the senate on Tuesday and was signed by the president the same day. Here's hoping that this new measure will help bring currency within sight and touch of country editors a little more freguently than in the past.

There's a lot of people who do not know the difference between self-respect and self-conceit. Self-respect is that quality which will keep a man from willfully doing a wrong act under under any conditions, while conceit is the lack of quality that leads a man to do the thing he pleases, right or wrong, with the idea that others must submit just because he wants his own way.

Dead Letter Office.

Little Elsie—What is the dead letter office, mamma? Mother—Your father's pocket.

Creamery Statement

Business of Holt creamery for the month of November, 1913.

Cream received	5,812 lbs.
Average test	26.39
Butter fat	1,534.19 lbs
Per cent overrun	23.50
Received for butter sold	$583.55
Balance from last month	139.78
From other sources	3.03
Total	$726.36
Paid patrons by check	509.01
Expense fund, etc.	56.08
Balance on hand	161.27
Total	$726.36

Number of patrons, 49.
Price paid for butter fat, 33 cts.
T. B. FOLDEN' Secretary.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 11, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Sarah E. Molstad, of Thief River Falls, Minnesota, who, on November 19th, 1907, made Homestead Entry 9313, Serial No. 03709, for E½ SW¼ and W½ SE¼, Section 27, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before N. W. Tarrant, Municipal Judge for the City of Thief River Falls, Minn., at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, on the 20th day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Christ Nelson, Frank Posten, Ole J. Peterson, Oliver Molstad, all of Thief River Falls, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior.
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. [illegible], of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. [illegible], Serial No. [illegible], for Lot 3, Section 4, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tolief Brokke, [illegible] Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Nov. 12, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Oivind C. [illegible] of Golden Valley, Minn., who on Sept. 4, 1912, made Homestead Application, Serial No. [illegible], for [illegible] Section 11, Township [illegible] N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Allan W. Clark, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Fram, Minn., on the 31st day of December, 1913.

Claimant names as witnesses: Olaf Dahl, Elling Tellefsrud, Carl Dahl, Bernstein, all of Golden Valley, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Dec. 1, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that August Johnsen, of Rollis, Minnesota, who, on February 15, 1911, made Homestead Entry No. 05652, for SW¼ NW¼ Section 3, S½ NE¼ and NW¼ SE¼ Section 4, Township 151 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minnesota, on the 13th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Moberg, Martin Moberg, both of Rollis, Minnesota; Christ Norbeck, Ludvig Sagstuen, both of Flakne, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 2, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Albert C. Jahr, of Holt, Minn., who, on January 20, 1911, made Homestead Entry, Serial No. 05625, for SE¼ Section 27, Township 158 N., Range 42 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District o' Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 13th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H Knutson, Carl Surmo, George C. Anderson, Olaus Rodahl, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

THE HAPPY OYSTER.

"Say, Joe, an oyster has one darn enjoyable life, don't 'e?"

"Stayin' in bed all his days, y' mean?"

"Ye-a; an' then bein' served with cocktails to boot."—Yale Record.

ELEMENTARY.

Clergyman (visiting prison)—I hope that when you are released you will live so that you can look your fellow man straight in the eye.

The Bunko Man—That is the simplest part of my business.—Puck.

School Notes

(From east half of Dist. No. 39)

Those who were neither absent nor tardy during the 2nd month ending Dec. 19th, are:

Marvel, Herbert and Pearl Grover, Evelyn and Edgar Wegge, Alice Sorum and Josie Lunke.

Gladys Sorum missed school last Friday afternoon on account of illness.

Oscar Carlson commenced school the first of the month.

During Thanksgiving we had a vacation of 3 days from Wednesday until Tuesday.

Ida Lunke and Maynard Knutson have been absent nearly all of this month.

Earl Grover was absent a few days on account of sickness.

Tillie Knutson was absent last Monday on account of it being her birthday. How old were you Tillie?

Last Friday we had another review in History.

There was a "Parcel Social" in our schoolhouse Saturday evening Dec. 13 and everybody present had a most enjoyable time.

As this being Christmas it is a surprise to have so nice weather and not to see any snow.

Scool quit Dec. 19th for a 2 weeks vacation during the Holidays.

We wish you all a "Happy New Year."

From South of Holt

The Jolly Crowd had a party last Sunday night. On their homeward journey they had a lunch at 2 a. m. but it was rather frosty there.

Have you forgotten your first lesson, squire?

We are right up to snuff otherwise but we need someone to walk ahead. Two bachelors ran ahead but they missed the hot lunch at 2.

Papa and mama left the children to their fate and took refuge by a warm room at 2 o'clock.

(The above may be a joke but the humor does not appear on the surface.—Ed.)

HIDE THEIR NATURAL BEAUTY

Jewish Women Wear Wigs as a Matter of Duty, According to Ancient Custom.

Among the women crowding about the venders one sees here and there the wig that every Jewish woman, according to the custom, should wear when she is married. In Russia the bride still covers her pretty curls; in Chicago—one can hardly expect a Chicago girl to do that. It is only the old women who refuse to depart from the habit of years. This odd fashion—you will notice it is always some one's else fashion which is odd, never our own—is an outward symbol of high ideals. The wife dons the wig that all may know her thoughts are not on the vanities, but on the serious things of this world. It must be a great race the women of which through centuries would consent to hide their beauty under a wig of straight, coarse hair. The martyrdom of Jewish beauty follows a remark credited to an ancient woman. Asked what she had done that she should become the mother of two high priests she answered, "The walls of my room have never once seen my own hair." With not a thought to spare on vanity and idleness she had given all to the raising of her sons. She had developed in them such wisdom, such character, that they were fit for the high priesthood. She was taken for a pattern and the race of Jewish women thenceforward immolated itself and lived up to the ideal insofar at least as the wig. But, oh, what a strength of religious enthusiasm it must have taken at times!—Chicago Post.

ONLY COMPARATIVE.

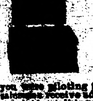
She—You must think I'm too fat or you would not teell me to bant.

He—No, I don't. When I told you to bant, that was only banter.

CONCOMITANTS.

"Nell, I'm spoons on you."
"Then, Dick, fork out."

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn



WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day

Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can use only one salesman in each locality.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 167.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour
Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.
Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.
Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL

THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
831 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to
Name................
Postoffice................
Route.......... State..........

ing Dunn
5—
25— } 1/14
Dec. 11

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III 81850 HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 2, 1914 NO. 25

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

It's 1914 Now
May this New Year be a good one for you in every way at all times. We'll be glad to help.

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier
UNLIMITED MONEY For Farm Loans
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

... When You Want Flour ...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.34
Wheat	.75
Barley	.36
Oats	.29
Rye	.41
Flour, Best Patent	2.55

SPECIAL JANUARY OFFER
To Paid Subscribers

If your subscription is paid up to July 1st, 1914, or any time after that date, We will send The Northern Light to any friend you want it sent to in the United States, for the year of 1914 for $1.00.

In addition we will send Farm, Stock and Home to your friend for the same time Free, or to yourself if you are not already getting Farm, Stock & Home with this paper. This offer will not apply to renewals of subscriptions for your local friends or in Canada. If you want it sent to Canada, it will cost 50 Cents more for each paper.

This Offer good only during January, 1914. Why not take it up NOW?

The Northern Light, - Holt, Minn.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

Have you learned to write it 1914 yet?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (ad-tf)

Huseth pleases all his patrons. Are you one of them? (adv)

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. BACKE.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

Arvid Carlson and P. L. Anderron spent Tuesday evening visiting at the Louis Wegge home.

Adolph Sollom and family arrived yesterday from Glenfield, N. D., for a New Year visit with relatives here.

W. B. Fuller was up from Thief River Falls Tuesday looking over business at the local agency of the Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.

Make one resolution to the effect that during 1914 yov will keep the the editor posted on all the local happenings—and live up to it.

A. J. Nelson is taking a rest from his duties as depot agent and his place is being filled by [illegible] Schneider who arrived from Crookston on Tuesday

Help boost this neighborhood by sending The Northern Light to some of your friends in other places during 1914. Read our special offer for the month of January.

[illegible] have their annual sale and lunch dinner on next Tuesday, January 6, at A. C. Jahr's, section 27, Town of East Valley. Everybody invited.

L. S. Kolden returned to Nielsville Monday and Mrs. Kolden and Lillian and Edna Payne returned on Tuesday. They were here for a Christmas visit at the D. Payne home.

P. L. Anderson visited with his parents at St. Hilaire last Sunday and on Wednesday went to Red Lake Falls to take in the grand New Year's ball, which is an annual function in that city.

Mrs Ellen Torkelson came in from East Valley on Wednesday and went down to Climax to spend a few days among the old friends. She is spending the winter here with her daughter, Mrs. George Anderson.

Rural mail carrier Guy Anderson took his auto out today to make his daily rounds in spite of the light fall of snow. He has used his car every day so far this winter, and has had no trouble with either bad roads or cold.

Edward M. Hinchman was up from Crookston Tuesday and went out to visit his relatives south east of Mud Lake. He returned on Wednesday, but found time to make a pleasant visit at the printshop during his stay.

Peter H. Holm, the popular judge of probate, completed his 25th year of married life on December 24th. A number of friends at Warren got up a surprise party in honor of the occasion and presented judge and his estimable with a purse—no, a sack—containing 175 silver dollars.

O. J. Backlund went to Randen today to attend the funeral of his little niece, Elna Stevenson, who died last Saturday of pneumonia at the tender age of two years. The little one had an attack of this malady about a year ago and has never been strong since then. The funeral occurs Saturday.

Patents Are Delayed

According to a statement of the commissioner of the general land office at Washington a few days ago, no action has not been taken by the department in regard to the issuing of patents to purchahers of lands in northern Minnesoto under the Volstead act which provided for the acquirsng of homestead lands on payment of drainage taxes, land office fees and a purchase price of $1.25 per acre, the purchaser not being required to live on the land. These entries have not been disposed of because, the commissioner says, reveral new and interesting questions involving the qualifications of purchasers have arisen.

Quite a lot of lands in the Mud Lake region were acquired by speculators at and since the tax sales early last summer. Where the lands had been filed upon by homesteaders the entryman is allowed one year in which to redeem, and where no entry has been made, the purchasers were supposed to be given patents direct from the government. Many claims were contested successfully by parties who wanted to get some land without living on it. These entries are held up, and it would appear quite possible that no patents will be issued.

In the meantime settlers who [illegible]

[illegible] old, weight 2,800 pounds; both in foal to registered Percheron stallion. Will sell with or without new work harness, for cash or on time. J. B. ALLENBRACK, on old Heiser farm, 4 miles southwesf of Holt.

WATER IN AUSTRALIA.

Over a very large area of Australia, and especially where the rainfall is light, it is possible to tap an apparently inexhaustible supply of artesian water by boring. In this way much has been added to the value of large tracts of country, both for stock breeding and general productive purposes. Late developments indicate that the artesian area is even greater than was at first supposed. For some time the South Australian government has been boring for water on the southern limits of the artesian basin in the neighborhood of Lake Frome and last month a supply of good quality water was tapped, equal to 230,000 gallons a day.

TIME TO SPEAK UP.

Miss Wantem was growing tired, for Mr. Nutt had been calling three months, and the final words which had been lingering on his lips for so long had not yet been spoken.

One evening, however, being in an extra bright mood, he was inclined to make some brilliant observations.

"We live in a wonderful age, don't we, Miss Wantem? Just think how everything is becoming wireless nowadays?"

"Yes," snapped Miss Wantem, stung to desperation, "pa was saying only this morning that even the sofa was becoming wireless."

SORE.

"Could you say that Twobble has an infinite capacity for taking pains?"

"No, but I can truthfully say that he has an infinite capacity for giving pains to everybody with whom he comes in contact."

THE REASON.

"Why do people want to muzzle the press?"

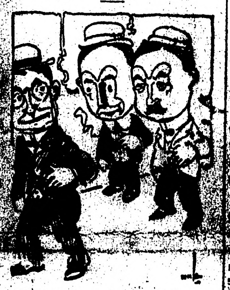
"That's easy. Afraid of its biting comment."

81850

Wishing all our friends and patrons a Happy and Prosperous New Year, we are, always at your service,

Holt State Bank
FARM LOANS at lowest rates

FOLLOWS NO RULE



"Why do you say that Pfibber is wholly unreliable? I've known him to tell the truth on several occasions."

"That's what makes him so unreliable."

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, [illegible] Block, Thief River Falls.

The Continental Insurance Co. has an unexcelled record for paying of losses. Why not then insure in that company. Chas W. Latta, agt.

Allan W. Clark, the [illegible] Commissioner of Rollis, [illegible]

[illegible] notice is published in this paper.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

HUSETH's
The Holidays are over, But--
You get the best value for your money here always
Our Goods always Fresh, Pure and Wholesome
AL. HUSETH, Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS
We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.
We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.
Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long
S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

U.S. TO INVESTIGATE STRIKE SITUATION

DEPORTATION OF MOYER LEADS TO ACTION ON PART OF GOVERNMENT.

CALUMET BURIES ITS DEAD

Last Sad Rites Said Over Bodies of 72 Persons Killed in the Fearful Christmas Disaster—Not Enough Hearses.

Washington, Dec. 30.—A special investigation by the department of justice of conditions in the copper mine strike area in Michigan was called for in a letter which Senator Martine of New Jersey wrote to Attorney General McReynolds.

Evidence Being Secured.

The department of labor already has dispatched Solicitor John B. Densmore to Calumet and Representative MacDonald of Michigan, who is pressing for a congressional investigation, is on the scene.

Senator Martine, in his letter to the attorney general demanding an inquiry says:

"From reliable advice, I am informed that on Dec. 26 President Charles H. Moyer of the Western Federation of Miners was abducted and carried out of the state of Michigan; and it is currently stated that the abduction was advised, instigated and paid for by the mine owners or their representatives."

Calumet Buries Dead.

Calumet, Mich.—The Western Federation of Miners buried its dead Sunday. Fifty-nine bodies, including 44 children, were carried through the streets down a winding country highway and laid in graves in a snow enshrouded cemetery within sight of Lake Superior.

Thousands of saddened miners formed the escort of the funeral parties and passed between other thousands who, as spectators, testified to the grief that has oppressed the community since 72 men, women and children were killed in the Christmas eve panic in Italian hall.

Services Only Sound.

For hours the Sabbath calm was broken only by the tolling of bells and the sound of voices intoning burial chants. In half a dozen churches services were held earlier in the day, and the mourners went about the streets, passing from their homes to the churches, back to their homes after brief respites, and again to the churches to prepare for the last sad trip to the gravesides.

Delegations of strikers began coming into Calumet early in the day. The special train of nine coaches brought hundreds of federationists from the iron mines of Negaunee and Ishpeming, and every town and mining location in the copper country sent members and friends of the union to swell the ranks of the marchers in the afternoon.

By noon the union host was assembled. Five months of experience in demonstrating their numbers by parading had taught the men to form ranks quickly and with little delay they lined up four abreast.

Not Enough Hearses.

The supply of hearses was inadequate and there were only fourteen of these vehicles in the van.

Then came three undertakers' wagons and an automobile truck, the latter carrying three coffins.

These vehicles contained the adult victims and the older children.

Beside one marched eight women who acted as pallbearers for a member of the women's auxiliary of the western federation.

It was this women's organization which was distributing gifts of candy, shoes, caps and mittens to the children of strikers when the panic broke out.

Behind the hearses was a section of the procession which brought tears and sobs from onlookers. Thirty-nine white coffins, their size testifying to the short life of the little forms within, were carried by relays of strikers. Four men bore each coffin and as their arms grew weary or feet stumbled on the slippery roadway, companions relieved them of their burden.

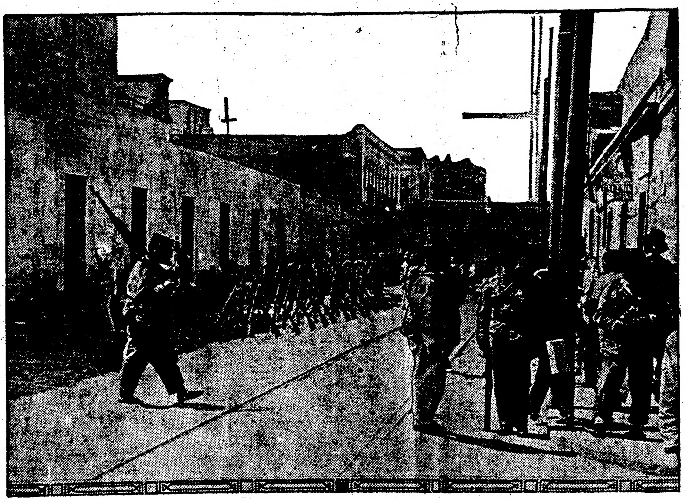
Amateurs Blow N. D. Safe.

Lucca, N. D., Dec. 30.—The store of H. R. Tendick, postmaster, was entered by robbers and the safe blown. The only things of value taken were two gold watches, a silver watch and $1.50 in silver. The postoffice is in the same building, but nothing in that department was touched. Evidently the work was done by amateurs for the outside door of the safe was completely blown from the hinges. The robbers were unsuccessful in gaining entrance to the inner safe.

Companion of Attorney Freed.

Monticello, N. Y., Dec. 30.—Adelaide Brance, companion in the double life of Melvin N. Couch, the lawyer, who died suddenly here, left the Monticello jail early Sunday. She had been a voluntary prisoner there since shortly after the mystery of the attorney's death was cleared up. Interested friends took Miss Brance to a residence in Fallsboro, where she remained until daylight when it is understood she boarded a train for [illegible] to friends.

HUERTA'S SOLDIERS LAY DOWN ARMS UNTIL PAID



Government soldiers with arms stacked in the Calle Ancha, a street in Mexico City, who refused to fight any longer for the Huerta government until paid and fed.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING NEXT

BIG FARM WILL BE RUN BY WOMEN ON NEW PLAN.

Former Attempt Doing Well Until Cupid Arrived and Broke Up the Novel Enterprise.

Edmonton, Alberta, Dec. 27.—Henry Howes of Bushby Park, Bristol, England, who is organizing the Women's Co-operative Farming Society, Limited, of Canada, under the Industrial and Provident societies act of England, says in a letter to George M. Hall, industrial commissioner for the municipality of Edmonton, that he will establish a co-operative farming colony within 50 miles of this city.

Girls and women from England, Ireland and Scotland will be located on the land and care for milch cows, poultry and pet stock and produce gardens.

The plan was suggested to Mr. Howes on a recent tour of Western Canada, when he visited a farm of 80 acres managed by a half-dozen young women from England and Scotland. One of the members, a college trained girl, had charge of the greenhouse.

Another did the housework and one looked after the poultry and outside work. A Scotch girl opened a district store in the city and an English typist did all the clerical work. The sixth member of the colony attended to the cow, bees and rabbits.

The scheme worked out satisfactorily until Dan Cupid made his appearance with his bow and quiver of arrows, carrying off four of the women, who became the wives of farmers. The weddings took place within two weeks. The remaining two stayed a month, doing all the work, when they, too, fell victims.

The farm was sold and the profits divided equally among the six women.

REBELS ARE GIVEN A SALUTE

Visit U. S. Cruiser and Are Received as State Officials—Are Happy, as Consequence.

Culiacan, Sinaloa, Mexico, Dec. 29.—Constitutionalist officials of Sinaloa were accorded official honors when they visited the United States cruiser Pittsburgh at San Blas, according to the insurgent version of the visit related when the party returned here. The insurgent state officials had visited the Pittsburgh upon request of Rear Admiral Cowles, whom they had entertained at the state capital at Culiacan.

When Governor Riveros and General Iturbe boarded the Pittsburgh they were received by a salute of 17 guns. The Mexican tri-color floated with the Stars and Stripes over the American ship of war. The visitors were entertained at luncheon and inspected the ship and crew.

This account of the visit produced much enthusiasm here.

J. T. Conley Gets Promotion.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—J. T. Conley was appointed general freight agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road and F. E. Otis was named assistant general freight agent with offices in Minneapolis. Both changes will be effective Jan. 10. Mr. Conley will take the place made vacant by W. E. Prendergast who resigned to become a member of the Western Classification bureau.

Investigate Breaking of Shaft.

Washington, Dec. 29.—With the broken shaft of the battleship Vermont as an object lesson, the naval board of inspection and survey will go to the Norfolk navy yard in a few days to begin an exhaustive inquiry into the causes for the breaking of the great main shafting of naval vessels. One of the two great propellor shafts of the Vermont snapped while the battleship was breasting a storm in midocean, two weeks ago, returning from the Mediterranean to Hampton roads.

SHIPPING METHODS CALLED WASTEFUL

MOISTURE IN CORN IS PAID FOR BY SHIPPER, SAYS REPORT.

CHANGE IS NOW BEING URGED

Government Specialists Can File Statistics of Interest to Farmers and Grain Men of Entire Country.

Washington, Dec. 27.—In the belief that American methods of shipping several important staple foods by freight are decidedly wasteful and that this waste in money adds materially to the cost of food, several specialists of the department of agriculture have been conducting investigations into shipping conditions in the United States. As a result of these investigations they are convinced that in several particulars the systems used by United States shippers are far less economical than those employed by foreign shippers, notably in Germany. As a result, the specialists find, in several instances, that food is started on long freight journeys in such condition that heavy freight charges must be paid on elements which have to be taken out of the food at the end of the trip before it can be used as food.

Moisture in Corn.

One of the heaviest wasted freight items is the freight paid for the transportation of excessive moisture in corn. The waste water now being shipped in corn in the United States, according to the estimates of the specialists, has a serious bearing on the actual cost of corn, and also is one explanation for the great shortage of cars at the corn shipping seasons.

The specialists find, for example, that the American people are paying freight on 436,682 tons of water in shipping their corn from the producing sections to the market. This means that at a time when there is a great shortage of cars, there is the equivalent of more than 14,556 freight cars of 60,000 pounds capacity loaded with water which is responsible for the enormous losses resulting from the deterioration of shelled corn before it is finally consumed.

Interesting Figures.

Using the actual averages of excessive moisture, and disregarding the special shipments where moisture content may run as high as 27 per cent, the specialists find that the excess water shipped amounts to the equivalent in weight for 15,595,800 bushels of corn.

The presence of this excessive moisture in corn not only adds to the net cost of the corn after it is delivered, but prevents the producer who ships corn over the moisture limit from having his corn graded as grade No. 2, and consequently compels him to accept a grade No. 3 or lower, with a corresponding reduction in price for his produce. Moreover, corn with an excessive moisture content is liable to deteriorate in storage.

New Radium Source Found.

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 29.—Canotite from which radium is produced has been discovered along the base of Mount Pisgah, near Mauch Chunk, Pa., according to an article which appears in a local paper. Dr. Howard A. Kelly, of Johns Hopkins university whose experiments with radium as a cure for cancer have attracted wide attention, and Dr. Edgar T. Wherry, geologist for the United States museum, Washington, visited Mauch Chunk and examined the deposits.

SAY SCHMIDT IS SHAMMING

ALIENISTS TESTIFY FOR STATE IN CASE OF PRIEST.

Testimony Concluded and Murder Case Will Go to the Jury Immediately.

New York, Dec. 29. — That Hans Schmidt, now on trial for the murder of Anna Aumuller, has been shaming insanity, was the burden of testimony given by four alienists appearing for the state. Dr. Carlos F. MacDonald, the first expert to be called by the prosecution, testified that on Sept. 24 the accused had told him:

"I did it. I am willing for the law to take its course and you can have my body."

Dr. MacDonald gave it as his opinion that Schmidt "is a man of superior intelligence," and that he has shammed insanity much more cleverly than an ignorant person could have done.

He also thought it possible that the four alienists of the defense had been successfully deceived by the accused and that Dr. Herrman, who examined Schmidt for the Royal Court of Munich, Germany, also had been imposed upon by Schmidt.

Dr. George H. Kirby said he had found the prisoner's mind to be working rapidly but it had given no indication of abnormality. In his opinion Schmidt's mind is rational.

He doubted the truth of Schmidt's assertions that he had visions.

That the accused had answered all questions readily and connectedly when he examined him last October, was the testimony given by Dr. Allen R. Dieffendorf, another of the state's alienists. According to this expert, Schmidt is sane and never had visions.

Dr. William Mabon, last of the experts to be called yesterday, testified similarly.

At the conclusion of Mr. Mabon's testimony both sides rested and a consultation between counsel and Judge Foster resulted in adjournment.

Each side will be given 90 minutes to sum up. Judge Foster said his charge to the jury would be short.

HELD UP TRAIN FOR GIRL

Sunset Limited Robber Did It for Hotel Chambermaid—Is Missing Now.

Los Angeles, Dec. 29.—It was for a Los Angeles hotel chambermaid, who has since fled the city, that John Bostick, the youthful bandit, held up the Sunset limited at El Monte, Dec. 1. The murder of the railroad official, Horace E. Montague, who was slain by the robber as he entered a Pullman car, was an unforeseen incident which spoiled Bostick's plans for the girl.

Bostick laid bare this feature of his crime to Sheriff Hammel. He told the sheriff he wanted funds for the girl, who is supposed to be now in Phoenix, Ariz., and he added that he had intended to return to Los Angeles and take her away on a trip as soon as excitement over the murder and train robbery had died down.

Detroit Depot Burned.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 29.—A spectacular fire, starting from a cause undetermined, swept through the main depot of the Michigan Central railroad company here.

Lads Drown; Watchers Powerless.

Grand Lodge, Mich., Dec. 29.—Elmer McDaniels and Harold Sackett, each about 12 years old, were drowned in Grand river here. The stream was frozen over for the first time this winter and the lads ventured out on the ice, which was too thin to support their combined weight. With a hundred persons, powerless to render aid, watching from the river bank, one of the lads struggled 20 minutes trying to crawl upon the broken edge of the ice before he sank.

DESPERADO MAKES GOOD HIS ESCAPE

SURROUNDED BY POSSE, MURDERER ELUDES ALL IN DENSE FOG.

KILLED ONE; WOUNDED TWO

Henry Rokowski of Pittsburgh Murdered Constable and Injured Two Persons Fatally—Pursuers Held at Bay in Running Pistol Duel.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.—Dodging from tree to tree and firing as he ran, Henry Rokowski, who shot and killed Constable Martin Windt and probably fatally wounded two other persons at West Homestead, suburb, held a posse of 200 deputy sheriffs and citizens at bay on the hills above Monongahela valley for several hours.

The shots were returned, but Rokowski escaped through the woods to a deserted cabin where he barricaded the doors and, taking position at a window, fired at every movement within his range of vision.

Posse Is Re-innforced.

Soon after daybreak the posse was reinforced by a party of county detectives under John T. Burke and preparations were made to rush the house. A heavy fog hung over the valley delaying daylight until long after 9 a. m.

Mrs. Estelle Yekbik, who was shot twice when she refused to admit Rokowski to her house after he had killed the constable, is in the Homestead hospital hovering near death with a bullet wound close to her heart and another in her head while the doctors momentarily expected the death of Ignatz Raukoski, who had gone to her assistance.

The aged father of Rokowski, who had been beaten by the son and for which Constable Windt tried to arrest him, was held in the police station as a witness.

While the posse lay in the woods word was brought from Hays, a village nearby, that Rokowski had just passed through there, going up the Monongahela valley. Investigation showed the house was empty the man having slipped away in the fog. County detectives and deputies immediately hastened to Hays.

WILSON EVADES CURIOUS

Goes to New Church and Enjoys Long Ride—Confederate Soldiers Don't Recognize Him.

Gulfport, Miss., Dec. 30.—President Wilson sat in a quaint little Presbyterian church here, among a congregation of less than 100, and heard a remarkable sermon on the personal accountability of the individual to his Maker.

The president and Mrs. Wilson, accompanied by Dr. Cary T. Grayson, came unexpectedly, avoiding a crowd that had collected at the little church at Pass Christian, eight miles away. Rev. Dr. Herbert Albert Jones, the pastor, preached fervently.

"Methuselah lived to be 969 years old," the preacher said, "but was drowned in the flood. He lived all these years, yet, as we say in common parlance, he didn't know enough to come in out of the wet."

The president smiled.

The president's party motored away to Biloxi, 12 miles further east, along the coast, before turning back to Pass Christian.

On the way the president saw four aged Confederate veterans, in gray uniforms, hobbling along the road, leaning heavily on their canes.

"How do you do!" Mr. Wilson said, as he ordered his car to move slowly.

"Howdy!" they answered, but passed on without recognizing the president.

Suppressed Paper Offered Aid.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 30.—Former Congressman Victor Berger and leader of the Milwaukee Socialists, wired the publishers of the Calumet Finnish publication, the Tyomies, which was suppressed Saturday, that they were welcome to use the plant of the Milwaukee Socialistic newspaper until the authorities at Calumet would permit them again to issue their paper there.

$100,000 Fire in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 30.—Fire destroyed the sash, door and blind factory of the Willer Manufacturing company with a loss of over $100,000. Two hotels and several other business concerns were imperiled but with the exception of the African Methodist church, no other building was destroyed. There was slight additional loss due to water.

Collegiate Athletic Association.

New York, Dec. 30.—Dean LeBaron R. Briggs of Harvard, president of the National Collegiate Athletic association, presided over the opening session of that body's eighth annual meeting in the Hotel Astor this morning and after his address Rev. Endicot Peabody talked on "The Ideals of Sport in England and America." Dr George W. Ehler discussed the regulation of intercollegiate athletics, and Dr. J. Naismith spoke about basketball. Tonight "Summer Baseball" will be discussed.

EUGENE E. REED

© HARRIS & EWING

Eugene E. Reed, the Democratic congressman from the First district of New Hampshire, defeated Cyrus Sulloway, who had held the place for 16 years. Mr. Reed is a member of the Democratic national committee.

KENTUCKY CLAN MAY GIVE UP

TWENTY AT BAY ASK FOR TERMS OF SURRENDER.

Besieged in Abandoned Mine by Militia and Sheriff's Posse After Tragedy Near Pineville.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 30.—According to advices received by Governor McCreary here, the members of the Hendrickson clan, besieged by a detachment of state militia and a sheriff's posse in an abandoned mine between Pineville and Elys, are negotiating for surrender.

Ajutant General J. T. Ellis returned to Lexington from the mine and reported by telephone to Governor McCreary that the clansmen's provisions were running low and that they had asked for terms of surrender. Governor McCreary instructed the adjutant general to return to the mine and to inform him of the situation. Thirty-five militiamen and 10 deputy sheriffs guard the mine entrances.

The trouble started on Wednesday when, it is alleged, "Happy Jack" Hendrickson, leader of the clan, killed a man and, supported by his friends and relatives, engaged in a battle with a sheriff's posse. After the skirmish the Hendricksons fled to the mountains and were traced by bloodhounds to the abandoned mine shaft. It is said the fugitives in the mine number about 20.

SNOW COMING THIS WEEK

Disturbance on Way Here From the North Pacific Coast, Says Forecast.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Generally fair weather is predicted for the next few days in parts of the country east of the Rocky mountains and over the southern plateau region. The weekly forecast of the weather bureau says:

"The next disturbance of importance to cross the country will appear on the north Pacific coast not later than Tuesday, attended by high winds and rains, and cross the great central valleys about Thursday and and the eastern states on Friday; this disturbance will cause local snows in the northern states.

"Another disturbance will reach the north Pacific coast about Thursday and prevail over the Middle West near the end of the week; this disturbance will be attended by general rains and snows and be followed by decidedly colder weather."

TEACH RESOLUTION KEEPING

Course of Instruction and "Gym" Work to Help Youths With New Year Vows.

New York, Dec. 30.—A course of instruction in keeping New Year's resolutions is the object of a class that will open on Jan. 2 in the West Side branch of the Young Men's Christian association in this city.

Dr. Louis R. Welzmiller, physical instructor, says that most men "fall down" on their resolutions, not so much because of weak will power as depleted and run down muscles and nervous systems.

The instructor purposes to get his students in first class physical condition and keep them that way.

Workers for Labor Legislation.

Washington, Dec. 30. — With Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson in the chair, the American Association for Labor Legislation began its annual meeting this afternoon at the Shoreham by discussing "Administration and Industrial Relations." The speakers were Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the federal industrial relations commission, and Charles H. Crownhart, chairman of the Wisconsin industrial commission. This evening W. W. Willoughby of Princeton university will deliver an address.

State News of General Interest

MORE INDIAN CASES ARE WON BY U. S.

LAST OF CRIMINAL ACTIONS SETTLED BY RESTITUTION AT FERGUS FALLS.

CONSPIRACY WAS THE CHARGE

Nolo-contendere Under Which Waller Neither Affirms Nor Denies Charge—Clears Up All Government Cases.

Fergus Falls.—The cases against L. S. Waller, Andrew Venoss and Louis D. Davis, who were indicted with several other persons in the United States court here last spring, were settled at a special term here.

The Charge in Case.

It was charged the men had conspired to induce government officials to issue patents to Indian lands which should not have been issued, their purpose being to purchase the lands from the Indians at low prices.

After the convictions at the recent term of court here, negotiations were entered into for the settlement of the cases, and the result of these negotiations was that Mr. Waller appeared in court and entered a plea of non-contendere, under which he neither admitted nor denied his guilt. This plea was accepted by the government attorneys and the court, and the small fine of $100 was imposed. The cases against Venoss and Davis were dismissed.

The Settlement Reached.

In connection with the acceptance of this plea and the imposition of a nominal fine, it is announced that Mr. Waller turns back to the government 1,160 acres of land which he had purchased, worth $10 or more an acre, and that he pays in $3,000 in cash for the land that he had sold to other parties. Suits for the cancellation of the title to this land are still pending, and in case the government wins, he and those associated with him will be liable to the purchasers on their warranties.

This clears up all of the criminal cases connected with the Indian land deals. The government is well satisfied with the outcome, as it has secured restitution as far as possible, and Mr. Waller and his associates avoid the civil disability that would attach in case they had stood trial and been convicted or had entered pleas of guilty. There are still about 1,100 civil cases pending to set aside deeds to lands.

MILDER WINTER RECALLED

Crookston Man Tells of Plowing Contest in Manitoba Christmas Day in '77.

Crookston.—Judge G. C. Wilde of this city recalls a year in which present weather was equalled if not surpassed. On Christmas day in 1877 he was in a farmers' plowing contest at St. John Batiste, seven miles from Morris, Man. There was no frost in the ground. On New Year's Day there was a great tree planting rally, and thousands of trees were planted. On the prairie there was no frost in the ground at all, but in the timber, where the ground was protected, the soil was frozen and the trees were chopped out and a bunch of the frozen earth transplanted with the trees. The trees took root next spring and never stopped growing. Seeding was well along by March 17 the following spring. After that the first snow of the season fell. A storm raged for several days, snow piling high over the seeded fields. The crop that fall was one of the most bountiful ever raised in Manitoba.

Chew Tobacco; Lad Dies.

Fergus Falls.—A report has been received from Parkers Prairie of the death of the 6-year-old son of William Schramm, a farmer. Neighbors were visiting at the Schramm home and the little boy, with two boys of the visiting party, obtained some chewing tobacco, and, boy-like, began chewing it, as they had seen the men do. The Schramm boy swallowed some of it and died in convulsions from nicotine poisoning.

$218,570 Unlisted in Otter Tail.

Fergus Falls.—When the tax lists for Otter Tail county were turned in, the state tax commission suspected that all of the wealth in several townships had not been listed for taxation and appointed F. J. Pfefferle of this city to visit the villages of Battle Lake, Parkers Prairie and Deer Creek and the townships of Sverdrup, Deer Creek and Effington as a special assessor, his mission being to discover any credits that had been overlooked. He has just handed in a report, adding $218,570 to the tax rolls of the county.

U. S. GAINS MORE CONFIDENCE

Government Presses Its Suits in Federal Court at Fergus Falls Since Winning Case.

Fergus Falls.—Since the conviction of M. J. Kolb and J. E. Perrault on conspiracy charges and the recovery of $25,000 worth of property which they had purchased from the Indians, the government seems to be more confident in pressing the hundreds of civil cases which are pending here to set aside deeds given by Indians to white men. It secured default judgments in thirty-seven of these cases the past week, the defendants failing to appear and the deeds being set aside without contests, and has filed amended complaints in some of the others.

One complaint that has just been amended is in the case of the United States vs. Harry Manes and the Farmers' and Merchants' State bank of Sheboygan, Wis., and sets forth some allegations of a sensational nature in unusually picturesque language. It is alleged that the father of Isabelle Warren, a 13-year-old Indian girl, was induced to have her estate probated as though she was dead, although in reality she was living, and that it was decreed to her father and mother, who thereupon executed a deed of it to Achsah Mooers.

The complaint goes on to relate that "in the meantime, like beasts of prey, bent upon devouring their helpless victims either dead or alive," certain white men induced the girl herself to sign a deed transferring her property to one Frank S. Graham, the child being still in her thirteenth year, "and a child of the 'children of the forest,' and totally unequipped to defend herself and her property against the wiles and avariciousness of her more civilized but less humane white neighbors."

It is related further that she was to receive $800 for the land, but only received $100, that Graham immediately transferred his interest to Achsah Mooers, to whom the parents had assigned their interest after the probating of the estate, and that it was later sold to Harry Manes and mortgaged to the Sheboygan bank for $1,600.

The complaint closes by asking that all of these transactions be set aside It alleges that the Indian girl is a ward of the government, and that it is the duty of the government to protect her, as such ward, from "the greed, rapacity, cunning and perfidy of members of the white race."

CHARGE MURDEROUS ASSAULT

Emil Brooth Will Be Prosecuted on Charge of Man Pounded With Iron Bar.

Balaton.—Emil Brooth, otherwise known as Emil Baack, of Cameron township, Murray county, has been lodged in the county jail at Slayton on a charge of making a murderous assault on Guy Terry, a liveryman of this place. Brooth refuses to make a statement and the motive for the alleged crime is not known.

The condition of Terry, who was pounded with an iron bar weighing about four pounds, shows improvement, and it is expected he will recover. Brooth, who was held under the auto the two were riding, has a broken rib and his feet were frozen.

Brooth was bound over last fall on a grand larceny charge. While out on bail he disappeared, and his bond was declared forfeited after he had been indicted by the grand jury. Officials believe he was trying to make his way out of the country when he attacked Terry and started to drive the machine. The accident which followed spoiled his plans.

Rumors of Poisoning Put to Flight.

Fergus Falls.—Charles J. Rickert, a young man of the town of Oak Valley, died suddenly Saturday night after attending a Christmas entertainment at a district school house and partaking of candy and peanuts. He was seized with convulsions in the night and died in a few hours. The physician who was summoned was of the opinion death was due to strychnine poisoning, and Coroner J. G. Vigen, of this city, went down to investigate. The coroner was unable to find any evidence of the candy being poisoned, and concluded that death was due to acute kidney trouble probably brought on by the chilly drive after eating the sweets in the warm schoolhouse.

Drew Revolver; Is Fined.

Sleepy Eye.—Albert Gieske of Stark township was fined $25 by Judge I. M. Olsen for pointing a revolver at Nic Beckius at an auction last October. Gieske was saved from a heavier sentence by the fact that the state was unable to prove that the gun was loaded.

Goodly Sum for Tuberculosis.

Rochester.—Through the enterprise of Rochester women the sale of Red Cross seal stamps this year in Rochester far exceeded any past attempts and a good sum was realized for the fight on tuberculosis. The manager of a theatre was induced to secure a large number of the seals, which were pasted upon his advertising matter sent about the city, while a local church took up a collection for the purpose, buying the seals and placing them on the candy bags that were given to the children Christmas.

MYSTERY IN GIRL'S DEATH

Definitely Established Miss Cameron Was Seen Two Hours Before Body Was Found.

Minneapolis.—It is definitely established that at 6 a. m. last Tuesday Miss Rachel Cameron was in the Union station, bidding farewell to Miss Minnie Fjerestad, who was going to her parent's home at Kasson, Minn., for Christmas.

Less than two hours later Miss Cameron's body was taken from the river. It was so firmly frozen in the ice that it was necessary to call firemen to chop it out.

The police when they first were informed of these facts this morning refused absolutely to believe that Miss Cameron was alive at so late an hour. Later they were forced to accept the story as facts, for they are indisputable.

The new discovery does not solve the mystery of the woman's death. It deepens it. Every detail of the story which Miss Fjerestad told makes it more impossible to accept the theory that Miss Cameron ended her own life.

Miss Fjerestad, at Kasson accepts only the theory of murder.

WIDOW OF GOVERNOR WEDS

Mrs. John A. Johnson Becomes the Bride of William Alley Smith of Pittsburgh.

St. Paul.—A wedding beautiful in its appointments and details and marked with graceful simplicity was that of Mrs. John A. Johnson, widow of Governor Johnson, and William Alley Smith of Pittsburgh, Pa., which took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Van Slyck, 1180 Summit avenue.

The vows were spoken before an improvised alter of Easter lilies and palms and tall cathedral candles in candelabra, placed at either side of the altar. Dr. Maurice D. Edwards, pastor of the Dayton Avenue Presbyterian church, officiated in the presence of a small company of relatives and friends of the bride and groom.

Mr. Smith and his bride did not return at once to their future home in Pittsburgh, but will remain here some days, as a number of post-nuptial affairs are to be given in their honor.

LARGEST LAND OWNER DIES

C. J. Wright Stricken in Michigan—Was Ottertail County's Richest Real Estate Holder.

Fergus Falls.—A telegram from Battle Creek, Mich., announced the death of Charles J. Wright, who went there a month ago for treatment. He was Ottertail county's largest land owner and wealthiest citizen. He came to this city in the early 70s, his uncle, the late George B. Wright, having just laid out the townsite. He first engaged in surveying, and later became land agent for the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railway companies.

Mr. Wright invested every dollar he could secure in land when it could be had for almost nothing. He served as clerk of court here for eight years, was a member of the city council and was elected to the state legislature in the autumn of 1908, serving one term and donating his salary to various school libraries in the county. His wife and three children survive him.

$30,000 Subscribed at Rochester.

Rochester.—Thirty thousand dollars toward a new edifice was raised at the First Methodist church by Bishop William A. Quayle presiding. After preaching a Christmas sermon the bishop asked for $25,000 in twenty-five minutes and at the close of the period it was announced that $30,000 had been subscribed. It is planned by Rochester Methodists to build an edifice costing $40,000. Bishop Quayle preached at Byron in the evening.

Farmers Organize Phone Company

Fergus Falls.—Articles of incorporation of the Austad & Buse Telephone company, a farmers' organization that is to run lines south of this city, were filed here. The company incorporates with a capitalization of $10,000, and the officers are J. C. Easterday, president; John Thorson, vice president and M. E. Bergerud, secretary and treasurer.

Winona.—The report of the government fish station at Homer shows that in the past season a total of 765,000 young fish were placed in rivers by the United States bureau of fisheries after being hatched at the station. The season was a very successful one, says Superintendent W. S. Smith. An effort will be made next year to increase the output of black bass.

Public Christmas Tree Success.

Albert Lea, Minn. — Thousands of children of all ages danced, clapped their hands, and shouted with joy around the big public Christmas tree during the celebration. The white spruce, which was planted 20 years ago by Joel G. Winkjer, now state dairy and food commissioner, on the Henderson farm, stood on Broadway. It was elaborately trimmed with gold and silver tinsel ornaments and electric lights in many colors. On the topmost branch a brilliant star waved to and fro.

Housework is a Burden

The daily cares of keeping house and bringing up a family are hard enough for a healthy woman. The tired, weak mother who struggles from morn to night with a lame, aching back is carrying a heavy burden.

Many women believe that urinary disorders and backache are "female troubles" and must be endured. But men suffer the same aches and troubles when the kidneys are sick.

Women are especially subject to kidney disease. Tight clothing, indoor work, the ordeals of childbirth, the worry, and the stooping, straining and striving of housework all help to bring it on. At first the trouble may be only backache, sick headache, dizziness and a drowsy, dull languid feeling, but this condition is dangerous to neglect, for dropsy, gravel and deadly Bright's disease start in some such small way.

Don't be discouraged. When backache, nervousness and irregular or painful passages of the kidney secretions begin to bother you, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the remedy that has brought new life and strength to thousands of suffering women. There are no poisonous nor narcotic drugs in Doan's Kidney Pills—nothing to injure nor cause a habit. Delicate women can use them with perfect safety.

"Every Picture Tells A Story"

"Oh! What a pain."

The following case is typical of the cures effected by Doan's Kidney Pills. Grateful testimony is the best evidence.

SAVED HER LIFE
Made Well After Doctors Failed

Mrs. John Brumley, 114 12th St., Greeley, Colo., says: "I believe I would be in my grave if I hadn't used Doan's Kidney Pills. The first sign of kidney trouble was a constant ache in my back. I dragged along, day after day, feeling too tired to attempt my housework. Then came frequent dizzy spells that made me weak for hours. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and very distressing. My feet ached and swelled until I could hardly stand. The swelling extended upwards to my limbs and hips. For three months I hardly slept enough to keep me alive. I was awfully nervous and irritable. My case puzzled the doctors and their medicine didn't help me. A relative had been cured of kidney trouble by Doan's Kidney Pills and advised me to try them. I did and the results were wonderful. The backache stopped, the swelling went away and I rested better. The kidney secretions got all right and once more I enjoyed good health. Recently the kidney secretions were analyzed by the doctor and he found no signs of kidney complaint. Doan's Kidney Pills alone cured me."

"When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name"
DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS
Sold by all Dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., Proprietors

SAVED BY PRESENCE OF MIND

Jew Outwitted Russian Guard by Imitation That Must Have Been Remarkable.

Aaron Seidentaft is a clever fellow, as you may understand when you learn how his quick wit recently brought him safely out of a situation of the utmost peril. Aaron desired to visit Russia, but he had no passport. He said to his friend Mendel:

"You have a passport I'll get into a big bag and you shall carry me across the border. If the frontier guard asks you to put the bag down, you'll say you can't because there's glass in it and it will break."

Mendel was obliging. He shouldered the bag with Seidentaft in it and approached the boundry. The frontier guard asked what was in the bag and Mendel answered, "Glass." Thereupon the soldier drew his sword and ran it through the bag. It might easily have gone very hard with Seidentaft if he had forgotten his role and cried out. But he didn't. Instead he made a noise like this: "Kling, klang." And so he got alive into Russia.

He often relates his adventure and he always adds: "When one is labeled glass, one must behave like glass."—New York Evening Post.

Reasons for Opposing the "Pahson."

A negro church in a western city is now writhing in the throes of a lawsuit. The deacons have applied to the court for an injunction against the pahson, asking that he be barred from preaching or occupying the pulpit in that church henceforth. The deacons charge that the pahson gets drunk, appears at funerals and weddings in a state of inebriety and has otherwise brought reproach upon the congregation. The suit is now "pending."—Kansas City Star.

Testimonial From High Authority

Mrs. B. L. Wilson of Nashville, Tenn., is famed the world over for her wonderfully delicious cakes. They are shipped to all parts of the globe for special affairs where the best of cakes are demanded.

Mrs. Wilson has the distinction of baking Christmas cakes for the Presidents, in which she uses Calumet Baking Powder.

She states:

"To have complete success, with no failures, care should be used in the selection of Baking Powder."

Calumet is complimented with the following testimonial from her:

"Some little time ago I made a careful study and investigation of the baking powder subject and I feel fully repaid. I am firmly convinced from the results I have received that there is no baking powder to equal Calumet for wholesomeness and economy, and I also recommend Calumet Baking Powder for its never failing results."

Calumet also received the Highest Awards at the World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago; Grand Prize and Gold Medal, Paris Exposition, 1912.

This will, without a doubt, prove interesting and very gratifying to the friends and customers of Calumet Baking Powder. It has always been found that Calumet is economical to use.—Adv.

Foiling Chris.

Columbus had returned to Spain, bringing news of wonderful new lands across the sea.

"How much shall I write on it?" queried the maritime reporter of the Cadiz Evening Bulletin, who had brought in the story.

"Don't write anything," replied the editor. "Let Columbus pay for his advertising if he wants any. It's probably a real estate promotion scheme."

Important to Mothers
Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher
In Use For Over 30 Years.
Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Natural Choice.

Gabe—Bragley says he would rather fight than eat.

Steve—I don't blame him. I had dinner at his house one night.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

Even after eating onions a woman may find some one to love her, but it is different with a mere man.

It is easier for the average woman to muster up courage to face a mouse than openly to defy fashion.

JAMES WOULD COME LATER

Incidentally Mrs. Gordon Had Lifted Some Load From the Mind of Her Neighbor.

Mrs. Gordon had recently moved into the neighborhood.

"I thought I would come and tell you that your James has been fighting with my Edward," said one of the neighbors, one morning as she called at Mrs. Gordon's door, "and settle the matter if I could."

"Well, for my part," responded Mrs. Gordon, haughtily, "I have no time to enter into any discussion about the children's quarrels. I consider myself above such trifling things."

"I'm delighted to hear it," was the reply. "I'll send James over on a stretched in an hour or two."—Life.

The Alternative.

"Do you ever, my good woman, castigate your children?"

"Never, ma'am. I only wallops 'em."

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position.

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessable a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

For illustrated literature and reduced railway rates, apply to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to

W. E. BLACK
Clifford Block
Grand Forks, N. D.
Canadian Government Agent

160 ACRE FARMS WESTERN CANADA FREE

TILTING TABLE FRAME COMPLETE WITH SAW

inch
24	$16.00
26	16.50
28	17.00
30	17.50

SAWS

24 inch	$3.90
26 "	4.50
28 "	5.10
30 "	5.70

MANDRELS, $3.00 AND UP

POND ICE SAWS

$2.50 AND UP

AMERICAN SAW & TOOL WORKS
14th ST. & WESTERN AVE., CHICAGO

The Wretchedness of Constipation
Can quickly be overcome by CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.
Purely vegetable—act surely and gently on the liver. Cure Biliousness, Headache, Dizziness, and Indigestion. They do their duty.
SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE.
Genuine must bear Signature
Brent Good

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

Fargo Directory

Shotwell Floral Co.
Growers and shippers of cut flowers, plants, etc. Write for catalog. Funeral designs on short notice. Phone day or night. Fargo, N. D.

Neal 3 Day Cure for the drink habit is a positive and permanent cure. Easy to take. Save time and money by taking the Neal Treatment at 1825 3rd Ave., S., Fargo, N. D. Drug habit cured.

Dr. H. W. Allen, Osteopath
Acute and chronic diseases successfully treated. Spinal injuries and irregularities a specialty. Graduate American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo.
Offices: 321-322 de Lendrecie Block Fargo N. D.

Fargo Tannery
Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

Household Remedies
Children's Cough Syrup
Safe, pleasant, efficient cough, cold and bronchial remedy for children. Harmless and effective, containing no opiates or habit forming drugs. 25 cents at druggists.
There is a Household Remedy for every ailment, all guaranteed to give satisfaction.
Minnesota Pharmaceutical Mfg. Company, St. Paul, Minn.

EARN $25 TO $100 A WEEK
Young Men Wanted to fill the demand of Automobile and Gas Traction Engineers. "Now is the time to act." Write for free information.
Fargo School of Automobile & Gas Engineering,
1018 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakota

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool
to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo, N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.
Pattern of a No. 1 Hide.

Poultry Profits
Keep the hen laying during the winter months for largest net profits.
Send us your order for

Crushed Oyster Shells	$1.00	per 100 lbs.
Crushed Clam Shells	.85	" " "
Granulated Bone	2.85	" " "
Alfalfa Meal	1.75	" " "
Oil Meal	1.75	" " "
Blatchford's Calf Meal	3.50	" " "

1914 Seed Catalogue will soon be distributed—send for one.
FARGO SEED HOUSE, Fargo, N. D.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE
A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year.
Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking.
Next term opens soon. For full information address F. L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota

CANCER FREE TREATISE The Leach Sanatorium, Indianapolis, Ind., has published a booklet which gives interesting facts about the cause of Cancer; also tells what to do for pain, bleeding, odor, etc. Write for it today, mentioning this paper.

Virginia Farms and Homes
FREE CATALOGUE OF SPLENDID BARGAINS.
R. B. CHAFFIN & CO., Inc., Richmond, Va.

READERS of this paper desiring to buy anything advertised in its columns should insist upon having what they ask for, refusing all substitutes or imitations.

PISO'S REMEDY
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS
25 CTS.

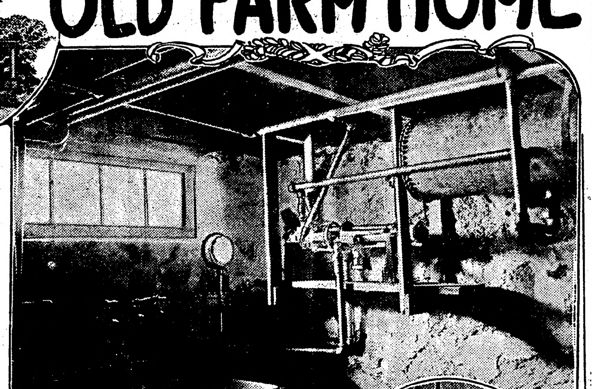
FREE TO ALL SUFFERERS.
If you feel 'OUT OF SORTS' 'RUN DOWN' or 'GOT THE BLUES' SUFFER from KIDNEY, BLADDER, NERVOUS DISEASES, CHRONIC WEAKNESSES, ULCERS, SKIN ERUPTIONS, PILES, write for my FREE book. THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE MEDICAL BOOK EVER WRITTEN, IT TELLS ALL about these DISEASES and the REMARKABLE CURES EFFECTED by THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY. No1. No2. No3.
THERAPION & you can decide FOR YOURSELF if it's the remedy for YOUR OWN ailment. Don't send a cent. Absolutely FREE. No 'follow up' circulars. DR. LECLERC MED. CO, HAVERSTOCK RD, HAMPSTEAD, LONDON, ENG.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM
A toilet preparation of merit. Helps to eradicate dandruff. For Restoring Color and Beauty to Gray or Faded Hair. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

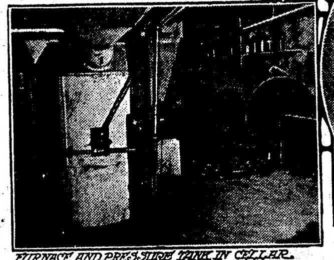
MODERNIZING AN OLD FARM HOME

AN OLD FARM HOME MODERNIZED

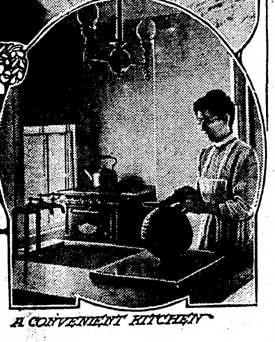
By MRS. F. F. SHOWERS



LAUNDRY AND SOFT WATER TANK



FURNACE AND PRESSURE TANK IN CELLAR.



A CONVENIENT KITCHEN

DINING ROOM WITH HOME MADE FIREPLACE

THE farmer, without whom no other class of society could exist, seemingly thinks the least of home comforts, wife, and children. All are thought of in relation to how much and in what way they will increase the revenue of the farm. I said to a farmer recently. "Why don't you put such and such comforts into your home instead of continually expending more money to make your horses, hogs, and cattle more comfortable and sanitary?" He answered, "The house does not bring in money," as though all we lived for was the mere possession of money!

One cannot pick up a farm paper without reading an account of a corn-growing contest, a fat-stock show, a poultry show, and noting the prizes offered for the best results obtained. All of these tend to stimulate the boys and girls to become more interested in the farms and not to be satisfied with anything but the best. These contests are commendable and are serving to educate our boys and girls by placing before them tangible standards they may seek to secure. This education causes them to be dissatisfied with their previous attainments, and the result is progress. The boy sees the result of the carefully selected seed, the painstaking preparation of the seed bed made possible by some piece of machinery he is not in possession of, and the result is new seed and new machinery. You think you see the immediate result of this added expenditure of money, but how about you daughter? You may be giving her the domestic science course in the high school, but are you willing to spend the same amount of money for her to put into operation the knowledge she has acquired?

Co-operation is the key word of today. The wife has co-operated with the husband from the beginning of time. It is high time the husband co-operated with the wife and daughters. Now, this co-operation is not as costly as it may seem. When I give you the figures on the cost of installing the modern conveniences we have in our home I am sure you will agree with me that many can afford to expend the amount, when the results are taken into consideration. Get together, study your conditions, and you will be surprised with the amount of pleasure you derive from planning and rearranging your home.

I should like to suggest that you give your farm some suitable and appropriate name, a name by which it will be recognized not only in that immediate locality, but a name that will mean something to future generations. We have named our farm "The Manx," in honor of my father, who was born on the Isle of Man.

The house as a whole is shown in one of the illustrations. The stones for the porch, which is teen feet wide and fifty feet around the outer wall, were taken from the pasture. The floor of the porch is cement and slopes towards either corner, where drains are located. I wish to call your attention to the number and height of the windows of the house, which provide health-giving air and light. The chimney is built in the center of the house from the cellar bottom. It contains three independent flues from the basement to the top, one for the furnace and ene each for the two fireplaces. The cesspool is situated in the lot just beyond the maple tree. The windmill, which pumps the water and air for the large pressure tank in the basement, is located at the corner of the barn. A self-regulating device is attached to the mill so that when the pressure in the tank reaches sixty pounds a lever is forced upwards and starts to throw the mill out of gear by the time the pressure has been increased to eighty pounds the mill is entirely out of gear and remains so until we draw water enough to reduce the pressure in the tank, when the mill is again thrown in gear. A thirty barrel galvanized tank is located in the hay mow of the barn into which is conducted the soft water from the eaves of the barn. The water from this tank is conveyed to the house through a one and a half inch pipe, and furnishes sufficient water for the summer months. During the winter months the soft water is obtained from a large cistern,—the connection with which I shall explain later. There are cement walks leading from the front and side porches to the driveway and also to the barn.

Another illustration is that of the basement showing the large pressure tank which receives the water from the windmill. The supply pipe is tapped near the barn and supplies water in the barn. The pressure tank supplies water for the basement, kitchen, and bathroom on the second floor, besides furnishing power to run the lift pump and supplying water for lawn and garden. The hot air pipes of the furnace open directly into the shafts above the furnace so that there are no side pipes excepting the one running to the kitchen. The vegetable callar open directly from the furnace room and has an opening into one of the flues of the chimney so as to carry off all foul odors.

In the basement is also a gasoline gas machine which furnishes the gas for lighting the house and barn and for the cooking of all our meals. The carburetor, which will hold two barrels of gasoline, is buried in the ground outside of the house. The shell holds about eight hundred pounds of sand and by its weight unwinds a fan or pump which drives the air out to the carburetor where is becomes saturated and returns to the mixer where it is further diluted with air before passing through the riser to all parts of the house and barn.

The corner of the laundry containing the pressure gauge, lift pump, and pressure tank connected with the cistern, is shown in one of the illustrations. The connection with the lift pump is cut off in the summer months as we have had plenty of soft water from the tank in the barn. By means of this lift pump and pressure tank the pressure in the soft water pipes is the same as that in the hard water pipes and does away with waiting for the lift pump to work.

Directly above the laundry and connected by a stairway is the kitchen. On one side of the landing of this stairway is the refrigerator and on the other side a wood box. These are both filled from the outside of the house. All of the floors on the first floor are hard maple, either waxed or oiled, and covered with rugs.

The kitchen, shown in one of the illustrations, is painted in white enamel and the walls are covered with white oil cloth paper in tile design. In this kitchen is a large center table with a sink in one corner, above which you see the hard water faucet and the hot and cold soft water faucets. The table is 58x38 inches and stands 33 inches from the floor. The sink is 18x34 inches. With the help of a board which I can slide over the sink, I can increase the size of my table. At the end of the table is a large drawer for kitchen spoons, knives, forks, etc. This room has three windows and a door containing a window. There are built-in cupboards and flour and bread bins, all out of the way of dust. The gas range in the corner of the room is like any city gas range and furnishes sufficient heat for the serving of twenty or thirty people. The hot water tank shown in the picture is heated during the winter months by the furnace which has a coil of one and one-half inch and one inch pipe connected directly with this tank. The tank furnishes sufficient heat for the kitchen, and we found the water hot enough to attach a radiator in the living room, thus adding much to the comfort of the room and saving on the fuel bill.

The dining room opens from the kitchen and also has openings into the living room and parlor. In this room you see one of the home-made fireplaces. A form was made on the floor of this room and into it was poured the cement in which was imbedded woven wire for reinforcement. In the cement the chips, taken from the stones in building the front porch, were stuck. This was allowed to dry for five days; after which it was placed in position as you see it. There is another fireplace similar to this and directly back of it in the parlor.

In a corner of the dining room is a built-in china closet and sideboard, with supboard below. Directly behind the china closet is a built-in bookcase in the living room.

Opening out of the kitchen is the back stairway leading to the bedroom. This is finished in white, the same as the kitchen. We also have three kinds of water in the faucets over the lavatory. Opening into the same hall into which the bathroom opens is the den or library, from which room there is an outside door opening onto an upper porch for airing bedding and shaking rugs. There is a long hall connecting these rooms with the front hall, into which the bedrooms open and which also leads to the front stairway and to the reception hall below.

These, briefly enumerated, are the mechanical devices about which pages might be written in describing the conveniences they make possible, to say nothing of the sanitation. I know those who are employed in the kitchen noticed the location of the table in the center of the room and its proximity to the gas range and built-in cupboards. It is also sanitary, as there are no openings and corners between sink and adjoining walls for the accumulation of dust. Woodwork and walls, being in white enamel, are easily kept clean. Having all kinds and plenty of water directly above the sink does away with lifting and carrying of water pails and garbage cans. The gas light directly above the table makes it impossible to get into your own shadow. The gas range needs but the lighted match, and the drudgery of carrying in wood, lighting and keeping up the fire, and carrying out the ashes is done away with. I shall here answer a question I know will arise, and that is the cost of fuel and light with this system. Our bill from July 3, 1911, to July 3, 1912, was fifty-two dollars, or one dollar a week for all cooking, baking, and lighting of the house and barn. Compare this with the time spent in getting up wood for the kitchen stove or the cost of coal, or will those who live in the city compare these figures with their gas and electric light bills.

The bathroom has appealed to more rural visitors at our home than has any other room in the house. Those of you who have come in from the hay field on a hot summer day or have come from a dusty, dirty threshing job, would know how to appreciate this room. Here you have hot or cold water as you wish, or soft or hard water to meet your fancy.

The laundry is equipped with movable tubs, and hot water is to be had at all times when the furnace is being used. When the furnace is not in use a fire in the laundry stove supplies us with good hot water. There the washing is away from the living rooms, and the steam is drawn up the flues of the main chimney, which does away with steam all over the house. The sink in the laundry is connected with the sewer pipes leading to the cesspool, thus carrying off all waste water from the laundry. The last, and I suppose most important picture is the bill of expense for installing these conveniences:

Light and gas fixtures, including gas machine, all piping, gas stove, and all fixtures	$262.47
Pressure tank, thirty barrel tank in barn, digging of trench from windmill to house, pump at mill, piping, laundry, bathroom and kitchen equipments complete	295.00
Installation of furnace with all pipes and registers	135.00
Two fireplaces, including grates, tile, cement and labor	31.50
	$723.97

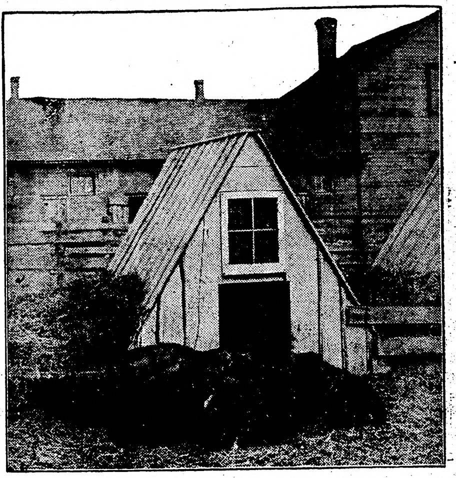
I know you will agree with me when I say the farm house can be made as convenient as any city home and at a much less expense of upkeep. Come to "The Manx" and see how simple and convenient these appliances make the so-called drudgery of farm life.—From the Report of the Wisconsin Country Life Conference.

HIS REASONS.

"You say there is a real estate boom. Have you any grounds for that assertion?"

"Sure I have. The grounds I am trying to sell."

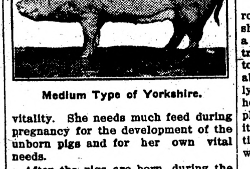
MAINTAINING YOUNG SOWS IN GOOD FLESH



A Good Type of Hog Cot.

It is held by most farmers that the brood sow must be kept in thin flesh. Following this rule, which is good in a way, many farmers allow the sows an insufficient amount of feed, and hence both sow and pigs suffer, writes W. H. Underwood in the Iowa Homestead. Also the young sow farrows before she is mature in size, and through light feeding she never attains the size and breeding capacity that she would had she been given larger amounts of feed during her growing period.

The sow for several well understood reasons should not be kept too fat, especially in farrowing time. She has, however, large demands placed upon her, and hence requires large amounts of feed to sustain normal vitality. She needs much feed during pregnancy for the development of the unborn pigs and for her own vital needs.



Medium Type of Yorkshire.

After the pigs are born, during the suckling period, the sow requires an extra large amount of nutritious feed in order to furnish a full flow of milk for the little pigs and maintain her own flesh.

Too often the sow at the close of the suckling period becomes poor and depleted in strength. Frequently she is absolutely exhausted, and requires many weeks to regain flesh and strength, if it is possible to regain the loss. There is no doubt but that this frequent flesh and vitality weakening impairs the health and value of the animal. Were she kept in good round flesh at all times there is no question but that she would live longer and be more productive in advanced years.

The young sow often grows until after her second or third litter of pigs. Then is the period when maternity tells on an animal most. If to the physical strain of giving birth to pigs and suckling them is added the stunting effect of too light feeding the young sow cannot possibly attain her highest development. This will not only affect her future earning power, but will also affect the profits in her pigs. They will to some extent inherit her undersize and weakness, and the future stock will therefore be small and poor.

If the young sow is kept in good round flesh until after full maturity she will have a chance to develop into a large mother animal, and be able to transmit her size and strong vitality to her offspring. If she carries an abundance of flesh and some fat nearly equal to that of the prime finished hog for market she will have a surplus for the draining weeks of maternity and not become so poor at any time that her system is materially weakened.

It is much easier to maintain a sow in good flesh than to restore it after it has been lost, and it is better in every way for the animal. A good sow may be fully half the herd in giving quality to the pigs if she is given sufficient feed and care to make manifest her full powers.

DAIRY PROSPERITY BY USE OF A SILO

Dairymen Should Take Advantage of Every Opportunity to Reduce His Expenses.

(By J. E. WORMAN.)

If a dairy farmer were told that he could roll silver dollars down a hill and then pick up two dollars for every one he rolled down, and this statement was verified by some of his neighbors, and hundreds of other dairy farmers in the country, that farmer would stay up nights to roll the dollars.

But when told that he could double the profits by the use of the silo he becomes very indifferent and keeps on in the same old rut, feeding dry feed, wasting nearly half of his corn crop and doing a lot of unnecessary work.

In these days of close competition dairymen should be ready to take advantage of every opportunity to reduce the cost of production, and it will be found that it is easier if the proper methods are used to do that than to raise the selling price of the dairy product. The results are the same; a large net profit.

In the corn plant about 40 per cent of the feeding value is in the stalk and 60 per cent. in the ear. When the ear alone is fed nearly half of the corn crop is wasted.

Where the dry stalks are fed at least half of them remain uneaten, while if stored in the silo the loss is almost nothing.

Every dairyman knows that cows will do their best on fresh June pasture. The grass is succulent and palatable and the conditions for a maximum milk flow are ideal. These conditions, however, do not last very long.

The silo comes as near to supplying the ideal conditions as anything that can be found, and it is available every day in the year. It provides a uniform feed for every one of the 12 months.

Highly sensitive dairy cows resent any sudden change or violent alteration in feed, and will show it by a decreased milk flow. The change from fall pasture to dry feed is always followed by the shrinkage in the milk.

In changing from the pasture to the silage is not so great, and often the cows increase the flow when started on silage.

Silage is not a complete ration for a dairy cow. Silage is high in carbohydrates and some concentrates or roughage with a high protein content should be fed with it; such as wheat bran, oil meal, cottonseed meal or alfalfa or clover hay.

At the Illinois experiment station it is reported that a selected herd of dairy cows were being maintained on alfalfa hay and corn silage alone. The cows are in excellent condition, and have made good yields and a good profit.

Every dairyman should make an effort to grow alfalfa and put up silage. It is a great combination and all home grown. This constant buying of milk feed is what cuts down the profits, and should be eliminated as far as possible.

When it is considered that corn can be grown so easily and in every section of the country, it stands at the head of the list of forage crops for this purpose.

The yield in feeding value and the convenience of handling makes it the best silage crop.

The yield will range from 10 to 20 tons per acre on good soil, and even higher yields have been reported. At 15 tons per acre, one acre will furnish roughage enough for two cows for every day in the year, or four cows during a feeding period of six months. What other crop will do that?

Other crops can be used, such as sorghum or cow peas in combination with either sorghum or corn. The cow peas improve the silage, for it adds protein, but the yield is small and difficult to harvest.

Stick to the Farm.

The young men are beginning to take notice. The old advice for boys to stay on the farm is certainly being heeded. Progress in this respect is certainly in the right direction.

Grow Truck Crops.

It is better to grow truck-crops for our own laboring men than to ship grain to Europe.

The Treasure of Spandau

An Audacious Hazard of Nikolai, Independent Agent, as Related by His Lieutenant, Summers

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman)

"War," said Nikolai to me, "is the greatest of all knaveries. It is made possible only by the tribute that the strong have exacted from the weak. So, by relieving the German government of its funds, I shall be assisting the cause of humanity."

We were in Berlin. The Morocco affair had stirred all Europe, and war between the Teuton and the Gaul was believed to be imminent. All Berlin was aflame with enthusiasm. Nikolai, passing a patriotic procession, laughed scornfully.

"And this the folly of these silly sheep of which the government hopes to reap the advantage by an unpardonable attack on France," he said. "It would be a charity to prevent it."

"Prevent war?" I exclaimed.

Nikolai turned to me. "What makes war possible?" he asked.

"Money," I answered promptly.

"And the German government's war fund is—"

"In the fortress of Spandau," I exclaimed, suddenly enlightened.

Everybody knows that after France had paid Germany a huge monetary indemnity in 1871, the Teutonic government set aside a war fund of several million pounds in gold, which was immured in the recesses of the fortress of Spandau, nine miles from Berlin. And it was this sum that Nikolai contemplated raiding.

I confess the audacity of the scheme staggered me. Even knowing Nikolai as I did, the idea appeared to me increible. Yet here was this one man calmly proposing to loot the treasures of the kaiser, and those buried in the recesses of one of Germany's most powerful fortresses.

The evening papers were full of war news. Among other items we gleaned that the guns of Spandau were about to be dismounted and sent to the frontier, to help overawe the French government. It was the policy of Germany to obtain her ends peacefully if possible. In consequences, the publication of these items, as calculated to terrorize France, was rather encouraged. The papers teemed with stories of the preparations for mobilization.

Among other things we read that a cargo of shrapnel shells was to be huried to Spandau, and thence to be conveyed with the guns to a waste territory in Alsace, used by the government for war manoeuvres on a large scale. Extensive firing practice, we learned, was to be carried on there, and, if the French government did not then come to terms, the mimic war would be converted into a reality.

Nikolai was morose on the following day. I think the magnitude of his scheme was now better realized by him. Together we haunted the vicinity of the freight yards.

"Those shells will arrive from the Krupp factories," he mediated. "Summers, it will be our task to convey them to Spandau in person."

"But how?" I asked.

Nikolai smiled. "In a bureaucracy," he answered, "everything is possible." And he made an appointment to meet me at the freight yards at seven o'clock that evening.

That was the hour at which the special train, bearing the load of shells, was due to arrive. Everything goes by clockwork in Germany, and punctually at seven o'clock the train entered the station, the great shells openly displayed in the cars. Upon the engine was a representative of the Krupp works.

Disguised as a mechanic, I waited, terrified lest at any moment some of the officers should inquire my business. But they were too much absorbed with the affairs in hand. A tall officer in uniform, wearing crossed swords upon his shoulders, stepped forward among those waiting and displayed an order. I gasped; it was Nikolai himself.

He beckoned me and said, with assumed roughness:

"I want you, my man, to help unload this cargo at its destination." Then, turning to the officers assembled, he added:

"You see, gentlemen, it is the emperor's special order. These shells must be run in to Spandau this evening or I cannot answer for the consequences."

They did not scrutinize the paper hard. They saw the signature of the kaiser and saluted. Then, turning to the station agent, Nikolai commanded that the train be shunted to the private line which runs direct to the fortress.

Half an hour later the train was in motion. Nikolai and I rode upon the engine, our solitary companion being the driver, whose duty would be completed when he had taken the train to its destination. A brief run brought us within sight of the frowning fortress, a bastion strong enough to have defied centuries of time and all the artillery of any hostile army. Yet Nikolai had set himself to capture its treasures!

The train ran right within the walls and halted in a wide square inside, around which the great black hulks of the guns loomed like some prehistoric monsters. Soldiers were passing busily to and fro; none of them, however, paid any attention to us. They had their orders, and in Germany meddling with external affairs is discouraged. Nikolai stepped off and proceeded toward a little archway which led to the quarters of the commanding officer. Presently the two emerged together.

"Your Excellency," said Nikolai, "I have now fulfilled the emperor's instructions. You yourself, doubtless, have received orders as to the disposition of these shells. I shall proceed to unload them, with the help of your men, and my machanic here will examine each shell separately for any possible defects sustained in transit. He is the chief foreman of the ordnance branch of the Krupp factory."

The commanding offier acquiesced, and when, at his command, which was issued through several subordinates, files of soldiers in fatigue dress came swarming in the center of the square, indicated that the shells were to be unloaded. The men fell to with a will. Each shell was an enormous burden for a single soldier, and soon the sweat was streaming down their faces. It was midnight before the last of the ammunition was safely stacked in the square.

Nikolai produced a small hammer from the pocket of his overcoat and handed it to me. "Tap the shells lightly," he whispered. "Some are defective—you understand? You are acquainted with their mechanism?"

I had not served to no purpose in the British Royal artillery. I plied my task, calling to Nikolai frequently. The soldier had withdrawn; the commanding officer, who stood watching us, showed signs of fatigue. After half an hour, while his yawns grew visibly longer, Nikolai spoke.

"Your excellency," he said, "I regret to say that my mechanic here finds quite a number of defective time-fuses. To remedy this work will require several hours of hard work."

The commanding officer came over. He looked at the shells. "I see nothing wrong with them," he said, peering through his glasses.

"Perhaps not, sir," Nikolai rejoined, "and I have no doubt that in a pinch all would prove serviceable. Nevertheless, the Krupp factory feels a peculiar responsibility in this matter, and, with your leave, this fellow shall adjust the defective ones."

"As you please," replied the commanding officer shortly. "Captain Kuppenheim will superintend the matter." He turned toward his office to give the order. Nikolai, beckoning me, followed him.

The office was a small, well-furnished room connecting with the officer's quarters by a small psasage-way, which cut it off from the rest of the house. He turned to his desk. Nikolai was close upon his heels. In an ante-room I saw an orderly dozing over a fire. Upon the desk was a bell. The officer bent over to press it.

And suddenly Nikolai's arms were round his throat, one hand pressed upon his mouth. The officer struggled valiantly, but he was perfectly helpless in Nikolai's grasp. Instantly I had improvised a gag and thrust it into his mouth; then, with lengths of cord which lay scattered around the apartment, we bound his limbs and trussed him like a fowl. We rolled him into a corner, where he lay glaring at us in an indescribably comical manner, utterly helpless. I looked into the ante-room. The orderly was snoring peacefully.

"That was the crux of the problem," said Nikoli. "Now all is plain sailing. It's lucky we found that cord."

The office was in confusion. Piles of papers and wrappings lay all about. In one corner was a screen. Nikolai placed it in front of the officer and motioned to me to step behind it.

"Hold your revolver to his head," he said. "The slightest sound or drumming of limbs and he dies." He said this in a tone loud enough to be perfectly understood by the helpless officer.

But then we were a little uncertain. It seemed incredible that we could remain there long undiscovered. Nikolai called the orderly.

"Go to bed," he said. "We do not need you."

I had expected that the soldier would question this command from a stranger, but the German soldier is trained to implicit obedience to the word of a superior. He simply saluted and marched stiffly out of the door. Then, at Nikolai's word, I raised the officer, and together we carried him into the ante-room, where we deposited him upon the hearth before the fire, with a pillow beneath his head.

All this while my thoughts had been running on the gold. But Nikolai was not yet ready. He had told me to make doubly sure that his plans would not miscarry. He called after the retreating orderly. The man turned.

"Send Captain Kuppenheim here," he said.

Two minutes later the captain came running in, drew himself up and saluted.

"Captain Kuppenheim," said Nikolai, returning the salute, "I have the honor to inform you that you will receive your orders from me." And he showed him a paper—Heaven knows how many of them Nikolai had forged or how he had done so—bearing the superscription of the kaiser. The captain looked at it and saluted again.

"You will tell off a half company of men to keep guard in the courtyard," said Nikolai, "while the shells are adjusted. They will be ready in half an hour and will form in columns of four, in fatigue uniform."

The captain saluted aagin. "That will do, Captain Kuppenheim," said Nikolai.

The captain retired stiffly. Then Nikolai turned to me. "We must find the keys," he whispered.

"Let us take another look at the general," I exclaimed. In truth, though he had been bound hand and foot, though he could make no outcry, I was astonished that he had not somehow managed to indicate his presence in some manner. It is difficulty to deprive a man entirely of motion, be his bonds ever so strong.

We went into the ante-room. The general lay by the hearth just as we had placed him. Nikolai lifted his arm. It fell heavily. By the light of the fire I scrutinized his face. The eyes were half open, but there was no recognition in them.

"He is dead," said Nikolai, solemnly.

It was true. He was an old man, and the shock had, doubtless, brought about a fatal stroke of apoplexy. Nikolai gazed at him a moment in silence. Then he raised his hand at the salute.

"Honor to a brave man, even though he be a servant of tyranny," he said. "It is as well for him perhaps." Then he turned away.

This unexpected denouement, while it could not add to the desperate condition of our undertaking, solved one of our most pressing difficulties. All danger from this source was now removed. Nikolai went back into the office, and together we searched for the keys. And we found them. We found bunches of keys—keys of every kind. There must have been half a hundred when we gave up the search. But which was the key to the strong room?

"None of these," said Nikolai. "It will be in triplicate—and there will be a combination." He paused and looked at me sadly. "Summers," he said, "I had hoped to wring the secret from the dead man by threat of death. It was a desperate hope at best; now it is not even a hope. The secret of the combination was known to none but him, doubtless.

Suddenly I had an inspiration.

"The key will be upon his person!" I exclaimed.

Nikolai's hand descended softly upo my shoulder. "You are right, Summers," he said. "Come!"

It was repugnant to me to lay hands upon the dead man there by the fire. I felt guilty as a parricide as I reverently cut the bonds; as a robber of the dead when I turned out the contents of the pockets. There were letters there in feminine writing, money, papers, a hasty glimpse at which revealed their unimportance to us, and a great gleaming golden watch which, as I took it, opened in my hand and flashed out the time to me. But there was no key.

"Round his neck," said Nikolai.

And there we found it. It was a little golden key, alone, but of a peculiar fashion. I saw at once that, by pressing a spring upon its handle, it was convertible into either of two other kinds through an automatic movement of the wards. There were, then, three locks to be forced.

I felt elated; I could hardly restrain my joy. But Nikolai stood looking down at me gravely.

"That's no use, Summers," he said. "We need the combination."

I had forgotten that. Our partial success had only made our eventual failure the more humiliating. Still, we had found the key. Perhaps the combination might be written down. "He was an old man," I said. "His memory might have been faulty. Would he have kept three sets of figures in his brain?"

And, even as the wards left my lips, a coal popped in the fire, and a bright blaze sprang up and flickered on the gold watch. And on the edge of the inner case, by some miracle of observation I saw three rows of figures minutely scratched.

"The combination!" I exclaimed.

There was little doubt. According to the German system, the lock was set by numbers instead of letters, and these could mean nothing else.

We stood there in exultation for a moment, until a noise without recalled us to ourselves. The soldiers were filing in the yard. Outside I could see Captain Kuppenheim and a sergeant marshaling them.

"Summers," said Nikolai, "our task is now an extremely simple one if your courage does no fail you. Remember that the German soldier is trained to one thing—implicit obedience. The most singular action will not be observed by him. He is trained as an automaton, nothing more.

"Our duty now is to procure the gold. I know the location of the strong room. We cannot hope to carry even a tenth part away; I trust, however, that we shall ultimately reap a rich reward from our enterprise. Follow me!"

We passed out boldly into the courtyard, Nikopal gravely returning the salute of the officer. He led me through a second archway, along a low passage which terminated in a barred door. Two sentries on duty stood at attention. Nikolai fitted the gold key to the lock. A moment's fumbling, and it opened, and we passed through. Looking back, I saw that the sentries were still at attention.

The passage now turned off to the right abruptly, and a second door faced us. This was unguarded. It opened noiselessly, and we found ourselves in a huge, vaulted chamber of gloomy aspect, at the end of which a fire was burning. Two soldiers in uniform rose and saluted us. Nikolai passed between them and fitted the key to the door. One of the men detained him.

"Pardon, excellency," he said. "None but his excellency, General Faber, enters this chamber."

"Read that!" said Nikolai sharply, whipping out a paper. Again I saw the emperor's signature. I afteward learned that one paper had served on each of the three occasions.

"Well, can't you read?" snapped Nikolai, as the soldier still barred the way.

"No, excellency," replied the man humbly.

"Fool! Do you know your emperor's signature?"

"No, excellency," the soldier answered humbly. "No one but General Faber passes through this door. Those are his orders."

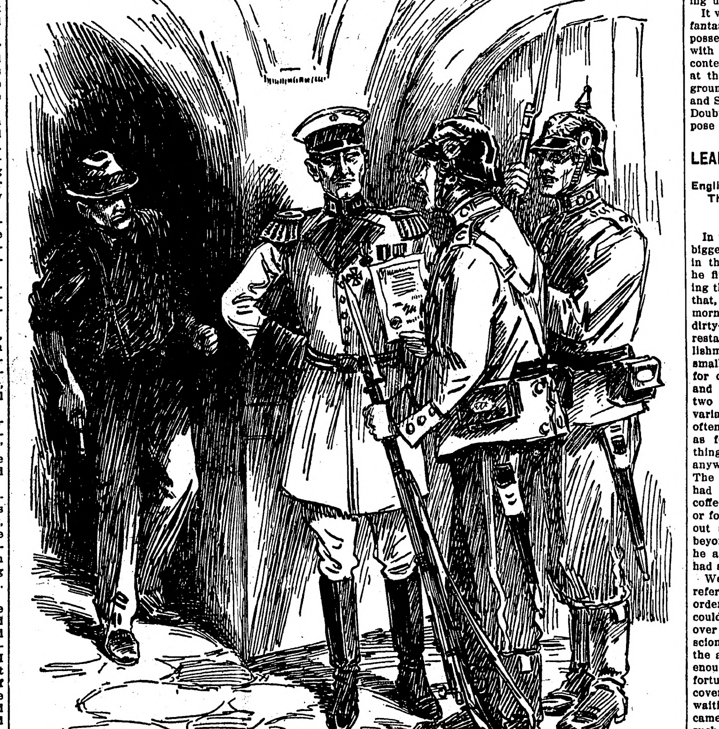
As Nikolai still made toward the door there came a clatter of steel, and simultaneously the two guards had snatched up their rifles and fitted bayonets to them. I laid my hand on my revolver; then I saw that Nikolai was still expostulating with the men.

"What are your exact orders, dolts?" he asked. And then the men replied in chorus:

"It is forbidden that anyone except his excellency, General Faber, passes through this door."

"Well said," cried Nikolai heartily, clapping the nearest man upon the back. "I was but testing you. I shall report your good conduct to our emperor himself." The soldiers presented bayonets at the name. "And now, my men," he continued, handing the key to one of the guard, "do you take this and turn the lock until you see the number 975 appear—see, I will show you. Now turn it and enter."

The soldier took the key and opened the door obediently. As it swung back a blaze of electric light flooded the chamber. And I staggered back in astonishment. I saw astonishment upon Nikolai's face, astonishment upon the stolid countenances of the guards. For the vault beyond was heaped with shining coins.



I laid my hand to my revolver.

There they lay, just as they had been flung in 1871. But the sacks which had contained them had mouldered under the touch of time, and the floor was heaped ceiling high with gold pieces. They lay like flakes of golden grain, shining and scintillating in the electric glow.

"Enter, men, and gather 2,000 pieces," said Nikolai. And the men obeyed him and staggered toward him, carrying the coins in pieces of rotting sackcloth.

"Close the door and remain on guard," said Nikolai. With our pockets filled and also bearing a precious cargo in our arms, we staggered out. At the second door, however, Nikolai halted.

"An officer may not carry a bundle," he said. "Summers, I must transfer this freight to you. Can you carry it?"

It was the heaviest burden I had caried in my life. I staggered through the passage, Nikolai beside me. At the outermost door he whispered his final instructions.

"Dump them in the freight cars," he whispered. "In the first car are tools. Unscrew the shells, pour out the shrapnel, and fill them. You understand? I shall be with you."

We passed out of the courtyard. The soldiers stood in columns of four, but at a word from Nikolai, they withdrew and formed a hollow square at some distance from the cars. The night was moonless; our operations were hardly visible.

When I had deposited my burden in the car, Nikolai and I went back for more. Twenty times we made that journey, and every time the soldiers brought out the coins to us. And, at the twenty-first we had made scarcely an impression upon the shining hoard. Reluctantly Nikolai gave the final order to close the door.

Then all through the night I toiled, filling the shells. I lifted them into the cars one by one, unscrewed the projectiles, filled them with coins, and poured out the shrapnel, until, in place of the golden flood that lapped my feet there was a stream of leaden bullets. It was dawn before my task was done.

It was done at last. The shells were screwed fast; in the breaking light Nikolai and I looked into each other's haggard faces. And we read in each other's eyes that we had miserably failed.

For neither of us had estimated in any degree the magnitude of our task. We had not known how very few gold pieces prove the limit of a man's strength. We had removed 40,000 pieces of gold, worth roughly $200,000 —200,000, when there remained 10,000,000 pieces behind!

With bleeding hands I descended from the cars. Nikolai called to the driver, who was dozing upon his engine. The cars were uncoupled. It seemed hours before we got up steam, while the day lighted, and I waited in an agony of apprehension. At last the engine was in readiness to move. We sprang aboard, the wheels revolved, and as the sun rose we passed through the fortress gates into the open country beyond. We had plundered Spandau; but where was our gain?

"That," said Nikolai, "remains for future gathering. When the shells burst upon the practice field in Alsace there will be good gold pieces sown among the weeds for our picking up." And so he began to laugh.

It was a scheme hatched in the most fantastic brain that ever a sane man possessed. We had filled the shells with gold, that we might pick up the contents after the big guns had fired at the practice targets on the waste ground! But the war scare blew over, and Spardau's guns were never moved. Doubtless our gold-filled shells still repose in the arsenal at Spardau.

LEARNED WANTS OF PEOPLE

Englishman Set Himself to Supply Them, and Now Is Many Times a Millionaire.

In the Strand Sir Joseph Lyons, the biggest caterer in England—perhaps in the world—tells the story of how he first conceived the idea of "feeding the masses." It chanced, he says, that, to satisfy the inner man, one morning in the '80s I strolled into a dirty—to me, repellent—little London restaurant. These unappetizing establishments were almost invariably small, being limited in the capacities for cooking and serving of the man and his wife, with, perhaps, one or two waiters. They were so often invariably dark, stuffy little places, often infested with cockroaches; and as for their kitchens, they were things liable to cause nightmares—anyway, I prefer not to tell of them. The city clerk who wanted a snack had to pay eight cents for a cup of coffee or tea, a two-cent tip, and two or four cents for a bun. It goes without saying that these charges were beyond their slender means; result, he adjourned to the nearest bar and had a glass of beer.

Well, on the occasion to which I refer I entered the said "restaurant," ordered the least uninviting dish I could hit upon, and turned things over in my mind during the unconscionably long time I had to wait for the arrival of my repast. I had often enough before this reflected how great fortunes had been made by the discovery of some simple universal want waiting to be supplied. In a flash it came to me that I had discovered just such a simple, unsupplied universal want—clean and decent fare in bright and congenial surroundings at a reasonable price.

And there and then was laid the foundation stone of a business which now feeds about 2,000,000 of the inhabitants of London, and which on every working day in the year caters for over 500,000 men, women and children—a business, too, which finds work for nearly 16,000 employes, which possesses 250 branches (the number is steadily increasing, both in London and the provinces), and which has no fewer than 120,000 agents throughout the country selling our "wares." Yes, in a small way—and I write it with due humility—a chance visit of a discontented artist to a dirty restaurant has exercised a considerable influence, indeed, over the lives of a very large section of men, women and children in Great Britain

For Health, a Walk.

In the warm weather, when exercise in the heat of the day seems a burden, try walking early in the morning and again late in the evening.

Be energetic and get up before breakfast in earnest. Don't try to walk before you have eaten, but eat something light and satisfying and start forth on a morning constitutional. You can get home again before the heat of the day has really set in.

If you find the morning walk impossible, try the evening walk. Start out after the sun has gone down, either before a late dinner or after an early one, and walk in the dusk until you are tired.

The woman who must work in office or shop would find systematic early morning and late evening exercise beenficial and invigorating.

Diverse Impressions.

"My new gown," said Mrs. Flimgilt, "is a dream."

"It may be a dream for you," replied her husband; "but it's insomnia for me."

CURRENCY BILL BECOMES A LAW

Most Far-Reaching Measure Relating to Finance Enacted in Many Years.

SALIENT POINTS REVIEWED

Essentials of New Law Summarized in Nontechenical Language—Makes Little Change in Operation of Present National Banks—Regional Reserve Banks Provided For.

Washington, Dec. 23.—The new bill affecting the currency, banking and finances of the country is one of the most far-reaching measures relating to finance that have been enacted in many years.

The magnitude of the subject, the diversity of interests affected and the length of the debates in both branches of congress has to follow the changes and grasp the essentials of this highly technical measure in its important bearings on money, finance, banking and the entire range of fiscal subjects, public and private, which it affects.

Summary of the Bill.

With a view, therefore, of presenting succinctly and in non-technical language an epitome of the salient features of the measure as finally framed, the following summary is given of the bill as a whole and of its principal details:

Generally speaking, the first steps to be taken to bring into operation the nation's new financial system will be through an organization committee consisting of the secretary of the treasury, secretary of agriculture and controller of the currency.

Banks have 60 days within which to file their applications for membership in the new system, and one year's time is allowed before the government will compel the dissolution of any national bank that refuses to join.

Will "Take Up the Slack."

The new law will make little direct change in the operation of the present national banks, except to allow them to loan a certain amount of their funds upon farm mortgages.

Its chief purpose is to add a new piece of machinery to the banking system that will "take up the slack" during the changing business conditions of each year; that will give the banks a place to quickly convert their assets into cash in time of need, and that will bring out new federal currency when it is needed, and retire it when money becomes "cheap."

Banks are now required to keep a certain percentage of their deposits as "reserves;" part in cash in their own vaults and part of which may be redeposited in the banks of New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other designated cities.

In times of sudden financial demands, when banks have loaned up to the full limit of their resources, these reserves furnish little relief, because if they are paid out to meet demands the banks are left in a precarious condition.

Basic Principle of Law.

The basic principle of the new law is to get these reserve funds out into circulation when necessary without lessening the safety of any bank, and to provide a place to which local banks may rush in a crisis and get cash for the "prime commercial paper" they hold in their vaults.

This is to be accomplished through a chain of regional reserve banks, or "reservoirs of reserves," in which all banks shall deposit a stated part of the money they are required to hold as reserves.

Under the new system, when a financial flurry comes the banks can take commercial paper, such as notes, drafts and bills of exchange, to these "reservoirs," and secure the use of their own reserves, or, if necessary, even the reserve of other banks, by depositing this security.

The new regional banks will receive about one-half of the bank reserves of the country. They in turn will be permitted to loan back to the banks all but 35 per cent. of these reserves, so that in case of emergency millions of cash can be brought out into circulation quickly.

The banks will have to pay for these loans, however, as individuals have to pay for a loan from any local bank, and this charge is expected to prevent the too free use of the reserves held by the regional banks.

New Paper Currency.

A new form of paper currency is also provided for, to come out in case of emergency, and which is expected to go back into the hands of the government when times are normal. These "treasury notes" will be printed by the government and issued through each regional reserve bank, and will bear the guarantee both of the regional bank and of the government.

If the demand for currency in any section of the country exceeds the supply of circulating money a regional bank can secure this new money from the government and put it into circulation; but a gold reserve of 40 per cent. and commercial paper equal to the full value of the note must be held as a reserve behind each note issued.

This provision is expected to be the influence that will drive the new money back into retirement when it is no longer needed.

Clearly Explained.

The following analysis presents the details of the new law without adhering closely to the technical division or language of the measure:

At the head of the system will stand a federal reserve board at Washington, appointed by the president, and to consist of the secretary of the treasury, the controller of the currency and five other members. Two of these shall be expert bankers, but none shall have banking affiliations or own bank stock during their service. This board will exercise general control over the entire system.

The temporary "organization committee," or the federal reserve board, will select from eight to twelve cities where regional reserve banks shall be located and will divide the entire country geographically with these cities as the centers of districts. All national banks in a district will be required to subscribe for the stock of the regional reserve bank in that district and to keep a portion of their reserve there.

Known as "Member Banks."

Local banks will be known as "member banks" because they will own the stock of the regional reserve bank of their district. Each member bank will be required to take capital stock of the regional reserve bank, equal to 6 per cent. of the member bank's capital and surplus. The capital of the regional bank will increase or decrease so that it always represents 6 per cent. of the combined capital and surplus of all the banks of the district that have joined the system.

National banks are compelled to join and state banks are permitted to if they bring their reserve requirements up to the standard set for national banks and submit to national examination.

Public Can Buy Stock.

Public ownership of the stock of the regional reserve banks is permitted only in case enough banks do not join in any district to provide a capital stock for $4,000,000. In such event the public may purchase the stock in quantities limited to $25,000 for each individual, but the voting of this stock will be placed in the hands of government representatives on the board of directors of the regional reserve bank.

The regional reserve bank may do business only with their member banks, not with the public, except that certain "open market operations" such as the purchase and sale of gold, government, or municipal bonds, and certain forms of bills of exchange, are permitted. These banks will make their earnings from the loans made to member banks, and from the purchase and sale of bonds and foreign bills of exchange.

Must Pay Up Cash.

Member banks will be compelled to put up in cash only one-half of their subscription to the capital of the new banks, the rest can be called for if needed by the regional bank. Dividends of 6 per cent. will be paid on this stock to the member banks, and the stock will be non-taxable.

After these dividends are paid one-half of the surplus net earnings goes to create a regional surplus fund, and when this has reached 40 per cent. of the original bank's paid in capital these earnings are to go into the United States treasury. The balances of the net earnings are to be paid to the United States as a franchise tax.

With the machinery thus created for a new banking system that is supplementary to the commercial banks of the country, the law provides for a gradual transfer of part of the bank reserves to these new "reservoir" banks.

In order not to disturb business conditions, or to withdraw too suddenly the heavy deposits of country banks in the large cities, the law provides that three years may be consumed in shifting these balances and that, if necessary, part of the reserves transferred to the regional banks may consist of commercial paper.

Reserve Required.

The amount of reserve required from every bank under the new law, and the place where it must be kept, are as follows:

Country banks.—Total reserve required, 12 per cent. of demand deposits and 5 per cent. of time deposits. Five-twelfths must be held in the bank's own vaults for two years and four-twelfths after that. For the first year two-twelfths must be kept in the regional bank, increasing one-twelfth each six months thereafter until it reaches five-twelfths of the total reserve. For three years the unallotted part of the reserve may be kept in the banks of reserve cities. After that time it must be kept either in the country banks and vaults or in the regional reserve bank.

Reserve city banks—Total reserve required, 15 per cent. of demand and 5 per cent. of time deposits. Six-fifteenths must be kept in the bank's vaults for the first two years and five-fifteenths after that time. Three-fifteenths must be kept in the reginal reserve bank for the first year, increasing one-fifteenth every six months thereafter until it reaches six-fifteenths. For three years the unalloted portion of the reserve may be kept in other banks, in its own vaults, or in the regional bank; after that time in one of the latter two places.

Regional Reserve Banks.

These immense funds of reserves from "member banks," together with government moneys, will make up the deposits of the regional reserve banks. Each of these banks will be administered by a board of nine directors, six of whom will be elected by the banks, and three appointed by the federal reserve board.

The regional reserve bank may rediscount—that is, buy at a discount from its member banks—"prime commercial paper" when the member banks desire to convert these assets into money.

Character of Paper.

The exact terms of this important provision as to the character of paper upon which the regional reserve banks may furnish cash are as follows:

"Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, with a waiver of demand notice and protest by such banks, and federal (regional) reserve banks may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes, the federal reserve board to have the right to determine or define the character of the paper thus eligible for discount, within the meaning of this act.

Eligible for Discount.

Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise, from being eligible for such discount; but such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the government of the United States.

The "Elastic" Element.

The new treasury notes, which are to furnish the "elastic" element in the currency system, and to add to the country's circulating money in time of need, will come into use in the following way:

The notes will be printed by the government, with a distinctive style for each regional reserve bank. One of the three directors named by the federal reserve board for each regional bank will be known as the "federal reserve agent" for that bank, and a supply of the notes will be placed in his custody.

Should a regional bank desire to pay out more money than its cash resources will permit, the law provides that it may put some of its rediscounted commercial paper into the hands of the "federal reserve agent," and received in return the new treasury notes.

For each note that it puts out into circulation, the regional reserve bank must set aside in gold 40 per cent. of the value of the note as a guarantee for its redemption. This gold, with the commercial paper held by the "federal reserve agent," is the protection behind the new money; but these notes will also be guaranteed by the government and may be redeemed in gold in the United States treasury.

Reserve Required.

Each regional bank, under the act, must keep a reserve of 35 per cent. of the deposits it has received, besides the 40 per cent. gold reserve behind the treasury notes it issues. If the gold reserve behind the notes falls below 40 per cent. a heavy tax is imposed on the bank, which in turn adds the tax to the rate it charges member banks for rediscounts. This was designed to stop an over-expansion of currency. In times of sudden stress the federal reserve board can suspend these reserve provisions, in order to furnish quick relief to any community.

Take Up Bonds.

None of the existing forms of currency except the national bank notes will be disturbed by the new law. The United States bonds, now used to secure the issue of national bank notes, are to be taken up at the rate of $25,000,000 a year by the regional reserve banks and new treasury notes or short term three per cent. bonds will take their place. National bank currency is expected gradually to retire.

The federal reserve board will exercise final control over the entire operation of the system. It can compel one regional bank to loan to another in time of need; can suspend all restrictions surroundings the reserves which regional banks must hold, and can remove directors of regional reserve banks whenever it is believed necessary.

Banks In Control.

While the banks retain control of the boards of the regional reserve banks, their connection with the federal reserve board is only through an advisory board is only though an advisory council, made up of one representative from each federal reserve district. This council will meet in Washington to confer with the federal reserve board "on general business conditions" and to make recommendations and suggestions concerning discount rates, note issues, and reserve conditions.

An important change in national banking methods embraced in the new law will permit all national banks except those in New York, Chicago and St. Louis to make direct loans on five year farm mortgages up to 25 per cent. of their capital and surplus, or up to one-third of their time deposits.

HOW DISPUTED POINTS WERE ADJUSTED

The following changes affecting points at difference between the senate and house were made in conference:

Comptroller of currency and secretary of agriculture retained as members of organization committee.

Comptroller of currency made ex-officio member of federal reserve board and total membership retained at seven and the term of office fixed at ten years.

Alaska excluded from provisions of act.

After federal reserve district are established, national banking associations shall have 30 days in which to subscribe for capital stock of reserve banks.

Individuals may purchase up to $25,000 stock in federal reserve bank instead of $10,000, as provided in house bill.

Stock not held by member banks shall not be entitled to any voting power whatever.

Number of regional reserve banks to be "not less than eight nor more than twelve," as provided by the senate.

The minimum capital of regional reserve banks fixed at $4,000,000.

No senator or representative can be an officer of a federal reserve bank.

No director of Class C directors of federal reserve board shall be an officer, director, employe or stockholder of any bank.

Each member bank is permitted to nominate one candidate for Class A and one for Class B directors.

Subscription of member banks 6 per cent. of capital and surplus of subscribing bank.

Senate provision for the guarantee of national bank deposits eliminated.

Use of federal reserve notes as part of reserves of member banks stricken out.

At least one-third of the reserves of the country banks must be held in the vaults of local banks.

House provision for collections at par practically restored, banks to be permitted to collect only actual expenses.

Retirement of 2 per cent. bonds aggregating $300,000,000 within 20 years provided for as against retirement of $125,000,000 in senate bill.

Gold reserve behind the notes remains at 40 per cent., with a graduated tax against any depletion.

Salary of members of the federal board increased from $10,000 to $12,000.

Members of reserve board shall serve two, four, six, eight and ten years instead of one to five years.

Reserve board can liquidate or reorganize reserve banks.

Compensation for directors, officers and employes of federal reserve banks shall be subject to the approval of the federal reserve board.

Recess appointments to reserve board shall expire 30 days after the following session of congress opens.

Net balance of amounts due to and from other banks shall be taken as the basis for ascertaining the deposits against which reserves shall be determined.

Should Be Made to Divulge Secret.

Scarcely a living wage, but it was enough for Mr. and Mrs. John Pitt, of Trunch, Norfolk, England, who have just celebrated their golden wedding. They have, on wages varying from $2.50 to $4, a week, brought up a family of ten children, all of whom are living.

Furniture Factories Kept Busy.

The homes of this country require about $239,337,000 worth of furniture each year.

This Age of Luxury.

One thousand dollars seems a good deal to pay for a doll, yet this sum has been paid by a city magnate for a doll to present to his little daughter. The doll in question had a complete trousseau, containing dozens of miniature fashionable costumes, complete in every detail, and was a marvel of workmanship.

Cancer's Annual Toll.

Cancer yearly kills 25,000 persons in the United States.

Vagaries of the Hunter's Life.

A Maryland hunter shot at a trolley car, mistaking it for a deer, but the negligent correspondent did not ascertain why he got his ammunition at a corner drug store instead of going to the usual place.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Leechlike, In Other Words.

The kiss was so long as the whole life of many creatures that live on earth.—From "The Joy of Youth," by Eden Pholpotts.

One Fault He Noticed.

"The young men who compose this quartet seem to be agreeable fellows." "Quite so. The only fault I have to find with them is that they disagree so distressingly when they try to sing."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Fulfilled Youthful Promise.

The most compelling of prodigies has unquestionably been the infant pianistic genius. Mozart, Liszt and Chopin were marvelous exponents at the age of ten years.

GARDEN OF WORLD

Island of Madeira Place of Wonder and Enchantment.

No Motor Cars to Worry One, No Noisy Street Cars, No Clattering Horses, But All Is Quiet and Peaceful in Beautiful Place.

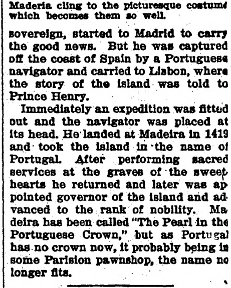
New York.—Down in the Atlantic ocean about a week by steamer from New York there is one of the real garden spots of the world. There are no motor cars there with their accompanying cutout fiends, no noisy street cars, no clattering horses—all is quiet and restful. Flowers and fruit grow in abundance and everywhere one sees the beautiful tropical vegetation. There are no extremes of heat and cold, the temperature varying from 63 to 75 degrees the year around. On the map this place is labeled Madeira, but to the visitors from the liners that call there the little island is a place of wonder and enchantment.

There is an attractive little story in connection with the discovery of Madeira. Robert Machim, a nobleman without means, and Anna d'Arfet, a woman of noble birth, and also very wealthy, were sweethearts. Anna's parents bitterly opposed the union, for they had arranged a match between Anna and a wealthy and handsome young nobleman she detested.

Just before the wedding was to take place the two sweethearts, assisted by some friends, left Bristol, their home, in a small vessel, intending to flee to France. But instead of reaching the French coast they were tossed about by a violent storm and after 14 days came in sight of a beautiful island. The little vessel was beached near where the village of Machio now is, and there Robert made his young bride as comfortable as possible. Before they could get all their belongings and stores to the shore the ship was wrenched from its anchorage and driven away in the storm, leaving several of the crew with the unfortunate sweethearts.

In this most rare climate, surrounded by vegetation of all kinds, the little company began what they believed would be a happy life. But slowly the girl's health failed, and at last she died. Robert was prostrated with grief and in a few days he also died, leaving a request that a church should be founded in this place. The followers constructed a rude boat and put to sea, being driven by the wind to the Barbary coast, where they were taken prisoners. They told of the beautiful island they had found, and a fellow slave, Juan Morales, a skillful Spanish seaman, being ransomed by his sovereign, started to Madrid to carry the good news. But he was captured off the coast of Spain by a Portuguese navigator and carried to Lisbon, where the story of the island was told to Prince Henry.

Immediately an expedition was fitted out and the navigator was placed at its head. He landed at Madeira in 1419 and took the island in the name of Portugal. After performing sacred services at the graves of the sweethearts he returned and later was appointed governor of the island and advanced to the rank of nobility. Madeira has been called "The Pearl in the Portuguese Crown," but as Portugal has no crown now, it probably being in some Parision pawnshop, the name no longer fits.



The French Type.

Descendants of the original settlers of Maderia cling to the picturesque costume which becomes them so well.

WILLS FAMILY WEIGHS TON

One Member, a Boy, Tips the Beam at 230 Pounds and Is Six Feet Four Inches In Height.

Sabillasville, Md.—There is a ton and a half of the Wills family, living in the country near this village, split into 17 active portions. Of these, the father and the oldest is Theodore Colvin Wills, age sixty-four, who weighs 220 pounds, and the youngest is McDonald Wills, his son, who, although only seven years old, weighs 100 pounds.

Many of the sons, however, are very much heavier. Bruce Wills, fifteen years old, weighs 230 pounds and stands six feet four inches in his stocking feet. There are eight sons and seven daughters who are all giants.

Neighbors point with pride to the fact that there is not an ounce of superfluous flesh in the whole ton and a half and that none of its component parts has ever used tobacco or intoxicants.

The father is a carpenter and all the sons except big-little McDonald have taken up his trade.

"CASCARETS" FOR LIVER; BOWELS

No sick headache, biliousness, bad taste or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box.

Are you keeping your bowels, liver, and stomach clean, pure and fresh with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passageway every few days with Salts, Cathartic Pills, Castor Oil or Purgative Waters?

Stop having a bowel wash-day. Let Cascarets thoroughly cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour and fermenting food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will make you feel great by morning. They work while you sleep—never gripe, sicken or cause any inconvenience, and cost only 10 cents a box from your store. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never have Headache, Biliousness, Coated Tongue, Indigestion, Sour Stomach or Constipation. Adv.

NOT A SENTIMENTAL SPEECH

Central Figure in Moving Pictures Had Much More Important Matter on His Mind.

Lieut. John H. Towers of the United States navy is the man who miraculously escaped death last summer when he fell 1,600 feet with an aeroplane into the waters of Chesapeake bay. He is also the man who played the part of ardent young lover in the moving pictures produced by the navy department some time ago—pictures for which $20,000 worth of powder was used and seven warships employed in a great battle scene.

In the picture, the young hero, the naval officer, comes upon the scene to bid a tragic farewell to his lovely sweetheart. His lips move slowly and with effort. The girl looks up at him in sadness. It is easy to imagine the tender words from his lips.

According to those who saw the pictures made, what he actually did say at this junction was:

"Let's hurry and get this over, and go out for something to eat. I'm starved."—Popular Magazine.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

R. F. D. No. 2, Seymour, Mo.—"My scalp broke out with fine pimples at the start. They itched and burned so much that I was compelled to scratch them and they would fester and come to a head and break out again. The trouble was attended by such burning and itching I could not sleep, also when I sweat it burned the same. My hair fell out gradually and the scalp kept rough and dry with itching and burning. After about two years the pimples broke out between my shoulders. My clothing irritated them. I was troubled with that eczema five or six years.

"I tried everything that was recommended without any benefit until I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment according to directions, and Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me sound and well in two weeks." (Signed) S. L. Killian, Nov. 22, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Pass It Along.

Senator La Follette, during his recent visit to Philadelphia, said apropos of a flagrant piece of hypocrisy:

"Why, the man's as bad as a Newport groom I heard of.

"This groom stood beside his master while a veterinary examined a costly cob. The veterinary, at the end of his examination, pronounced the cob incurable and took leave. Then the master, sighing heavily, turned to the groom saying:

"'Well, James, what am I to do with the poor beast now?'

"'Conscientiously speaking, sir,' the groom replied, 'I think you'd better part with him now to another gentleman, sir.'"

Had a Sufficiency.

A large, slouchy colored man went shuffling down the road whistling like a lark.

His clothes were ragged and his shoes were out at toes and heels, and he appeared to be in the depths of poverty for all his mirth.

As the passed a prosperous looking house a man stepped from the dorway and hailed him.

"Hey, Jim! I got a job for you. Do you want to make a quarter?"

"No, sah," said the ragged one. "I done got a quarter."

Try It—Cry It!

"If at first you don't succeed, cry, cry again."

That's the way to get a gown from the horrid men.

Stubborn Throat troubles are easily relieved by Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops. They act like magic—5c at all Druggists.

Any person who has ever attended one will agree that an entertainment for charity covers a multitude of sins.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

Tears of joy and sadness flow from the same tank.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith relating the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse. Their married life starts out happily. Kate succumbs to the pleadings of a composer to return to the stage and runs away with him. She rescues Widow O'Flynn from her burning house, is badly burned herself and returns home, where Jesse receives her with open arms. Cattle thieves appear in the neighborhood. Jesse asks Kate to go to a place of safety. To his joy she refuses. Jesse resumes the narrative. He calls on neighbors and plans to capture the robbers. Kate is rescued from the hands of the bandits. The robbers are captured, but later make their escape. Jesse is captured by the robbers, but by a clever ruse makes prisoners of the robbers. They are turned over to a United States marshal, who has arrived with extradition papers. Jesse takes charge of the outlaw chief's son, Billy O'Flynn, having promised the chief to keep him out of his father's profession. He takes Billy to Vancouver.

CHAPTER XII—Continued.

"Why, Billy daresn't say good morning to my pinto colt. He was bucking plentiful today, and me spitting blood before I got him conquered. Now just you leave me to tame colts and cowboys."

"Take him away, Jesse, dear."

"He bin making love to you, Kate?"

My heart stood still, and to my jealous husband silence means consent. Then the hypocrite in me sighed, and Jesse, flinging away his cigar stub, said with an oath that Billy should be on his way to Vancouver by daybreak.

Yes, Jesse is hard to manage, but presently he remembered about the check, which made him for the first time in his life feel rich. He's too rough when I let him love me. Indeed I had to do up my hair in the dark, though the fireflies offered the dearest little lamps. Besides a little jealousy is good for Jesse. I should not like to see his love go hungry.

Last night Jesse came home from Vancouver, and it being Sunday evening, he read and expounded the Scriptures to the amazement of the three new ranch hands.

Afterward, the night being cold, Jesse had his cigar beside the stove, while I sat on the low stool so that the fumes might rise above my unworthy head.

"The widow believes," I said, "that her boy will get rich in the city."

"I got Billy a job."

Jesse's face looked very grave.

"At a grocery," he added.

I sighed for the romantic lad, condemned to an apron behind the counter.

"And the young hawk flew off."

"I'm glad!"

"Ye see it's this way, Kate. He's staying heaps at Ashcroft, the first town he ever seen, where there's a bit of sidewalk, electric lights, and waitresses. I had to kiss the fluffy one to show him they don't bite.

"He's willing to start to work as a millionaire, but don't feel no holy vocation for groceries. So in the end he runs away, out of that frying pan into the—wall, the rest ain't clearly known, although the police has a clue. It seems my wolf cub leads some innocent yearling astray down by the harbor, said victim being the crimp from a sailors' boarding house. To prove he's fierce, Billy has a skinful of mixed drinks, and this stranger is kind enough to take him to see a beautiful English bark which is turning loose for Cape Horn. Seems the ship takes a notion to Billy, and the captain politely axes him to work. He's been shanghaied."

"Oh, it's awful!"

"Wall, maybe I'm a fool, Kate, but seems to be that this young person had to be weaned from running after a woman, before he'd any chance to be a man."

CHAPTER XIII.

Nativity.

Kate's Narrative.

Jesse allowed that the upper forest does look "sort of wolfy." He would post relays of ponies along the outward trail, so that he and McGee would ride the 80 miles back in a single march. If the doctor survived that, he would be here in 48 hours, perhaps in time.

I made Jesse take his revolver, yes, loaded it myself, and he promised a signal shot from the rim-rock to give me the earliest news of his return. He put out the light, kissed me good-by, and was gone.

From the inner edge of the bed I could see through the window, and watched Orion rising behind the cliffs. The night turned pale, then for a long time the great gaunt precipice revealed in tender primrose light and amber shade. I heard our riders saddle, mount and canter away for the day's work. The two Chinamen went off also on some domestic errand. The sunrise caught the pines upon the rim-rock into points of flame. I heard a distant shot, and fell asleep.

The widow had stumped about nearly all night, weary to the tip of her wooden leg, poor soul, so when I woke again and crept to the lean-to door, it was a relief to find that she had gone to sleep. She had left me a saucepan full of bread and milk, which I warmed, and it warmed me nicely.

Mrs. O'Flynn asleep is like peace after war. Dressing in stealth, I prayed for peace in our time, then with a sweet enjoyment of fresh guilt, stole out into the sunshine.

I reached the grove, at this cool hour so like a green lagoon where coral piers branch up to some ribbed vault. The waves of incense, the river's organ throb, the glory in the windows, gave me peace, but the choir of the winds had gone away, and for once in that sweet solitude I was lonely. My sitting is at the root of the governess tree, and Jesse's under the great father pine. If he were only there, how it would ease the pain. I needed him so badly as I sat there, trying to make him present in my thoughts. He had gone away, and the squirrel who lives in the widow tree had taken even his match ends. Only the cigar stubs were left, which would, of course, be bad for the squirrel's children. I wasn't well enough to call, but I left my nut.

Close by is the terrific verge of the inner canyon, and sitting at the very edge of death I saw into the mists.

It was so foolish, why should I be frightened of death, such a coward in bearing pain? And yet I had better confess the truth, that presently I ran away screaming, my skirt torn by brambles, by feet caught in the roots. Only when I passed the place where by anemones live, and beyond the east door of the grove came out into full sunlight, I could go no farther but fell to the ground exhausted. Yes, it was very silly, and that blind panic shamed me as I looked up at the crescent of silvery birch trees who hold court at the foot of the upper cliff.

Something small and black was coming toward me, a clergyman, too, and nervous, because he twiddled his little hat.

"Are you in pain?" he asked.

"Are you a fairy?" I answered, wondering. I couldn't think of anything else at the moment, for our lost ranch is so far from everywhere.

"No, madam," he said quite gravely. "I'm only a curate. May I sit down?"

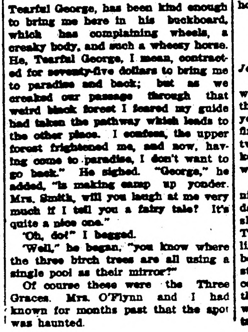
My heart went out to him, for he was so little, so old, English like me, but with the manner of the great world. When he sat down he took care not to hurt one of my flowers.

"I fear I'm trespassing," he said, "in your royal gardens. May I introduce myself? My name is Nisted—Jared Nisted, once an army chaplain, now a tourist."

"Are you sure," I ventured, "that you're not a—"

"Fairy? Believe me, dear lady, I'm a very commonplace little person.

"A humble admirer of yours, one Tearful George, has been kind enough to bring me here in his buckboard, which has complaining wheels, a creaky body, and such a wheezy horse. He, Tearful George, I mean, contracted for seventy-five dollars to bring me to paradise and back; but as we creaked our passage through that weird black forest I feared my guide had taken the pathway which leads to the other place. I confess, the upper forest frightened me, and now, having come to paradise, I don't want to go back." He sighed. "George," he added, "is making camp up yonder. Mrs. Smith, will you laugh at me very much if I tell you a fairy tale? It's quite a nice one."



"Tell Her, Pete, There'll Be No Murder."

"Oh, do!" I begged.

"Well," he began, "you know where the three birch trees are all using a single pool as their mirror?"

Of course these were the Three Graces. Mrs. O'Flynn and I had known for months past that the spot was haunted.

"Each of them," said my visitor, "seems to think the others quite superfluous."

That was true. I asked him if anyone was there.

"A lady, yes."

"That's the minx," I whispered. "She's a fairy. But don't tell my husband. You know he laughs at me for being so superstitious."

I explained that my dear husband cannot see the minx, that my servant dare not look.

"I doubt," said Father Jared, with regret, "that very few fairies nowadays are superstitious enough to believe in us poor mortals."

For that I could have kissed him.

"They used," the dear old man went on, "to believe in our forefathers, but there is a very general decline of faith. It is not for us to blame them. What fairy, for example, could be expected to believe in Tearful George? He chews tobacco."

"Oh, tell me more about her. Did she speak to you? She's fearfully dangerous. We had a ranch hand here who went quite fey, possessed, I think. I'm frightened of her now."

"She thinks," he retorted, "that you're a wicked woman.'"

"Me "

"Yes, you. She said you would run away, and you did. I am to tell you that's very unwise."

"Please tell the minx to mind her own business."

"What is her business?" he asked mildly.

"Being a fairy, I suppose. I'll never forgive her for what she did to Billy. Besides," I added, "she makes fun of us."

"No wonder, for we humans are so stupid."

"She's full of mischief."

"Of course." The old man's eyes twinkled and blinked as though—I can't set words to fit that puzzled memory. He had told me twice that he was not a fairy. "I am to tell you from my lady, that she is not the minx. Winds, waves, and living things," he said, "are full of mischief and laughter. The sun has room to sparkle even in a tear, and Heaven touches our lips with every smile, for joy is holy. Spirits, angels, fairies, are only thoughts which have caught the light celestial, mirror-thoughts which shine in Heaven's glory. Children, and happy people see that light, which never shines on any clouded soul."

"My soul is clouded. Help me."

"I wonder," he smiled with his old kind eyes. "Have you a sense of humor? Ah,—there. Then you need never worry, or run away. As sunshine and rain are to the dear earth, so are laughter and tears to every living soul. Humor, dear, is the weather in which the spirit lives."

"But sorrow and tears?"

"Why, how can the sun make rainbows without rain?"

"You'll praise pain next."

"That is a sacrament," he answered gravely, "the outward sign of inward grace. For how else can God reach through selfishness down to the soul in need?"

I saw the dear priest's face through tears, but when I brushed them away the mist remained. He seemed remote, awful and beautiful.

"There is a place," he said, 'where souls awaiting incarnation, rest, and from that place they come, borne by messengers. A messenger was waiting in these woods, no evil spirit, my daughter, but one who came bearing a child to you. She stands august and lovely at your back, and in her arms the soul of a man-child, just on the verge of incarnation, waits at the boundary of the spirit land.

"'The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.'

"That light is all around you, and I must go. This very ground is holy. Fare you well."

Two days had passed since my dear Jesse left, then through the long day I waited in the house, and the blue gloom of night swept up the glowing cliff. It was then I heard the signal shot from the rim-rock, and told my baby David that his father was coming home.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Locked House.

Jesse's Memoir.

The book of our adventures which we began together, was to go on through all our years. We were too young to think how it must some time finish at our parting, that one of us two was to be left with only the broken end, the pity of Christ and every word a stabbing memory.

Since I lost Kate is four years tonight, and in all that time now, I never dared to enter the house where once she lived with me, her poor fool Jesse. Today I unlocked the door. The sunlight, glinting through chinks in the boarded windows, fell in long dust-streaks on rat-eaten furniture, gray cobweb, scattered ashes. There was the puppy piano, green with mold, her work basket, half eaten, her writing table littered with rat-gnawed paper.

The pages are yellow, the ink is rusty brown, but the past is alive in every line, the living past, the sunny warm-scented land of memory, all full of love and glory and delight, and agony which cannot be taken from me.

How wonderful it is to think that a great lady, and this ignorant callous brute shown up in the rotted manuscript, should ever have been man and wife together! When I think of what I was—illiterate, slovenly, lazy, selfish, brutal, meanly jealous, ignorantly cruel, I see how it was right that she should leave me. It has taken me bitter lonely years to realize that I was unworthy to be her servant while she tamed me. So much the greater mystery is the love which made amends for my shortcomings, made her think me better than I was, a something for which she sacrificed herself, and in self sacrifice became like the great angels which she saw in dreams.

Then came the letter from Polly herself, which sent me crazy, so that my lady read every word of it, without being warned.

"Opium, Jesse, an overdose of opium did the trick, and paint to make me look like a corpse, and blood from the butcher's shop poured over my face as I laid there. You was no husband for such as me with Brooke around, the man I'd kept. Shucks, did ye think I'd be such a puke as to set, with yer dead-line round me, screaming if men came near, with all Abilene grinning, and you drunk as Noah? That was no way to treat a lady. That was no cinch for me as could buy cowboys, all I'd a mind to. Pshaw, it makes me sick at the stummick to think I married you. I only done it for a joke.

"But you jest mark my words on the dead thieving, no foreign woman from London, England, shall have you while you're mine. I heerd of this Mrs. Trevor daring to call you her husband. She's not your wife, she's not Mrs. Jesse Smith, she's not a married woman, but a poor thing, and her child, what's he? I've had my revenge on her, and you, and I'm coming to rub it in. I'm at Ashcroft, I am, coming on the same coach as this letter, coming to live in your home. If I don't love you, no other woman shall. It's Fancy Brooks, the man you calls Bull Durham, what give you dead away, he, and the news he got by mail, since you let him get off alive, you fool. That ought to splash yer.

"And if I didn't love, d'ye reckon that I'd care?

"Your deserted true wife,

"POLLY SMITH.

"P. S.—I'll be to your ranch Monday."

Kate's Narrative.

My husband was still at dinner when we heard a horseman come thundering in, the old cargador, Pete Matheson, spurring a weary horse across the yard. Jesse took the letter, and while he read, I had a strange awful impression of days, months, years passing, a whirlwind of time. My man was growing old before my eyes, and it is true that within a few hours his hair was flecked with silver. When the letter fell from his hands he walked away, making no sound at all.

I sat on my little stool and took the letter. The paper felt like something very offensive, so that I had to force myself to read, and even then without understanding one word. I went and washed my hands and face, why I don't know, except that it was better not to make a scene. I came back to my stool.

Pete stood in the doorway very nervous about his hat, as though he tried to hide it away. I remember telling him quite gravely that I like to see a hat.

"Cap Taylor, ma'am," he was saying, "told me to get here by the horse trail, so I rode hell-for-leather. They'll be another hour comin' by road."

"Another hour?"

"A stranger's driving. Mebbe more'n an hour."

Then Jesse came back.

Jesse's Narrative.

I found my lady seated on her stool, that letter in her hands, while Pete, uneasy, clicked his spurs in the doorway. I asked if he'd take a message.

"Burning the trail," he said.

"Say, if she comes, I'll kill her."

"Not that," my lady whispered, so I knelt down by her, and she caressed my forehead.

"I didn't catch your words," said Pete.

"Promise," my lady whispered, "there must be no murder."

"Tell her, Pete," said I, "there'll be no murder. I can't let her off with that—give her fair warning."

Pete rode away slow.

"Wife," I whispered—we spoke in whispers, because it was the end of the world to us two—"you trust me?"

She kissed my forehead.

"Tell me," she said, "one thing. Polly was not dead?"

"She shammed dead. She's alive, Kate. She's coming here. Take David away. Take him to South Cave to Father Jared's camp."

"What will you do?"

"Lock the house before it's defiled."

"And then, dear?"

"When she's gone, I'll come to the cave, too."

Kate took David, letting me kiss him, letting me kiss her, even knowing everything, let me take her into my arms. She was very white, very quiet. She even remembered to take her servant, and the two Chinamen, making some excuse to get them away. I locked the house and the old cabin. Then I made the long call to Ephrata, and went to the Apex Rock, calling until he answered from among the dog-tooth violets. He climbed straight up the steep rocks, whimpering, because I'd scarcely called him once in fourteen months. He rubbed against me, forgetting he hefted eleven hundred pounds, and I had to scratch his neck before we started up to the house, then to the left along the wagon track just past Cathedral Grove.

The wagon was swinging round the end of the grove at a canter, and when I let out a yell for the last warning the woman only snatched at the driver's whip to flog the team faster. Then I turned loose my bear, he rearing up nine feet or so to inspect that outfit.

The horses shied into the air, then off at a gallop straight for the edge of the cliffs. The woman was shot out as the wagon overturned, the driver caught for a moment while his wagon went to match-wood. He lay in the wreckage stunned, but the horses went blind crazy, taking that twelve hundred feet leap into the Fraser rapids. So I had aimed, and as I'd promised my lady to do no murder, I kept my bear beside me.

The driver was awake and staggering to his feet. He would have talked, only my bear was with me, hard to hold by the roach hair. The man needed no telling, and after he escaped from my ranch I did not see him there in the years which followed.

The woman, standing in the wreckage of her trunks, wanted to talk. We herded her, Eph and I, to the foot of the pack trail, which leads up by steep jags to the rim-rock of the upper cliffs, then on through the black pines to Hundred Mile. We herded up the pack trail, my bear and I, and pointed her on her way, alone, afoot. If she lived through that eighty miles, she would remember the way, the way which is barred.

Kate's Narrative.

I was waiting for Jesse until the low sun shone into the cave. All that letter, which had been a blur of horror, cleared now before my mind, but Father Jared held me by the hands, drawing the pain away. He had given me tea, he had made me a very throne of comfort in front of his camp fire. David slept in my lap, and now while the dear saint held my hands, and I looked through the smoke out toward the setting sun, he spoke of quaint sweet doings in his hermitage. He spoke as a worldly anchorite with a portable bath, of his clumsy attempts to patch a worn-out cassock, and how the squirrels tried to superintend his prayers at even-song. Then the sun caught the walls of the cave and the roof to glowing beryl and ethereal ruby, the smoke was a rose-hued thread of light, and the deep canyon at our feet filled with a shadowy sea of flooding amethyst.

The sun had set, and the first star just shone out, as Jesse came, standing at the mouth of the cave, dark against the glory. I could not see his face.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

EVEN FLOWERS MUST LABOR

Nature Demands Its Toll From Every Living Thing, and Accepts No Excuses.

However fine and dainty a flower may look, it is pressed to do a great service and its colors and forms are all suited to its work. It must bring forth the fruit, or the continuity of plant life will be broken and the earth will be turned into a desert ere long.

The color and the smell of the flower are all for some purpose, therefore no sooner is it fertilized by the bee, no sooner does the time of its fruition arrive, than it sheds its exquisite petals and a cruel economy compels it to give up its sweetest perfume. It has no time to flaunt its finery, for it is busy beyond measure.

Viewed from without, necessity seems to be the only factor in Nature, for which everything works and moves. There the bud develops into the flower, the flower into the fruit, the fruit into the seed, the seed into a new plant again, and so forth, the chain of activity running on unbroken. Should there crop up any disturbance or impediment, no excuse would be accepted and the unfortunate thing so shocked in its movement would at once be labeled as rejected, and be bound to die and disappear post haste.

In the great office of Nature there are innumerable departments with endless work going on, and the fine flower that you behold there, gaudily attired and scented like a dandy, is by no means what it appears to be, but rather is like a laborer toiling in the sun and shower, who has to submit a clear account of his work, and has no breathing space to enjoy himself in a playful frolic.—Rabindranath Tagore, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Begging Off.

"Can you direct me to the best hotel in this town?" asked the stranger who, after sadly watching the train depart, had set his satchel upon the station platform.

"I can," replied the man, who was waiting for a train going the other way, "but I hate to do it."

"Why?"

"Because you will think after you've seen it that I'm a liar."

A SEASON IN THE HIGH ALPS

End of a Long and Abnormally Cold Summer in Switzerland Mountains.

Berne, Switzerland.—In general it may be said that the high mountain resorts, with the exception of Zermatt, where the weather is much more settled and much drier than in central Switzerland or the Engadine, have not had an altogether satisfactory season. Places at altitudes of from 1,500 to 2,000 feet, such as Lucerne and Interlaken, for instance, as well as all the larger Swiss towns, have also not much cause to feel satisfaction with the 1913 summer, while the Ticinese resorts, south of the Gothard Lugano, have had a so-called autumn season, which began in July and continued throughout August.

Bringing Down the Hay in Winter.

The year's autumn season in the inaccurately named "Italian Lakes district" of Switzerland, although not a record season, as was that of last year, has nevertheless filled the hotels as at one time they were not wont to be filled in the months of July and August.

The Swiss summer of 1913 has not been so much a wet as an abnormally cold summer. In my opinion, it has been far pleasanter than that of either 1912 or 1910, when it rained constantly in streams. From the hotel keepers' point of view, however, it has not been much, if at all, better than these two years of disgrace. This year, instead of rain falling at the lower altitudes, snow fell in the higher parts.

The observatory on the Santis mountain (8,215 feet altitude) has never, during the 30 years of its existence, known so much snow in July as was measured this year in the middle of the month—a depth of eight feet, which even in the exceptionally cold summer of 1910 was not reached by about 20 inches. On July 9 it was snowing down to below 5,000 feet, the Wengernalp and Schneidegg being entirely snowed under, with a temperature of three degrees below zero.

This July, in fact, was the coldest recorded since 1826 in Geneva, a warm and sheltered spot, and it was also the coldest ever known in Zurich since the establishment there of the headquarters of the Swiss Meteorological office. To show how cold the summer has been I may mention, further, that the Aare, the river running through the plans of Berne, which is often bank high and even overflowing when the snows are melting, has never so much as threatened to overflow this summer, and has often been positively low. Again, the Purka Pass, which is usually a garden of Alpine flowers for three or four months every summer, or even longer, was so heavily snowed under this year that for nine days in July the diligence could not run, and for three consecutive days there was no communication between Gletsch and the Grimsel.

BEARS VERY FOND OF HONEY

Beehives in the Hood River Valley District Attract Animals From the Mountains.

Hood River, Ore.—The residents of the county living in the lower valley are surprised at the numerous wild animals that are killed there. A week never passes at this time of the year that some rancher does not get a bear.

These are the boldest of all the big game animals that have been driven into the foothills by the orchardists. Recently a big bear was killed in the Central Vale district.

Traps have been set for the animals, but the hunters have caught their own dogs, while bruin went free, marauding on their honey.

Many of the orchardists now have bees, and the bears are attracted from the hills to secure the sweets, for which they will run almost any risk.

Pierces Ear Drum With Hat Pin.

Iola, Kan.—Wearing her hair down over her ears in the prevailing fashion will result in Miss Maude Rodgers being permanently deaf. She pierced her ear drum with a hat pin.

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - Minn
Phone Central

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Wm. E. Lee, the Long Prairie statesman, threatens to file as a candidate for governor within a short time. Why not round up the entire bunch who ran last time, and so make a sure thing for the present incumbrance?

Now would be a good time for the farmers to get together and talk over the organization of a farmers' elevator, or any other co-operative projects. Between now and spring people will have time to consider these matters and they are real money savers for the farmers.

Queen Mother Sophia of Sweden died on Tuesday at the age of 78 years. She had been an invalid for a quarter of a century, but bore her illness bravely. She was rich in this world's goods and left a fortune. After all, the poor and lowly don't always have a much harder time in this world than some of the great and rich.

The people of Roseau County have undertaken to form an hospital association and have an up to date institution for caring for the sick. That is a move in the right direction. People like to live in a territory where they can have proper medical care in case of necessity, and the progressive citizens of Roseau are taking eeery opportunity to make their territory attractive to good settlers. Here's to their success.

COAL By The LUMP

Would be a pretty dear way of getting it. Yet every lump of our coal haa a distinct value as a heat producer. And every load we send you contains nothing but lumps of good, clean coal. No slate, no stones, no dirt. Fill yous scuttle with that kind and it will last longer.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns

The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co. 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Nov. 22, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Lars K. Ose, of Thief River Falls, Minn., who, on March 30th, 1908, made Homestead Entry, No. 9570, Serial No. 03807, for Lot 2, Section 9, and Lots 3, 4 and NW¼ SW¼ Section 10, Township 155 N., Range 42 W., 5th principal meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Five Year Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Wilhelm Michelet, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Thief River Falls, Minn., on the 10th day of January 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder Brokke, Ben Brokke, Tollef Brokke, German Johnson, all of Thief River Falls, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 3, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that August Johnsen, of Rollis, Minnesota, who, on February 15, 1911, made Homestead Entry No. 05853, for SW¼ NW¼ Section 3, S½ NE¼ and NW¼ SE¼ Section 4, Township 153 N., Range 41 W., 5th Principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minnesota, on the 14th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John Moberg, Martin Moberg, both of Rollis, Minnesota; Christ. Norbeck, Ludvig Sagstuen, both of Flakne, Minnesota.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 2, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Albert C. Jahr, of Holt, Minn., who, on January 20, 1911, made Homestead Entry, Serial No. 05825, for SE¼ Section 27, Township 156 N., Range 42 W., 5th Prin. Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 15th day of January, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: John H Knutson, Carl Surmo, George C. Anderson, Olaus Rodahl, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Proof made according to law under which entry was made.

Notice for Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 29, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Saave Gunderson Roisland, of Holt, Minn., who, on June 21, 1913, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06342, for NE¼, Section 8, Township 155 N., Range 41 W. 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 4th day of Feb., 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole J. Kvasager, Ole Christoferson, Gunnar Sannes, Salmon Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 29, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Charley Charlson, of Germantown, Minn., who, on June 26, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06351, for NE¼, Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make final Commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 3rd day of February, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, George Charlson, Guro Charleysen, Charlie Klockmann, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Notice For Publication

Department of The Interior,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.,
Dec. 29, 1913

Notice is hereby given that Guro Charleysen of Germantown, Minn., who on Jun. 23, 1911, made Homestead Application, Serial No. 06352, for SW¼ Section 17, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final commutation proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 3rd day of February, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Gunder T. Sannes, George Charlson, Charley Charlson, Charlie Klockmann, all of Germantown, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

Notice For Publication

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn.
Dec. 29, 1913.

Notice is hereby given that Ole J. Kvasager, of Holt, Minn., who, on July 11th, 1911, made Homestead Application Serial No. 06367, for S½ NE¼ and Lots 1, 2, Section 5, Township 155 N., Range 41 W., 5th principal Meridian, has filed notice of intention to make Final Commutation Proof, to establish claim to the land above described, before Knute Nelson, U. S. Commissioner for the District of Minnesota, at Middle River, Minn., on the 4th day of February, 1914.

Claimant names as witnesses: Ole Christoferson, Gunnar Thompson, Saave G. Roisland, Salmon Larson, all of Holt, Minn.

ARTHUR P. TOUPIN, Register.

NATURALLY.

"I suppose lady magicians wear trick dresses."

"I notice that the dresses are generally trained."

Ringbo Rumbles

Mr. and Mrs. John Engstrom gave a real Swedish "Jule-mittag" on Christmas Day. Their guests were Louis Johnson and wife, Andrew Engstrom and wife, Chas. Skoglund and wife and Algot Skoglund.

Mrs. A. Hammersten of Highlanding, is visiting her brother Chris Engen, and friends at Ringbo.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Engstrom called at Charlie McLean's on Friday last.

Mr. and Mrs. John Engstrom, Mrs Hammersten and Miss Gunhild Sorter made a brief call at Skoglund Brothers ranch Saturday evening.

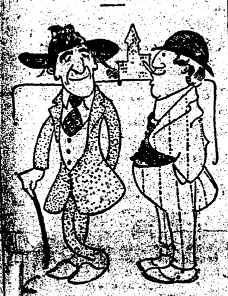
Sunday visitors at the Chris Engen home were G. P. Sorter and wife Jens P. Sorter and wife and John Engstrom and wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Johnson were invited guests at Chas. Skoglund's place on Sunday last.

The Currency Bill

A carefully prepared description of the Currency bill, which has just become a law, appears on another page of this issue. It is much more complete than a synopsis and gives full information on this important measure. Its publicaton at this time is in keeping with the policy of The Northern Light to give its readers the news while it is fresh.

HEAVY PART



First Actor—Is Jamison cast for a heavy part in that play?

Second Actor—Yes; he has to carry the leading lady across the stage, and the lovely lump weighs 200 pounds.

NOT TOO PARTICULAR.

Lord Alverstone, who had just retired from the office of lord chief justice of Great Britain, at one time —not so very long ago—sang in the choir of St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington.

One Sunday an American lady who was attending the service drew one of the vergers aside and whispered, "Which of the choristers is the lord chief justice?"

"Well, mum," replied the verger, pointing, "that's the vicar, and them's the curates, and I'm the verger; but as for the choir—as long as they does their duty an' behaves theirselves we don't inquire too close into their hantecedents!"

APPENDIX IS USEFUL.

Dr. Edmund Perrier, at the Academy of Sciences, Paris, has made public the discovery that the appendix exeited the activity of the intestines, and he says that it should not be removed except in cases of absolute necessity.

After experimenting on animals, with their appendices removed as in human beings, Doctor Perrier discovered that the secretions of the gland had a strong effect on the intestinal muscles and makes a strong plea that the academy should suggest to French surgeons that they cease from performing appendix operaions for any but urgent reasons.

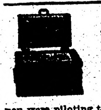
IMPARTIAL.

"The clocks," said the bride, "are simply beautiful, and it was lovely of you to give them to us. But—you won't think me inquisitive?—may I ask why you gave us a pair of them? Of course, it was perfectly—"

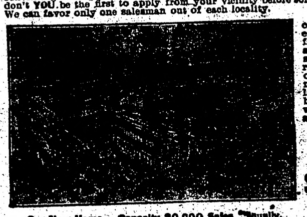
"I gave you two of them," interrupts the friend, "because I'm very fond of both of you, and if you ever get divorced you will each have something to remember me by."—Chicago Post.

Red Lake Falls Milling Co.
Makers of the Celebrated
Mascot Flour
and BUYERS of all kinds of GRAIN
Our Elevator will give you satisfaction.
H. OIEN, Agent - - - - Holt, Minn

WHY NOT MAKE $200.00 A MONTH - - That's $50.00 a Week, almost $10.00 a Day



Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



Our New Home. Capacity 20,000 Safes Annually.

The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

Ask for Catalogue 16T.
THE VICTOR SAFE & LOCK CO.
CINCINNATI, OHIO

V-I-V-O
The Best there is in Flour

Our Elevator and Lumber Yard are always prepared to give the most satisfactory service.

Hanson & Barzen Milling Co.,
OSCAR HANSON, Agent, - - HOLT, MINN.

CARL NEWTON
General Blacksmith and Machine Shop
HOLT, - - MINN.

Machine and Auto Repairing a Specialty
All Work Guaranteed.

Farm, Stock and Home Calendar for 1914

This is a great big beautiful picture. Thirty-two inches long (more than two feet), and seven inches wide.

THE GIRL IS BEAUTIFUL
THE COLORING OF THE FLOWERS PERFECT

Handsome enough to frame and hang anywhere. A work of art. A triumph of color printing. It must be seen to be appreciated. This work of art is not going to be sold at any price. Will be given away under the following conditions:

WHAT TO DO TO GET IT.

Send us Ten Cents (either in coin or stamps) for a three-months subscription to FARM, STOCK AND HOME.

The best, most practical farm and home paper published in the Northwest. The paper with the largest staff of paid editors of any agricultural paper in the United States. Good, clean, human interest stories. Short, snappy editorials. You need not be a farmer to appreciate

FARM, STOCK & HOME.

The regular subscription price of Farm, Stock & Home is 50 cents a year.

If you are now taking Farm, Stock and Home you must send a new three-months trial subscriber at Ten cents. Both the trial subscriber and yourself will get the Calendar. Send coupon today.

FARM, STOCK & HOME CO.,
830 Hennepin Av., Minneapolis, Minn.
Enclosed find Ten Cents for which you are to send Farm, Stock & Home for three months to

Name..............................

Postoffice..............................

Route............ State..............

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT

VOL. III HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JANUARY 9, 1914 NO. 24

It's 1914 Now
May this New Year be a good one for you in every way at all times. We'll be glad to hep.

FARMERS STATE BANK of Holt
LARS BACKE, Pres. and Manager S. S. KOLDEN, Cashier
B. L. BACKE, Assistant Cashier

UNLIMITED MONEY
For Farm Loans
Absolute Safety Guaranteed Depositors

.. When You Want Flour...
Try a Sack of
Carlson's Leader
FANCY PATENT
None Better Ever Sold in Holt
Manufactured For, and Sold Only by
Holt Mercantile Co.

CHAS. W. LATTA
Licensed Auctioneer
For Marshall and adjoining Counties
HOLT, MINN.

The Local Market.

(Grain prices furnished by the Red Lake Falls Mill'g Co. at close of business every Thursday.)

Flax	$1.37
Wheat	.77
Barley	.38
Oats	.26
Rye	.41
Flour, Best Patent	2.45

SPECIAL JANUARY OFFER

To Paid Subscribers

If your subscription is paid up to July 1st, 1914, or any time after that date, We will send The Northern Light to any friend you want it sent to in the United States, for the year of 1914 for $1.00.

In addition we will send Farm, Stock and Home to your friend for the same time Free, or to yourself if you are not already getting Farm, Stock & Home with this paper. This offer will not apply to renewals of subscriptions for your local friends or in Canada. If you want it sent to Canada, it will cost 50 Cents more for each paper

This Offer good only during January, 1914. Why not take it up NOW?

The Northern Light, - Holt, Minn.

Local Items

Bring us the news.

Call it the auto winter.

Are YOU boosting for Holt?

For Dr. F. H. Gambell, Phone 140. (adv tf)

Huseth pleases all his patrons. Are you one of them? (adv)

WANTED—First mortgage loans on improved farms. B. L. Backe.

S. S. Kolden made a business trip to Thief River Falls Tuesday afternoon.

Leo Horien went to Thief River Falls Tuesday to attend school there.

FOR A QUICK SALE of your land list it with B. Docken, Cashier, Holt State Bank.

A 10-pound baby boy arrived safely Monday morning at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Erickson near Ringbo.

Pete Kolden returned to Crookston Monday to attend High School after spending the holiday vacation at home.

Charlie Martell was in from Golden Valley yesterday looking up some horse deals and attending to other business

Attorrney G. Halvorson was up from Thief River Falls on Saturday attending to some business in Justice Court.

Coffee—real coffee—and short-order lunches that satisfy. [illegible] service offered at Huseth's lunch counter. (adv)

Christ Birkeland and family returned to Thief River Falls last Saturday after a holiday visit with friends south of Mud Lake.

The Hinchman brothers were in from southeastern Mud Lake township yesterday and drove down to Thief River Falls to attend to some business matters.

Help boost this neighborhood by sending The Northern Light to some of your friends in other places during 1914. Read our special offer for the month of January.

Carl Newton came in from his homestead in the Randen neighborhood on Tuesday to look after an accumulation of work in his blacksmith and machine shop.

The Scandinavian Young peoples Free Socsety will meet at Evergreen Hotel here tomorrow evening at 8. There will be a fine program for the occasion and everybody is invited.

J. S. Semmingson came up from Beltrami on Tuesday and went to put in a few weeks skating and trying to improve his Green Stump Lake homestead, which is still under water.

Ye editor spent Wednesday at Warren attending to some business matters and incidentaly looked in on the annual meeting of the county fathers, which convened there on Wednesday.

The Newfolden Review landed the county printing for this year, being awarded the contract by the county board on Wednesday. The Review bid was the lowest on its face—too low for safety—and the people, who pay for service, have little prospects of getting it this year.

Good Team For Sale.

Team of fine work mares, 7 years old, weight 2,800 pounds; both in foal to registered Percheron stallion. Will sell with or without new work harness, for cash or on time. J. B. ALKENBRACK, on old Heiser farm, 4 miles southwest of Holt.

Boosters Getting Busy

The Commercial Club of Holt had its postponed annual meeting last evening and the session was both enthusiastic and harmonious. Twenty-two members enrolled to take part in the boosting campaign for 1914, and they'll do some boosting, too.

There was some competition in the election of officers, and the following were chosen:

President—P. A. Risberg
Vice-pres—S. S. Kolden
Secretary—B. Docken
Treasurer—B. L. Backe
Executive Committee—D. Payne, E. M. Silbaugh, Chas. W. Latta.

Committees were appointed to attend to various branches of the work contemplated by the club, and it is expected that within a very short time actual good results of the Club's efforts will be apparent.

Killed by Wolves

A news dispatch from Warroad to the Twin City papers tells of the finding of the bones of a lone Indian on the Lake of the Woods last Sunday, who had evidently been overcome and devoured by wolves. Lying near the remains were his empty rifle and hunting knife and the carcases of nine wolves which he had evidently killed before the pack dragged him down.

Wolf packs of twenty to forty animals are reported very numerous in that region this winter. Absence of snow prevents their killing other wild animals for food, so they are [illegible] hungry and consequently bold and extremely dangerous.

Grain Contest

On Saturday, January 17th, a grain contest will be held at Warren and liberal cash prizes are offered for the best grains exhibited. The grains included in the contest are wheat, oats, barley, flax and rye. The winning exhibits will be sent to the State Grain Grower's Show at Mankato, on the 20th inst., and thence to the National Corn Growers Exposition at Dallas, Texas, on February 10th to 24th. Every grain grower in the county is invited to submit a peck of his best grain of the above varieties. Circulars have been sent out by Ole Neraal, sec., Warren, and samples of grain should be sent to him by Friday, the 16th, or delivered not later than 10 a. m. of Saturday, the 17th inst. If you have some good grain, this is a good opportunity to find out just how good it is and establish a reputation.

Heiren-Fosholm

Edward Heieren, a prosperous and well known farmer of Silverton, and Miss Clara Fosholm, of Holt, were married at Silverton Synod church by Rev. I. T. Aastad, of this city, on the day before Christmas. Miss Inanda Fosholm attended the bride while Ole Ferstad acted as best man. After the ceremony a delicious wedding dinner was served at the John Sundt home.—Thief River Falls News-Press.

A host of real friends here, who have known the bride since her childhood, are united in wishing the couple a full measure of life's happiness.

ABUNDANCE.

"Some of America's great men burned the midnight oil."

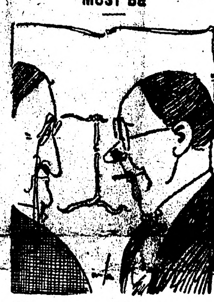
"Yes," replied Mr. Cassius Chex, "and I have seen to it that my boys have peculiar advantages. I have presented them with a string of oil wells."

PAY YOUR BILLS

With a Check instead of Cash. Then you will have a record of your payment and a receipt as well. Checks on the Holt State Bank are as good as gold. You can secure a book of them by opening an account there. You avoid lots of trouble and dignify your business by their use.

Holt State Bank
FARM LOANS at lowest rates

MUST BE



"Women are certainly the mental superiors of us men."

"What makes you say that?"

"Seeing my wife spank the baby, read a book and carry on a conversation with her mouth full of hairpins at the same time."

For anything in the Drug line go to Bjerkhoel's drug store, Mcginn Block, Thief River Falls. (adv)

The Continental Insurance Co. has an unexcelled record for paying all losses. Why not have insurance that insures? CHAS W. LATTA, ag't.

Allan W. Clark, the veteran U. S. Commissioner of Rollis, has handed in his resignation as commissioner and will practise land office law in the future.

Settlers intending to prove up on [illegible] and have their notices properly made out. No charge will be made if the notice is published in this paper.

THEO. QUALE
LAWYER
Office in NcGinn Block
Thief River Falls, Minn.

HUSETH's
Lunch is Ready any time you are
When you are cold or hungry, try the service at our new Short-Order Lunch Counter
Our Goods always Fresh, Pure and Wholesome
AL. HUSETH, Holt, Minn.

BOB SLEIGHS

We have just received a big consignment of sleighs of different sizes and best makes and quality. Call and see them for yourself. Our prices will suit you without a doubt.

We also have some fine sleigh bells and robes at very reasonable prices.

Call and make your selection early; you need these things before long

S. S. KOLDEN & Co.

DENSMORE FAILS TO SETTLE STRIKE

SOLICITOR FOR DEPARTMENT OF LABOR LEAVES MICHIGAN COPPER DISTRICT.

GOVERNOR FERRIS TO SCENE

Decision of Executive to Visit Upper Peninsula Comes as a Result of Government Representative's Inability to Succeed.

Houghton, Mich., Jan. 6.—Copper mine owners of northern Michigan made a mistake in refusing peace plans proffered by the Western Federation of Miners in the judgment of John B. Densmore, solicitor for the department of labor, pronounced a few hours before his departure for Washington. For the first time since his arrival in the district, Mr. Densmore broke silence as to the conditions he found there.

A Like Situation.

"A generation ago the anthracite mine operators of Pennsylvania adopted precisely the attitude taken by the copper mine managers," he said. "Similar stands have marked the action of employing interests in the initial strikes of practically every big industry.

"The idea seemed to be that by winning the first strike the employer crushed the union. Speaking entirely from the historical point of view, I think I can safely say this course has failed.

"Almost invariably they have come back for another struggle, sometimes in a year, perhaps not for five years, or even later. But come back they do.

Owners Should Understand.

"It seems a pity therefore that the copper country must sooner or later face another struggle even if this one results in a seemingly complete victory for the mine owners."

That the outcome of the present strike will not be settled without a bitter fight is again indicated. Company managers rested on their plans for filling up working forces with non-union men from outside places. Union circles were more active and meetings were held in Hancock in the morning and in Calumet in the afternoon.

The strength of the entire labor movement of the country was pledged to the copper country men and they were urged to stand firm despite possible suffering and privation. It was announced that enough resources are in sight to keep the strike going for at least another year.

Governor to Strike Region.

Big Rapids, Mich.—In the effort to effect a settlement of the miners' strike, Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris left for the Upper Michigan copper country. This decision to go to the scene followed the news that John B. Densmore, solicitor of the federal department of labor, had failed to bring about a solution of the trouble.

Governor Ferris was accompanied only by his private secretary, but James V. Cunningham, state commissioner of labor, has been notified to start at once for Calumet.

Governor Invited Repeatedly.

The governor repeatedly has been asked by the labor men to visit the copper country and learn conditions at first hand, but heretofore has declined to do so.

"I am going to the copper country simply as the governor of Michigan," said Mr. Ferris. "I am not going as the representative of the labor unions, of the miners, or of the mine workers. I am going as the representative of every citizen of the state, workmen, farmers, business and professional men, to learn all I can."

PRESIDENT'S HEALTH NORMAL

Busy Week for Chief Executive as He Will Spend More Time on Business.

Pass Christian, Miss., Jan. 6.—President Wilson looks forward to a busy week. He is benefiting so much by his vacation that each day he is tackling more and more of the documents and data of various sorts which he brought with him for leisurely study.

The chief executive's health is normal again; in fact those who have been with him for many months say he never looked better. His skin shows the glow of health, and his jaunty step and vigorous stroke on the golf links confirm his return to physical strength.

Sunday Mr. Wilson surprised the little town of Biloxi, twenty-five miles from the president's cottage here, by dropping in unexpectedly at the services of the First Presbyterian church there. The little church was not filled when the president and his family arrived, but word of their coming spread through the village and soon all the seats and available standing room were occupied.

Missouri Cold Storage Probe.

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 5.—The cold storage business, especially as it affects the cost of living, will be the subject of a thorough investigation by the Missouri bureau of labor statistics some time during the current year. This investigation will be conducted for the enlightenment of the public rather than for the prosecution of those engaged in the cold storage business, according to a bulletin just issued by Labor Commissioner John T. Fitzpatrick.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S HOLIDAY RESIDENCE

The home of Miss M. Alice Herndon at Pass Christian, Miss., where President Wilson and his family are resting during the holiday season.

TOWN UNDER MARTIAL LAW

ALL CITY OFFICIALS ARE ARRESTED FIRST, HOWEVER.

Fern Hobbs, Governor's Secretary, Has All Saloons Raided and Proprietors Arrested.

Copperfield, Ore., Jan. 5.—Martial law has been declared here by Colonel B. K. Lawton, superintendent of the state penitentiary. Five members of the coast artillery backed up the proclamation.

This action followed a demand made by Miss Fern Hobbs, private secretary to Governor West, for the resignations of members of the city council and other city officials who are accused of violating an ordinance regulating saloons. When the demand was refused, the governor's representative ordered Colonel Lawton to place the town under martial law. Then she boarded a train to return to the state capital.

Colonel Lawton's small force began operations by raiding the saloons of which they took charge. The proprietors were given until 4 o'clock to ship their bar fixtures and liquors out of the county on penalty of confiscation. All of the city officials were placed under arrest and were held "incommunicado," not being permitted to communicate with attorneys.

Governor West received two weeks ago a protest signed by more than half the residents of Copperfield against alleged law violation by saloons here, one of which was owned by the mayor and another by a councilman. It was charged that liquor was being sold to miners and that closing hours were not observed.

The governor called upon Mayor Stewart to close the saloons and he refused. When Sheriff Rand also refused to act, Governor West sent Miss Hobbs to take charge of the situation.

BUSINESS SECTION BURNED

Fire Department of Alberta Town Unable to Save Frame Buildings in High Wind.

Calgary, Alta., Jan. 3.—Every business establishment in the town of Didsbury was destroyed by fire which raged fiercely for three hours. No residences were burned and much of the contents of the stores was saved. No one was injured.

The fire had its origin in the Bijou theater, a moving picture house, and had gained considerable headway when discovered and, despite the efforts of the volunteer fire department, with a fairly good equipment, fanned by strong wind, spread rapidly among the buildings of the business section, most of which were frame structures.

The loss is estimated at $250,000, though insurance on the property destroyed will approximate about 75 per cent of the total loss.

Governor Defends Prison Methods.

St. Louis, Jan. 3.—Governor Major in St. Louis defended the mode of punishment in the Missouri penitentiary, where prisoners are kept with their wrists in iron rings suspended from a wall above their heads for days at a time. "The so-called 'rings' system of punishment is not severe and it is not inhumane. Its principal purpose is to confine a man in a single cell, with the walls to look at, to give him a chance to reconsider his decision on some matter. While it may be tiresome, it is not cruel," said the governor.

Chicago Has "Sane" Time.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—With a "sane" New Year's ordered by the police, a $250,000 flood of champagne turned on by the big restaurants and a watch night service in almost every church, Chicagoans had their choice of celebrations. Horns, confetti and ticklers were forbidden by Mayor Harrison but the street crowds had plenty of noise producers and were not noticeably subdued by the regulations. At nearly every corner in the downtown district the rescue missions and other churches maintained services.

FIRM CUTS MANY OF ITS CONNECTIONS

MORGAN COMPANY RETIRES FROM INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT IS CAUSE

Action Taken in Response to This Apparent Demand—Withdrawal Will Also Relieve Company of Burden of Meetings.

New York, Jan. 5.—J. P. Morgan and company announces that it has severed its connection with twenty-seven of the greatest corporations in the country with which it has long been connected. This step, the firm announces, was taken voluntarily in response to "an apparent change in public sentiment" on account of "some of the problems and criticisms having to do with so-called interlocking directorates." Among the companies from which it retired are the New York Central and the New Haven railroads.

Morgan Makes Statement.

J. P. Morgan made this statement: "The necessity of attending many board meetings has been so serious a burden upon our time that we have long wished to withdraw from the directorates of many corporations. Most of these directorships we have accepted with reluctance and only because we felt constrained to keep in touch with properties which we had reorganized or whose securities we had recommended to the public, both here and abroad.

"An apparent change in public sentiment in regard to directorships appears now to warrant us in seeking to resign from some of these connections. Indeed it may be, in view of the change in sentiment upon the subject, that we shall be in a better position to serve such properties and their security holders if we are not directors. We have already resigned from the companies mentioned, and we expect from time to time to withdraw from other boards upon which we feel there is no special obligation to remain."

Corporation "Strings" Cut.

By withdrawing from these corporations, J. P. Morgan & Co. have cut the strings that have held together many of the country's most important corporations in a community of interests which has been assailed within and without congress. The house of Morgan feels that it has kept within the law, in all of its complex operations, and that no legal necessity nor threatened complications with the authorities at Washington has made it necessary to adopt the sweeping changes in policy announced today.

One of the members of the firm said that Morgan & Co. had been scrupulously careful to observe the spirit as well as the letter of the law and that the decision of the firm was primarily a matter of expediency. The conditions had so shaped themselves in the past, he said, that the firm had been compelled reluctantly to accept the burden of management of various corporations and that it had long been seeking an opportunity to lessen this burden.

Reports From Stefansson Expedition.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 5.—Captain L. L. Lane of the schooner Polar Bear, has written the department of naval service, confirming reports of the safety of the Anderson section of the Stefansson arctic expedition. Captain Lane states he spent four days with Dr. Anderson and his associates, who are safe in winter quarters with the vessels, Alaska and Mary Sachs. No further word has been received from Stefansson, but the officers of the department here express no fears for his welfare

TRIP OF BANK COMMITTEE

FEDERAL REPRESENTATIVES TO HAVE STEEL CAR OF LATEST DESIGN.

Will Take Testimony in Twelve Western Cities in Office on Wheels During 10,000 Mile Journey.

Washington, Jan. 3. — Although plans for the long western trip of the reserve bank organization committee have not been completed, some of the preliminary steps taken indicate that the undertaking will be unique in the history of the government. The committee expects to have an office on wheels for more than a month and to insure the safety of its records and documents on the 10,000-mile journey, a steel car of the latest type has been secured.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Secretary of Agriculture Houston, of the committee, will live aboard this car most of the time for the month, will go over the testimony taken in the twelve western cities they are to visit and keep up with the mass of correspondence that will be forwarded to them from Washington.

Each society will take his own private secretary with him and besides there will be stenographers, messengers and possibly a lawyer from the treasury department. The currency law put $100,000 at the disposal of the committee in reaching a determination of the boundary lines of reserve districts and in locating reserve cities. By making use of a special car the committee expects to make the trip much more cheaply than if it were compelled to use the ordinary means of travel. Moreover, the secretaries want to have at their disposal an "office" where they can retire and avoid persistent boosters, urging the claims of their cities for reserve banks.

The plans contemplate the keeping of the records of the public hearings in the twelve cities up to the minute. When Washington is reached on the return trip it is hoped the records will be in such shape that all the testimony can be laid before the federal reserve board at once, if that body has been organized by the president.

MITCHELL'S SILENCE POLICY

New Mayor of New York Cautions Heads of Departments Regarding Actions.

New York, Jan. 3.—A policy of silence among department heads regarding their administration of branches of city government during their first few months in office was suggested to his appointees by John Purroy Mitchel upon his inauguration as mayor.

"We will develop our program slowly," Mr. Mitchel announced, in the presence of some of his cabinet, the retiring mayor and others who gathered at the city hall to see the new executive take office.

"It will not be necessary to go to the people of the city every day to tell them what we propose to do. It will be better for us to wait a little while and then go to them and tell them what we are doing and have done."

Mayor Mitchel urged "teamwork" among the department heads and promised the fulfillment of campaign pledges given by the fusion party which elected him to office.

Finds $1,400 Father Buried.

Michigan City, Ind., Jan. 5.—Gold, amounting to $1,400 buried eight years ago by her father, was unearthed by Mrs. William McCorkle of McCool, Ind. The family dispersed eight years ago after the burning of the family home, Nathaniel Marshall, the father, going to the home of a son in Iowa. Before his death some time ago he told of the buried money but the son thought the story a fake and he paid little attention to it. At a family reunion his father's description was remembered.

THIRTY-TWO PERISH WHEN BOAT SINKS

OIL STEAMER GOES TO BOTTOM IN TERRIFIC STORM MONDAY.

ONLY EIGHT ARE RESCUED

Liner Bavaria and Other Vessels Helpless for Time—Story of How Sailors Lost Their Lives.

New York, Jan. 6.—Despite the assistance summoned by wireless which reached out in the blackness of a storm-rocked night and called liners and revenue cutters to its aid, the tank steamer, Oklahoma, sank yesterday sixty miles off the Sandy Hook, carrying thirty-two members of its crew to their death.

Eight Are Rescued.

Captain Alfred Gunter and seven other members of the crew were rescued by the Hamburg-American liner, freighter, Bavaria, but Captain Graalfs, of the Bavaria, reported that all others had apparently gone down with the afterpart of the oil ship.

In addition to Captain Gunter those rescued from the Oklahoma were: Chief Mate Bert Liverson, Second Mate Knute Dahle, Third Mate Carl Eklund, Operator William Davis, Boatswain Christian Rasmussen, Carpenter Herman Iriksen, Quartermaster Hamilton Powell.

Wireless Out of Commission.

At first it appeared that the wireless would again cheat the sea of the toll it was about to claim in the terrific storm, which lashed the eastern coast. The liners, Caribbean, of the Royal Mail line, Manuel Calvo, of the Spanish line, and the Bavaria, and land wireless stations picked up the first signals of distress. Then the Oklahoma's wireless went out of commission. Blindly the Manuel Calvo grouped through the darkness on a sea running mountain high until it finally came on the stricken vessel.

Captain Bonet flashed word to the Georgic, the White Star line freighter, and the revenue cutters, Seneca, Gresham and Onondaga, hurried toward the position given by the Spanish vessel. There they sighted the bright lights of the Manuel Calvo shining out over the black, raging water. Then the hulk of another vessel loomed into view.

The Oklahoma's lights were out. Its engines had stopped and it was entirely at the mercy of the waves that tossed and turned the other vessels about like chips, despite their facilities for resisting the elements.

Couldn't Lower Boats.

Time after time the Manuel Calvo and other vessels endeavored to lower lifeboats. The heavy seas hit the light craft as they struck the water, hurled them back and crushed them against the sides of the rescue ships.

Members of the crew who had volunteered for the perilous work were dragged, bruised and bleeding, to the decks.

The brilliant searchlights played upon the Oklahoma and eight men could be seen huddled on the forepart of the vessel.

Boats were finally lowered from the Bavaria and a final effort was made to dash through the waves to the tank steamer's side. Reaching it, they found that the eight men sightless by the blazing searchlights during the night were the only ones remaining on the vessel. The stern was under water and thirty-two of the crew had been swept overboard or caught below decks.

It was 8 a. m. Monday when the Bavaria made the rescue, Captain Graalfs reported to his office here. Since 8 a. m. Sunday the Oklahoma had been battling helplessly against the raging sea.

The Bavaria has 1,900 steerage passengers aboard and with the wild sea claiming its dead within their sight and their own vessel put to a severe test in resisting the onslaught of the waves, the foreigners were on the verge of panic.

MILITIA IS ORDERED OUT

Company of Infantry Sent to Quell Excitement in Colorado Coal Fields.

Denver, Jan. 6.—Governor Ammons has ordered a company of infantry from Trinidad into the north section of the coal fields where much excitement was created through the deportation of seven strike leaders by members of the Tax Payers league.

Conditions at Oak Creek and Steamboat Springs are reported extremely threatening.

Wants to Be Minnesota Governor.

Minneapolis.—James A. Peterson of Minneapolis announces himself as a candidate for governor in a statement covering the issues he will speak on during the republican primary campaign. He attacks the growth in state expenses, arraigns Governor A. O. Eberhart for his vetoes of the Nolan and Minette bills and his support of state public utilities commission, and attacks State Auditor S. G. Iverson, another rival, charging inefficient management of the state land department.

BODY OF MISS M'CANN FOUND

SEA GIVES UP REMAINS OF SETTLEMENT WORKER.

Storm on Atlantic Coast Solves Mystery of Disappearance—No Signs of Violence Found.

New York, Jan. 6.—The body of Miss Jessie E. McCann, the young settlement worker who disappeared from her Brooklyn home just a month ago, has just been given up by the sea.

It was found by a watchman at Coney Island, having been washed ashore by the heavy surf that pounded the beach during the storm.

Long immersion had made the features unrecognizable, but identification of the young woman by her family was made possible by a signet ring with the initials "J. E. M.," and by articles of clothing Miss McCann wore the day she disappeared.

Miss Jessie McCann.

Miss McCann was last seen by her family when she left her home Dec. 4, supposedly to attend to settlement work duties. A few days later her father, a well to do business man, notified the police of her disappearance and offered a reward of $1,000 for information as to her whereabouts. He also had her photograph thrown on the screens of the moving picture theaters throughout the East in the hope that this would lead to the finding of the young woman.

Numerous reports of Miss McCann having been seen came from all parts of the country, but investigation in each case proved them to be erroneous.

There were no signs of violence on the body, according to physicians who examined it and the police have no clue as to the manner in which she was drowned.

Artist Willing to Arbitrate.

Christiania, Norway, Jan. 6.—Friends have offered their good offices to bring about a settlement of the domestic troubles of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the American painter, and his first wife, Marie Emilie Fischbacher, the mother of the boy Harold, whom Earle is accused of abducting from school. Earle says he is quite ready to submit to arbitration and is awaiting word from Mme. Fischbacher. Earle and his companion, Miss Charlotte Herman, are still in jail and are receiving the treatment of ordinary prisoners.

A. F. of L. to Consider Strike.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—A meeting of the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor at Washington, at which the copper strike in Michigan will be considered, will be called by Samuel Gompers, president of the organization.

GRAIN AND LIVE STOCK.

Twin City Markets.

Minneapolis, Jan. 6.—Wheat, May, 88c; July, 89¼c; No. 1 northern, 88⅛c; No. 2 northern, 86c; No. 3 durum, 85⅛c; No. 3 corn, 60c; No. 3 white oats, 35⅛c; barley, malting, 67c; No. 2 rye, 55c; No. 1 flax, $1.52¼.

Duluth, Jan. 6.—Wheat, May, 88¾c; July, 89¾c; No. 1 northern, 88¾c; No. 1 durum, 84c.

South St. Paul, Jan. 6.—Cattle—Steers, $6.75@7.25; cows, $4.75@7.85; calves, $4.25@10.00; hogs, $7.70@7.80; sheep and lambs, steady.

Chicago Live Stock.

Chicago, Jan. 6.—Hogs—Receipts, 44,000; slow, generally 5c above yesterday's average; bulk of sales, $8.10@8.20; light, $7.90@8.22½; mixed, $7.90@8.30; heavy, $7.90@8.35; rough, $7.90@8.00; pigs, $7.00@8.00.

Cattle—Receipts, 23,000; steady to a shade lower; beeves, $6.70@9.30; Texas steers, $6.90@7.90; western steers, $6.20@7.85; stockers and feeders, $5.00@7.45; cows and heifers, $3.50@4.50; calves, $7.00@11.50.

Sheep—Receipts, 33,000; slow, generally steady; native, $4.75@6.10; western, $4.75@6.10; yearlings, $5.85@7.10; lambs, native, $6.70@8.25; western, $6.75@8.25.

Active demand, especially for choice grades, carried the hog market higher today. Shippers led in the buying.

Minneapolis Pioneer is Stricken.

Minneapolis.—Jeremiah E. Smith, one of Minnesota's most prominent stock buyers in pioneer days, and widely known among the old timers of the city is dead. Coming to Minneapolis in 1865, Mr. Smith soon identified himself with the stock industry of this part of the Northwest. Mr. Smith was 87 years old at the time of his death. He was born in Belmont county, Ohio, in January of 1827. He was married there to Miss Sarah E. Gill 24 years later.

A Man in the Open

by Roger Pocock

Illustrations by Ellsworth Young

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with Jesse Smith recalling the story of his birth, early life in Labrador and of the death of his father. Jesse becomes a sailor. His mother marries the master of the ship and both are lost in the wreck of the vessel. Jesse becomes a cowboy in Texas. He marries Polly, a singer of questionable morals, who later is reported to have committed suicide. Jesse becomes a rancher and moves to British Columbia. Kate Trevor takes up the narrative. Unhappily married she contemplates suicide, but changes her mind after meeting Jesse. Jesse rescues Kate from her drink-maddened husband who attempts to kill her. Trevor loses his life in the rapids. Kate rejects offers of grand opera managers to return to the stage and marries Jesse. Their married life starts out happily. Kate succumbs to the pleadings of a composer to return to the stage and runs away with him. She rescues Widow O'Flynn from her burning house, is badly burned herself and returns home, where Jesse receives her with open arms. Jesse calls his neighbors and plans to capture cattle thieves. Kate is rescued from the hands of the bandits. Jesse is captured by the robbers, but by a clever ruse makes prisoners of the robbers. They are turned over to a United States marshal, who has arrived with extradition papers. Jesse takes charge of the outlaw chief's son, Billy O'Flynn, having promised the chief to keep him out of his father's profession. He takes Billy to Vancouver and the lad is shanghaied. A son is born to Kate and Jesse and is named David. Jesse receives a letter from his first wife, Polly, in which she tells him she deceived him into thinking she had killed herself. She threatens to come to him.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

The father released me, turning to my dear man. "Jesse," he said, "won't you shake hands with me?

"You see," he said, "I made a mistake myself, thinking a priest should be celibate to win love from on high. But in its fullest strength God's love comes through a woman to shine upon my life—and so I've missed the greatest of his gifts. Your wife has told me everything, and I'm so envious. Won't you shake hands? I've been so lonely. Won't you?"

But my man stood in the mouth of the cave, as though he were being judged.

"This filth," he said, "out of the past. Faugh!"

His voice sounded as though he were dead.

"The law," he said. "I've come to find out what's the law?"

"Man's law?"

"I suppose so."

"But I don't know. I'm only a very ignorant old man; your friend, if you'll have me."

"What do you think?"

"So far as I see, Jesse, the woman can arraign you on a charge of bigamy. Moreover, if you seek divorce she can plead that there's equal guilt, from which there's no release."

"And that's the law?"

"Man's law. But, Jesse, when you and Kate were joined in holy matrimony, was it man's law which said, 'Whom God hath joined, let no man put asunder.' What has man's law to do with the awful justice of Almighty God?

"And here, my son, I am something more than a foolish old man." He rose to his feet, making the sign of the cross. "I am ordained," he said, "a barrister to plead at the bar of Heaven. Will you not have me as your adviser, Jesse?"

"Whom God hath joined," Jesse laughed horribly, "that harlot and I."

"She swore to love, honor and obey?"

"Till death us part!"

"And that was perjury?"

"A joke! A joke!"

"That was not marriage, my son, but blasphemy, the sin beyond forgiveness. The piteous lost creature has never been your wife."

"Then You Must Part."

"I told her what she is, straight from the shoulder."

"Who made her so?"

Jesse lowered his head.

"Who made her the living accusation of men's sins? She is the terrible state's evidence, God's evidence, which waits to be released in the Day of Judgment. You told her straight from the shoulder. Judge not that ye be not judged. Remember that of all the men she knew on earth, you only can plead not guilty."

"Because I married her?" asked Jesse humbly.

"Because you tried. You gave her your clean name, your pure life, your manhood, an act of knightly chivalry. Only a cur would blame the weak. Only a coward would accuse the lost. But in your manhood remember her courage, Jesse. Forgive as you hope for pardon. Keep your life clean, from every touch of evil, but to the world stand up for the honor of the name you gave her."

"I will."

"You forgive?"

"Yes."

"You will pray for her?"

"I will pray."

"And now the hardest test has still to come. For your wife's honor and for the child, you must keep their names stainless, clear of all reproach while you await God's judgment. They must leave you, Jesse."

"Oh, not that, sir!"

"Can they stay here in honor?"

"No."

"Can you run away?"

"Never!"

"Then you must part."

Jesse covered his face with his hands, and there against the deepening twilight I saw shadows reaching out from him, as though—slowly the shadows took form of high-shouldered wings and mighty pinions sweeping to the ground.

He looked up, and behold he was changed.

"Pray for me, sir!" he whispered.

Then the priest raised his hand, and gave him the benediction.

Jesse Closes the Book.

It is years now since my lady left me. Never has an ax touched her trees, or any human creature entered her locked house. The rustle of her dress is in the leaves each fall, the pines still echo to her voice. I hear her footsteps over the new snow, I feel her presence when I read her books. I know her thoughts are spirits haunting me, and all things wait until she comes back. Not until I lost my lady did I ever hear that faint, thin, swaying echo when her grove seemed to be humming tunes. At times when dew was falling, I have heard the pattering of millions and millions of little feet, just as she said, making the grass bend.

Tears drop on the paper and shame poor fool Jesse. The Book says that He shall wipe away all tears. If my bear had only lived, I should not have been so lonely. I wonder if—God help me, I can't write more. The book is finished.

PART THREE.

CHAPTER I.

Spite House.

Kate Reviews the Book.

The book is not finished. This book of Jesse's life and mine is not finished while she who set us asunder is allowed to live. "Vengeance is mine," saith the Lord, "I will repay." We wait.

What impulse moved my man after four years to enter that tragic house? He read our book, so piteously stained, this heap of paper scrawled with rusty ink. He added parts of a chapter, which I have finished. It is all blotted with tears, this record of his life—childhood, boyhood, youth, manhood, humor, passion—veritable growth of an immortal spirit—annals of that love which lifteth us above the earth—and then!

So I must try to catch up happiness. I have notes here of dear Father Jared, made at the time when he was bringing me with Baby David home. I remember we sat in our deck chairs on the sunny side of the ship, watching a cloud race out in mid-Atlantic. We talked of home.

Frognall End, where my saint is curate-in-charge, is on the river near Windsor, and there I went to live with Baby David.

From the first my Heaven-born was interested in milk, later in a growing number of worldly things, but it was not until last winter by the fireside that we really had serious tales all about Wonderland.

Although David has decided to be a tram conductor, he still takes some little interest in other walks of life. Once on the tow-path he asked an old gentleman who was fishing what he was fishing for, and got the nice reply: "I often wonder." And it was on this path beside the Thames, that one day last November he made a big friendship. His nurse was passing a few remarks with a young man who asked the way to my house, and baby went ahead pursuing his lawful occasions. Curious to know what it felt like to be a real fish, he was stepping into the river to see about it, when the young man interfered.

"Leggo my tail," said David wrathfully, then with sudden defiance, "I got my feet wet anyway, so there!"

"That's so," the young man agreed.

"I say," David grew confident. "Mummie says it's in the paper, so it's all right."

"What's that, sonny?"

"A little boy what went in to see about some fishes, and that man what swam and swum, and I saw'd his picture in the paper. So now 'tend you look de udder way."

"Why, I can't see nothen."

"You can see. The game is for me to jump in, and you swim."

"But I can't swim. I'm a sailor."

"Oh, weally? Then what's your name?"

"It's Billy O'Flynn."

"No, but that's weally my guinea pig, the pink one—Billy O'Flynn. You're not a fairy, Billy?"

"Why, what does you know about fairies?"

"Most truthfully, you know, I don't believe in fairies, but then it pleases mummie."

So Billy sat on his heel making friends with the heaven-born, and Patsy, the nurse, came behind him, craving with cotton-gloved hands to touch the sailor's crisp, short, golden hair, and David gravely tried on the man's peaked cap.

"Yes," Billy agreed, "fairies is rot when there's real gals about, with rosy cheeks a-blushin' an' cotton gloves."

"Lawks! 'Ow you sailors does fancy yourselves," said Patsy, her shy fingers drawn by that magnetic gold of the man's hair.

"Climb on my back and ride," said young O'Flynn to David, "I'll be a fairy horse."

"The cheek of 'im!" jeered Patsy, "fairy 'orse indeed!"

Oh, surely the fairies were very busy about them, tugging at heartstrings, while Billy and Patsy fell head over ears in love, and my pet cupid had them both for slaves. David rode Billy home, by his august command straight into my brown study, where I sat in my lazy chair.

I Began to Understand What Billy Meant.

Was it my voice telling baby to go and get dry feet? Was it my hand grasping Billy's horny paw? For I heard my roaring canyon, saw my cliffs, my embattled sculptured cliffs, and once more seemed to walk with Jesse in Cathedral Grove."

I laughed, I cried. Oh, yes, of course I made a fool of myself. For this dear lad came out of Wonderland, this heedless ruffian who knew of my second marriage, who had such a tale to tell of "Madame Scotson." Oh, haven't you heard? Her precious Baby David is illegitimate! Couldn't I hear my neighbor, Mrs. Pollock telling that story at the Scandal club?

Feeling ill-bred and common, I begged Billy's pardon, made him sit down, tried ever so hard to put him at his ease. Poor lad! His father condemned as a felon, his mother such a wicked old harridan, his life, to say the very least, uncouth. Yet somehow out of that rough savage face shone the eyes of a gentleman, and there was manliness in all he said, in everything he did. After that great journey for my sake, how could I let him doubt that he was welcome?

"I know I'm rough," he said humbly, "but you seem to understand. You know I'm straight. You won't mind straight talk unless you're changed, and you're not changed—at least not that way, mum."

Changed! Ah, how changed! The looking glass had bitter things to tell me, and crying makes me such a frump, I never felt so plain. And the eyes of a young man are often brutally frank to women.

"Don't mind about me, Billy. Say what you've come to tell me."

"Been gettin' it ready to say ever since I started for England. Look here, mum, I want to go back to the beginning, to when I was a kid, an' mother kep' that hash house in Abilene. D'ye mind if I speak—I mean about this here Polly?"

I set my teeth and hoped he would be quick.

"Well, ye see, mum, she only done it for a joke, and the way Jesse treated her—"

"I can't hear this."

"You don't mind if I say that mother and me haven't no use for Jesse?"

"I know that."

"Well, mother put her up to the idea. To get shut of him, she shammed dead. I helped. I say she done right, mum. If she'd let it go at that I'd take her side right now."

"Billy, was that a real marriage?"

"It was that. She's Jesse's wife all right."

There was something which braced me in his callous frankness. "I hoped," I said. "Go on."

"Well, mother hated Jesse somethin' chronic. Afterward when—well, she had to run for the British possessions, and we met up with Jesse again by accident. He give us a shack and some land, but mother an' me had our pride. How would you like to take charity? Mother hated him still worse, and don't you imagine I'd go back on her. She's my mother.

"Then you married Jesse. Of course mother and me both knew that Polly was alive. Father knew, too—and father was around when no one but us ever seen him. We knew that Polly was alive, and mother would have given Jesse dead away, only we stopped her. Father said it was none of our business. Father liked Jesse, I thought the world of you, so when mother wrote to Polly, we'd burn her letters."

What an escape for us!

"Then you saved mother from burning in that shack, and afterward she hated Jesse worse, because she couldn't hit him for fear of hurting you. Oh, she was mad because she'd got fond of you.

"And you took us into your ranch. Charity again, and you sailin' under Protestant colors, both of yes. The way mother prayed for Jesse was enough to scorch his bones." Billy chuckled. "I ain't religious—I drink, and mother's professin' Catholic cuts no figure with me.

"Then there's the fightin' between father's gang and Jesse's. Dad got hung, Jesse got the dollars. Rough, common, no-account, white trash, like mother an' me, hears Jesse expounding the Scriptures. We ain't got no feelings same as you."

Poor lad! Poor savage gentleman!

"You saved me from murdering Jesse and got me away from that ranch. Since then I've followed the sea. There's worse men there than Jesse. I seen worse grub, worse treatment, worse times in general since I quit the ranch. Five years at sea—"

There was the glamour, the greatness of the sea in this lad's eyes, just as in Jesse's eyes. Sailors may be rugged, brutal, fierce—not vulgar. Men reach out into spaces where we sheltered women cannot follow.

"Suppose I've grown," said Billy. "Well, mum, I got a notion to go home. Signed as A. B. in a four-masted bark Clan Innes out o' Glasgow, for Vancouver with general cargo. I quit her at Vancouver, made Ashcroft by C. P. R., blind baggage mostly, then hit the road afoot. I thought I'd take my departure from the Fifty-Nine."

"The old bush trail?"

"Hard goin', but then I expected, of course, mother'd be there at the ranch, and you, mum, an' Jesse, of course, and—"

"You must have found things changed when you got to the ranch."

"Didn't get there. I'd news at Hat Creek, and hay' the road main north. Mother wasn't at the ranch any more. She'd poisoned Jesse's bear. Oh, mum, I don't want to hurt."

"Go on, dear lad."

"Mother'd took up with Polly at Spite House."

"Spite House?"

"It's the Ninety-Nine Mile House. There's a sign board right across the road:

THE NINETY-NINE
MRS. JESSE SMITH
HOTEL, STORE, LIVERY.

"She did that to spite Jesse, and they call the place Spite House."

Spite House! How right Father Jared was. "Sword versus dragon," he told us, "is heroic; sword versus cockroach is heroics. Don't draw your sword on a cockroach."

This much I tried to explain to young O'Flynn, whose Irish blood has a fine sense of humor. But the smile he gave me was one of pity, turning my heart to ice. "Jesse," he said, "made that mistake. That's why I've come six thousand miles to warn you. Howly Mother, if I'd only the eddication to talk so I'd be understood!

"I'm going to try another course. See here, mum. You've heard tell of Cachalot whales. They runs say eighty tons for full whales—one hundred fifty horse-power, dunno how many knots, full of fight to the last drop of blood. That stands to Jesse.

"And them sperm whales is so contemptuous of the giant squid they uses her for food. She's small along of a sperm whale, but she's mean as eight python snakes with a devil in the middle. That'll do for Polly.

"Well, last voyage I seen one of them she-nightmares strangle a bull Cachalot, and the sight turned me sick as a dog. Now, d'ye understand what Polly's doing? I told you I hated Jesse. I told you straight to your face why I hated him. And now, mum, I'm only sorry for poor Jesse."

It was then, I think, that I began really to be terrified. Never in the old days at the ranch had Billy been off his guard even with me. Now he let me know his very heart. I could not help but trust him, and it was no small uneasiness which had brought the lad to England.

"Them devil-squids," he was saying, "has a habit of throwing out ink to fog the water, so you won't see what they're up to until they lash out to grapple. That's where they're so like this Polly. She's a fat, hearty, goodnatured body, and it's the surest fact she's kind to men in trouble. Anybody can have a drink, a meal and a bed, no matter how broke he is; and Spite House is free hospital for the district. She'll sit up night nursing a sick man, and, till I went an' lived there, I'd have sworn she was good as they make 'em. That's the ink.

"Then you begins to find out, and what I didn't see, mother would tell me. She'd been three years there. Besides, I seen most of what we calls sailor towns, and I'd thought I'd known the toughest there was in the way of boardin' houses; but rough house in 'Frisco itself is holiness compared with what goes on there under the sign of Mrs. Jesse Smith. That name ain't exactly clean."

"That's enough, I think, if you don't mind. I'd rather have news about our old friends—Captain Taylor, for instance, and Iron Dale, and how is dear Doctor McGee?"

"Dear Doctor McGee, is it? Well, you see he lived within a mile of Polly. She got him drinkin', skinned him at cards, then told him he'd best shoot himself. The snow drifts through his house.

"And Iron Dale? Oh, of course, he was Jesse's friend, too. I'd forgot. She got him drunk and went through him. That money was for paying his hands at the Sky-line—wasn't his to lose, so he skipped the country. The mines closed down and there wasn't no more packing contracts for Jesse."

I began to understand what Billy meant, and it was with sick fear I asked concerning my dear man's stanchest friend, his banker, Captain Boulton Taylor.

"You'd better know, mum." There was pain in the lad's face, reluctance in his voice. "Being the nearest magistrate, he tried to down Polly for keeping a disorderly house. But then, as old man Taylor owned, he didn't know enough law to plug a rat hole. There ain't no municipality, so Spite House is outside the law. But Polly's friends proved all the good she done to men who was hurt, or sick, or broke. Then she showed up how her store and hotel was cutting into the trade of Hundred Mile House. She brung complaints before the government, so Taylor ain't magistrate now. The stage stables get moved from Hundred Mile to Spite House. The post-office had to follow. Now he's alone with only a Chinaman. He's blind as a bat, too, and there's no two ways about it—Bolt Taylor's dying."

"Is there no justice left?"

Dunno about that. She uses a lot of law."

I dared not ask about Jesse. To sit still was impossible, to play caged tiger up and down the room would only be ridiculous. Still, Billy's poisonous tobacco excused the opening of a window, so I stood with my back turned, while a November night closed on the river and the misty fields.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Handsome Is as Handsome Does.

Sanford—So you don't believe in judging a man by his clothes?

Crabshaw—No, indeed! That's the portion of a good man's life. The way we judge a woman, and look how we get fooled!—Judge.

LEAVE CONDIMENTS TO CHEF

Visiting Frenchman Bitterly Criticises American Habit of Salting Food Placed Before Them.

"It is easy to see that most of these multimillionaires don't know what decent cooking is."

And the French countess, shrugging her white and pretty shoulders, let her eyes rove disdainfully over the Newport dinner table, with it orchids and its gold plate.

"Why do you say that, madame?" a multimillionaire inquired.

"Because," rejoined the countess, "the minute a dish is set before you you all rain salt on it. You all, without exception, rain salt on every dish."

"Well?" said the multimillionaire as he rained salt calmly and generously upon his chaufroid de gibier. "Well, what of it?"

"There, look at you," cried the countess, "salting a chaufroid de gibier, to which a chef has devoted six or seven hours of his best talent! And you salt it without even tasting it first! That is to say, you are used to bad cooking, to unseasoned cooking, that as a matter of course you take this cooking to be bad.

"Mon ami," said the countess impressively, "when a chef sees a diner salt or pepper a dish he's in despair—he's in despair as a painter would be if the purchaser of his painting took up a brush and added a little more green to the grass or a little more blue to the sky.

"Good French cooking needs no additional seasoning at table. They who season it, like you multimillionaires, without so much as tasting it first, don't know what good French cooking is. Were I a chef I'd rather work in a Marseilles eight-sou table d'hote than in your kitchens of marble and glass."

Where She Was Webbly.

Edith is very timid, but she tries to do her duty, and not long since recited a "piece" before some school visitors with great credit and apparent calmness. Her mother, later complimented and praised her, especially for not seeming at all nervous. "Oh, but I was scared, really, mamma," the child explained ingenuously. "I held my hands still, but you should have seen my knees."

WONDERFUL GROWTH OF THE CANADIAN WEST

The Cities of Western Canada Reflect the Growth of the Country.

As one passes through Western Canada, taking the City of Winnipeg as a starting point, and then keeping tab on the various cities and towns that line the network of railways that cover the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and covering the eyes as the gaze is bent on these it is felt that there must be "something of a country" behind it all. Then gaze any direction you like and the same view is presented. Field after field of waving grain, thousands and hundreds of thousands of them. Farm hands and laborers are at work converting the virgin prairie with more fields. Pasture land in every direction on which cattle are feeding, thriving and fattening on the grasses that are rich in both milk and beef properties, but it is unfortunate that more cattle are not seen. That, however, is correcting itself. Here we have in a large measure, the evidence of the wealth that helps to build up the cities, and it should not be forgotten that the cities themselves have as citizens young men who have come from other parts, and brought with them the experience that has taught them to avoid the mistakes of eastern and southern cities. They also are imbued with the western spirit of enterprise, energy and push, and so Western Canada has its cities. At a banquet recently given in Chicago, a number of prominent citizens of Winnipeg were guests. Among the speakers was Mayor Deacon of Winnipeg. In speaking of the remarkable growth of that city, which in thirty years has risen from a population of 2,000 to one of 200,000, he spoke of it as being the gateway of commerce and continued:

"Now, how great that tide of commerce is you will have some conception of when I tell you that the wheat alone grown in the three prairie provinces this year is sufficient to keep a steady stream of one thousand bushels per minute continuously night and day going to the head of the lakes for three and one-half months, and in addition to that the oats and barley would supply this stream for another four months.

"The value of the grain crop alone grown in the three prairie provinces would be sufficient to build any of our great transcontinental railroads and all their equipment, everything connected with them, from ocean to ocean.

"Now, if we are able to do this with only ten per cent. of our arable land under cultivation what will our possibilities be when 288,000,000 of acres of the best land that the sun shines on is brought under the plow? Do you not see the portent of a great, vigorous, populous nation living under those sunny skies north of the 49th parallel? And if with our present development we are able to do as we are doing now, to purchase a million dollars' worth of goods from you every day of the year, what will our trade be worth when we have fully developed the country?

"Now, who shall assist us to develop this great empire that is there? Shall it be the alien races of southern Europe or shall it be men of our own blood and language? In the last three fiscal years no less that 358,000 American farmers have come into Western Canada, bringing with them goods and cash to the value of $350,000,000. And I want to say here that no man who sets foot on our shores is more entirely and heartily welcome than the agriculturist from the south.

"So long as these conditions remain I consider that this is the best guaranty that the sword will never again be drawn in anger between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race. The grain crops of Western Canada in 1913 have well upheld the reputation that country has for abundant yields of all small grains."—Advertisement.

Nothing to His Credit.

"Nowadays when a man tries to make both ends meet he is greeted by a loud laugh of derision."

"Quite so. And it is generally suspected that he is lacking in finesse."

IS EPILEPSY CONQUERED?

New Jersey Physician Said to Have Many Cures to His Credit.

Red Bank, N. J. (Special).—Advices from every direction fully confirm previous reports that the remarkable treatment for epilepsy being administered by Dr. Perkins of this city, is achieving wonderful results. Old and stubborn cases have been greatly benefitted and many patients claim to have been entirely cured.

Persons suffering from epilepsy should write at once to Dr. H. W. Perkins, Branch 49, Red Bank, N. J., for a supply of the remedy which is being distributed gratuitously.—Adv.

Stingy.

"Even after we are married," wooed the ardent lover, "I shall always be close to you."

And he was.

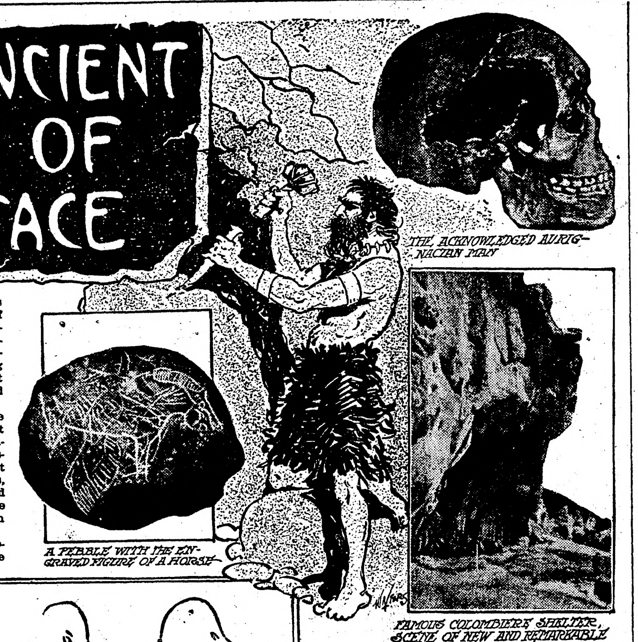
Stop that cough, the source of Pneumonia, etc. Prompt use of Dean's Mentholated Cough Drops gives relief—5c at Druggists.

Political ambition that will not loosen the purse strings is not skin deep.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic, 25c a bottle.

The hen that cackles loudest doesn't always lay the biggest egg.

MOST ANCIENT DRAWING OF HUMAN FACE



THE ACKNOWLEDGED AURIGNACIAN MAN

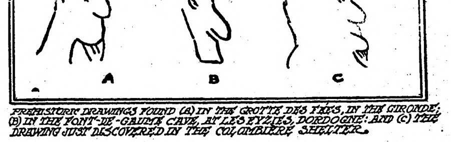
A PEBBLE WITH THE ENGRAVED FIGURE OF A HORSE

FAMOUS COLOMBIERE SHELTER, SCENE OF NEW AND REMARKABLE FIND OF DRAWINGS

WHAT is declared by its discoverers to be the oldest known depiction of a human being has just been unearthed in France. It is the rude figure of a man engraved on a prehistoric monster's bone. According to those who dug it up it is at least 15,000 years old, dating back to the so-called Aurignacian age.

If they are right in their contentions and the strange drawing was actually made by an artist in his prehistoric "studio," it materially strengthens the theory that our ancestors, instead of possessing the ape-like skulls of the type found at Neanderthal, Spy, and La Chappelle-aux-Saints, were creatures with skulls resembling that found at Piltdown, England, last year, declared by some to have had a brain development greater than that of present-day man.

This remarkable discovery was made on October 3 last in the cave of La Colombiere, beside the River Ain, in southern France, by Dr. Lucien Mayet, professor of human palaeontology at the University of Lyon, and M. Jean Pissot of Poncin, a town close to the cave. The official report of the great find was read to the Paris Academy of Sciences by M. Douville and summarized at length in L'Illustration.



PREHISTORIC DRAWINGS FOUND (A) IN THE GROTTE DES FEES, IN THE GIRONDE; (B) IN THE FONT-DE-GAUME CAVE, AT LES EYZIES, DORDOGNE; AND (C) THE DRAWING JUST DISCOVERED IN THE COLOMBIERE SHELTER.

The cave of La Colombiere is situated on the right bank of the Ain, about 20 meters above the present level of that river, between Poncin and Neuville-sur-Ain. As long ago as 1875 a scientist, Mr. Moyret, called attention to it as having been inhabited in prehistoric times. Ever since inumerous investigators have visited it. They conducted their investigations so assiduously that the level of the cave formed during the Neolithic age—comparatively recent, in the eyes of geologists and anthropologists—was dug away, also the contiguous level of the earlier Magdalenian age. This lowered the level of the cave by 75 centimeters and brought to light rich fields of Neolithic and Magdalenian relics.

But the richest find of all was yet to come. Beginning last May, the latest investigators began to dig deeper into the soil forming the floor of the cave, and after they had penetrated about one meter further down they found a stratum of fine gravel, showing unmistakable signs of dating from the still earlier Aurignacian age. This proved to be a veritable treasure trove.

In it were uncovered the "studio" of a prehistoric artist, containing a number of different sorts of engraver's tools, pieces of mammoth, rhinoceros, and raindeer bones, pieces of stone ready for engraving, and stones and bones with engravings already cut into them.

One of the latter represents a horse of a remarkably finished type; another shows a bison, still another a wild sheep. But the prize of the whole collection, the prize which, it is confidently expected, will make this an epoch-making find in the annals of anthropology, is the piece of mammoth's bone on which is cut the figure of a human being. This, in the words of those who have unearthed it, "is the first document representing, in engraved form, the man of the Middle Quaternary age, the minimum age of which is 15,000 years."

As those who delve into the remote history of our race are aware, picturings of himself by prehistoric man are extremely rare. He delighted in drawing and carving the strange beasts which he saw about him—bisons, reindeer, mammoth, horses and the like—but when it came to giving us an idea of what he looked like himself he was strangely coy.

Especially rare are depictions of man in the form of drawings or engravings. Rude carvings of human beings, dating far beyond the dawn of history, have been dug up—at Villendorf, in Austria; at Brassempouy, the Laussel cave, and the grottoes of Grimaldi in France and other places. Owing to this paucity of first-hand information, reconstructions of prehistoric man from the various skulls and bones found at different times have been largely a matter of conjecture. It has been a case of every one guessing for himself, legion. One group of savants, endeavoring to build up our remote ancestor from the famous relics found in the Neanderthal, near Dusseldorf, Germany; at Spy, in Belgium, and at La Chapelle-aux-Saints, in France, have shown us something materially strengthening the Darwinian theory that man is descended from the ape. Another group, basing its deductions on the "man" reconstructed from the Piltdown skull, has endeavored to prove that prehistoric man, from whom we are descended, never became so bestial as the possessors of the Neanderthal-Spy-La Chappelle-aux-Saints skulls, and that the latter belonged to a branch of the race which gradually degenerated until it finally became extinct, while the other and superior branch kept on improving until man as we know him was gradually evolved.

This latter theory, it is expected by the discoverers of the prehistoric "studio" in the cave of La Colombiere, will be greatly bolstered up by what they have brought to light. To begin with, the best known depictions of human beings of a similar sort—notably the sculptured forms of women found at Azil and elsewhere in France, as well as the sketches of the human face unearthed in the cave of Marsoulas—were produced in the Magdalenian age, according to the theory generally accepted by Frenchmen, and, therefore, are supposed to be much more recent than anything dating from the Aurignacian age.

Granting, then, that the pictures in the cave of La Colombiere really date from the Aurignacian age—and the report read by M. Douville shows pretty conclusively that they do—and that those similar to them discovered up to now are of a more recent date, the character of the work done by the cave artist of La Colombiere is such as immediately to rivet the closest attention on it.

For the "man" here shown, the man of the Aurignacian age, bears a most striking resemblance to him of the Magdalenian age, supposedly a much more developed individual.

Compare this man of La Colombiere with the middle one of the three human faces from the cave of Marsoulas, shown on this page. He has the same respectable skull development, much more like that of the possessor of the Piltdown skull than that of the ape-like "Neanderthal man" and his congerers. The nose, it will also be noted, is very similar to that of the Marsoulas man, likewise the heavy chin.

So much for the contentions of the Frenchmen who have made this remarkable find. Backed up though they are by good arguments, it is not likely that they will be swallowed without a struggle. On the contrary, they will probably be the cause of still another controversy to add to the already stormy annals of anthropology. For there is undoubtedly another side to the question.

First, as to the pictures just found of La Colombiere. In spite of the fact that those similar to them—including the human faces of the cave of Marsoulas—are generally ascribed by Frenchmen not to the Aurignacian but to the later Magdalenian age, others think them productions of Aurignician artists. If this latter theory is accepted, the "man" of La Colombiere is simply one more to add to the scanty gallery of Aurignacian depictions of human beings. Even if he proves to be that and nothing more, he will be accounted a precious find, but naturally his value will not be so enormous as those who have found him and those who share their views would have us believe.

Second, as to whether the "man" of La Colombiere proves that we are descended from the Neanderthal-Spy-La Chapelle-aux-Saints race or the race represented by him of the Piltdown skull.

There, too, matters are by no means as easy as they look to the sanguine Frenchmen. Plenty of learned men who have studied the subject of the descent of man are of the opinion that man may be descended from neither of these interesting groups they contend that both of these races may have become extinct and that mankind sprang, possibly, from some race which appeared later.

The latest news from abroad shows that the man of La Colombiere has already set learned tongues to wagging against each other. Already Messrs. Mayet and Pissot, the savants who found him, have a hornet's nest about their ears. In London Mr. J. Leon Williams, writing in the Illustrated London News, has placed himself on record as a foe to the belief that he of La Colombiere is the earliest picture of a man. Mr. Williams' idea is that we have to do here not with a faithful delineation of the human form but with a caricature. He writes:

"As Messrs. Mayet and Pissot say, the drawing is very clear, especially the face and upper part of the head. The back of the head and the neck do not seem to me very well defined in the photograph.

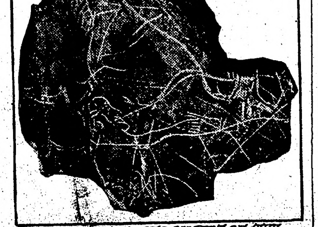
"The discoverers speak of this drawing as having none of the characteristics represented by the Neanderthal, Spy, or La Chapelle-aux-Saints skulls. In their opinion, the head resembles the fossil skull of Chancelade. They say:

"'The head is large, the forehead round and prominent (bombre), rising slightly obliquely. The face is long, as though pulled out from below upward, and is distinctly projected forward; the chin is prominent, and has a short beard indicated by small lines; the nose is long and very thick; the eye is indicated by two curved lines, and has an indefinable expression.'

"In this detailed description it is quite evident that Dr. Mayet and M. Pissot believe that we have here something in the nature of a realistic drawing of Aurignacian man. This is confirmed by their further statement that we have not previously found any engraved figures that teach us anything definite about the exact form of contour of the human face of the Aurignacian or Solutrian periods, and that this want has now been filled by their discoveries.

"With these statements and conclusions I find it impossible to agree. At least two other engravings of the human face have been previously discovered, one in the Grotte des Fees in the Gironde, and the other in the Font-de-Gaume at Les Eyzies (Dordogne.). . . .

"I think it will be clearly seen that the great interest in this new discovery lies not in the belief that it is unique, but in the fact that it is not unique. It is a matter of the deepest interest to find in these three drawings certain identical conventions. The general shape of the head, nose, and chin is the same in all of them. The way in which the mouth is placed is the same in the two which show the mouth, and what our discoverers speak of as the 'indefinable expression of the eye' is produced by identical lines in all three engravings.



HUMAN FACE ENGRAVED ON PART OF THE SHOULDER BLADE OR PELVIS OF A MAMMOTH BY A MAN OF THE AURIGNACIAN PERIOD

All of this suggests several things, among which we may mention that the Colombiere drawing can hardly be means to represent any particular individual; it is hardly possible that it was intended as a realistic production. It may be a rude outline effort, such as a child would make, or it may be a deliberate convention with a meaning of which we are ignorant. If the drawing from the Font-de-Gaume cave was made by the artist who drew the figures of bison and other animals on the rock walls of that cavern, then there is something curious and mysterious in the fact that the drawings of the wild animals are wonderfully realistic, while the one intended to represent a human face is vastly inferior to the others.

"We have probably not yet quite fathomed prehistoric man's ideas and intentions in all this work. Another proof that this Colombiere engraving cannot be intended as a realistic drawing is seen in the photograph and outline drawing of the skull of the Combre Capelle man. This is generally accepted as the typical Aurignacian skull. But by no possible arrangement of the soft parts around that Aurignacian skull could we produce a representation of a face resembling any one of the conventionalized prehistoric drawings shown."

FORGOT ALL ABOUT THE WOMEN.

Because he did not mention women in his recent address on "The City of the Future," Brand Whitlock, mayor of Toledo, O., was taken to task by Mrs. Frederick Nathan after the lecture.

Mr. Whitlock, who is soon to resign to become minister to Belgium, appeared in the Hudson theater under the auspices of the League for Political Education, of which Robert Erskine Ely is director. He talked about the type of the city of the time to come, but not once did he refer directly or indirectly to any part women may take in the administration of the future city's affairs.

"What do you mean by leaving women entirely out of it?" demanded Mrs. Nathan, when she could get close enough to the speaker to attract his attention. "Of course women will be a factor in the future city."

"Why, why," stammered the lecturer, "I forgot all about the women. Didn't I say anything about them?"

"No, you didn't," replied Mrs. Nathan.

"Well, of course, I meant to, for they will be included in municipal administration," was Mr. Whitlock's answer.

"And he stamps on all his letters 'Votes for Women,'" Mrs. Nathan remarked later. "I know it because I have had many nice ones from this suffragist mayor who is interested in much that interests us women."—New York Herald.

SOMEWHAT SO.

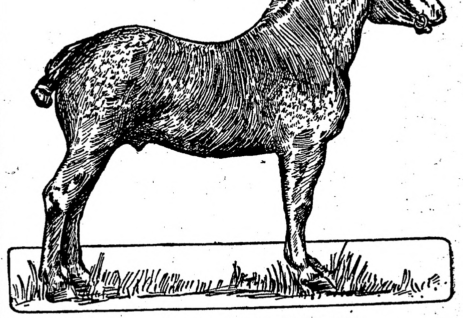
"Is this article of yours about the underworld exposure?"

"Well, in a way."

"What do you mean by in a way?"

"It's all about a volcanic eruption."

POINTS A DRAFT HORSE SHOULD POSSESS



Excellent Percheron, Winner of First Prize.

A good draft horse should be fairly low set, blocky, deep and wide, and should be symmetrical or well proportioned and should stand squarely on comparatively short, straight legs. The good stallion should show lots of style, carrying his head well with ears erect and showing life and spirit.

The draft stallion should have a strong masculine, yet refined head, with good width of forehead, clean-cut face, large, bright eyes, well set ears and firm lips. Heads too fine are objected to, as is also the dished face; but an inclination to a Roman nose in the stallion considered desirable by most horsemen.

The neck should be rather long, clean-cut throat latch and set up on top of the shoulders and not straight in front like the head of a cow. The shoulders should have good slope and the withers should be strong and well laid into the back. Sloping shoulders allow the head to be carried well up and distribute the draft evenly along the collar. The back should be comparatively short with arched ribs, giving the barrel-like appearance of roundness. The loin should be short, well packed with muscle, and the flanks should be low. Short coupled, low-flanked horses are generally strong and easy goers.

The forearm and gaskin should be heavily muscled and strong. Below the knees the leg should appear wide and flat with clean, strong bone and tendons. The pasterns should be of fair length and should slope about 45 degrees from a large, well-rounded foot. The foot should have considerable depth, and width at the heel is also important. The hind legs should be straight with a wide, clean hock, showing no puffs or bony enlargements. A wide, flat appearance to the leg is again wanted, but the hind pasterns, though they should be strong, need not slope as much as the front ones. In action the horse should show a good, fast, square, straight walk, and at the trot should go fairly high in front and behind. Do not get slow, logy, careless walkers. They never sire good horses.

Be sure to get size and blockiness, coupled with good, strong, straight legs and plenty of style and life. In selecting, look the horse over carefully, examining minutely every part, but do not pay too much attention to minor particulars and so miss the important features. Pay most attention to feet and legs, head and coupling, action and style.

Extreme care should be taken to see that the sire you select for your colts does not have any of the following diseases. These are defined as infectious, contagious or transmissable diseases or insoundness:

Eye diseases. As cataract, amaurosis (glass eye), periodic ophthalmia (moon blindness).

Respiratory diseases: Laryngeal hemiplegia (roaring or whistling), pulmonary empysemia (heaves or broken wind).

Nervous troubles: Chorea (St. Vitus dance), constituting string halt, shivering and crampiness.

Bone diseases: Bone spavin, ringbone, side bones, navicular disease, bog spavin and curb, and abnormal hocks.

Infectious and contagious diseases: Glanders or farcy, mange, tumors, and any malformations liable to be transmitted.

GOOD FEED ONLY MAKES DAIRY PAY

Cow Cannot Produce Good Milk Unless Given Ample Supply of Nourishing Food.

(By GEORGE H. HLITZKE.)

With good cows there must also be good feeding. The dairy cow can not produce good milk without a good supply of nourishing food from which to produce milk. Also the food given might be very rich in feeding value, but often not enough of it is fed to the cow.

Thus the cows get only food enough to maintain their bodies and very little of it goes to production of milk.

This, of course, would be feeding at a loss, when a little more food added to this would all be turned to milk, as the other food has already supplied the wants of the body, and this extra is the paying food. The milk it produces pays for it and leaves a clean profit beside.

Therefore, can we afford to withhold this extra food and feed only enough to maintain the body? Such feeding would certainly not be profitable.

So in place of economizing with the feed, it would be better to give the cows a rich supply, and get the milk which, after all, is what we are feeding for.

But there comes the question of what is a good supply of food? We might supply the cows with an unlimited amount of food—in fact, we might supply them with all they can consume and still get no milk-flow of worth, if such food does not contain the proper nutriments.

It is not only a bulk of food that is necessary, but it is the nutritive value of the food given, that counts.

As concentrated foods are the richest in food value, the cows should be supplied with such food as wheat-bran and ground corn at least twice a day with their ration.

This gives them a high per cent. of protein and fat, which they cannot get from the hay.

Poor feeding is an utter waste of the food that the cows eat, and the time and labor of acring for them while the good feeding will pay for the feed and the labor, and leaves a clean profit. Can we then afford to withhold the necessary food?

If the dairy is not paying there is something wrong. Either the cows are poor, or the management is poor. There is a way to make it pay. Let us study our business and seek this profit.

BREED AND HANDLE HORSES AND MULES

Each Mare Should Have Special Place Where She Is Tied to Receive Daily Grain Feed.

The pleasure and the satisfaction of breeding and handling good horses remain, long after the cost of the foundation stock is forgotten.

In mild weather mares must be kept outside in the open sheds, both day and night. Each mare should have a special place where she is tied to receive her grain feed. If fed from an ordinary trough, the more vicious mares may kick the others, and gobble most of the feed. Roughage may be fed safely from the racks in the yard.

Wheat, bran and oats for grain, and clover, alfalfa, or mixed hay makes a fine ration for the growing colts.

During the first winter, provide some sort of sheltered yard for the colts, so that they may run about and exercise for a few hours every day when the weather is not too stormy.

Large draft horses furnish the brawn to save men's energies for the work that requires skill and care.

If you have mules on the farm that are coming two years old, break them now—that is, work for half a day at a time—it won't hurt them; but on the other hand will do them good.

The mule is easily broken, as all farmers who have handled them will testify, but it is a good thing to get them used to being handled before they get too old; then they are ready for the regular work when you need them.

The great superiority of the mule concists in his greater endurance of heat and severe labor, and ability to subsist on less food. He is undoubtedly the most economical machine for the production of power.

Salt as a Fertilizer.

Almost any sort of material that contains soluble potash, phosphoric acid or nitrates has more or less fertilizing value, but salt has not a trace of any of these. Sodium and chlorine are all it has to offer. Salt might possibly have some little effect on the physical condition of the soil under some conditions, but even this would be too slight to warrant its use.

Feeding Molasses.

Molasses in one form or another is greatly relished by cows and horses as well, but it is an unpleasant thing to feed and draws flies by the millions

---

The Stolen Submarine

An Audacious Hazard of Nikolai, Independent Agent, as Related by His Lieutenant, Summers

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman)

Nikolai and I had gone to Kiel to attend the German yacht races. Such meetings are, of course, largely patronized by gentlemen who dabble in what Nikolai called "high finance." The police had gathered in a score and more of the fraternity and sent them out of the country; but those were the bunglers at their trade. We passed as wealthy Americans, and hoped to reap a harvest.

But my companion's thoughts flew high above the common swindling. I knew that when he announced his coup, it would be something worthy of his fantastic mind. On the third evening, while we sat together upon the esplanade, watching the yachts swing past, flags of all nations fluttering at the mast heads, Nikolai broached his plan.

"These Germans are giving England a hard fight for the supremacy of the ocean," he said, as the kaiser's yacht, having defeated her English antagonist, passed to the salutation of ten thousand throats. "And they're not so far behind in actual war material either. England would give a fortune for the plans of the new German submarine."

He handed me the Daily Telegraph of two days previous, which he had purchased at the Casino. I had not seen a paper for the past week. Turning to the column indicated by my companion, I discovered that the German war scare had assumed a new phase.

The column, which was headed in black type, dealt with the maneuvers of a mysterious submarine ship, which had been seen at various points along the British coast, sometimes as a half-submerged body that cut through the water at an astonishing speed, at others merely as the periscope, the eye of such craft, which alone was visible above the waves. It was obviously engaged in taking soundings and spying upon the English naval defenses.

"From these various statements of those who have seen this craft," the newspaper went on to say, "it is evident, in spite of official denials, that it is none other than the new German submarine, about which so much speculation is rife. Its ability to travel such a distance from its base demonstrates the fact clearly, for no other type of submarine vessel has more than a very limited sphere of action. The British government would, doubtless, pay handsomely for a plan of this craft. Meanwhile it is reported that warships are searching for it—and, Messieurs, if you come within the limits of our territorial waters, look out for a broadside!"

"'The British government would, doubtless, pay handsomely for a plan of this craft,'" Nikolai quoted, reading over my shoulder. "Well, why shouldn't we earn the reward, Summers?"

"How could we get the plans?" I asked.

"We won't," replied Nikolai. "What do you say to taking the craft itself and steering it into Portsmouth harbor? It might be piracy on the high seas, but—would England let it go before she had inspected it? And the reward would be big.

"You have never seen a submarine of the newer type, Summers," Nikolai went on hastily, before I could interpose any objection. "Within those shells one man, and certainly two, can hold the entire crew at bay. How? Well, a stick of dynamite, retained in proximity to the steering gear, is a powerful aid. There are few sailors who would choose certain death by suffocation at the bottom of the sea in preference to life with a modicum of dishonor. Then, again, they keep no arms except a couple of pistols or so. A submarine is not an offensive craft. One man, in fact, could easily overpower the entire crew.

"Now, Summers, once we are aboard, this shall be your task. Meanwhile, I shall assume charge of the steering apparatus and bring the vessel safely into Portsmouth harbor. There we deliver her to the authorities. All are arrested and detained pending the court's decision. In the end the vessel is released, we are condemned to hang for piracy—and somebody opens our cell doors one night and a grateful government pensions us. Do you understand?"

"It's risky," I suggested.

"But it's sure," said Nickolai. "And the audacity of the scheme makes its fulfillment easy."

In fact, the initial steps at any rate, proved no formidable obstacle. We knew that the Kiel naval yards must be the headquarters of the mysterious craft. There was no difficulty in discovering the slip at which she berthed after each return from the English coast. The streets were full of German sailors; discipline, never so drastic in the navy as in the army, was a trifle lax during the regatta week; there was no difficulty in gaining admittance to the slip.

Nikolai, in the uniform of a naval captain, and I, attired as his orderly, did, in fact, penetrate the dockyard many times during the ensuing week. We soon discovered that the Hertha, as the submarine was called, set forth twice each week, for her explorations of the North sea, returning to dock at three-day intervals to replenish her fuel. The crew consisted of picked men, veterans of the service, who were commanded by the same officer on each occasion. So much we learned—or rather, Nikolai learned—during these nightly visits of ours. Nikolai spoke German as his mother tongue, and even naval officers grow garrulous after the fourth bottle.

But as to the mechanism of the Hertha, or its objects in the periodical journeys, nobody could say. Our investigation must be made personally.

It was on Thursday, June 29, that we laid our final plans. The Hertha had docked; judging by precedent, she would set forth upon the following evening. The approach to the slip was guarded by a couple of marines, who were relieved periodically; but we had discovered where Lieut. Von Beeman lived, and believed it would be easy to gain admittance. We were to wait in the proximity of his house until he left on the following evening to take up his command. We would follow close upon his heels and pass in a short distance behind him; under the circumstances it would be improbable that the marines would question us. But to ensure against any unexpected circumstances, Nikolai had a forged paper from the ministry of marine, detailing him, with his orderly—myself—to accompany Von Beeman upon his next journey.

I confess I was trembling when, on the ensuing evening, we put this scheme into execution. It must have been in the evening, just when the long twilight was yielding to night, before we perceived the lieutenant leave his quarters and stride sharply down the street. We followed him, gradually edging up closer. At a short distance from the entrance to the slip he swung round on his heel.

"Halt!" he cried sharply, seeing our uniforms and thinking us sailors. "What the devil are you men doing here? What ship are you from?"

But that it was nearly dark I could have sworn Nikolai grew purple in the face from feigned wrath.

"Attention, sir," he bawled. "I am Captain Von Obermeister of the ministry of marine." I saw the lieutenant bring his heels together with a click; he stood stiff as a ramrod and his hand went up to the salute mechanically. Nikolai sputtered and stormed inarticulately for a few moments.

"Schmidt!" he cried to me at length, "withdraw seventeen paces in accordance with the regulations."

I understood only the motion of the hand. But Nikolai explained to me subsequently that this was the formula prescribed in the case of an officer intending to admonish a subordinate. According to the rules of the service, no officer might rebuke another in the presence of an enlisted man.

Hardly had I withdrawn when I saw Nikolai leap toward the lieutenant and metaphorically rend him. His voice, a continuous low basso, was hardly punctuated by the lieutenant's high-pitched apologies. Von Beeman was limp and actually trembling when Nikolai, having concluded his lecture, recalled me. "My orderly, Schmidt, accompanies me," snarled Nicolai. "You have read the order? Forward! March!"

And we passed into the slip where a long, low, oval craft was moored with ropes against a sloping dock. As we approached, a half dozen sailors rose and stood at attention.

"Will you step aboard, sir?" asked the lieutenant with deference. Nikolai accepted the invitation; I followed him; then came the lieutenant, the sailors trooping in behind him; and soon we were all ensconced in the hollow of the ship. A few moments afterward the rope was cast off and we glided down the sloping dock into the water. Soon we were skimming the surface of the canal. Presently the waves began to rise; the lights ashore receded; a keen wind nipped our faces. I knew that we had passed into the North sea. The deck was closed and we plunged into the depths, our periscope alone visible above the waters.

The lieutenant himself stood at the steering gear, Nikolai beside him. Their gaze was bent intently upon a sort of camera obscura, very much resembling the ground glass of a photographic box, upon which were reflected the starry heavens, changing only as the ship altered her course. Three fathoms beneath the surface we could discern everything above us by the medium of this eye, which connected with a long, hollow tube, the top of which was fitted with a series of lenses and rose some feet above the water. Hence the presence of any vessel would be as discernible as though we were in an open boat.

We three were gathered together at the end of the hold. Packed closely around us was machinery of a complicated and, to me, unknown type, though I recognized a barometer, a huge compressed air tank, a gasoline tank with a series of pipes and valves, and the inevitable motor. Upon the side of the ship, close by, hung a couple of pistols, just as Nikolai had foretold. The men, stripped to the waist and perspiirng from the heat, were gathered at the opposite end, some at work upon the machinery that liberated the compressed air, one tracing the chart, others engaged upon some duties connected with the mechanism of the boat. Our voices, when we spoke, roared and re-echoed within the close confines of our quarters. I watched Nikolai, my heart beating wildly. Presently, quite casually he ran his fingers through his hair—the appointed signal. I stepped to the wall and took down the pistols; examined them casually; they were loaded. The lieutenant looked up in mild surprise.

And then it all happened. I stepped forward somewhat foolishly, and pointing the weapons at Van Beeman's face; even yet he understood nothing. He began to retreat from me, trying to speak, stunned by my demeanor. I pressed him back to the other end of the ship. The sailors had risen to their feet and stood watching me open-mouthed, Nikolai bending over the camera, apparently wholly indifferent. At that moment I seemed to be living in an unreal and grotesque dream.

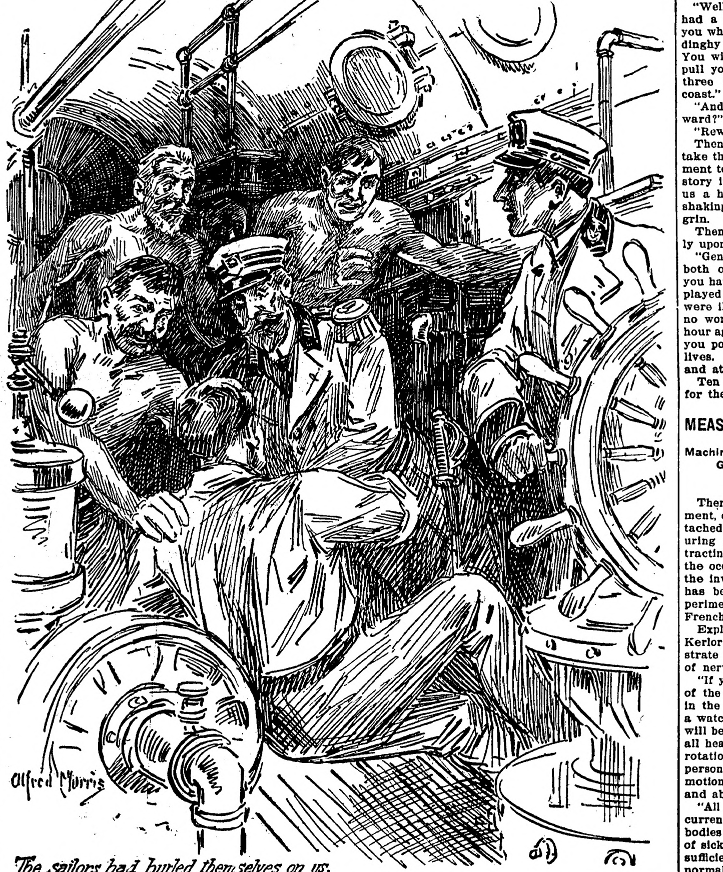
The lieutenant broke the silence.

"My God!" he screamed in German, "the fellow has gone mad! Captain Von Obermeister!"

Nikolai looked up. "At your service, sir," he said.

"Take his pistols away. He is insane. It is the heat!"

"Schmidt is acting under my orders," replied Nikolai. "Keep your end of the boat, lieutenant, or you die. And the first man," he added, "that stirs toward us dies. To work, men," he continued in German. The stupefied sailors obeyed.



The sailors had hurled themselves on us.

Then Nikolai turned to the lieutenant again. "You are entitled to an explanation and you shall have it," he said. "I represent the British government, and our course is laid for Portsmouth harbor."

He spoke in English, which, like all German naval officers, the lieutenant understood perfectly. Von Beeman stared at him wildly; then suddenly he burst into sobs.

"Come, man," said Nikolai, with some sympathy, "things are not as bad as they might be. At least you can have your life. And, if you choose to expatriate yourself, rather than return to face a court-martial—there are many careers open to you—"

"Curse it, sir, I am not weeping over my disgrace," cried the lieutenant furiously. "You insulted me, sir, in the streets of Kiel, and that insult must be atoned for."

The sailors were muttering behind him. They understood the situation now. By ones and twos they left their work and mustered at his side.

"Look out!" cried Nikolai sharply. "They are going to rush us!"

He swung the wheel, and I saw the stars whirl on the silver plate beneath the Periscope. Then a faint smear of black showed itself among the leaping waves, which quickly resolved itself into a miniature warship, with fighting tops and two long guns at the stern. A finger of light sprang from it, quivered over the sea, and remained motionless. Then from the vessel's side a tiny blur leaped into the waves.

It was a man of war. And the blur at the side was a scout motor boat. We were discovered—I realized that in an instant. Heavens be praised, the English battleship had not been searching the seas for us in vain!

If only Nikolai had waited a few brief minutes longer, until they were alongside! Now we must stand off our enemies until the rescue came. All these thoughts flashed through my brain instantaneously. My glance had hardly faltered, but that moment of indecision was enough. With a concerted movement the sailors had hurled themselves on us. The rush was so swift, so simultaneous, that the bark of my pistol was muffled in the cloth of the lieutenant's uniform, and the bullet turned aside. Then, wrapping me in his embrace, he slipped to the floor, and we tumbled and sprawled over the slippery keel-plates. The rest bore Nikolai to the ground with me, and again the stars whirled upon the silver plate as the submarine, unguided, plunged here and there under the seas.

Two minutes later we were trussed and bound and helpless. The lieutenant called off his men and stood over us, watching Nikolai with a sour smile.

"Do you know what I am going to do with you?" he asked.

"Surrender us to the German government, I hope," said Nikolai politely. "Your articles of war would not justify murder."

"I am going to wipe out the insult you offered me in the streets of Kiel," shouted Von Beeman, hoarse with passion. "You called me a sheep's head, you impostor!"

"Calf's head," said Nikolai, "not sheep's head. You shall have your satisfaction whenever you make it possible for me to meet you. The English laws against dueling are strict—"

"I am not going to England," shouted Von Beeman.

"Look at the plate!" retorted Nikolai. A sailor had sprung to the wheel. He steadied the swinging craft, and there, on the camera obscura, but filling it completely, was a scouting boat; it must have been almost upon us. Then, as I watched, I saw a flag float into the picture, and on it were the stars of the German flag.

It was a German warship, and not an English one, that had discovered us!

More and more clearly came the picture of the scouting boat. There could be no mistake. Our ruse had failed—and, when we thought that we had snatched victory out of defeat, once more the cup of hope had been dashed from our lips. All chances was gone; probably death, at best, imprisonment for life, awaited us.

The picture blurred; the submarine tilted and rose to the surface of the sea. Through the thick glass of the window we saw the scout-boat lay-to a cable's length distant. She was manned by a crew of lusty sailors, and in the stern sat an officer in the uniform of a German naval captain. We drew alongside and opened our deck. He stepped aboard.

Lieutent Von Beeman sprang to his side and began to pour out the story of our attempt. The captain's brows contracted as he listened; incredulous at first, he grew more and more impassive and cold. At last he turned to Nikolai.

"What have you to say?" he asked.

"It is true," said my companion. "What are you going to do?"

The captain spoke more coldly, more formally than before. Nicolai turned to me.

"He says that he intends to hang us at his yard-arm before breakfast," he explained.

I looked around me desperately. Dawn was already flushing the east, the stars were paling, and, on the port bow, outlined against the saffron sky, was the long loast line of England.

"He cannot hang spies—even if we are spies—in peace time," I muttered. "It is against the code."

Nikolai translated, but the captain did not deign to notice me. It was the lieutenant who interposed.

"As for that fellow," he said, pointing to me, "let him hang if you prefer, captain. But not this other, who is evidently a high officer in the English service. Curse him," he shrieked, losing his self-control again. "He insulted me in the streets of Kiel. He called me a sheep's head—and I was in uniform."

"Calf's head, not sheep's head," Nikolai interposed.

"I demand satisfaction," shouted Von Beeman.

"I am afraid, lieutenant," said the captain, "that the honor of Germany must take precedence of yours."

"If it will be any satisfaction," said Nikolai, "I am no officer. I am an unofficial spy in nobody's service but my own."

"Is that true?" cried Von Beeman with apparent eagerness, staring at Nikolai. My comrade nodded. The lieutenant leaped forward with a cry of triumph.

"It is true," he exclaimed. "I questioned his veracity, and he showed no resentment. An officer does not lie. He is no officer. Well, do you wish my evidence, sir, at the court-martial?"

"There will be no court-martial, lieutenant," the captain answered. "They will be hanged immediately. Lie to until you see them at the yard-arm; then return to Kiel and report yourself to the commandant of the port. And now untie those fellows."

At the word from Von Beeman the sailors began to free us from our bonds. Meanwhile the German captain moved leisurely about the submarine, examining the mechanism with professional interest. When we were free he signed to us to precede him into the boat. We took our places and the sailors began to row us back to the man of war. It was almost light now. Behind us the submarine tossed heavily upon the waves. Looking backward, I could see Von Beeman standing amidship, gazing implacably after us. Then Nikolai nudged me and pointed furtively to the German captain.

He was beaming upon us, and in his expression there was something as near a wink as I imagine the naval regulations would allow. While I watched him, amazed, I heard one of the sailors, who had missed his stroke with the oar, utter a hearty curse in purest English.

But we were at the ship's side and ascending the ladder before I could draw the necessary inferences from what I had seen. The captain walked forward toward his quarters, signing to us to follow him. Presently we were alone with him in his cabin. Then he turned on Nikolai abruptly.

"Well done, sir," he said heartily. "I shall report your courageous action to the admiralty. Not only have you performed an act unparalleled in the history of the fleet, but you afforded me an opportunity to discover the complete secret of the mechanism of the new submarine."

"With your permission, sir, I will explain matters to my friend," said Nikolai, turning to me. But already the whole affair had become clear to me. It was an English battleship, and, by the ruse of the German flag, its captain had discovered the secret which England had wanted so badly. We were in friendly hands.

"Did you fulfill this mission by the direct suggestion of the admiralty?" the captain asked.

"No, sir," said Nikolai. "It was our own enterprise, and we trusted to the generosity of the English nation to reward us adequately.'

The captain started.

"What?" he cried. "Does nobody in England know that you embarked upon this perilous adventure?"

"Nobody but yourself and your men, sir," Nikolai answered.

The captain's manner changed in a way comical to see.

"Well, my men," he said, "you have had a fortunate escape. Now I tell you what I shall do. In five minutes a dinghy will be lowered from the side. You will enter it, and can, doubtless, pull yourselves ashore. We are not three miles from the Hampshire coast."

"And you will report us for the reward?" I asked.

"Reward? What reward?"

Then I understood. He meant to take the entire credit for the achievement to himself. And, if we told our story in England, nobody would give us a hearing. I stood astonished, shaking with impotent rage and chagrin.

Then the captain laid his hand kindly upon my shoulder.

"Gentlemen," he said, addressing both of us, "be very thankful that you have escaped with your lives. You played a desperate game which you were ill prepared for. You came off no worse than you started. Half an hour ago and you would have given all you possess for life. You have your lives. Take my advice: go quickly, and at once."

Ten minutes later we were pulling for the English shore.

MEASURES THE NERVE FORCE

Machine That Scientist Claims Has Great Possibilities—Experiments Made.

There is a remarkable little instrument, consisting of a steel cylinder attached to a vertical needle, for measuring human magnetism, that is attracting a good deal of attention in the occult library in Piccadilly. It is the invention of Doctor Fayol, who has been conducting a series of experiments before a committee of the French Academy of Medicine.

Explaining its purpose, M. W. de Kerlor said: "Its object is to demonstrate the existence of the emanation of nerve force from the human body.

"If you place the left hand in front of the cylinder, the needle will move in the same direction as the hands of a watch; if the right hand, the motion will be in the opposite direction. With all healthy and normal individuals the rotation of the needle is normal; if persons are ill, or even below par, the motion of the needle will be irregular and abnormal.

"All healthy bodies project regular currents of nerve force; unhealthy bodies absorb. That is why you hear of sick or elderly people who have not sufficient vital force to maintain the normal amount of physical strength absorbing human magnetism from younger and healthier persons.

Various experiments have been made with the instrument to show how variously it is affected.

Two hands of an opposite nature placed in front of the apparatus entirely stop the motion, but with two hands of the same nature it is accelerated.

As to the possibilities of the invention, M. de Kerlor said: "If you have an instrument which is capable of being propelled at the rate of 30 or 40 turns a minute quite automatically by an invisible force emanating from the human body, what may not be achieved by applying the magnetism of a hundred or of a thousand men to a much larger cylinder with a powerful lever?

He Explained.

The girl was willing, but the baseball player was diffident. She had to resort to strategy.

"Jim," she said, "there are several points of the game that I wish you would explain."

"Where shall I begin?" he asked, delighted.

"I should like to—er"—she hesitated, blushing—"know more about the 'squeeze play.'"—Judge.

Reckless Spender.

Saphedde—It costs me $25,000 a year to live.

Miss Caustique—How foolishly some people spend their money!—Philadelphia Record.

Defective Page

WHY GRIP IS DANGEROUS.

It is an Epidemic Catarrhal Fever Caused by a Bacillus that Generally Leaves the Patient Weak After the Acute Stage Has Passed.

Grip Patients Grateful to Peruna, the Expectorant Tonic.

Do not make the error of regarding grip as an exaggerated cold. There is a big difference between the two. Grip is an epidemic disease that poisons the vital organs. When a person has grip, the air passages are alive with millions of bacilli poisoning the blood. The infected person feels tired and exhausted.

Peruna is a Tonic Laxative.

It requires a good tonic laxative to keep the body of the patient as strong as possible to counteract the effect of the poisons created by the grip bacillus. An expectorant tonic with some laxative qualities is the safest remedy. Such is Peruna. Beware especially of coal tar powders or tablets because they lessen the vitality of the patient.

There is no specific for the grip.

Peruna has been used with good success in former grip epidemics. Indications point to the return of grip this winter.

Do not fail to read the experience of former grip patients with Peruna.

Mrs. Gentry Gates, 3219 First Ave., East Lake, Ala., writes: "I had a bad case of grip. I tried Peruna and it cured me. I can safely say it is a fine medicine."

Mrs. Charles E. Wells, Sr., 230 South St., Delaware, Ohio, writes: "After a severe attack of la grippe I took Peruna and found it a good tonic."

Ask Your Druggist for Free Peruna Lucky Day Almanac for 1914.

GAVE LESSON IN REVERENCE

Small Boy's Stern Rebuke to Bishop Whom He Suspected of Harboring Thoughts of Barter.

Bishop Thornton, when in Ballarat was walking one fine Sunday morning with his favorite dog, a very intelligent retriever. The dog was performing all sorts of tricks; jumping over his master's stick, retrieving it from the water, and so on.

The bishop was aware of the wide-eyed interest of a small boy, who, with his nurse, was walking on the shore of the lake. The bishop recognized in him the son of a neighbor with whom he was on the best of terms, although the neighbor was a leading light of Nonconformity in the city.

To amuse this boy the bishop put the dog through the whole category of his tricks, and then said: "Now, isn't that a nice dog; and wouldn't you like to have one like him?" To which the small boy replied sternly, "Sir, I think you forgot what day this is."—London Daily Citizen.

Pleas for Patriotism.

"You should be patriotic and contribute your valuable services to your country without thought of pecuniary reward!"

"I will," replied the official; "just as soon as a whole lot of people get patriotic enough to quit sending their bills to me."

The Same.

"My dear, this pie tastes just a bit stale—it must be yesterday's."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Hardcrust, "and if you don't eat it today it will be tomorrow's!"

SELF DELUSION.

Many People Deceived by Coffee.

We like to defend our indulgencies and habits even though we may be convinced of their actual harmfulness.

A man can convince himself that whiskey is good for him on a cold morning, or beer on a hot summer day—when he wants the whiskey or beer.

It's the same with coffee. Thousands of people suffer headache and nervousness year after year but try to persuade themselves the cause is not coffee—because they like coffee.

"While yet a child I commenced using coffee and continued it," writes a Wis. man, "until I was a regular coffee fiend. I drank it every morning and in consequence had a blinding headache nearly every afternoon.

"My folks thought it was coffee that ailed me, but I liked it and would not admit it was the cause of my trouble, so I stuck to coffee and the headaches stuck to me.

"Finally, the folks stopped buying coffee and brought home some Postum. They made it right (directions on pkg.) and told me to see what difference it would make with my head, and during that first week on Postum my old affliction did not bother me once. From that day to this we have used nothing but Postum in place of coffee—headaches are a thing of the past and the whole family is in fine health."

"Postum looks good, smells good, tastes good, is good, and does good to the whole body."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. Grocers sell both kinds.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

State News of General Interest

MANY LAWS BECOME EFFECTIVE JAN. 1

ELEVEN ACTS OF LAST LEGISLATURE NOW BECOME LAWS.

CASHMAN BILLS IMPORTANT

Constitutionality of Distance Tariff Law Must Be Passed Upon by Courts First, However, as Result of Injunction.

St. Paul—Several of the most important bills passed by the last state legislature became laws Jan. 1. They were made effective at this late date either to give time for adjusting business to the new act, or to avoid confusion in administration.

The most important of these new laws, however, will be held up for a time by an injunction. The Cashman distance tariff act was rendered temporarily null and void when three federal judges granted a ruling against its enforcement until April 1. The injunction, granted at the petition of the Great Western railway, followed closely an opinion from the attorney general's office, whose effect was to knock out the plans of St. Paul and Minneapolis for a common railroad terminal.

The New Laws.

The Minnesota Legislation becoming effective Jan. 1, 1914, is as follows:

Cashman distance tariff act, regulating railroad freight rates.

Cashman joint rate law.

Tax classification law, regulating method of assessment.

Locomotive headlight law.

Sleeping-car tax law.

Raise in salary for mayor of Minneapolis, from $5,000 to $6,000.

Raise in salary for Minneapolis aldermen, from $1,200 to $1,500.

"Pure mattress" law.

Uniform warehouse receipt law.

Bendixen 2-cent fare law.

Allowing mileage to town assessors for trips to county seat.

Two Important Laws.

The two Cashman bills are of great importance and far-reaching effect. The distance tariff law, modeled on the Iowa law, prohibits any railroad from charging any more for hauling a commodity a given distance than it does for hauling it a like distance anywhere else on its line in Minnesota. This is intended to produce absolute equality in freight rates, but involves many problems which are yet to be worked out. The railroad commissioners under the act prepared a schedule of maximum rates, effective Jan. 1, and the railroads are directed to put in new tariffs complying with these schedules. Existing joint rates are maintained, pending future action under the joint rate law, which authorizes the commission to prescribe joint rates lower than the sum of local rates, where freight is hauled over more than one line.

Sweeping Assessment Changes.

The new tax classification law supercedes the one which has been in effect ever since Minnesota became a state, requiring all property to be assessed at its full and true value in cash. This law has never been complied with, and the new act is an endeavor to legalize the practice of assessors and fix a workable legal standard.

The new law divides property into four classes and provides that iron ore lands, consisting class 1, shall be assessed at 50 per cent of their actual value. Class 2, to be assessed at 25 per cent of full value, includes all household goods and furniture and wearing apparel. Class 3 includes livestock, poultry, stocks of merchandise, agricultural products, manufacturers' materials and products, all tools and implements, and all unplatted real estate except iron ore property, and is to be assessed at 33 1-3 per cent of its actual value. Class 4, to be assessed at 40 per cent of its true value, includes city real estate and any other property not specifically mentioned in the three first classes.

The locomotive headlight law, passed through the efforts of trainmen's organizations, requires all engines used in railroad traffic except switch engines, to be equipped with headlights of at least 1,500 candle power, measured without the aid of a reflector, which is said to mean use of electric headlights.

The 2-Cent Law.

The Bendixen 2-cent fare law was passed to help the state in the event the 1907 2-cent-fare law should be declared unconstitutional. It requires all railroads whose passenger earnings exceed $1,200 a mile annually to sell tickets at not over 2 cents a mile. This applies to practically all lines of road in Minnesota, and does not change the situation.

The sleeping car tax law fixes a gross earnings tax of 5 per cent on companies operating sleeping cars in Minnesota, an increase from 4 per cent.

The uniform warehouse receipt law is one to expedite the handling of warehouse receipts as collateral, making the Minnesota law on the subject identical with that of other states so as to standardize the methods of handling them.

The "pure mattress" law took effect Jan. 1, and will protect the buyers of mattresses against second-hand materials. It requires every mattress sold to have a label showing materials used in its manufacture, and whether they are new or have been used before.

FARM MEETING PLANS OUT

Seed Improvement League and Southern Development Men to Hold Joint Session.

Mankato.—Plans are being rapidly perfected for the big meeting to be held at Mankato January 20-24, when the Minnesota Seed Improvement association and Southern Minnesota Better Development League hold joint annual meetings and in connection therewith will hold a corn and other field crops exposition.

A program has been arranged that provides for the largest premium list of prizes for exhibits of products, including corn, wheat, oats, rye, barley, field peas, alfalfa and potatoes. The prizes aggregate over $2,000 in value, among which are a tractor engine capable of doing the ordinary work of three teams of horses; a complete cement stave silo valued at $300; farm trucks; cultivators; cream separators and other valuable implements. There will also be large cash prizes for all the various exhibits. The tractor engine is to be given for the best ten ears of corn, while the silo is to be given for the best fifty ears.

A farmers' short course with a full corps of instructors from the State Agricultural College, will be held each forenoon and an afternoon and evening program dealing with topics of practical interest to every resident of southern Minnesota will be carried out. The speakers comprise some of the best known men in the country, including Governor Eberhart, Prof. G. E. Vincent, Dean A. F. Wood, Prof. N. E. Hansen, Brookings, S. D., the alfalfa wizard, G. P. Tawney, Dr. E. Dana Durand, Thos. E. Cashman, Prof. A. D. Wilson, Carlton Babbitt, a farmer who has solved the problem of keeping the young people on the farm, and other speakers of note. There will also be a meeting of all the high school agricultural instructors. The church people of the state are also to have a session at which topics dealing with the social side of country life will be considered. The prospects are that the largest attendance at any gathering held in the southern part of the state will be present.

FARM CONFERENCE IS HELD

Fifty Delegates Listen to Lectures on Modern Methods at the College of Agriculture.

St. Paul.—With one exception, all of the twenty-five demonstration farms of the college of agriculture were represented at the demonstration farm conference at the university farm. Fifty delegates were in attendance.

Dean A. F. Woods made the address of welcome and outlined the purpose of the conference.

Prof. A. D. Wilson talked on farm management, emphasizing the importance of good, tested seed and the value of organic matter in the soil.

Miss M. C. Danell of the home economics department of the college explained the demonstration farm home and recommended the installation of devices that will decrease the work of the housewife.

The lectures were illustrated with stereopticon slides. The meeting closed Wednesday evening.

Chisholm Boys Are Held.

Chisholm.—Archie and Arthur Trudel and George Gilchrist, boys, were arrested for stealing brass goods, including valves, cocks, couplings, piping and car wheel brasses from the Euclid mine. It is said they have been selling the goods to H. Popkin, a second-hand dealer. Archie Trudel has been employed by the Euclid Mine company to watch the abandoned mine.

IRON FOUND NEAR AITKIN

Late Discoveries Regarded of Great Importance in Ore Districts.

Aitkin.—That recent explorations for iron ore have brought the field nearer to Aitkin is demonstrated by a good strike six miles north of this village.

Drills of the Olson & Berg Development company working under the direction of M. P. Botsford, mining engineer, have been operating on Section 23, Township 48, Range 27, on property owned by George S. Carson of Iowa City, Iowa, and the first hole put down penetrated manganese ore of high grade. The drills are now on the fourth hole, and it is reported that three of these showed manganese ore, some of the five-foot samples taken out going over 31 per cent manganese. The other hole showed a low-grade ore.

The finding of this ore establishes the fact that a continuation of the Cuyuna range lies north of the Mississippi, refuting the contentions of the early explorers that the range does not cross the river. This extension is a continuation of the north part of what is known as the north range, which includes the Cuyuna-Mille Lacs mine in the Crosby district, the texture of the ore found on the Carson place presenting the same characteristics as that taken from the Cuyuna-Mille Lacs mine. The south part of the north range produces bessemer and non-bessemer ore.

WELLS PHYSICIAN IS KILLED

Two Others Hurt, One Fatally, When Automobile Turns Turtle.

Wells.—Dr. Ralph J. McBroom was instantly killed, Earl Babcock fatally injured and Charles Boetcher suffered several broken ribs in an automobile accident.

The men were returning from Walters, Minn., in Dr. McBroom's car. The machine skidded in the snow, ran off the road and crashed through a barb wire fence, after which it turned turtle.

Dr. McBroom was caught beneath the tonneau and instantly killed. Babcock's back was injured so badly that he cannot recover.

In spite of his broken ribs, Boetcher dragged himself to a farmer's house and got assistance. With Babcock he was placed in a hospital here.

All of the victims were prominent residents of Wells. McBroom and Babcock were unmarried.

LAKE CITY PIONEER DIES

On Same Farm Nearly 60 Years, Charles Gould Settled in Home District in 1855.

Lake City.—Charles Gould, aged 89 years, a resident of this section since 1855, is dead at his home near this city. He was born in Walpole, Mass., in 1824, and was among the "forty-niners" going to California, where he remained three years.

Coming to the township of Central Point, adjoining Lake City, in 1855, he settled on a claim and has lived on the same farm nearly sixty years. He was married to Betsy Starbird at Boston on June 22, 1847, and they celebrated their sixty-fourth wedding anniversary in 1911. Mrs. Gould died Jan. 8, 1912. He is survived by two sons, Charles A. of Lac qui Parle, and E. W. of Minneapolis, and two daughters, Mrs. E. W. Rossmann of Chatfield and Miss Rosa Gould, who is at home. The funeral will take place Wednesday.

Owatonna Show a Success.

Owatonna.—The exhibit of Owatonna-made goods at the armory was even a bigger success than was anticipated. The number of visitors who looked over the displays of firms occupying booths in the big building augurs well for tomorrow's attendance. The exhibits were generally attractive and among the foremost are those of the King Ventilating company, the Minnetonna Manufacturing company, the L. G. Campbell Milling company and the Owatonna Manufacturing company. A banquet was tendered by the manufacturers' association Saturday evening.

Minister Gets License Revoked.

Mankato.—After an exciting session of the city council acting as judge and jury at a hearing on the question of revoking the licenses of three saloonkeepers, the license of John C. Hagen was revoked, and motions to revoke the other two were defeated. The complaint was made by the ministerial association, which joined forces with the Salvation Army, basing it on the fact that the saloonkeepers had been convicted of violating the liquor laws.

Deep Snow at Duluth.

Duluth. — The rather light snowfall that greeted homeward bound revelers New Year's morning continued throughout the day, growing in intensity and before the storm ceased a nine-inch blanket covered the head of the lakes and the iron range territory. It was the first real snowfall of the season. Railway and interurban traffic was impeded to some extent, according to reports from the various towns, although the precipitation was heaviest at Duluth and Superior.

Christian Endeavor at Mankato.

Mankato.—The Mankato District Christian Endeavor association held a convention in this city with about thirty-five delegates present. New Ulm, Garden City, Waseca, Le Sueur, Kasota, Mapleton, Winnebago, St. Peter, Ottawa, Cleveland and Medo were represented. The state officers were also present. The purpose of the meeting was to instruct the county and society officers in their duties, and the afternoon was taken up with this work.

Join Development Meeting.

St. Paul.—The officers of the Northern, Southern and West Central Development Associations will hold a meeting at noon, January 14, at the Frederick hotel, for the purpose of taking up the matter of a federation of their associations. It is expected that a tentative organization will be formed to consist of the officers of each organization, whose purpose it will be to further all development questions of statewide importance.

PETTED CAT; NOW SEE THEM

High School Girls Have Distressing Face Rash After Fondling Feline.

Haddonfield, N. J.—As nice and gentle and creature loving as are the girl members of the high school hockey team of this town, the next time a cat appears upon their practice field they will probably take the business ends of their hockey clubs to it. Because—

Recently a big gray feline, rather nice looking and of modest demeanor, appeared on the school's athletic grounds in the midst of a lively scrimmage. The girls stopped their game and Miss Helen Irons, captain of the team, picked up the cat, which she called "Nice, Tom," and fondled it against her cheek.

Another girl took it away from her and did the same thing, and then another and another. Among the rest were the Misses Adele Zimmerman, Elizabeth Bryson, Jessie and Florence Griggs, Katherine Malan and Esther Turnely.

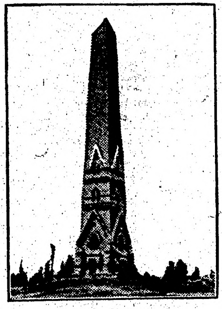
Later a distressing and disfiguring rash appeared upon the cheeks of each of the girls, and Dr. William B. Jennings had to be called to attend them. He said they had all become affected by an annoying, but not dangerous skin ailment and that they would be all right in a few days. But they've vowed not to trifle with cats again.

FORGET STATUE AT SARATOGA

Monument Erected Years Ago on Famous Revolutionary Battle Ground Overlooked for Years.

New York.—Years ago, at the time when the revolutionary centennial fervor had taken a strong hold upon the country, a monument was erected on the Saratoga battlefield. No sooner was it completed than it was practically forgotten. Recently came the gratifying revival of interest in historic objects, stimulated by patriotic societies. Also, there came the trolley and the automobile, both of which served to make the Saratoga battle monument and the historic ground surrounding it more accessible. People were shocked to find the monument in a sad state of repair. It had become not merely a monument commemorative of a great battle—the only one fought on the soil of the United States that Creasy deemed worthy of a place in his list of the world's decisive battles—but a monument of public indifference and neglect. This monument has now been repaired and to some extent remodeled. It has even been dedicated, a step which the original builders evidently forgot all about.

The monument is admitted to be the finest of its kind in the world. It is a tall hollow shaft, at the base of which are four niches. Three of them contain statues of Gates, Morgan and Schuyler, three of the four generals who fought in the battle. The fourth niche, empty as England's rewards, void as his own life, speaks more eloquently than words, more strongly than condemnation, more pitifully than tears, of a mighty career blasted by the lightnings of heaven, a great life hurled into the abyss. This is America's way of honoring Arnold in his dishonor.



Saratoga Monument.

NEW BED FOR RIVER RHONE

New Concrete Channel Built Over a Distance of One Mile by Swiss Engineers.

Geneva.—Quietly and without any ceremony a splendid engineering feat has just been brought to a conclusion at Brigue, where Swiss engineers have diverted the bed of the Rhone over a distance of about a mile. The waters of the Rhone were turned from the old bed into the new channel of stone and concrete. The ancient bed will be filled with the debris from the second Simplon tunnel, which is now being completed, and on the new site several more permanent ways will be constructed for goods traffic.

Since the opening of the Lotschberg tunnel, and with the traffic through the principal Simplon tunnel constantly increasing, it has been found that the station at Brigue is too small to cope with the international service.

Stars Are Cooling Off.

Princeton, N. J.—In a lecture on "The Heat Action of Stars," Prof. Henry N. Russell of the department of astronomy at Princeton declared that upon their creation the stars became hot, but are gradually cooling. The end of the universe, although inconceivably far off, therefore, is absolute rigidity in the blackness of interstellar night.

"CASCARETS" FOR SLUGGISH LIVER

No sick headache, sour stomach, biliousness or constipation by morning.

Get a 10-cent box now.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, biliousness, indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out to-night and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse your stomach; remove the sour, fermenting food; take the excess bile from your liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poison in the bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night straightens you out by morning. They work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from any drug store means a clear head, sweet stomach and clean, healthy liver and bowel action for months. Children love Cascarets because they never gripe or sicken. Adv.

Best Fortune Teller.

The quest of noblemen of wealth in America has been talked about for decades; but few, if any, can rival Baron Assebach in being witty in a practical way.

Miss de Millyuns, his prospective wife, was entertaining the barone one evening, and apropos of lovers' nothingness she asked:

"Did you, baron, ever go to a fortune teller?"

"Yes, mees, many times. But the last time was best."

"Where did you go?"

"I went to the probate court to find out about your grandfather's will."—Sunday Magazine of the Chicago Record-Herald.

DISFIGURED WITH PIMPLES

Whitewater, Colo.—"Eczema broke out all over my little grandson's face and body. It just looked as though blood poison would set up at times when he would scratch himself so much. The eczema broke out in pimples and would run a watery corruption and wherever the water touched the flesh, another pimple would form, until the pimples would form a sore. His clothing irritated his body and he lost his rest at night. The disease was so irritating and would itch so that I have seen him in such an irritating condition that he would cry and scratch himself until the blood would run. He was very much disfigured as the skin would be torn from his cheeks from the scratching.

"I tried all the simple remedies that I knew of to stop the pain and burning, but they did not cure him. This went on until January, 1912, when I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which proved a complete cure in a short time." (Signed) Mrs. Laura Stephens, Nov. 19, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Polite Bertha.

Little Bertha was invited out to dinner with her father and mother. Before she went it was firmly impressed upon her that she must not speak unless spoken to. All went smoothly for a while, but when some time elapsed and no notice was taken of her she began to get uneasy.

Finally the hostess, seeing something was wrong, asked her what she would like next.

"I should like to have you begin to ask me questions," was the polite reply.—Lippincott's.

A GRATEFUL OLD MAN.

W. D. Smith.

Mr. W. D. Smith, Ethel, Ky., writes: "I have been using Dodd's Kidney Pills for ten or twelve years and they have done me a great deal of good. I do not think I would be alive today if it were not for Dodd's Kidney Pills. I strained my back about forty years ago, which left it very weak. I was troubled with inflammation of the bladder. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me of that and the Kidney Trouble. I take Dodd's Kidney Pills now to keep from having Backache. I am 77 years old and a farmer. You are at liberty to publish this testimonial, and you may use my picture in connection with it." Correspond with Mr. Smith about this wonderful remedy.

Dodd's Kidney Pills, 50c. per box at your dealer or Dodd's Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free. Adv.

Odd Expressions.

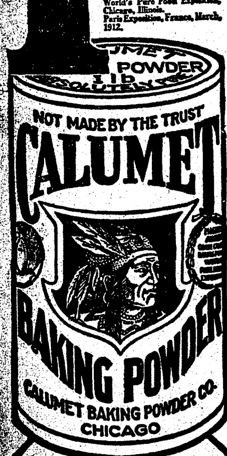
"There is one thing which I cannot understand."

"What is that?"

"Why high-colored versions of the truth are called white lies."

DR. J. H. RINDLAUB (Specialist),
Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat
Fargo, N. D.

But it takes a good cook to roast the janitor to a frazzle.



1St

First in Everything

First in Quality
First in Results
First in Purity
First in Economy

and for these reasons Calumet Baking Powder is first in the hearts of the millions of housewives who use it and know it.

RECEIVED HIGHEST AWARDS
World's Pure Food Exposition, Chicago, Illinois.
Paris Exposition, France, March, 1912.

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives best results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

Wet With Vinegar.

Cut hams may be kept from molding if the cut end is wet with vinegar each time after cutting. Vinegar will also keep beef fresh for a time when you happen to be without ice temporarily, says the Christian Science

Important to Mothers

Examine carefully every bottle of CASTORIA, a safe and sure remedy for infants and children, and see that it

Bears the Signature of Chat H. Fletcher

In Use For Over 30 Years.

Children Cry for Fletcher's Castoria

Usual Combination.

"Young Jinks, I'm afraid, is a bad egg."

"Yes, and he's a fresh one, too."

Putnam Fadeless Dyes color in cold water. Adv.

The less a man knows the more advice he distributes.

1913 RECORD Magnificent Crops in all Western Canada

All parts of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have produced wonderful yields of Wheat, Oats, Barley and Flax. Wheat graded from Contract to No. 1 Hard, weighed heavy and yielded from 20 to 45 bushels per acre; 22 bushels was about the total average. Mixed Farming may be considered fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition, are the only food required either for beef or dairy purposes. In 1912, and again in 1913, at Chicago, Manitoba carried off the Championship for beef steer. Good schools, markets convenient, climate excellent. For the homesteader, the man who wishes to farm extensively, or the investor, Canada offers the biggest opportunity of any place on the continent.

Apply for descriptive literature and reduced railway rates to

Superintendent of Immigration,
Ottawa, Canada, or to

W. E. BLACK
Clifford Block
Grand Forks, N. D.

Canadian Government Agent

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The Army of Constipation

Is Growing Smaller Every Day.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are responsible — they not only give relief — they permanently cure Constipation. Millions use them for Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Sallow Skin.

SMALL PILL, SMALL DOSE, SMALL PRICE

Genuine must bear Signature

Brent Good

PISO'S REMEDY
25 CTS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by Druggists. 25 CTS.
FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

NIGHT IN LONDON

ACROSS TRAFALGAR SQUARE

Emerging from a west end theater in London a companion remarked to the writer: "This makes me glad to be a provincial. It's lost on Londoners." I knew his meaning. The Londoner may be proud of London in his negligent, unenthusiastic way; he may love London, perhaps be sentimental about London, and (not inconceivably) exaggerate London's cosmic importance. But he seldom is thrilled by London. That sensation is reserved for the provincial. Whether it is a sensation to boast of depends on one's point of view. Those who count romance as a poisoner of clear judgment might perhaps regard the provincial's thrill with scorn, for the thrill is the tribute of an incorrigible romantic. In the north especially, even in the huge towns, London is a name which calls forth the liveliest anticipations of adventure. There is something ingenuous in the awe with which the young northerner will speak of the goal of London. But, as compensation for his extravagant notion of the wonders of the metropolis, he extracts more joy from it, when he does visit it for a week, than the cockney can feel in a lifetime.

Emotion Romantic.

This emotion is, as has been said, largely romantic. It is also, however, appreciative in the artistic sense. The provincial sees London as a series of pictures. Doubtless the intelligent Londoner sees them too, but he is usually far less conscious of them than is the provincial, even the provincial who has lived in London for years. My companion at that theater, standing on the curb and watching the packed traffic slide past in the sheen of the electrics, was acutely aware of his own delight in the spectacle. Having myself had the good fortune (I may as well divulge it) to be born a provincial, I could gauge both his awareness and his delight, and had often marveled at the manner in which Londoners seemed to miss them.

The provinces, as far as I know, do not impress the Londoner as London impresses the provincial; and though this naive reflection may arouse an ironical smile, it is less trite than it sounds. Our enthusiasm for the glamor of London reaches its height after dark, when the lamps are lit. Some of London's most famous thoroughfares are a shade disappointing to us by daylight. The Strand—that Mecca of the Bohemianism celebrated in music-hall ditties—has commonplace architecture, an unremarkable vista, and is narrowish as important streets go. Regent street, during the day, is only really fine in sunshine. Leicester square is ugly. But at dusk the more vulgar details vanish, concealed behind the glitter of a dazzling jewellery of lights. A dim cobalt skyline is still visible, but the crudeness of the roofs and chimney-pots has gone. Down below, each shop window is a sparkling cave of multicolored treasures; and the pavements, thronged with promenaders, furnish forth a spectacle of animation on a scale which only great capitals—Berlin, Paris, New York—can match. When the plays are due to begin we have another entertainment: the rush of vehicles to the theater porticos. Wealth suddenly floods out from its homes and from the restaurants. Every automobile, as it moves noiselessly past on bulging tires, gives us a dainty peep-show glimpse of its lit interior. Exquisite toilettes loll against the rich upholstery. The corner of Long Acre and Bow street, on an opera night, almost suffices to persuade us that the world's money is concentrated in London. Car after car, in a slowly advancing line, marshaled by police, creeps round the curve and down to Covent Garden's blazing entrance-doors. Each car contains its intimate group, exquisitely dressed, and (to that gaping provincial of ours) sublimely unperceptive of the moment's true splendor. Within the opera house the pageant of luxury is even more amazing. And the same gorgeous divertisement, on smaller scale, is seen simultaneously, every night, in 30 or 40 west end theaters; can be seen, night after night, without repetition! While outside in the street there is a carnival, impromptu and undiverted by its own antics, scarcely less enthralling, gemmed and tinseled and decorated no less lavishly.

Through Central London.

The wise stranger reserves a night free from theater-going for a stroll through central London's streets. Of course he must see the Embankment, where a noble curve of lights trails its reflection, like a flung-down necklace, in the water from Blackfriars to Big Ben. The monstrous tramcars, not very impressive by day, are glass caskets of effulgence, spinning along their polished rails below the cliffs of the Cecil and the Savoy. The more squalid south side of the Thames displays an illuminated advertisement or two, exasperations to the aesthete. Westward, St. Stephen's lifts a fine silhouette athwart a vague flush of radiance beyond. The light in the clocktower shows that parliament is sitting; and a "late extra," bought in Northumberland avenue, will tell us what the talk has been about. We have forgotten it by the time we enter Trafalgar square, where the silhouette of lions and Nelson's Pillar are clear-cut against a flare of gold at the Coliseum in St. Martin's lane. Those spots of extremer dazzlement always mark a theater—though the picture-palaces are now nearly as blatant. Up by Charing Cross road and round into Coventry street or Shaftesbury avenue we get the impression that the whole of London is given over to the pursuit of pleasure.

This is theater-land: the vortex of gaiety's whirlpool, only excelled, perhaps only equaled, by our American friends' fabled half-mile of Broadway. Why go inside any theater when this tableau is to be seen free outside? Why bother with burlesque and ballet when the evolutions of London's million pedestrians roll and unroll, tangle and untangle here? Why seek comedy and tragedy behind footlights? A hundred yards of Piccadilly circus exhibit enough comedy and tragedy to last for many an evening. That, I think, or something like it, is how our provincial often feels after his walk through London at night. Should he be temperamentally a countryman, fond of the fields and the fresh air of heaven, he may be glad enough to see the last of this exhausting and garish wilderness of houses and lights and hectic activity; but, even so, he cannot fail to derive some amusement from just those aspects of it which leave the Londoner cold. The Londoner buys all his pleasures too directly. A theater is to him a place wherein to see a play, a cafe is a place wherein to obtain meat and drink.

To a stranger a theater is a place wherein not only to see the play, but—this is a gift supplied without charge—to see the playgoers; a cafe is a place wherein to get refreshment for the body with the addition of a still more stimulating refreshment for the mind. Pictures!—London at night is a bewildering and kaleidoscopic gallery of pictures; and even when the streets have emptied and no sound is heard but the hoot of a late taxicab or the trundling of an early market-cart, fresh compositions present themselves at every turning; mysterious and endless perspectives of lamps, strange, pale facades with blank windows rising like precipices from the canyon of the roadway, or colorless trees, in some deserted square, throwing the pattern of their motionless leaf-shadows upon the pavement beside the sooty railings.

Japan to Fight Tuberculosis.

Consumption is said to claim more victims in Japan than in any other civilized country and the government is about to take decisive steps to combat its spread. The department of home affairs has decided to establish sanatoria in the cities having a population of more than 300,000, namely Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto, Kobe, Yokohama and Nagoya. Those for Tokyo and Osaka will be constructed to accommodate 500 patients, that of Kyoto 400 and for the remaining cities 300.

Her Thought.

Myrtle—I see according to a German biologist, man made a mistake when, centuries ago, he changed himself from a quadruped to a biped.

Maude—Nonsense. How in the world could a man sit in a hammock with a girl if he were a quadruped?

WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT

soothes your throat!

After smoking it cools your mouth—makes it moist and refreshed.

Heartburn and flatulence disappear.

Enjoy smoking more by enjoying this goody that improves your breath, teeth, appetite, and digestion.

Be SURE it's WRIGLEY'S

WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT PEPSIN GUM
THE FLAVOR LASTS
Wm Wrigley Jr. Co.
CHICAGO

CAUTION!

Dishonest persons are wrapping rank imitations to look like the clean, pure, healthful WRIGLEY'S. These will be offered principally by street fakirs, peddlers and candy departments of some 5 and 10 cent stores. Refuse them! Be SURE it's WRIGLEY'S.

2

BUY IT BY THE BOX

of most dealers — for 85 cents.

Each box contains twenty 5 cent packages.

Chew it after every meal

SLOAN'S LINIMENT

relieves rheumatism quickly. It stimulates the circulation — instantly relieves stiffness and soreness of muscles and joints. Don't rub — it penetrates.

Rheumatism Never Returned

"I am a travelling man and about one year ago I was laid up with rheumatism and could not walk. A friend recommended Sloan's Liniment and the morning after I used it my knee was all O.K. and it has never bothered me since. I always keep your Liniment in the house and carry it with me on the road."—Mr. Thomas S. Harter, West Philadelphia, Pa.

Rheumatism Neuralgia

Stiffness Vanished

"I suffered with an awful stiffness in my legs. That night I gave my legs a good rubbing with Sloan's Liniment and believe me, next morning I could jump out of bed. I have been supplied with a bottle ever since."—Mr. A. Moore of Manchester, N. H.

Sprained Ankle Relieved

"I was ill for a long time with a severely sprained ankle. I got a bottle of Sloan's Liniment and now I am able to be about and can walk a great deal. I write this because I think you deserve a lot of credit for putting such a fine Liniment on the market and I shall always take time to recommend Dr. Sloan's Liniment."—Mrs. Charles Rouse of Baltimore, Md.

Sloan's Liniment gives a grateful sensation of comfort. Good for sprains, neuralgia, sore throat and toothache. Use it now.

At all Dealers, 25c., 50c. and $1.00

Send for Sloan's free book on horses.

Address

Dr. EARL S. SLOAN, Inc.
BOSTON, MASS.

CANCER FREE TREATISE The Leach Sanatorium, Indianapolis, Ind., has published a booklet which gives interesting facts about the cause of Cancer; also tells what to do for pain, bleeding, odor, etc. Write for it today, mentioning this paper.

Fargo Directory

Poultry Profits

Keep the hen laying during the winter months for largest net profits.

Send us your order for

Crushed Oyster Shells...	$1.00	per	100 lbs.
Crushed Clam Shells....	.85	"	"
Granulated Bone........	2.85	"	"
Alfalfa Meal...........	1.75	"	"
Oil Meal...............	1.75	"	"
Blatchford's Calf Meal..	3.50	"	"

1914 Seed Catalogue will soon be distributed—send for one.

FARGO SEED HOUSE, Fargo, N. D.

Fargo Tannery

Receives hides and skins for tanning to harness leather, robes and coats. Robes lined, hides bought, leather and robes for sale. Send for price list. Andrew Monson, Prop., Fargo, No. Dakota

DON'T TRY NEW THINGS

Keeley Cure

When you have an old reliable cure that has stood the test for 35 years. Write The Keeley Institute, Box 134, Fargo, N. D., for further information.

SHIP YOUR HIDES Furs and Wool

to Bolles & Rogers, Fargo, N. D. If we get the goods, you get the money. Have your bank look us up.

Pattern of a No. 1 Hide.

The Nelson Naturopathic Institute

No. 1 Broadway, Fargo, N. D.

The best equipped drugless institute in the northwest. We cure many chronic diseases which have been considered incurable by the medical doctors. Give us a trial. Send for free booklet.

Household Remedies

Children's Cough Syrup

Safe, pleasant, efficient cough, cold and bronchial remedy for children. Harmless and effective, containing no opiates or habit forming drugs. 25 cents at druggists.

There is a Household Remedy for every ailment, all guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Minnesota Pharmaceutical Mfg. Company, St. Paul, Minn.

FARMS WANTED and wild lands. Best System for quick, satisfactory results. Particulars and magazine free. Don't pay big commissions. Desirable property located for purchasers free. WESTERN SALES AGENCY, Dept. A., Minneapolis, Minn.

W. N. U., FARGO, NO. 2-1914.

PATENTS Watson E. Coleman, Washington, D.C. Books free. Highest references. Best results.

DAKOTA A modern school, 700 pupils, 300 positions filled last year. BUSINESS Full courses in Actual Business, Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Shorthand, Banking. COLLEGE Next term opens soon. For full information address F.L. Watkins, Fargo, North Dakota

Defective Page

Dr. J. C. R. CHAREST
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
Office in Union Block
Thief River Falls - - Minn.

CHARLES A. PITKIN
Attorney at Law
Office in McGinn Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minnesota.

H. G. HIEBER
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
PHONE 244
Thief River Falls, Minn.

KNUTE NELSON
United states Commissioner, District of Minnesota
Final Proofs and Homestead Entries carefully attended to.
Middle River, - - - Minnesota.

LOANS PROBATE WORK COLLECTIONS
O. A. NAPLIN
Attorney-at-Law
Evenson Block
Thief River Falls, - - Minn.

Dr. H. B. NEWELL
Veterinary Surgeon
(Dyrlage.)
Graduate Chicago Vet'n'y College
Office and Hospital
Thief River Falls, - - - Minn
Phone Central

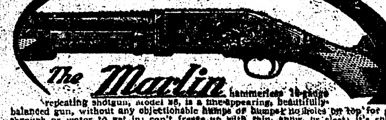
COAL By The LUMP

Would be a pretty dear way of getting it. Yet every lump of our coal has a distinct value as a heat producer. And every load we send you contains nothing but lumps of good, clean coal. No slate, no stones, no dirt. Fill your scuttle with that kind and it will last longer.

D. PAYNE LUMBER Co.
HOLT, MINN.

O. J. BACKLUND
Holt Livery and Dray Line
Always Furnishes Reliable Service
Leave Orders at Hotel - - HOLT, MINN.

12-Gauge Hammerless "Pump" Guns



The Marlin hammerless 12-gauge repeating shotgun, model 28, is a fine-appearing, beautifully-balanced gun, without any objectionable humps or bumps; no holes on top for gas to blow out through or water to get in; can't freeze up with rain, snow, or sleet; it's solid steel breech (not a shell of wood) permits a thoroughly symmetrical gun without sacrificing strength or safety; it is the safest breech-loading shotgun ever built.

It is Hammerless with Solid Steel Breech (inside as well as out)—Solid Top—Side Ejection—Matted Barrel (which costs $4.00 extra on other guns)—Press Button Cartridge Release—(to remove loaded cartridges quickly from magazine without working through action) Double Extractors—Take-Down Feature—Trigger and Hammer Safety. Handles rapidly; guaranteed in shooting ability; price standard Grade "A" gun, $22.60.

Send 3 stamps postage for big catalog describing No. 28 A, B, C, D, T and Trap Special and all other Marlin repeating rifles and shotguns. Do it now!

The Marlin Firearms Co.,
42 Willow Street, New Haven, Conn.

If you shoot a rifle, pistol or shotgun, you should have a copy of the Ideal Hand Book—160 pages of useful information for shooters. It tells all about powders, bullets, primers and reloading tools for all standard rifle, pistol and shotgun ammunition; how to measure powders accurately; shows you how to cut your ammunition expense in half and do more and better shooting. This book is free to any shooter who will send three stamps postage to The Marlin Firearms Co., 42 Willow St., New Haven, Conn.

The Northern Light
CHAS. W. LATTA
Editor and Publisher.

Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year, strictly in advance.

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

There is a good deal of ebitorial comment going the rounds regarding the legality of the new primary election law and what the results will be in case the supreme court should declare the new law invalid. One thing that seems to be generaly overlooked is the importance of the second choice clause in both the new law and the old. The old law made this feature apply to all candidates for all offices, while the new law seems to do away with it so far as non-partisan nominations are concerned. However the supreme court may rule on the new law, the second choice provision still applies to all candidatef to be named on behalf of politcal parties, which is most important to the people. The newspapers should begin a campaign of education on the second choice provision and make the people clearly understand that it is the proper system to minimize the evil of machine rule. With the second choice feature properly understood and used the number of candidates would not cut much figure in determining the will of the voters.

